That if any Perſon or Perſons within 40 Days after the End of that Seſſion, ſhall adviſedly, or with a malicious Intent, deviſe, write, print, or ſet forth, any Manner of Book, Rhime, Ballad, Letter, or Writing, containing any falſe, ſeditious, or ſcandalous Matter, to the Defamation of the Queen's Majeſty, or to the encouraging, ſtirring or moving of any Inſurrection, or Rebellion within the Queen's Dominions: Or if any Perſon after the End of the ſaid 40 Days, either within the Queen's Dominions, or elſewhere, ſhall procure ſuch Book, Ballad, Letter, or Writing, to be written, printed, publiſh'd, or ſet forth (and the ſaid Offence not being puniſhable by the 25th of King Edward III. nor within the Compaſs of Treaſon by any other Statute) that then the ſaid Offenders being thereof lawfully convicted, ſhall ſuffer Pains of Death, and Forfeiture of Goods, as in Caſes of Felony. And here neither Benefit of Clergy, or Sanctuary were to be allow'd. (k) But this Statute expiring with the Queen's Life, left the Government unguarded.

A Convocation meets.

To paſs from the Parliament to the Convocation. The Province of Canterbury met at St. Paul's on the 17th of January. Archbiſhop Grindal ſign'd an Inſtrument for ſubſtituting Ailmer Biſhop of London to preſide. There was little remarkable done by this Convocation, excepting the Grant of a Subſidy, and an Addreſs made to the Biſhops from the Lower Houſe, for executing the late Book of Articles: To which we may add the Biſhop of London's Reading a Letter from the Privy-Council; in which 'twas mov'd ſome Proviſion might be made to check the Hereſy maintain'd by the Family of Love. Some of the Members were ſtrongly affected with the Diſgrace of Grindal's Sequeſtration. Theſe Men, out of a generous Zeal for their Metropolitan, mov'd againſt entring upon any Buſineſs, or ſo much as granting a Subſidy till the Embargoe was taken off, and the Archbiſhop reſtor'd. But the Majority were too cautious to be govern'd by this Suggeſtion. However, Fuller Reports, they came to an unanimous Reſolution for petitioning the Queen for Grindal's Reſtitution. The Addreſs was drawn by Toby Mathews, Dean of Chriſt-Church. 'Twas penn'd in Latin, in a handſome moving Style, and with a profound Acknowledgment of the Regale. 'Twas preſented, as this Hiſtorian will have it, but fail'd of Succeſs. (l) That ſuch an Addreſs was preſented to the Queen needs not be queſtion'd: But that 'twas paſs'd as an Act of Convocation, is more than appears by the Extracts from the Journal. And beſides, the learned Heylin who peruſed the Convocation Records at length, found no ſuch Petition. (m)

The Clergy of London petition'd this Convocation for Redreſs againſt the Frauds and evaſive Methods practis'd in the City, for detaining the Tythes from the Incumbent. The Complaint in the Addreſs being ſomewhat remarkable, I have put it amongſt the Records. (n)

Jeſuits and others ſent Miſſionaries into England.

This Year ſome Engliſh Jeſuits, moſt diſtinguiſh'd for Learning and Courage, were ſent over into England for the Converſion, as they call it, of the Country. Amongſt theſe Miſſionaries, Robert Parſons and Edmund Campian were the moſt remarkable. And to proportion the Numbers to the Deſign, ſeveral ſecular Prieſts belonging to the Engliſh Seminaries, came along with them. Theſe Men, as Sanders Reports, proſecuting their Miſſion with great Alacrity and Vigour, prevail'd with Abundance of the common People to return to the Communion of Rome, and over and above gain'd ſeveral Perſons of Learning and Quality: And all this in a few Months Time. (o)

(o). Sanders de Schiſm. Angl.

About this Time, Egremond Ratcliff of the Houſe of Suſſex, and another Engliſh Gentleman, were ſeiz'd in Flanders, for attempting the Life of Don John of Auſtria, Governor of the Low Countries. Don John dying ſoon after this Diſcovery, Ratcliff was beheaded at Namur by the Prince of Parma.

'Tis poſſible this Charge of Aſſaſſination might be disbeliev'd in England, and the Two Gentlemen thought to have had hard Meaſure. But let this be as it will, the Face of Affairs abroad, and the Progreſs of the Miſſionaries at home, gave an Alarm to the Government. The Queen took Care it ſhould be publickly reported ſhe was certainly inform'd a League was concerted againſt her at Rome: That the Pope, the King of Spain, and ſeveral Italian Princes had engag'd in the Alliance: That reſtoring their Religion was the Buſineſs of the Treaty. And that all this was done at the Inſtance of the Engliſh Refugees, both Laity and Prieſts: But that her Majeſty relying upon the Protection of Heaven, the Juſtice of her Cauſe, and the Valour and Fidelity of her Subjects, was prepar'd for the Worſt that could happen.

Idem.

As to the Jeſuits, and other Engliſh Miſſionaries, in what Manner they manag'd, and what Hazzards they run in the Enterprize, may be partly collected from Campian's Letter to the General of his Order.

" ſtrike out ſome Heads, and prepare Matter

touch over, and draw to farther Length when I come to my Journeys End. When any Body makes me a Viſit upon the Score of Religion, I either diſcourſe with them, or receive their Confeſſions. In the Morning after Prayers, I preach to the Company, and adminiſter the Sacraments to great Numbers. For in this latter Office I ſeldom Want the Aſſiſtance of ſome Catholick Prieſts my Countrymen. Theſe Men being remarkable for their Learning and Regularity, draw the Regard of the People, and make our Employment leſs Burthenſome. But there are ſo many Snares ſet, ſo many Spies upon us, that 'tis impoſſible to eſcape the Hereticks any long Time. I am in a moſt whimſical Dreſs: But this, and my Name too, I am forc'd to change very often. I ſometimes read Letters, where at the Firſt Sight I meet with the Report of Campian's being Taken. This News is grown ſo common, where'er I go, that the Frequency of the Danger, has almoſt made me Diſregard it, and grow more hardy.

“At this very Time the Perſecution rages in a frightful Manner: The Family where I am, receive nothing but melancholy Advices. We ſcarcely hear of any Thing but the Abſconding, or Impriſonment of our Friends, or the Puniſhing of them in their Eſtates. However, our People move boldly on, and the Satiſfaction they meet with in doing their Duty, is more than a Counterpoiſe to what they ſuffer. A good Conſcience, a glorious Undertaking, an Ardor for the propagating Truth, and an incredible Number of Proſelytes of all Ages, Sexes, and Conditions, are wonderful Encouragements! Hereſy is generally decried, and nothing can be more deſpicable than their Miniſters. 'Twould vex one to ſee ſuch mean, illiterate, and ſcandalous Parſons pretend to govern People of Senſe and Education. But I am juſt now alarm'd with immediate Danger, and therefore can give you nothing farther.

Some of the Miſſionaries dangerous to the Government.

Theſe Miſſionaries are ſaid to manage in a very ſeditious Manner. Some of them were ſo hardy as to affirm the Crown belong'd to the Queen of Scots: That Queen Elizabeth ought to be depos'd: That if the Pope commanded one Thing, and her Majeſty the Contrary, (p) his Holineſs was to be obey'd. Now when Men declar'd thus openly againſt the Government, 'tis no Wonder if they drew a Storm upon themſelves. To prevent the Danger from ſuch a Miſſion, the Queen publiſh'd a Proclamation, commanding, that all thoſe who had either Children, Relations or Wards beyond-Sea, ſhould certify their Names to the Ordinary, and recal them home within Four Months. And in Caſe they refus'd to return, not to ſupply them with Remittances by Bills of Exchange, or any other Way. They were likewiſe forbidden to entertain or ſupport any Jeſuits or ſeminary Prieſts: And that thoſe who fail'd in taking due Notice of the Proclamation, ſhould be proſecuted as Abettors of Rebellion. And laſtly, when they knew where any ſuch Perſons might be found, they were commanded to diſcover them, and put them into the Magiſtrate's Hand, under the Penalties above-mention'd. And that the Strictneſs of the Order might not be ſurprizing, the Proclamation ſets forth, That the Buſineſs of theſe Miſſionaries was not only to gain Proſelytes to their Church, but to embroil the Kingdom, and draw off the Subjects from their Allegiance. Before this Proclamation came out, the Roman Catholicks found themſelves embarraſs'd with the excommunicating Bull, and ſeem'd very uneaſy at ſo rough an Expedient. They took Care to ſuppreſs Sanders's Defence of this Cenſure, and forbid diſputing upon the Pope's Power to excommunicate and depoſe Princes: But all this Caution was not ſufficient to ſilence the Controverſy. When Parſons and Campian were coming for England, they procur'd a Faculty from Pope Gregory the XIVth, to make the Bull more inoffenſive to their own Communion. They deſir'd his Holineſs would pleaſe to explain and qualify the Bull publiſh'd by Pius the Vth. They deſir'd this Inſtrument might be declar'd in Force only againſt Queen Elizabeth and her Adherents: And that the Catholicks might not be affected with the Cenſure, 'till the Juncture ſhould preſent fair, and the Sentence might be executed without Danger. Their Requeſt was granted, and the Bull qualified to this Conſtruction, on the 14th of April this Year.

Idem.

Parſons, a Warm rugged temper'd Man, was very bold and ſeditious in his Diſcourſe, went ſuch extravagant Lengths as to propoſe the Dethroning the Queen; inſomuch that ſome Roman Catholicks deſign'd to ſeize him, and deliver him up to Juſtice. Campian, tho' more modeſt, and of a ſmoother Diſpoſition, offer'd to diſpute with the Engliſh Clergy, and ſent them a publick Challenge. He likewiſe publiſh'd his Decem Rationes in Defence of the Roman Communion. The Book is penn'd in elegant Latin, and manag'd to Advantage. 'Twas anſwer'd by Dr. Whitaker. About this Time one Howlet printed a Tract to diſſuade the Papiſts from going to our Churches.

Idem.

Archbiſhop Grindal being thought too gentle and remiſs in his Management, the Privy-Council wrote to him to complain of the Relaxation of Diſcipline: The Letter ſtands thus:

Regiſt. Grind. fol. 193.

“Whereas the Queen's Majeſty has been inform'd, that divers Perſons within the Province of Canterbury, both of the Common and better Sort, who of late Time have been conformable to the Laws of this Realm concerning Religion, are now fallen away, and have withdrawn themſelves from coming to Church, to the evil Example of others her Majeſty's good Subjects, and to the great Offence of her Highneſs, who does not a little Marvel, by what Means this Relapſe ſhould happen, having deliver'd ſufficient Authority unto your Lordſhip, and others join'd unto you, by Virtue of her Commiſſion Eccleſiaſtical, warranted by the Laws of this Realm. This Year the Lord D'Aubigney came from France to Scotland to make that Court a Viſit. He was nearly related to the Queen, and well recommended by his Behaviour. The young King (for ſo I ſhall call him after the Queen's Reſignation, without pretending to determine any Thing concerning that Diſpute,) much pleas'd with his Converſation, made him Earl of Lenox, and refus'd to part with him. This unexpected Favour drew Envy: And being a Roman Catholick, thoſe who grudg'd him his good Fortune ſpread a Report, that his Buſineſs in coming from France was only to proſelyte the King to the Church of Rome. And thus he became the Averſion of the Preachers. Theſe Men taking the Alarm, declaim'd warmly from the Pulpits that he was tampering with the King's Conſcience; that there was a ſecret Deſign againſt the Church; and that Popery was growing upon them. However, in the late Parliament there were ſeveral Acts paſs'd in Favour of the Reformation. To mention one of them relating to Juriſdiction:

An Act of Parliament in Favour of the Kirk.

> “ Our Soveraine Lord, with Advice of his three Eſtaites of this preſent Parliament, hes declar'd and granted Juriſdiction to the Kirk, quhilk conſiſtis and ſtands in the Preaching of the trew Word of Jeſus Chriſt, Correction of Manners, and Adminiſtration of the halie Sacraments, and declairis that there is na uther Face of Kirk, nor uther Face of Religion, than is preſentlie be the Favour of God eſtabliſched within this Realme, and that there be na uther Juriſdiction Eccleſiaſtical acknowledged within this Realme, uther than that quhilk is, and ſall be, within the ſammin Kirk, or that quhilk flowis theirfra, concerning the Premiſſes. (r)

(r) Jac. vi. 6 Parl. c. 69.

But this Act was drawn in general Terms, and neither the Perſons in whom the Juriſdiction was lodg'd, nor the Extent of their Authority, is ſtated. This Statute therefore came ſhort of Satisfaction to the Aſſembly. The Court look'd upon theſe Divines as too forward and enterprizing. To bring them to more Sobriety, the King not long ſince ſent them a Letter to forbear all Innovations in the Polity of the Church, to let Things reſt till the Meeting of the Eſtates, and not overrun the Parliament. But they gave little Regard to this Letter: They were reſolv'd to reform upon their own Authority, and not wait the Leiſure of the Government. For Inſtance, they call'd the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews to Account for granting Collations to Benefices, and voting in Parliament, without Commiſſion from the Aſſembly. This hardy Incompliance loſt them the King's Favour, made him arreſt their Motion, and ſuperſede their Cenſures and Proceſs.

The King diſpleas'd with the Aſſembly. Spotſwood.

This Miſunderſtanding between the Court and the Aſſembly, encourag'd the Roman Catholicks to declare their Belief more openly. Several Seminary Prieſts came over: And in Paiſley ſome of that Perſwaſion took the Freedom to ſing a Requiem for the Reformation. Theſe Sallies of Indiſcretion rais'd a great Clamour, and fill'd the Country with Complaints; and the Court was charg'd by the Pulpits for countenancing Popery.

The Earl of Lenox recants Popery.

To undeceive the People, and allay theſe Heats, the King ſent for the Miniſters to Edinborough, told them what Pains he had taken to convert his Couſin Lenox; and that he had prevail'd with this Earl to entertain a Proteſtant Divine in his Houſe. He deſir'd therefore that one of their Number might be pitch'd on for this Employment. Mr. David Lindeſay being Maſter of the French Language, and a Perſon of Temper and Addreſs, was recommended, and the Choice approv'd by the King. Lindeſay perform'd to Satisfaction, and in a ſhort Time gain'd the Nobleman, and brought him to recant his Error in St. Giles's Church: But all this was not ſufficient to remove the People's Jealouſies. It ſeems ſome Diſpenſations from Rome were intercepted about this Time. They indulg'd a ſcandalous Latitude, and gave the Roman Catholicks Leave to comply to what Lengths they pleas'd, and ſubſcribe any Articles put upon them: But with this Proviſo, That their Mind ſhould not go along with their Practice; that though their Caution mov'd more at large, their Zeal ſhould continue the ſame; and that they ſhould act behind the Scene for the old Intereſt.

Spotſwood, p. 308.

Theſe Diſpenſations, whether genuine or forg'd, being brought to the King, he order'd his Preacher, Mr. John Craig, to draw up a ſhort Confeſſion of Faith. In this Inſtrument, which moſtly turn'd upon Negatives, the Doctrine and Ceremonies peculiar to the Church of Rome were particularly abjur'd, and a Clauſe inſerted to meet with the Diſpenſations: For the Subſcribers call God to witneſs that they ſign'd heartily and ſincerely, and without any Reſerve or Diſſembling. And to ſet an Example to the Subjects, the King, the Court, and the Council, publickly ſwore, and ſubſcrib'd the Confeſſion. And one Part of this Form was, That they would keep cloſe to the Belief and Conſtitutions of the Scotiſh Church. But when this was done, the Government of the Church was in the Hands of Biſhops and Superintendents: And therefore the ſwearing this Confeſſion can't fairly be urg'd for the Presbyterian Model. Upon the 12th of July this Summer the Aſſembly met at Dundee: And here the Presbyterians after a long Conteſt carried their Point. Their Decree againſt Epiſcopacy is home, and very remarkable. The Reader therefore ſhall have it in the Words of the Manuſcript. (t)

An. Dom. 1580.

(t) MS. Acts of the Aſſem. Fol. 898.

The Aſſembly decree againſt Epiſcopacy.

Foraſmuch as the Office of a Biſhop, as it is now us'd, and commonly taken within this Realm, has no ſure Warrant, Authority, or good Ground, out of the Scriptures, but brought in by the Folly and Corruption of Mens Inventions, to the great Overthrow of the true Kirk of God; The whole Aſſembly of the Kirk in one Voice (after Liberty given to all Men to reaſon in the Matter, none opponing himſelf in Defence of the ſaid pretended Office) Finds and Declares the ſame pretended Office us'd and term'd, as is aboveſaid, unlawful in it ſelf, as having neither Foundation, Ground, nor Warrant, within the Word of God: And ordains, That all ſuch Perſons as enjoy, or ſhall hereafter enjoy, the ſaid Office, ſhall be charg'd Simpliciter, to demit, quit, and leave off, the ſame, as an Office whereunto they are not called by God. And ſicklike to deſiſt and ceaſe from all Preaching, Miniſtration of the Sacraments, or uſing any Way the Office of Paſtors, till they receive de novo Admiſſion from the General Aſſembly of the Kirk, under the Pain of Excommunication to be us'd againſt them. Wherein if they be found found Diſobedient, or contravene this Act in any Point, the Sentence of Excommunication, after due Admonition, is to be executed againſt them.

Thus to pronounce againſt the univerſal Practice of the Church for 1500 Years together, was a hardy Stroak, and peculiar to the Courage of theſe Aſſemblies. And beſides, their Decree was no leſs Impolitick than Novel: For had their Order taken immediate Effect, as it did not, 'twould only have given a freſh Opportunity for Sacrilege; for when the Biſhops were once ſet aſide, and their Sees left vacant, they might eaſily imagine the Laity would fly upon the Spoil, as it afterwards happen'd. However, theſe Presbyterian Reformers were reſolv'd to try their Credit, and puſh the Matter. To this Purpoſe they ordain, That a Synodal Aſſembly ſhall be holden in every Province where any Uſurping Biſhops are: The Synod was to begin the 17th Day of Auguſt next enſuing: Hither the Biſhops were to be ſummon'd by the Viſitors of the ſaid Country. The Biſhop of St. Andrews was to compear in St. Andrews, the Biſhop of Aberdeen in Aberdeen, the Biſhop of Glaſcow in Glaſcow, the Biſhop of Murray in Elgin, to give Obedience to the ſaid Act, which if they refuſe to do, the ſaid Synodal Aſſemblies ſhall appoint certain Brethren of the Miniſtry to give them publick Admonition in their Pulpit, and warn them, in caſe they diſobey, to compear before the next General Aſſembly at Edinborough upon the 20th of October next enſuing, to hear the Sentence of Excommunication pronounc'd againſt them for their Diſobedience. To this Act, as the Manuſcript goes on, the Biſhop of Dunblain ſubmitted himſelf.

Ibid.

The Earl of Lenox being deſirous to gain the good Opinion of the Church, ſent Sir William Steward to the General Aſſembly with a Letter, importing, That they were not unacquainted with his being brought over to a right Perſwaſion in religious Matters: That he preferr'd this Bleſſing to all ſecular Advantage whatſoever: That he had publickly renounc'd his Miſtakes, and ſubſcrib'd the negative Confeſſion: And that if any Thing farther was requir'd, he was ready to perform it. But all this Profeſſion of Clear-dealing, all this Reſigning to their Pleaſure, could not make him believ'd: He was ſtill charg'd with Hypocriſy, and roughly treated by the Preachers. (u)

Nichols, a Jeſuit, recants.

May, 1581.

John Nichols, a Jeſuit, committed to the Tower, renounc'd the Communion of the Church of Rome before a conſiderable Audience. He likewiſe publiſh'd the Reaſons which brought him off from his former Perſwaſion. The Privy Council gave Archbiſhop Grindal an Account of this Matter in a Letter, and deſir'd him to write to his Suffragans to provide for this Convert 'till ſome Preferment fell. * This Nichols, as Sanders relates, preach'd in the Tower-Chapel to ſeveral Roman Catholick Prieſts, who were forc'd to hear him. That he was cried up by the Proteſtants as one of the moſt Learned of his Order: That he was particularly regarded by the Pope: That he us'd to preach before the Cardinals: That he was an eminent Philoſopher and Divine, and Maſter of almoſt all Learning and Languages: But that all this was nothing but a Flouriſh: That in his printed Recantation he had miſreported the Pope, the Cardinals, the Engliſh College, the Jeſuits, and all the Orders of the Religious and Clergy, in a ſcandalous Manner: And that within a Month after the publiſhing his Narrative, there came out a Book call'd Nichols's Detection: That in this Anſwer 'twas clearly prov'd that he was neither Divine nor Philoſopher, Jeſuit nor Prieſt: That he had neither Learning nor Languages: That he had never preach'd before the Pope or the Cardinals, unleſs his abjuring Calviniſm at Rome in the Inquiſition-Court may be call'd Preaching. July, 1581.

This Summer in July Cox, Biſhop of Ely, departed this Life.

The Queen, as ſhe had Reaſon, was much diſpleas'd with the Gaping Gulph. She publiſh'd a Proclamation againſt the Libel, in which ſhe declares the Duke of Anjou had a friendly Diſpoſition to the Proteſtants: That ſhe deeply reſented the outraging a Prince of ſuch Quality and Merit: A Prince who never ſo much as deſir'd the leaſt Alteration in Church or State: And that Simiere, who had a publick Character, and attended the Duke, was a prudent inoffenſive Perſon. And in ſhort, the Subject was admoniſh'd to look upon this Libel as no better than the Production of Treaſon: And that 'twas written on Purpoſe to embroil her Kingdoms, and miſreport her abroad.

This Book being written by a Puritan, as hath been obſerv'd, made the Queen more diſaffected to that Party. Not long after John Stubbs, of Lincolns-Inn, who married Cartwright's Siſter, was ſeized for the Author of this Pamphlet. Page, who diſpers'd the Copies, and Singleton the Printer, were likewiſe committed. They were tried upon the Statute of the Firſt and Second of Philip and Mary, and had Judgment to loſe their Right Hand. The Sentence was executed upon Stubbs and Page, but the Printer was pardon'd. Some of the Long Robe pretended the Statute was expir'd, and cried out againſt the Illegality of the Sentence: But Sir Chriſtopher Wray, Lord Chief Juſtice of England, maintain'd the Judgment of the Court, prov'd that the Act pointed expreſly againſt thoſe that ſhould write any ſeditious Pamphlet againſt the King, and that the King of England never dies. He obſerv'd farther, that this Statute was reviv'd in the firſt Year of the preſent Reign, and was to continue in Force during the Queen's Life, and the Heirs of her Body. (t)

The Duke of Anjou being now at the Engliſh Court, continued to ſolicit his Marriage: As for the Queen, ſhe was willing to quiet the Apprehenſions of the People, and Silence the Reports touching the Toleration of Popery. For this Purpoſe, after great Importunity, ſhe conſented to proceed to ſome Extremities. And thus to ſtop the Clamours againſt the Government, Edmund Campian Jeſuit, Ralph Sherwin, Luke Kirby, and Alexander Briant, Prieſts, were tried for High Treaſon upon the 25th of Edward the Third. They were charg'd in the Indictment with compaſſing the Queen's Death, and adhering to the Biſhop of Rome; and that they came into England to raiſe a Rebellion, and ſubvert the Government. In ſhort, the Jury brought them in guilty, and they were executed ſoon after. Sanders reports, That Campian was betray'd by one Elliot, of the ſame Religion: That he was laid in Irons, ſet three or four Times upon the Rack in the Tower, and miſerably tortur'd: And that after the Trial both this Jeſuit, and the other three Prieſts, had the Promiſe of Pardon and Preferment, provided they would own the Unwarrantableneſs of their Miſſion, and that the Queen was Head of the Church. (y) Camden, who is an Author of Credit, is more particular in the Narrative, and falls in with Sanders in ſome Meaſure. He relates that theſe Priſoners were very ſtubborn and unrelenting in maintaining the Pope's Authority againſt the Queen: That Campian, after he was caſt, being ask'd whether Elizabeth was a lawful Sovereign or not, refuſed to anſwer. And being demanded farther, That in caſe the Pope invaded the Queen, whether he would ſide with him or her Majeſty? He openly declar'd, he would ſtand by his Holineſs, and gave his Opinion under his Hand. Not long after ſeveral other Papiſts ſuffer'd upon the ſame Score; whereas but five of that Perſwaſion had been executed for the laſt ten Years. Cambden takes Notice that the Neceſſity of the Times forc'd the Queen upon theſe Severities: That ſhe declar'd herſelf always averſe againſt puniſhing People for their Conſcience; but when Principles and Catholick Religion was made a Pretence for Plotting and Treaſon, ſhe was forc'd to ſtrike: That as for the greateſt Part of theſe Popiſh Prieſts, ſhe did not believe them directly engag'd in a Practice againſt the State; but being abſolutely under Command, they might be made Tools at the Pleaſure of their Superiors: That many of them were miſerably perverted in their Principles, appear'd by their Anſwer to Interrogatories; for being apprehended, and the Queſtion put, Whether by Vertue of Pope Pius the Fifth's Bull, Subjects were ſo far diſcharg'd from their Allegiance as to make their Riſing upon the Government lawful? Whether they thought her a rightful Queen? Whether they would maintain Sanders and Briſtoe's Opinion touching the Authority and Obligatorineſs of the Bull? And whether if the Pope ſhould furniſh an Expedition againſt the Queen, they would join his Forces? To theſe Interrogatories they either ſaid nothing, or gave ambiguous, evaſive, or provoking Anſwers; inſomuch, that ſome of the more candid Roman Catholicks began to ſuſpect them for foul Practice. And to prevent the Imputation of Diſloyalty upon the whole Party, John Biſhop, a hearty Papiſt, wrote againſt theſe High-fliers of the Court of Rome. This honeſt Author made it plainly appear, that the Canon of the Council of Lateran, for abſolving Subjects from their Allegiance, and depoſing Princes, was plainly a Forgery: That this Authority was nothing more than the Decree of Pope Innocent the Third: That 'twas never receiv'd in England: And in fine, that there was no Canons paſs'd by the Fathers of that Council. (z) Cambden goes on, and complains that the Apprehenſions of publick Danger encreas'd by the Numbers of Seminary Prieſts, who were continually coming over: That theſe Miſſionaries tamper'd privately with the People, and endeavour'd to diſengage them from their Allegiance. They were ſo hardy, as this Hiſtorian reports, as to pronounce, That excommunicated Princes ought to be depos'd: That thoſe who profeſs'd the Proteſtant Religion had no Right either to the Title or Authority of Sovereigns: That the Clergy were privileg'd from the Cognizance of Secular Courts, and not bound by the Laws of the State: That the Pope was Lord of the Univerſe, and Supream even in Temporals: That there was no lawful Magiſtracy in England: And that whatever was done by the Queen's Authority ſince ſhe ſtood excommunicated, was altogether void and unobligatory. To go back, and begin the Year in Scotland: The Earl of Morton, the late Regent, was charged with High-Treaſon by the Earl of Arran, and afterwards try'd and found guilty. This Nobleman being all along in the Engliſh Intereſt, Queen Elizabeth endeavour'd to preſerve him. To this Purpoſe Sir Thomas Randolph was diſpatched with a publick Character to the Scotch Court. He ſolicited ſtrongly for Morton, urg'd his Service to the Kingdom, and hop'd his Miſtreſs the Queen ſhould not be refus'd in ſo reaſonable a Requeſt. The King anſwer'd, The ſtopping the Courſe of Juſtice was impracticable, and unbecoming a Prince: That he was ſenſible of the Queen of England's kind Intentions, and ſhould forbear doing any Thing which might give a juſt Occaſion of Diſpleaſure.

The Engliſh Ambaſſador endeavours to reſcue the Earl of Morton, but without Effect.

Randolph having afterwards Leave to come into the Parliament-Houſe, put the States in Mind how much their Nation had been obliged by Queen Elizabeth, and endeavour'd to diſcredit the Evidence againſt Morton: But finding his Rhetorick made little Impreſſion, he applied to another Expedient; and addreſſing himſelf to Morton's Friends, and thoſe who envied the Duke of Lenox, he began to lament the Misfortune of their Country, dilated upon the Danger of the Juncture, complain'd of the Ingratitude in ſlighting the Queen's Interceſſion, and privately ſuggeſted the attempting by Force what they could not carry by Argument and Reaſon; promiſing them withal, that neither Engliſh Money nor Men ſhould be wanting to the Enterprize. Several of the Nobility engag'd upon this Encouragement; but finding the King firm to the Duke of Lenox, and prepar'd to appear in the Field, they grew moſt of them diſhearten'd, and ventur'd nothing. By the Way, Queen Elizabeth had order'd ſome Troops to march to the Borders for Morton's Reſcue: But theſe Succours, and the Plotting of his Party, ſerv'd only to haſten his Execution. The Queen's Interpoſing thus far in Behalf of Morton has a ſingular Aſpect, and looks like a Strain of Politicks. (b) The Earl of Morton confeſs'd at his Death, that Bothwell and Archibald Dowglaſs had acquainted him with their Deſign of aſſaſſinating the late King; and that the Times were then ſo nice, that he durſt make no Diſcovery. He likewiſe could not deny, but that after the Murder was committed he took the Regicide Dowglaſs into Favour and Intimacy, and ſign'd an Inſtrument to ſtand by Bothwell in caſe he was proſecuted. The Second Book of Diſcipline paſs'd.

At the General Aſſembly held at Glaſcow the Second Book of Diſcipline paſs'd, and was order'd to be enter'd on Record: The Decree ſtands thus;

Foraſmuch as Travels has been taken in the Forming the Policy of the Kirk, and divers Suits made to the Magiſtrate for Approbation thereof, which albeit has not taken the happy Effect which good Men deſire, yet that Poſterity ſhould judge well of the preſent Age, and of the Meaning of the Kirk, The Aſſembly has concluded that the Book of Policy, agreed to in divers Aſſemblies before, ſhould be regiſter'd in the Acts of the Kirk; and to remain therein ad perpetuam Rei Memoriam; and the Copies thereof to be taken by every Presbyter. (d)

'Tis oppos'd by ſeveral Perſons of Character.

'Tis pretended this Second Book of Diſcipline was paſs'd by the whole Aſſembly Nemine contradicente. (e) But this is a great Miſtake, as may be made good from ſeveral Inſtances. For the Purpoſe; The Laird of Dune, Superintendent of Angus, a Man of Character, and a celebrated Preacher, could never endure this Democratical Model to take Place within his Juriſdiction of Angus and Merne: And when Andrew Melvil pretended to meddle within his Precinct, he expoſtulated ſharply with him, and told him he would prove the Bane of the Scotch Church. John Spotſwood, Superintendent of Lothian and the Mers, always declar'd againſt the Presbyterian Scheme, and us'd to ſay, thoſe hot-headed Miniſters, unleſs timely reduc'd, would ruin all: And though he had nothing to object againſt the Doctrine of the Reformation, yet he believ'd the Government of the ancient Church preferable to that in Scotland. John Windram, Superintendent of Fiſe, and Subprior of St. Andrews; George Hayes, one of the Commiſſioners, a Perſon of extraordinary Merit; Alexander Albuthnot, Rector of the Univerſity of Aberdeen; Robert Pont, Moderator of this Glaſcow Aſſembly; David Lindeſay, afterwards Biſhop of Roſſe; Andrew Pollard, and Thomas Smeaton; all of them diſtinguiſh'd for Learning and Capacity, not to mention a great many others, oppos'd the Paſſing this Second Book of Diſcipline; though at laſt, when they thought their Struggling would be to no Purpoſe, they went over to the ignorant Majority. To theſe may be added Patrick Adamſon and Jame Boyde, Archbiſhops of St. Andrews and Glaſcow; David Cunningham, Biſhop of Aberdeen; and Nigell Campbell, Biſhop of Argyle. Theſe Prelates, who were all Gentlemen of Figure, and a Credit to their Order, made a handſome Stand againſt the Men of Parity, and never drop'd the Point, 'till at laſt they were hooted by the Mob, and found it neceſſary to decline the Aſſemblies.

Balcanquel complain'd off for outraging the Duke of Lenox.

About this Time Walter Balcanquel, one of the Miniſters of Edinborough, fell foul upon the Duke of Lenox, and preach'd at an unmannerly Rate. He ſaid, That theſe laſt four Years Popery had gain'd Ground in the Country and the Court: That 'twas maintain'd in the King's Hall by the Tyranny of a great Champion, who was call'd Grace. After this, he predicted the Duke's Misfortune, and made a Gingle upon his Title. (f) The King ſent James Melvil, a Gentleman of his Houſhold, to complain of this Rudeneſs to the Aſſembly, and required them to call Balcanquel to an Account. At his Defence, he thank'd God for the Advantage the Church had gain'd upon the Court; for when he was formerly queſtion'd for a Sermon, the Council undertook the Cognizance of the Cauſe, and made themſelves Judges of the Miniſters Doctrine; but now he perceiv'd the Complaint was referr'd to the Aſſembly. To this Juriſdiction he willingly ſubmitted: But deſiring withal, that the Apoſtles Order might be obſerv'd in the Proceſs; and that the Charge againſt an Elder might not be receiv'd without two or three Witneſſes.

The Iſſue.

Idem.

The Aſſembly acquainted the Court they were ready to try Balcanquel; but that the Privilege he inſiſted on could not be refuſed upon the Score of his being a Presbyter. The King finding the Buſineſs would be embaraſs'd for want of the Evidence requir'd, drop'd the Proſecution. But this would not ſatisfie Balcanquel: He was reſolv'd to puſh for a Triumph. Thus he preſs'd the Aſſembly to declare whether he had delivered any Thing ſcandalous or offenſive in his Sermon: For the Members, it ſeems, made Part of the Audience. When the Queſtion was put, they came to a Reſolution, that the Sermon was uxexceptionable; at which the Court was not a little diſpleas'd.

Mongommery made Archbiſhop of Glaſcow.

He is cited before the Aſſembly, declines their Juriſdiction, and is excommunicated.

The next Year, the Church of Scotland met with a rude Shock. The Occaſion was this; Maſter Robert Mongommery, a Miniſter of Sterling, was nominated to the Archbiſhoprick of Glaſcow. This Man was not much practis'd either in Men or Books: And beſides, no Body had appear'd more ſtrongly againſt Epiſcopacy than himſelf. For at the late Synod at Glaſcow, when Mr. David Lindeſay diſſented to the Vote for ſuppreſſing the Juriſdiction of Biſhops, and mov'd the Matter might be poſtpon'd to the next Aſſembly, Mongommery ſtood up, and told him, that the Motion went extremely againſt his Conſcience; and that Lindeſay's Pleading for ſo very corrupt an Order was enough to diſcharge him from all Buſineſs in the Church. The Duke of Lenox recommended this Mongommery to the King, and got him preferr'd to the See of Glaſcow. This was done at the Inſtance of thoſe who conſulted the Duke's Intereſt more than his Honour: For Mongommery being a mercenary Man, convey'd the Lordſhips and Profits of the Archbiſhoprick to the Duke of Lenox, upon the Conſideration of a Thouſand Pound per Annum Scotch. The Miniſters reſenting this ſcandalous Alienation, ſummon'd him to Sterling before the Synod, and upon his refuſing to appear, ſuſpended him from his Function. Mongommery took no Notice of the Sentence, but manag'd in his Poſt as formerly. This being interpreted a high Contempt, he was cited to the Aſſembly at St. Andrews. The King, who knew his Crime lay only in taking the Title and Juriſdiction of Biſhop, order'd the Proceſs ſhould be ſtop'd, and unleſs they acquieſc'd, to break up their Aſſembly. Thus the Diſpute ſlept for the preſent. But the Miniſters wanting Temper to govern their Diſguſt, excommunicated him ſoon after, without going thorough the cuſtomary Methods and Forms of Law. The King taking theſe Proceedings for an Affront, declar'd the Cenſure void, and ſent Mongommery into his Dioceſe with Orders not to diſturb him.

The King ſeiz'd by a Faction at Ruthen. Aug. 1582.

(g) Spotſwood Refutat. Libell. de Regim. Eccles. Scott. & Church Hiſt.

Not long after, a Commotion happen'd of another Kind. The Nobility were now broken into Parties, and the factious Diviſion pretending the Intereſt of Religion to cover their Practice, ſome of the Miniſters join'd them: For this they were charg'd with high Miſdemeanors, and put under Bail. This Piece of Juſtice was conſtrued Perſecution. The Pulpits declaim'd ſtrongly upon the Subject. They cry'd out, the Church was harraſs'd, the Court deſerted from the Faith, and the old ſuperſtitious Ceremonies were return'd upon them. This Ferment gave the diſcontented Part of the Nobility a handle to execute their Plot: And thus the King was ſurpriz'd at Ruthen, and kept under Reſtraint. The Duke of Lenox was baniſh'd the Court, the Earl of Arran impriſon'd, a great many of the Royaliſts ſeiz'd, and ſome of them dangerouſly wounded. This Conſpiracy was juſtified by the Miniſters in Print: 'Twas likewiſe unanimouſly approv'd by the Aſſembly at Edinborough, who voted the Faction Aſſertors of the publick Liberty, and menac'd thoſe with Excommunication that ſhould treat them with any Marks of Diſadvantage. As for the Duke of Lenox, he was forc'd to acquieſce under all this Hardſhip, and return into France. He took his Journey through England, where either through the Rigour of the Winter Seaſon, or the Uneaſineſs of his Mind, he fell into a Dyſentery, and died ſoon after at Paris. He complain'd of the ill Uſage he receiv'd from the Scotch Miniſters, but died notwithſtanding in the Communion of the Reform'd. (g)

To proceed; The Lords of the Ruthen-Conſpiracy forc'd the King to diſſemble his Reſtraint, and approve what was done in a Letter to the Queen of England: And over and above, to declare the Convention of the Eſtates ſummon'd by the Faction a lawful Meeting.

An Embaſſy from France to Scotland.

When the French King was appriz'd of theſe Diſturbances, he diſpatch'd Monſieur Lamotte, and Monſieur Meneville with a publick Character to Scotland. Their Inſtructions were to attempt the King's Liberty, and bring the Court to a cloſer Correſpondence with France. They were likewiſe to congratulate the King upon his Mother's Conceſſions: That her Majeſty out of her Tenderneſs was willing to indulge him the Royal Style, and take him into a Partnerſhip in the Government. That by the Queen's Ceſſion thus far, he would be own'd a lawful Sovereign by foreign Princes. All his own Subjects likewiſe would acquieſce in his Title: And thus the Diviſions in the State would be perfectly clos'd. Some Time before the Arrival of theſe Ambaſſadors, the Queen of Scots wrote a Letter to Queen Elizabeth. 'Tis penn'd with great Plainneſs and Force, and contains a Narrative of the Hardſhips ſhe had ſuffer'd. I ſhall tranſlate it from Cambden, who abridg'd it from the Original in French.

The Queen of Scots expoſtulating Letter to the Queen.

Madam,

“Being certainly inform'd the Rebels have ſurpriz'd my Son, and afraid of his falling into the ſame Calamity with my ſelf, I could not help letting looſe my Grief, and trying to bring your Majeſty to a Sympathy: That by a brief Report of my Misfortunes, my Innocence may be tranſmitted to Poſterity, together with the Infamy of thoſe People who brought me into this Condition. But ſince their Practices, how wicked ſoever, have been favourably entertain'd by you, and gain'd a Preference to my juſt Complaints: Since Equity and Right muſt ſtoop to your Scepter, and Truth give Way to Force as the World goes, I ſhall make my Appeal to God Almighty, who is only our Sovereign. For with Reſpect to our ſelves, we are both Princes, equal and independent of each other. To this God, who ſees through Varniſh and falſe Colours, I ſhall addreſs my ſelf, beſeeching him to deal with us both at the laſt Day according to our Merits. For I am not afraid to put my Fate upon this Iſſue, notwithſtanding my Enemies have us'd a great Deal of miſrepreſenting Art, endeavour'd to blacken me, and blanch their own Proceedings. To refreſh your Memory therefore with this ſolemn Introduction; I deſire you would recollect what Methods ſome of your Agents have made uſe of to debauch my Subjects, and raiſe a Rebellion while I was in Scotland: And what Pains they have taken to bring all the Misfortunes upon me which have ſince happen'd. And for this Point Morton's Confeſſion, and other Teſtimonies publickly produc'd, are ſufficient Evidence. As for Morton, his Revolt was his Merit, and rais'd him to his pretended Regency. If this Man had been left to the Law, and you had not ſupported the Rebels, they could never have diſtreſs'd me in this Manner, nor overturn'd the Government.

“While I was kept Priſoner in Lock-leven, your Ambaſſador Throgmorton adviſ'd me to ſign a Reſignation: This extorted Inſtrument he ſolemnly declar'd would be of no Force, and ſo 'twas look'd on by all Mankind 'till you countenanc'd the Contrivers of this Compulſion, and reinforc'd them with your Troops and Exchequer. Now I deſire you would conſult your Conſcience, and tell me whether you'l allow your own Subjects any ſuch Authority upon your ſelf? But thus by Concerting with my Enemies, and turning your Arms againſt me, the Government was ſeiz'd, and the Adminiſtration transferr'd upon my Son, tho' then in the Cradle. And when I lately intended to make him a rightful Prince, he was ſurpriz'd by a Party of Traitors, who, without Queſtion, deſign to ſerve him as they have done his Mother, and it may be, take his Life over and above.

After this, ſhe puts Queen Elizabeth in Mind of the Diamond ſhe ſent her, and the Encouragement ſhe receiv'd from this Princeſs to retire into England: But this having been mention'd already, needs not be repeated. After this ſhe complains ſhe was ſtop'd in her Journey, and guarded off into Cuſtody: And that her Durance from that Time forward has been more afflicting than Death it ſelf.

“To juſtify this Uſage, continues the Queen of Scots, I know you'l object my Correſpondence with the Duke of Norfolk: But I poſitively deny there was ever any Harm intended you, or your Kingdom in that Negotiation. Indeed that Buſineſs was approv'd by the principal Nobility of your Council. I have their Hands to produce for Evidence: And beſides, they expreſly promis'd to procure your Conſent. Now I deſire to know whether 'tis likely Men of ſuch Quality, and Miniſters of State ſhould undertake to draw you to a ruinous Compliance; ſhould betray you to a Buſineſs that would diſſerve your Honour, and lay your Life and Government at Mercy? And yet you are pleas'd to be willing all the World ſhould believe this.

“And when ſome of my miſled Subjects began to recollect themſelves, and repent their Revolt; when the Conference at York had convinc'd them how hardly I was us'd; when upon theſe Motives they return'd to their Duty and declar'd for me, your Forces march'd down immediately upon them, beſieg'd them in Edinborough Caſtle: And here the Iſſue was remarkably calamitous: For the Governor was ignominiouſly executed, and another Miniſter of State diſpatch'd with Poiſon. * And all this was done after I had ſent an Order at your Inſtance, for a Ceſſation of Arms. This Truce was agreed in Proſpect of a farther Accommodation: But whether my Enemies had ever any Thoughts of Peace, is beſt known to God Almighty.

* The Queen means Grange and Lethington.

“I was now reſolv'd to reſign to my Captivity: To ſubmit to every Thing impos'd, and try if Patience could mend my Condition. But even here I was diſappointed. For all Communication between Me and my Son has been wholly cut off for this Twelvemonth. And what can this be contriv'd for but to diſconcert the neareſt Relation, and make the Mother and Son, if 'tis poſſible, Strangers to each other?

“I have frequently propos'd an Accommodation between us: This was done at Chatſworth about Eleven Years ſince: 'Twas afterwards undertaken by Commiſſioners, by the French King's Ambaſſadors, and by mine: And laſt Winter I treated my ſelf with your Agent Beale. But I have all along had the Misfortune to have my Terms rejected: New Scruples have been ſtarted, and the Treaties drawn out to unneceſſary Length. My offers have been look'd on as inſidious, and my ſincerity always miſunderſtood. In fine, the long Patience I have compos'd my ſelf to, has turn'd to no other Account than to ſet a Precedent for future Hardſhips, and make me ill treated by a Sort of Preſcription: For at preſent I am us'd more like a mean Slave, than a Priſoner of Quality. In earneſt, I cannot hold out under this Hardſhip much longer:

“But let the Iſſue be what it will, I am tolerably prepar'd: If I die, I am reſolv'd to declare who they are that ſent me into the other World: But if I live, I hope to be in a Condition to ſilence the Calumnies, and diſarm the Malice of my Enemies, and paſs the Remainder of my Time in ſome better Repoſe.

“To go to the Bottom therefore of Matters, and put an End to the Miſunderſtandings between us: I deſire the Evidence of the Spaniards lately taken in Ireland, may be brought into View; let the Examination of the Jeſuits be produc'd; let every Body be encourag'd to exhibit a publick Charge againſt me, provided I may have the Liberty of Defending my ſelf, and not be condemn'd without a Hearing. The vileſt Malefactors are allow'd to plead againſt the Indictment, and confront the Witneſs: Why is the Privilege of the meaneſt and worſt Mortal denied to a Queen? To one who is your neareſt Relation, and next in Succeſſion to the Crown? But this Proximity of Blood is the main Grievance: This is that which diſturbs my Enemies, and puts them upon their Utmoſt to create Miſunderſtandings between us. One would think they need not afflict themſelves upon this Score. But to ſet them at Eaſe, I declare before Almighty God, I have thought of Reigning no where but in Heaven, this long Time. But as for your ſelf, you are oblig'd by all the Ties of Juſtice, Blood, and Religion, not to prejudice my Son's Right after my Deceaſe; nor to abet the underhand Deſigns of thoſe, who make it their Buſineſs to finiſh the Ruine both of Mother and Son. That ſome of your own Subjects are in this Practice, is evident from the Management of your Ambaſſadors in Scotland, who endeavour'd to throw Things into a Ferment, and manag'd to a ſcandalous Degree. And tho', without Doubt, you knew nothing of this, yet I am aſſur'd the Earl of Huntington had a great Share in their Miſbehaviour.

“Is it reaſonable a Queen Mother ſhould not only be barr'd aſſiſting her Son, but not ſo much as allow'd to be acquainted with his Circumſtances? If the Ambaſſadors diſpatch'd to Scotland meant him any Service, their taking my Directions by the Way, might have recommended their Meſſage; at leaſt, if this friendly Method had been taken, I ſhould have look'd on't as a Favour from the Queen of England. I can't perceive any Reaſon why the Journey of your Agents ſhould have been ſo privately carried: Or why I was kept under ſo ſtreight a Confinement at that Time? To ſpeak clearly, I intreat you would change your Miniſtry for the Scotch Affairs: For tho' I believe Cary * will do nothing unbecoming his Quality, yet Huntington has miſbehav'd himſelf ſo far, that I have no Reaſon to expect any Good from his Management.

“I conjure you therefore by the near Relation between us, that you would provide in earneſt for my Son's Preſervation, and not interpoſe in the Affairs of Scotland, without conſulting me, or the French King: And that you would look upon thoſe as no better than Traitors, who keep my Son under Confinement, and drag him about the Country againſt his Will. And laſtly, by the Death and Paſſion of our bleſſed Saviour, I beg of you, I may be enlarg'd upon honourable Terms after ſo long a Reſtraint, and be permitted to live ſomewhere out of England. That being thus reſtor'd to Liberty and Eaſe, I may recover ſome Part of my Health which has ſuffer'd ſo much by the Dureſſe I have lain under. By your granting this Requeſt, both my ſelf, and my Friends, and particularly my Son, will be ever oblig'd to you. Neither ſhall I ever ceaſe to importune you 'till my Requeſt is granted. My very ill Health puts me upon ſoliciting thus earneſtly: Be pleas'd therefore to give Order I may be treated with more Humanity, for otherwiſe 'tis impoſſible for me to hold out: And let the Appointment be ſettled by your ſelf, for I deſire not to be referr'd to the Diſpoſal of any Body elſe; whatever Share of good or ill Fortune happens to me for the Future, I ſhall reckon it all to your Majeſty. I entreat you would Favour me with your Pleaſure, either in a Line or Two, or by the French Ambaſſador. The Earl of Shrewsbury's Propoſals can give me no Satisfaction, for they are alter'd every Day. When I wrote lately to your Privy-Council, your Order was, I ſhould apply to none but your ſelf. I am afraid this Direction came from ſome unfriendly Hand: And that thoſe who are my Enemies at the Board adviſ'd this Method to preclude me from Juſtice and a fair Hearing: For had my Complaints been laid before the whole Council, theſe Men 'tis likely were apprehenſive ſome of the Lords would have thought themſelves bound in Honour to diſſuade the Hardſhips put upon me. And now, ſince my Thoughts ought to be moſtly on the other World, my principal Requeſt is, That I may have ſome Catholick Prieſt to aſſiſt me in the Direction of my Conſcience. This charitable Office is never denied to the meaneſt Wretches. You allow the Ambaſſadors of foreign Princes the Exerciſe of their Religion; and I freely granted the ſame Liberty to my own Subjects. If this is refuſ'd me, I hope God will pardon my imperfect Preparation, and am afraid my Enemies will not go unpuniſh'd upon this Score. If I, who am an independent Queen, and your near Kinſwoman, am us'd in this Manner, it may be of ill Conſequence to Proteſtancy in foreign Countries: It may ſerve for a Precedent of Rigour to other Princes, to treat their own Subjects accordingly. That I am your neareſt Relation, I ſhall not forget to ſuggeſt, tho' my Enemies are never ſo much diſturb'd about it. I don't deſire any large Houſhold: But Two Women more to aſſiſt me under my ill Health, is altogether Neceſſary: I move for nothing but bare Humanity: Pray don't let my Enemies have the malicious Pleaſure in ſeeing me diſappointed in ſo ſlender a Gratification. I perceive Lord Shrewsbury has charg'd me with ſomewhat of a Failure: And that I promiſ'd Beale not to tranſact about Reſigning to my Son, without your Knowledge. I deſire you would not give Credit to Beale's Report. I promiſ'd nothing but upon certain Conditions: And therefore there is no Reaſon I ſhould be tied, till your Part of the Stipulation is perform'd. However, I have never received any Anſwer touching the Propoſals, neither has the leaſt Notice been taken of them: But on the other Hand, the Deſigns in Scotland for ruining Me and my Son, have been all along carried on. This Silence I could interpret to nothing but a Repulſe: And that I took it in this Senſe, I acquainted your Council in a Letter. What Advices I receiv'd from the French King and his Mother, I laid frankly before you, and deſir'd your Opinion upon the Caſe: But a Word of Anſwer was never return'd. As for reſigning my Affairs and my Country to your Award, without knowing how you ſtood affected, was never my Intention. To have deliver'd up my ſelf thus abſolutely, could not have been done without great Indiſcretion. How my Enemies in Scotland triumph over me, and the Captive Prince my Son, is not unknown to you. I have offer'd at nothing there that can do you any Diſſervice: My Aim has been only to ſettle a ſolid Peace in that Kingdom, for which I may be ſuppoſed as heartily concern'd as your Council, in Regard my Intereſt in that Affair is much bigger than theirs. In ſhort, I had a Mind to give my Son the Title of a King: To ſettle him in the Government, and put an End to all Miſunderſtandings. This I conceive was putting the Crown on his Head, and not taking it off, as ſome People would have it. But my Enemies grudge us this Happineſs, and being conſcious of Miſbehaviour, are afraid of an Accommodation.

“Don't let theſe Men, and the reſt of my Enemies impoſe upon you by Miſrepreſentation: Don't give them Leave to deſtroy your neareſt Relations, as it were in your Sight; 'tis poſſible their wicked Deſigns may be more myſterious than you imagine: 'Tis poſſible the Project may reach beyond the Ruin of Me and my Son, and terminate in your ſelf. What Account, either in Intereſt or Honour, can you find, in ſuffering theſe Men to keep my Son and Me, and your Self too, at ſo long and unhappy a Diſtance? Be pleas'd to refreſh your good Nature, act by your own Impulſe, and oblige your Self: And ſince you are a Queen, diſcharge your Diſguſt towards a Perſon of the ſame Dignity: One who is nearly related, and loves you heartily: That by this means Things being adjuſted, I may die better ſatisfied. And that my doleful Complaints may not come up to God Almighty; whoſe Majeſty I daily Addreſs, That my very compaſſionable Caſe may at laſt be conſider'd by you.

She takes her Leave thus:

Voſtre tres deſolé plusproche Parente

Et Affectioneè Seure, Marie R.

This Letter affected Queen Elizabeth, and put her Thoughts in ſomewhat of a Ferment. Her Firſt Step was, the diſpatching Robert Beale, Clerk of the Council, to expoſtulate with the Queen of Scots upon her Remonſtrance. Beale, a warm ſow'r temper'd Man, was join'd in Commiſſion with the Earl of Shrewsbury to treat the Enlargement of this Princeſs. This Affair was afterwards laid before the Council-Board, where the Majority gave their Opinion for her being ſet at Liberty upon the following Articles.

“That ſhe ſhould put up no Claim to the Crown of England, during Queen Elizabeth's Life, and that afterwards ſhe ſhould refer her Right of Succeſſion to the Engliſh Parliament. *

There are ſeveral other Articles which have been mention'd already: “But in the laſt Place, to ſecure clear Dealing, and that ſhe might not pretend her ſelf a Priſoner, and under Dureſſe, ſhe was not only to ſwear the Treaty herſelf, but to get it confirm'd by the States of Scotland, ſworn and ſign'd by the King, and that Hoſtages ſhould be given.

But theſe Overtures miſcarried: For the Scots of the Engliſh Faction would endure nothing which look'd towards their Queen's Reſtoration: Tho' at the ſame Time ſhe moved for no more than Reigning jointly with her Son. However, theſe Men clamour'd ſtrongly againſt an Accommodation: They gave out, that ſome Scotchmen, ſworn Enemies to the Engliſh Nation, had been recall'd from France at their Queen's Inſtance. And particularly, that one Holt, a Jeſuit was ſent thither to concert an Invaſion upon England.

The Miſbehaviour of the Scotch Preachers.

And now the Engliſh and French Ambaſſadors were buſy in practiſing upon the King: And here they played their Countermines, and put by each others Attempts with Dexterity enough. The King ſtood Neuter, and deliver'd himſelf to the Suggeſtions of neither Side. The Preachers and Divines had no ſuch command of Temper, but diſcover'd their Averſion to the French untowardly enough. For when the Ambaſſador Lamotte was invited to dinner by the Burghers of Edinborough, theſe Men proclaim'd a Faſt, rail'd in the Pulpit againſt the King of France, the Duke of Guiſe, and the Ambaſſadors in a ſcandalous Manner, and were very near Excommunicating all thoſe who appear'd at the Entertainment. And thus theſe Ambaſſadors being not only outrag'd by the Miniſters, but maltreated by ſome of the Scotch Nobility, took Leave of the Court, and return'd to France.

The Genevians ſolicit for Aſſiſtance.

To go back a little to the Engliſh Affairs. The Republick at Geneva being apprehenſive of a Siege from the Duke of Savoy, who continued his Claim, ſent an Agent to England for ſupport. Their Caſe had been recommended to Secretary Walſingham, by Brook the Engliſh Ambaſſador at Paris. In ſhort, Reaſons of State, beſides other Conſiderations, ſeem to have prevail'd with the Queen to interpoſe in their Behalf. And ſince Money was the moſt practicable Way of Aſſiſtance, the Council wrote to Archbiſhop Grindal to promote a Contribution amongſt the Clergy. The Archbiſhop ſent a moving Letter to his Suffragans, and endeavour'd to excite their Compaſſion from the preſent Diſtreſs of the Genevians. He likewiſe put them in Mind this City deſerv'd ſome Return for their former Favours to the Engliſh Proteſtants. (i)

An Enquiry into the Riſe of their Republick.

Upon what Foot the Genevian Republick ſtood at preſent, and by what Claim they defended their Authority, I ſhall not examine: But 'tis plain their Firſt Eſtabliſhment was founded on a Revolt: And that either their Biſhop, or the Duke of Savoy, was their Sovereign. Frederick the Firſt, Emperor of Germany, gave the See of Geneva the Temporal Juriſdiction: However, a Conteſt was kept up between the Earl and Biſhop: The Latter to prevent being overborn, applied to the Earl of Savoy, who at Firſt engag'd only as a Protector, but afterwards took upon him the Title of Lord in Chief. In ſhort, the Biſhops after ſome Struggle, were forc'd to do Homage to the Dukes of Savoy, and own them for their Sovereigns. Thus the Money was ſtamp'd with the Duke's Impreſſion: Capital Offenders were pardon'd by him; The Keys of the Town were preſented him at his coming thither, and no Alliance made without his Allowance. However, the Town was immediately Subject to the Biſhop. This Prelate, as Calvin confeſſes, had the Power of the Sword, and other Branches of Civil Juriſdiction. (k)

(k) Calvin Epiſt. ad Cardinal Sadolet.

Thus the Government ſtood till the Year 1528. About this Time Viretus and Farellus, Two warm Men for the Zuinglian Scheme, had gain'd ſome Intereſt in Geneva. Theſe Men ſolicited the Biſhop for ſuch Alterations in Religion as had been lately introduc'd in the Canton of Bern. But when they ſaw no Hopes of Succeſs at this Quarter, they practis'd upon the lower Sort of the Burghers, and brought them to a Concert: And thus the Mobb riſing, the Biſhop and the Clergy were driven out of the Town.

And after having taken this bold Step, they went on to reform the Church by the Precedent of Berne. Theſe ſingular Advances of Viret and Farell were afterwards approv'd by Calvin, (l) as is acknowledg'd by himſelf. But this Revolution in the Church, it ſeems was not enough: They ſet up for an independent State, caſt the Government in a new Mould, and renounc'd all Allegiance to Biſhop or Duke.

Farell was the main Spring of this extraordinary Motion, for which Reaſon Calvin calls him the Father of the publick Liberty: * And affirms that their New Acquiſitions were entirely owing to him. †

* Libertatis ſuæ Patrem.

† Cui ſe totos debent Epiſ. Calvin. 155. Tigurinis Miniſtris, &c.

Now ſince the Conſtitution was thus outrag'd and overborn, why did not Calvin uſe his Intereſt for ſome Reparation? Why did he not preſs the Genevians to repent their Rebellion, and reſtore the Government to the Biſhop? All this might have been done without reſigning their Belief, and coming into his Communion. But Calvin ſays the Biſhop was a Thief and a Robber. * Why ſo? Becauſe he did not come fairly by his Authority. Granting that, which is more than appears; himſelf, and his Predeceſſors had been In a long Time, which is a much better Claim than the Burghers could pretend. But Calvin's main Reaſon for calling the Biſhop a Robber, was his being a Papiſt, his refuſing to come into the Reformation. (m) And if ſo, he muſt found Dominion in Grace, and falls into the Hereſy of the German Anabaptiſts. In ſhort, 'tis pretty plain the Government belong'd either to the Biſhop, or the Duke of Savoy, and therefore the Genevians ought to have ſubmitted to one of them.

(m) See Heylin Hiſt. Preſbyt. p. 4 & 5.

And ſince the Caſe ſtands thus, it may be, Grindal's ſoliciting ſo earneſtly for this Republick, was not ſo commendable as is ſometimes ſuppos'd. If 'tis ſaid Geneva had been a Shelter to the Reformation, entertain'd the Engliſh Refugees, and deſerv'd a Return for their charitable Protection: To this it may be anſwer'd, That the beſt Requital had been to exhort them to their Duty, and ſuggeſt the giving up their Uſurpation. This relieving them in their Principles, and making a Contribution for their Honeſty, had no Doubt been the moſt charitable Aſſiſtance. If 'tis urg'd Popery would have broke in, and the Proteſtant Religion have been loſt, by ſuch a Ceſſion. To this it may be replied, That if the Proteſtant Religion won't bear Juſtice, we ought to throw it up, and get a Better. Robbery and Wrong is certainly no Part of the Chriſtian Religion. Such Practice ſtands condemn'd by the Law of Nature, and mere Pagan Philoſophy is aſham'd of it. And therefore St. Paul puts the Queſtion by Way of Admiration; Know ye not that the Unrighteous ſhall not inherit the Kingdom of God! Neither Thieves nor Covetous, &c. can expect any Benefit from the Chriſtian Diſpenſation. (n) All this is ſpoken upon Suppoſition that the Genevians had not mended their Title, when they applied to the Engliſh for Succour.

(n) 1 Cor. 6.

The latter End of this Year, Grindal gave out a Commiſſion in his own Name for Viſiting the Dioceſe of Litchfield, from whence we may conclude his Sequeſtration was taken off. 'Tis probable his late Submiſſion might recover him the Queen's Favour thus far. For the Archbiſhop finding ſome farther Satisfaction was expected, drew up a Paper importing his Grief, for falling under her Majeſty's Diſpleaſure; "intreating her not to interpret his Incompliance to "obſtinacy. And to give farther Proof of his "Willingneſs to obey, he acquaints her that "ſince her Majeſty had forbidden the Exerciſes of "Propheſying, he had ſuffer'd none of them either "in his Dioceſe or Peculiars. (o) 'Tis poſſible this Acknowledgment, tho' 'twas ſome time before Grindal found the Effects, might ſoften the Queen's Temper. Before the Archbiſhop's Juriſdiction was return'd, Dr. Aubrey, his Vicar-general, granted a Preacing Licence to one John Morriſon, a Scotchman, in which he allows the Orders of a Presbyter, given him by the Scotch Church.

This Submiſſion is dated Aug. 21. 1580.

Part of the Inſtrument runs thus:

(p) Regiſt. Grindal.

By the mention of Impoſition of Hands, it appears this Morriſon was ordain'd by the Second Book of Scotch Diſcipline, for the Firſt won't allow of this Ceremony. Farther, by the Clauſes of, Quantum in nobis eſt, & de jure poſſumus, & quatenus Jura regni patiuntur, 'tis pretty plain Aubrey was ſomewhat conſcious of a Strein upon the Engliſh Conſtitution: And that the Archbiſhop was not ſo firm to Epiſcopal Right, and Apoſtolical Succeſſion, as might have been expected.

Grindal having now loſt his Sight, was ſomewhat diſabled for his Function. He had formerly deſir'd the Queen for Leave to relinquiſh his Charge, and retire. This Motion, tho' then refus'd, was now thought reaſonable. For this Purpoſe the Biſhop of Salisbury, Pierce, was ſent to him from Court, to propoſe a Reſignation with a Promiſe of an honourable Penſion. The Archbiſhop acquainted the Lord Treaſurer he was ready to quit: And not long after he is ſaid to have tranſmitted a Draught of his Reſignation to this Miniſter. (q) If Matter of Fact ſtands thus, 'tis likely the Inſtrument was but imperfect, neither ſign'd nor ſeal'd, and only put in the Treaſurer's Hands for his Approbation. And in this Condition we have it in the Paper Office without Date, Seal, or Subſcription. (r)

April 12. 1583.

Grindal offers to reſign, but dies Archbiſhop.

That the Reſignation was not executed upon the 8th of May, is evident from the Stile of his Will, in which he writes himſelf Archbiſhop of Canterbury. And about Two Months after he died at Croyden. Neither does it appear the Reſignation was farther preſs'd during this Interval. He died in the 63d Year of his Age: Cambden repreſents him a pious and venerable Prelate, which is no more than his due. That he kept the Queen's Favour a great Part of his Time: And that he loſt her Majeſty by the Practice of ſome Enemies at Court, who reported him to his Diſadvantage. But that the true Reaſon of their giving him an unacceptable Character, was his Declaring againſt the Marriage of one Julio, an Italian Phyſician: And becauſe he refus'd to gratify the Earl of Leiceſter, and connive at the ſcandalous Engagement. However, this Prelate is generally charg'd with Remiſneſs, with having too kind an Opinion of the Calviniſtical Scheme, and warping a little to an Over-indulgence. He left no great Wealth behind him, which is an Argument of a generous Mind, and that Money was nothing of his Maſter. To mention ſome Part of his Benefactions. He founded a School at St. Beghſe in Cumberland, where he was born, and ſettled Thirty Pounds a Year for the Maintenance. He endow'd Pembroke-Hall in Cambridge, where he was educated, with 22 Pounds per Annum. He likewiſe convey'd 20 Pounds per Annum to Queen's College in Oxford. He founded a Scholarſhip of Five Pounds per Annum in Magdalen College in Cambridge. To theſe may be added Legacies in Plate to Chriſt-College in Cambridge, to the Lord Treaſurer, and Secretary Walſingham: A Hundred Pound to ſet the Poor of Canterbury on Work, with other charitable Legacies to the Poor of Lambeth, Croyden, and St. Beghſe. He lies buried in the Chancel, at Croyden. He was ſucceeded by John Whitgiſt, a Prelate of great Learning and Vigour, who was tranſlated from Worceſter to Canterbury. (s)

Whitgiſt (John) Archbiſhop of Cant.

Elizabeth Q.

Archbiſhop Whitgiſt preſſes Subſcription to Three Articles.

WHitgiſt, at his firſt coming to the See, had Inſtructions from the Queen to hold a ſtrait Rein, to preſs the Diſcipline of his Church, and recover his Province to Uniformity. This Method agreed with the Archbiſhop's Sentiment, and was probably ſuggeſted by himſelf: For he inſiſted ſtrongly upon the Clergy's ſubſcribing the Three Articles afterwards required by the Canons, paſs'd in 1603.* That is, the Queen's Eccleſiaſtical Supremacy, the Unexceptionableneſs of the Common Prayer and Ordinal, and that the Nine and Thirty Articles are altogether agreeable to the Word of God.

Brown deſerts the Church of England, and begins a Sect.

About this Time one Robert Brown, deſcended of a conſiderable Family in the County of Rutland, began to publiſh his Heterodoxies, and grow very troubleſome. He was bred in Bennet-College in Cambridge, fell into Cartwright's Opinions, and at laſt went much farther in his Singularities. He was extravagantly Satyrical againſt the Church of England: In his Diſcourſes her Government was Antichriſtian, her Sacraments clog'd with Superſtition; the Liturgy had a Mixture of Popery and Paganiſm in it; and the Miſſion of the Clergy was no better than that of Baal's Prieſts in the Old Teſtament. And now believing himſelf oblig'd to go out of Babylon, he ſets ſail for Zealand, and joins Cartwright's Congregation at Middleborough; but finding ſome of the old Blemiſhes even here, he reſolves to refine upon Cartwright's Scheme, and produce ſomething more perfect from his own Invention. His Model was drawn in a Book, entitled, A Treatiſe of Reformation, and printed the laſt Year at Middleborough. And having ſent as many Copies into England as he thought neceſſary, follow'd his Blow, and came over ſoon after.

At this Time the Dutch had a numerous Congregation at Norwich; many of theſe People inclining to Anabaptiſm, were the more diſpos'd to entertain any new reſembling Opinions. Brown made his firſt Eſſay upon Three Dutchmen, and being of a poſitive imperious Temper, took Care to pick out the moſt flexible and reſigning. And after having made ſome Progreſs amongſt 'em, and rais'd himſelf a Character for Zeal and Sanctity, he began to tamper farther, and advance to the Engliſh; and here he took in the Aſſiſtance of one Richard Harriſon, a Country Schoolmaſter. Being thus reinforc'd and fleſh'd with Succeſs, he plaid his Project at length, form'd Churches out of both Nations, but moſtly of the Engliſh: And now he inſtructed his Audience, That the Church of England was no true Church; That there was little of Chriſt's Inſtitution in the publick Miniſtrations, and that all good Chriſtians were oblig'd to ſeparate from thoſe impure Aſſemblies; That their next Step was to join him and his Diſciples; That here was nothing but what was pure and unexceptionable, evidently inſpired by the Spirit of God, and refin'd from all Alloy and Profanation. (t)

He forms ſeparate Congregations.

Theſe Diſcourſes prevail'd on the Audience, and Precept was brought up to Practice: And now his Diſciples call'd Browniſts, form'd a new Society, and made a total Defection from the Church. For the Men of this thorough Reformation refus'd to join any Congregation in any publick Office of Worſhip. This was the firſt gathering of Churches, the firſt Schiſm in Form, which appear'd in England. To juſtifie theſe oppoſite Congregations, Brown ſcatter'd his Books in moſt Parts of the Kingdom; but the Government was far from conniving at theſe Liberties; for Elias Thacker and John Copping were indicted this Summer upon the Statute of 23 Eliz. cap. 2. for diſperſing theſe Pamphlets, brought in guilty of Felony, and executed at Bury St. Edmunds. The Crime they were charg'd with, was ſtirring up Sedition, and defaming the Common-Prayer. (u)

June 4.

As for Brown the Author, he was more gently dealt with, than either of theſe Criminals, or many others perverted by him. Being convented before Freake, Biſhop of Norwich, and other Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners, he not only maintain'd his Schiſm, but miſbehav'd himſelf to the Court, upon which he was committed to the Cuſtody of the Sheriff of Norwich. But the Lord Treaſurer ſurer Burleigh being his near Relation, procur'd his Enlargement. This Nobleman who endeavoured his Recovery, order'd him to come to London; and Whitgift being now at Lambeth, he was refer'd to him for better Inſtruction. This Prelate, by the Dexterity of his Management, and the Force of his Reaſoning, brought him at laſt to a tolerable Compliance with the Church of England. Being diſmiſs'd by the Archbiſhop, the Treaſurer ſent him to his Father in the Countrey, with Directions for gentle Uſage. But here inſtead of diſingaging himſelf from the remaining Scruples, his Heterodoxies reviv'd, he relaps'd to his former Condition, and prov'd utterly incorrigible; upon which the old Gentleman diſcharg'd him the Family. At laſt, after a great deal of Ramble, and ſuffering for his Obſtinacy, he recover'd himſelf ſo far as to take a Benefice with Cure of Souls in Northamptonſhire. 'Twas Lindſell Biſhop of Peterborough's Diſcipline which brought him to this Recollection. The Biſhop being inform'd that Brown liv'd at Northampton, and was buſie in promoting his Sect, ſent him a Citation to come before him; he refus'd to appear: Upon which contemptuous Omiſſion he was excommunicated. Brown being deeply affected with the Solemnity of this Cenſure, made his Submiſſion, mov'd for Abſolution, and receiv'd it; and from this Time continued in the Communion of the Church. He liv'd and died at laſt in Northampton Goal, but not upon the ſcore of Nonconformity, but Breach of the Peace. And thus the concluding his Hiſtory at once, has carried me much beyond the Time; for Brown liv'd to the Year 1630. (w) But though Brown conform'd himſelf, he was very unhappy in other Reſpects; for 'twas not in his Power to cloſe the Schiſm, nor retrieve thoſe he had miſled. Many of his Followers continued unreclaim'd, and ſuffered Death for their Miſperſwaſion.

(w) Heylin Hiſt. Preſbyt. Biblioth. Scriptor. Eccleſ. Anglic. Prefat.

The Severity of the Laws for Nonconformity, and the Execution of Thacker and Copping put the Puritans upon their Guard, and made them manage with great Precaution. 'Till this Time theſe Diſſenters had no diſtinct Form either of Diſcipline or Worſhip for their Congregations: And thus every Preacher being left to his Diſcretion, collected what Directions he thought proper out of Cartwright's Books. But this Divine had by this Time beaten out his Scheme more at length, and drawn up a Body of Diſcipline: This Book was look'd on as the Standard for publick Worſhip.

A Book of Diſcipline drawn together, with the Reſolution of the Aſſemblies putting it in Practice.

And now a general Aſſembly was held for putting this Diſcipline in Execution; and that their Proceedings might be more unexceptionable, and under Shelter, 'twas reſolv'd that the Peace of the eſtabliſh'd Church ſhould be ſhock'd as little as poſſible: To this Purpoſe the following Articles were agreed.

Firſt, That thoſe who were call'd to the Miniſtry of any Church, ſhould firſt be approv'd by the Claſſis or greater Aſſemblies; and then recommended to the Dioceſan to be ordained by him.

By the way, a Claſſis conſiſts of a few neighbouring Miniſters met together, commonly to the Number of Twelve. (x) (x) Bancroft's Dangerous Poſitions, lib. 3d. Pag. 108.

To proceed, "Thoſe Ceremonies in the Book of Common-Prayer, which are conteſted upon the Score of their being extracted from the Breviaries and Miſſals, ought to be omitted, provided this may be done without Danger of being barr'd their Function. But in caſe there's apparent Danger of being depriv'd, then this matter muſt be refer'd to the Claſſis of the reſpective Precincts, and determin'd by them

" Thirdly, If Subſcription to the Articles of Religion, and the Book of Common-Prayer, ſhall be farther urg'd, 'tis thought the Book of Articles may be ſubſcrib'd purſuant to the Statute: (y) That is, only ſuch Articles as contain the Sum of Chriſtian Faith, and the Doctrine of the Sacraments. But for many weighty Reaſons, this Subſcription ought neither to be carried to the reſt of the Articles, nor to the Book of Common-Prayer. Compliance was not to go thus far, though a Man ſhould be depriv'd, and ſtruck out of the Miniſtry for his Refuſal.

(y) 13 Eliz. cap. 12.

" Farther 'twas reſolv'd, though not in deciſive Language, That Churchwardens and Collectors for the Poor, might be turn'd into Elders and Deacons. This was ſo contriv'd, that the Office might be new in ſome Meaſure, without changing the Names, or giving a different Face to the State of the Church. For this Purpoſe Notice was to be given of their Election about a Fortnight before the cuſtomary Time. The Congregation was likewiſe to be put in mind at ſuch Times of our Saviour's Ordinance for the appointing of Watchmen and Overſeers in his Church: That their Buſineſs is to take Care for the Prevention of Scandal: And if any offenſive Behaviour happens, that 'tis their Office to ſee it corrected.

" And as touching Deacons and Deaconeſſes, the Church is to be reminded of the Apoſtles Admonition: They are not to govern their Choice by common Practice, but that ſound Belief, Zeal and Integrity, ought to be prefer'd to Wealth and Condition: And that the Church is to pray to God Almighty in the mean Time, that they may be directed to proper Perſons.

" The Names of thoſe elected in this manner were to be publiſh'd the next Lord's Day. After this, the reſpective Duties between them and the Congregation was to be ſet forth. And laſtly, they were to be admitted to their Office with the Prayers of all the People.

There was likewiſe Regulations made for a Diviſion of the Churches into Claſſical, Provincial, and General Aſſemblies, purſuant to the Book of Diſcipline. The Claſſes are required to keep a Regiſtry of their Acts, and deliver them to the greater Aſſemblies. The Claſſes are likewiſe requir'd to uſe their Intereſt with the Patrons within their Precincts, that none but Perſons well qualified may be preſented. Their Comitial Aſſemblies held at the Time of the Act and Commencement at Oxford and Cambridge, were to make Contributions for the Relief of the Poor; but more eſpecially for the Relief of thoſe depriv'd for not ſubſcribing the Articles. And here Contribution for the Scotch Miniſters was particularly recommended.

By the Way; the King of Scots having broke through his Confinement, and recover'd himſelf from the Ruthen Conſpiracy, ſeveral of the Miniſters who had been moſt forward in the Faction were forc'd to quit the Kingdom. Some of theſe Men took Shelter in England: And 'tis their Caſe which is thus conſider'd by the Aſſembly. (z)

(z) Refutat. Libel. de Regim. Eccleſ. Scotic.

" Laſtly, All Provincial Synods were to appoint their next Meeting, fix upon Repreſentatives for the National or General Aſſembly, and furniſh their Proxies with Inſtructions. This National Synod was to meet either Sit“ting the Parliament, or at ſome other ſtated Times every Year. (a)

Under theſe Diſguiſes they hop'd to carry on their Diſcipline, and cover themſelves from Proſecution: And to make their Motion the ſmoother, they agreed to drop the Exerciſe of Propheſying, and ſet up Lectures in ſome of the principal Towns of every County. But after all, there was one great Difficulty remaining: And that was the Inconſiſtency of Cartwright's Model with the Worſhip publickly eſtabliſh'd. No Streins of Art could bring the Order of Geneva and the Engliſh Rubrick to any tolerable Harmony: This Difference was not to be compromis'd by thoſe who reſolv'd to adhere to Cartwright's Direction. However, they found out ſomething of an evaſive Expedient. For the Purpoſe, their Method was either to hire a Lay-Brother, (as Snape did a lame Soldier of Berwick) or ſome ignorant Curate, to read the Common-Prayer; but as for themſelves, and their Followers, they never came to Church till the Liturgy was over, and the Pſalm was ſinging before the Sermon. Thus one of theſe Miniſters, in his Letter to Field, acquaints this Diſſenter, That he ſtood clear of the Common-Prayer, and preach'd every Lord's-Day in his Congregation: That he manag'd with this Liberty by the Advice of the Reverend Brethren, who had lately made him one of the Claſſis, which was held weekly in ſome Place or other. (b)

Whitgift preſſes Conformity.

Thus the Church Affairs ſtood when Whitgift came to the See of Canterbury. Now this Prelate had no Latitude for Indulgence or Comprehenſion: He had formerly engag'd in Controverſy with Cartwright, and was entirely for a thorough Conformity. 'Tis granted the Puritans were not unfurniſh'd with great Men in their Intereſt. Amongſt ſome of theſe may be reckon'd the Earls of Huntington and Leiceſter, Roger Lord North, Sir Francis Knolles, Treaſurer of the Houſhold, and Secretary Walſingham. But as for the Queen, ſhe had no good Opinion of the Diſſenters: They maintain'd ſome uncourtly Doctrine, as 'twas then reckon'd: They confin'd her Majeſty's Supremacy to Temporal Juriſdiction: They did not careſs her Prerogative, nor ſtretch her Empire far enough into the Church. Their not falling in with the Queen's Inclination, was one main Reaſon of drawing Disfavour upon them This made her cold to Interceſſion, and diſabled their Patrons from doing them much Service. And to prevent Importunities of this Kind, ſhe referr'd Eccleſiaſtical Buſineſs wholly to Whitgift's Management. This Prelate acted vigorouſly, and anſwer'd the Confidence put in him. His firſt Buſineſs was preſſing Subſcription to the three Articles above-mention'd. This was ſtrongly remonſtrated, and complain'd of as intolerable Rigour. Upon this Occaſion the Diſſenters ſolicited their Friends both in Court and Country, and made their utmoſt Effort to procure a Relaxation. And had not Whitgift been a Perſon of great Capacity and Courage, and well ſupported by the Crown, he had been irrecoverably embarraſs'd, and ſunk in the Undertaking. To give ſome Account of this Matter: The Archbiſhop began with ſome in his own Dioceſe. Theſe Men, who were deſign'd for a Precedent to the Province, refuſing to ſubſcribe were ſuſpended for their Contumacy. For Relief againſt this Cenſure they preſented a Petition to the Lords of the Council. An Application of the ſame Kind was made to the Board by ſome Clergy of the Dioceſe of Norwich againſt Freake their Biſhop. As to the Kentiſh Miniſters Petition, the Archbiſhop was requir'd to anſwer his Proceedings at the Council-Table. Inſtead of making his Defence this Way, he ſent them a Letter, Part of which is to this Effect.

Petitions to the Council againſt him.

His Letter to the Council with Reference to the Kentiſh Petition.

He acquaints the Board, “That the greateſt Part of the Petitioners were ignorant and raw young Men, and few of them licens'd Preachers: That he had ſpent the beſt Part of two or three Days to diſentangle their Underſtandings: That not being able to recover them to a right Senſe in the Points debated, he had proceeded no otherwiſe than the Law required: That the Number of thoſe who refus'd ſubſcribing was not great; in moſt Parts of his Province not one, and in ſome very few; and that the greateſt Part of thoſe who ſcrupled this Teſt were unlearned, and unworthy the Miniſtry: And that in his own little Dioceſe of Canterbury more than Threeſcore Preachers have ſubſcrib'd; whereas there was not above ten Refuſers, who deſerve the Name of Preachers: And that he was ſure they may calculate upon this Proportion through the whole Province, the Dioceſe of Norwich excepted; in which notwithſtanding the Conformiſts are far more numerous: That the keeping his Station would be impracticable, if every Curate in his Dioceſe might take theſe Freedoms againſt him: That 'twas not poſſible for him to perform the Duty the Queen expected, if he was check'd in the Execution of that Authority: That he could not be perſwaded their Lordſhips had any Intention to make him a Party for acting upon her Majeſty's Commiſſion: That in theſe Matters he was to have no Judge of his Management, excepting the Queen; and ſince he was lawfully called by God and her Majeſty to his Station, ſince he was appointed their Paſtor, (meaning the Council) and had the greateſt Charge over them in Things relating to the Soul, he deſir'd them to aſſiſt him in his Poſt; to fortify his Juriſdiction for the Repoſe of the Church, the Credit of the Religion eſtabliſh'd, and the Maintenance of the Laws for that Purpoſe. And as to the three Articles requir'd to be ſubſcrib'd, he declares himſelf ready to defend them, in the Form and Terms in which they are couch'd, againſt any Perſons in England, or elſewhere. And laſtly, he deſires their Lorſhips to acquieſce in this Anſwer, and not inſiſt upon his coming to the Board: For theſe troubleſome Complainants would not fail of making their Advantage of ſuch an Attendance. (c)

His Anſwer to the Remonſtrance of the Suffolk Miniſters.

To the Suffolk Miniſters Remonſtrance, he anſwers, “That he was ſomewhat ſurpriz'd theſe Clergymen, believing themſelves hardly us'd by their Dioceſan, ſhould quit the common Courſe of the Law, forget Appealing to their Metropolitan, ſtrike off to an extraordinary Method, and trouble their Lordſhips with this Buſineſs: A Buſineſs which he conceives ſomewhat foreign to that Honourable Board, ſince the Queen by her own expreſs Direction had referr'd theſe Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical to himſelf. And over and above, that the Cognizance of theſe Matters was an Incident belonging to his Office. In anſwer to their Complaint touching their Ordinary's Proceedings with them, he ſent their Lordſhips a Copy of the Biſhop of Norwich's Letter: This he thinks a ſufficient Defence of the Biſhop's Management. As to other Things he is ſomewhat at a Loſs what to pronounce. They ſay they are no Jeſuits ſent from Rome to reconcile, &c. That's true, continues the “Archbiſhop, neither are they charg'd with any ſuch Character. However, their Contentious Humours diſſerves the Church of England, occaſions Scandal, and gives a Handle to the Jeſuits to make Proſelytes: Their giving the Sacraments againſt the Direction of the Rubrick, and the Laws of the Realm, encreaſes the Number of Nonconformiſts, and confirms them in their Obſtinacy. He proceeds to charge them with making a Schiſm in the Church, and drawing her Majeſty's Subjects to a Diſlike of her Laws and Government in Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical. Take them at the beſt, they ſuggeſt no more than a Partial Obedience to their Audience: For they confine her Majeſty's Authority to Civil Matters, and lay it down for a Maxim that Spiritual Juriſdiction is foreign to the Crown: This, in the Archbiſhop's Opinion, is in a Manner plucking down with one Hand what they build with the other.

Idem.

The great Men at Court, who favour'd the Puritans, finding the Archbiſhop countenanc'd by the Queen, and a Perſon of no ordinary Reach and Reſolution, did not think fit to engage their Character, and riſque their Fortune, by an open Oppoſition. They choſe therefore to retire from Obſervation, kept their Motion out of Sight, and put Beale forward upon the Enterprize. This Beale was an intemperate Antipapiſt, drove furiouſly to a Counter-Extream; and to make the beſt Conſtruction, had much more Zeal than Knowlege. This Man is ſaid to have look'd on every Thing as Popiſh, which did not chime in with the Puritan Fancy; and that the Biſhops were no better than Limbs of Antichriſt. His Poſt of Clerk of the Council could not make him hearty for the Government, nor prevail with him againſt giving a Preference to the Malecontents. His Cuſtom was to rally thoſe Sermons which went fartheſt in Commendation of the Queen's Government. This Man had either written or encourag'd a warm Diſcourſe againſt Subſcription: 'Twas dedicated to the Archbiſhop, and preſented to him. A Report was likewiſe purpoſely ſpread, that the three Articles, to which Subſcription was requir'd, ſhould ſhortly be diſabled by an Act of Council. But Beale being afterwards apprehenſive theſe Papers might be laid before the Queen, reſolv'd to recover the Copy deliver'd to the Archbiſhop. For this Purpoſe he went over to Lambeth, where he miſbehav'd himſelf ſo very remarkably, that the Archbiſhop thought fit to acquaint the Lord Treaſurer with what paſſed between them. I ſhall give the Reader the Letter in the Archbiſhop's Words.

Beale undertakes the Diſſenters Cauſe. His Miſbehaviour towards the Archbiſhop.

To the Lord Treaſurer.

My ſingular good Lord,

His Miſbehaviour towards the Archbiſhop.

“I have born with Mr. Beale's intemperate Speeches, unſeemly for him to uſe, though not in reſpect of my ſelf, yet in reſpect of her Majeſty, whom he ſerveth, and of the Laws eſtabliſh'd, whereunto he ought to ſhew ſome Duty. Yeſterday he came to my Houſe, as as it ſeemed, to demand the Book he deliver'd me. I told him that the Book was written to me, and therefore no Reaſon why he ſhould require it again; eſpecially, ſeeing I was aſſur'd that he had a Copy thereof, otherwiſe I would cauſe it to be written out for him. Whereupon he fell into very great Paſſions with me, (which I think was the End of his Coming;) for proceeding in the Execution of his Articles, &c. and told me in Effect, That I would be the Overthrow of this Church, and a Cauſe of Tumult, with many other bitter and hard Speeches, which I heard patiently, and wiſh'd him to conſider with what Spirit he was mov'd ſo to ſay: For I ſaid, it cannot be by the Spirit of God, becauſe the Spirit of God worketh in Men Humility, Patience and Love; and your Words declare you to be very arrogant, proud, impatient, and uncharitable. Moreover, the Spirit of God moveth Men to hear the Word of God with Meekneſs, &c. And you have almoſt heard with Diſdain every Sermon preach'd before her Majeſty this Lent, gibing and jeſting openly thereat, even in the Sermon-time, to the Offence of many, &c. —— This he confeſs'd, and juſtified, accuſing ſome of the Preachers of falſe Doctrine, and wrong Allegations of Scripture, &c. Then he began to extol his Book, and ſaid we were never able to anſwer it, neither for the Matter of Divinity, nor yet of Law. I told him, as the Truth is, that there was no great Subſtance in the Book, that it might be very ſoon anſwer'd, and that it did appear neither his Divinity, nor Law to be great. I farther wiſh'd him to be better adviſ'd of his Doings; and told him indeed, that he was one of the principal Cauſes of the Waywardneſs of divers, becauſe he giveth Encouragement to divers of them to ſtand in the Matter, telling them, that the Articles ſhall be ſhortly revok'd by the Council, and that my Hands ſhall be ſtopped, &c. which Saying is ſpread abroad already in every Place, and is the only Cauſe why many forbear to ſubſcribe, which is true, neither could he deny it. All this while I talk'd with him privately in the upper Part of my Gallery, my Lord of Wincheſter, and divers Strangers being in the other Part thereof. But Mr. Beale beginning to extend his Voice that all might hear, I began to break off; then he being more and more kindled, very impatiently utter'd very proud and and contemptuous Speeches in the juſtifying of his Book, and condemning of the Orders eſtabliſh'd, to the Offence of all the Hearers, whereunto (being very deſirous to be rid of him) I made ſmall Anſwer, but told him that his Speeches were intolerable, that he forgot himſelf, and that I would complain of him to her Majeſty, whereof he ſeem'd to make ſmall Account, and ſo he departed in great Heat. I am loth to hurt him, or to be an Accuſer, neither will I proceed therein further than your Lordſhip ſhall think it convenient: But I never was abuſed more by any Man at any Time in my Life, than I have been by him ſince my Coming to this Place, in Hardneſs of Speech for doing my Duty, and for all Things belonging to my Charge. Surely, my Lord, this Talk tendeth only to the Encreaſing of the Contention, and to the Animating of the Wayward in their Waywardneſs, caſting out dangerous Speeches, as though there were likelihood of ſome Tumult in reſpect thereof: Whereas in Truth, God be thanked, the Matter groweth to greater Quietneſs than I think he wiſheth, and will be ſoon quieted, if we be let alone, and they not otherwiſe encouraged. It ſeemeth he is ſome Way diſcontented, and would work his Anger on me. The Tongues of theſe Men taſte not of the Spirit of God. Your Lordſhip ſeeth how bold I am to impart unto you my private Cauſes. Truly, if it were not that my Conſcience is ſettled in theſe Matters, and that I

Thus being deſirous to impart this Matter to your Lordſhip, to whoſe Conſideration I leave it, I commit you to the Tuition of Almighty God. (d)

The Lords of the Council's Letter to the Archbiſhop in Favour of the Diſſenters.

The Lords of the Council being farther ſolicited by the Diſſenters, wrote to the Archbiſhop for Abatement of Diſcipline. Their Letter begins with their “Having received Complaints from ſeveral Counties againſt the Rigour of the Eccleſiaſtical Courts; and that a great Number of the Clergy have been ſuſpended or depriv'd: That they forbore entring into a particular Enquiry, hoping his Lordſhip would inſpect the Proceedings, and temper the Severity of thoſe inferior Juriſdictions. The ſame Lenity they likewiſe expected from the Biſhop of London. And that this latter being both a Biſhop and an Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioner, would have exerted his Character for this Purpoſe: But inſtead of any Paſtoral Compaſſion of this Kind, lamentable Complaints have been brought to the Board from the County of Eſſex; where a great Number of Preachers, diſtinguiſh'd for their Zeal and Learning, are ſuſpended from their Function, and no Proviſion made in moſt of their Cures either for Inſtruction, for Prayers, or Sacraments: That ſome of thoſe appointed to ſupply the Vacancies, have neither Learning nor Reputation to recommend them. From hence the Council proceeds to charge a great many of the Conforming Clergy in Eſſex with Ignorance and Immorality, with being Pluraliſts, and conſequently Non-reſident. In the Cloſe, they earneſtly deſire the Archbiſhop and the Biſhop of London to give a Charitable Conſideration to theſe Diſſenting Miniſters, and not deprive the People of their Paſtors upon the Score of ſome Scruples in Ceremonies.

His Anſwer.

The Archbiſhop in his Anſwer to this Letter acquaints the Council, That he hop'd the Information their Lordſhips receiv'd was wide of Matter of Fact, as to the moſt of it: But that in Regard the Biſhop of London was out of the Way, he could not make a full Anſwer at preſent. That ſome People about Malden, becauſe they can't have Miniſters to humour their Diſorders, had preferr'd a general Complaint againſt the Clergy to himſelf, and ſome others in the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion. That Letters had been ſent to ſome of the principal Complainants to exhibit the Names of thoſe offenſive Miniſters, together with the Proofs of their Miſbehaviour. And that in Caſe the Charge was made good, the Commiſſioners promis'd them a Redreſs of their Grievances. That the Beginning of the next Term was the Time aſſign'd them to make good their Complaint: But that by applying to the Council-Board they had anticipated the Time ſet them, and ſeem'd willing to decline the Juriſdiction of the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners: And by what Views they muſt be govern'd by affecting theſe Meaſures, he leaves to their Lordſhips Conſideration. He adds farther, that he heard the Biſhop of London declare that very few of his Clergy had been preſented at any Viſitations for ſuch Miſconduct as theſe Complainants charge them with. And that very few Preachers had been ſilenc'd in the Dioceſe of London. And that thoſe who fell under this Cenſure were remarkably diſorderly and turbulent. And laſtly, he aſſures their Lordſhips that nothing ſhall be done in his Province either by himſelf, or his Brethren, but what tends to the Peace of the Church, the Support of the Conſtitution, and the Encouragement of the moſt pious and deſerving Part of the Clergy.

Regiſt. Whitgift, Part 1. Fol. 97.

To give a farther Account of the Archbiſhop's Conduct, I ſhall mention ſome of his moſt remarkable Viſitation Articles.

To begin: “'Tis order'd, That all Preaching, Reading, Catechiſing, and other ſuch like Exerciſes in private Places and Families, whereunto others do reſort, being not of the ſame Family, be utterly inhibited, ſeeing the ſame was never permitted as lawful under any Chriſtian Magiſtrate, but is a manifeſt Sign of Schiſm, and a Cauſe of Contention in the Church.

“That none be permitted to preach, read, or catechiſe, in the Church or elſewhere, unleſs he do four Times in the Year (at the leaſt) ſay Service, and miniſter the Sacraments according to the Book of Common-Prayer.

“That all Preachers, and others in Eccleſiaſtical Orders, do at all Times wear and uſe ſuch Kind of Apparel as is preſcrib'd unto them by the Book of Advertiſements, and her Majeſty's Injunctions Anno primo.

“That one Kind of Tranſlation of the Bible be only us'd in publick Service, as well in Churches as Chapels, and that to be the ſame which is now authoriz'd by the Conſent of the Biſhops.

“That from henceforth there be no Commutation of Penance but in rare Reſpects, and upon great Conſideration, and when it ſhall appear to the Biſhop himſelf that that ſhall be the beſt Way for winning and reforming the Offender: And that the Penalty be employ'd either to the Relief of the Poor of that Pariſh, or to other Godly Uſes, and the ſame well witneſſed and made manifeſt to the Congregation. And yet if the Fault be notorious, that the Offender make ſome Satisfaction either in his own Perſon, with Declaration of his Repentance openly in the Church, or elſe that the Miniſter of the Church openly in the Pulpit ſignify to the People his Submiſſion and Declaration of his Repentance done before the Ordinary, and alſo in Token of his Repentance, what Portion of Money he hath given to be employ'd to the Uſes above-named.

Orders for the better Encreaſe of Learning in the inferior Miniſters, and for the more diligent Preaching and Catechiſing.

"Every Miniſter having Cure, and being under the Degrees of Maſter of Arts, and Barriſter of Laws, and not licenſed to be a publick Preacher, ſhall before the Second Day of February next provide a Bible, and Bullinger's Decads in Latin or Engliſh, and a Paper-Book, and ſhall every Day read over one Chapter of the Holy Scriptures, and note the principal Contents thereof briefly in his Paper-Book; and ſhall every Week read over one Sermon in the ſaid Decads, and note likewiſe the chief Matters therein contain'd in the ſaid Paper, and ſhall once in every Quarter (viz. within a Fortnight before or after the End of the Quarter) ſhew his ſaid Note to ſome Preacher near adjoining to be aſſign'd for that Purpoſe.

"Item, The Biſhop, Archdeacon, or other Ordinary, being a publick Preacher, ſhall appoint certain grave and learned Preachers, who ſhall privately examine the Diligence, and view the Notes of the ſaid Miniſters, aſſigning ſix or ſeven Miniſters, as Occaſion ſhall require, to every ſuch Preacher that ſhall be next adjoining to him, ſo as the Miniſters be not driven to travel for the exhibiting their Notes above ſix or ſeven Miles, (if it may be;) and the ſaid Preachers ſhall by Letters, or otherwiſe, truly certify to the Archdeacons, or other Ordinary of the Place, themſelves being publick Preachers, and Reſiant within or next to their Juriſdictions, and for want thereof to the Biſhop himſelf, who do perform the ſaid Exerciſes, and how they have profited therein, and who do refuſe or neglect to perform the ſame. The Archdeacons, and others receiving the ſaid Certificates, ſhall certify the ſame once a Year to the Biſhop, and that about Michaelmas.

"Item, That ſuch as ſhall refuſe to perform the Exerciſes, or ſhall be negligent therein: And ſhall not after Admonition by the Biſhop, Archdeacon, or other Ordinary aforeſaid, reform himſelf, if he be beneficed, ſhall be compell'd thereunto by Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure: If he be a Curate ſhall be inhibited to officiate within the Juriſdiction.

"It is concluded, That the Exerciſe above written, and no other, ſhall be henceforth publickly or privately uſed within any Part of this Province.

Secretary Walſingham moves for Indulgence with Reference to Subſcription.

Secretary Walſingham, as hath been obſerv'd, was the Diſſenters Friend. This Gentleman thought the three Articles ſomewhat of a Grievance, and that the Subſcription might fairly be wav'd. He conſider'd every Man's Conſcience could not come up to the ſame Sentiment; and that ſome Allowance might be made for Prejudice of Education, for weaker Underſtandings, and lower Degrees of Improvement: That this was his Opinion appears by his ſending one Leverwood, a Miniſter, to Lambeth with a recommending Letter. Here he deſires the Archbiſhop not to inſiſt upon Extremities, but to relax a little in Favour of this Miniſter, and admit his Subſcription upon the Terms encloſ'd.

Whitgift in his Anſwer to the Secretary's Letter acquaints him, That partly at his Inſtance, he had forborn offering the Teſt of the three Articles to any Perſons already benefic'd, and that the Subſcription was put to none but thoſe who came either for Orders or Inſtitution. That as to Leverwood's Caſe, the diſpenſing in a ſingle Inſtance would weaken the Conſtitution, and bring others to an Expectation of the ſame Indulgence. That his Offer to ſubſcribe the Articles was ſhort and evaſive. For firſt he promiſes to ſubſcribe as far as the Law requires him: His Meaning muſt be, the Law requires no ſuch Subſcription; for into this Opinion ſome Lawyers have miſled him. Farther, he promiſes to officiate with the Common-Prayer, and with no other Book. But here he covers himſelf with another Reſerve, and lays in for a Liberty of uſing only ſo much of the Liturgy as he has a Mind to. And that this was his Meaning appear'd by his Anſwer to ſeveral Queſtions the Archbiſhop put to him. So that in fine, ſuch a qualified imperfect Subſcription would be to little Purpoſe.

Elizabeth Q.

The Archbiſhop keeps cloſe to the Conſtitution.

Idem.

The Lord Burleigh's Motion to the Diſſenters.

The Archbiſhop being thus inflexible and ſteady to the Conſtitution, ſome of the Courtiers made an Eſſay upon the Diſſenters. They tried to bring this Party to a Temper, and draw ſome Conceſſions from them: That this leſſening the Differences, and advancing towards the Eſtabliſhment, might ſet the Conformiſts more at Eaſe, and make Way for an Accommodation. And here the Lord Burleigh made the firſt Propoſal. This Nobleman, upon ſome Complaint againſt the Liturgy, bid the Diſſenters draw up another, and contrive the Offices in ſuch a Form as might give general Satisfaction to their Brethren. Upon this Overture, the firſt Claſſis ſtruck out their Lines, and drew moſtly by the Pourtraict of Geneva. This Draught was referr'd to the Conſideration of a ſecond Claſſis, who made no leſs than 600 Exceptions to it. The third Claſſis quarrell'd the Corrections of the ſecond, and declar'd for a new Model. The fourth refin'd no leſs upon the third. The Treaſurer adviſ'd all theſe Reviews, and different Committees, on Purpoſe to break their Meaſures, and ſilence their Clamours againſt the Church. However, ſince they could not come to any Agreement in a Form for Divine Service, he had an handſome Opportunity of a Releaſe; for now they could not decently importune him any farther. To part ſmoothly with them, he aſſur'd their Agents that when they came to any unanimous Reſolve upon the Matter before them, they might expect his Friendſhip; and that he ſhould be ready to bring their Scheme to a Settlement.

Sir Francis Walſingham's Offer from the Queen.

Walſingham, who was more hearty in their Intereſt, makes the next Trial. This Stateſman endeavour'd to remove their Diſguſt, and made them a more tempting Propoſal. He offer'd them in the Queen's Name, that provided they would lay down their Objections, and conform in other Points, the three Shocking Ceremonies, as they accounted them, ſhould be diſcharged; that is, Kneeling at the Communion, wearing the Surplice, and the Croſs in Baptiſm, ſhould be expung'd out of the Common-Prayer. To theſe large Conceſſions they replied in the Language of Moſes, Ne Ungulam eſſe Relinquendam: They would not leave ſo much as a Hoof behind. Their Meaning was, They would have the Church-Liturgy wholly laid aſide, and not be oblig'd to the Uſe of any Office in't. This ſtiff unexpected Anſwer, loſt them Walſingham's Affection in a great Meaſure, as this Stateſman afterwards affirm'd to Knewſtubbs, and Knewſtubbs to Dr. Burgeſs of Coleſhill, from whom the learned Heylin had this Relation. Harpsfield's Death and Writings.

This Year Nicholas Harpsfield died. He was bred in Wincheſter School, from thence remov'd to New-College in Oxford, where he took the Degree of Doctor of Law, and was afterwards Archdeacon of Canterbury. In the Reign of Edward the Sixth he quitted the Kingdom, return'd at that Prince's Death, and made a Figure in the Church under Queen Mary. Soon after Queen Elizabeth came to the Crown, he was impriſon'd for denying her Supremacy. During his Confinement he wrote his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory in Latin. By this Book it appears he was a Man of Learning, and a Maſter of Style. He wrote ſix Dialogues, againſt the Centuriators, and Fox's Martyrology, in Defence of the Pope's Supremacy, the Monaſtick Inſtitution, the Worſhip of Saints and Images, &c. 'Twas publiſh'd in the Name of Allen Cope; for had not the Author been concealed, he might have ſuffer'd in Priſon upon that Score. He likewiſe wrote Hiſtoria Hæreſis Wickliffianæ, and a Treatiſe concerning Marriage, occaſion'd by the Divorce between King Henry the Eighth and Queen Katherine. (g)

About this Time ſeveral Suſſex Miniſters excepted to ſome Parts of the Rubrick, and were ſuſpended; but afterwards diſengag'd from their Scruples, as appears by a Letter of Mr. Aubry's in Whitgift's Regiſter.

Regiſt. Whitgift, Par. 1. fol. 348.

The Letter ſuggeſts, “ That upon the Sixth of December, 1583, Samuel Norden, Parſon of Hamſey, William Hopkinſon, Vicar of Salehurſt, Anthony Hopton, Vicar of Lemeſter, Thomas Underdown, Parſon of St. Mary's in Lewis, John Jermain, Vicar of Burfsham, Richard Wheataker, Vicar of Ambrilly, John Bingham, Preacher of Hoadleigh, and Thomas Helye, Preacher of Warbleton, being ſuſpended ab Officio for refuſing to ſubſcribe the Book of Common-Prayer, appear'd before the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Biſhops of London, Sarum, and Rocheſter, and being demanded the Reaſon of their Nonconformity, their Anſwer was, That there was ſeveral Paſſages in the Rubrick which they deſir'd to be explain'd.

“ The Rubricks upon which they found their Exceptions are theſe.

“ That in the latter End of the Preface ſet before the Catechiſm in the Communion-Book, there are theſe Words: —— And that no Man ſhall think that any Detriment ſhall come to Children by deferring of their Confirmation, he ſhall know for Truth that it is certain by God's Word, that Children being baptiz'd have all Things neceſſary for Salvation, and are undoubtedly ſaved. Upon which Words they moved this Doubt, Whether by theſe Words the Book confirm'd this Opinion, that the Sacrament of Baptiſm did of it ſelf confer Grace, Tanquam ex Opere Operato, that is, whoever is baptiz'd muſt of Neceſſity be ſaved ex Opere Operato, though otherwiſe a Hypocrite or Infidel?

“ Whereunto it was anſwer'd, That the Book had no ſuch Meaning; and that by theſe Words it only diſſwaded from the Opinion which their Papiſts had of their Confirmation, call'd Buſhopping; which they believ'd to be neceſſary to Salvation, and do think that Children are not perfectly baptiz'd 'till they be alſo Buſhopp'd, and therefore they make Confirmation a Sacrament, and bring their Children thereunto being Infants: Whereas the Church of England has no ſuch Opinion thereof, but doth uſe it for this End ſpecially, that Children may know what their Godfathers promiſ'd for them in their Baptiſm, and alſo learn to perform the ſame: And likewiſe, that it may be known that the Godfathers have perform'd their Promiſe in ſeeing theſe Children inſtructed as the Book requires. And therefore that Rubrick contains nothing in it contrary to God's Word, to the Subſtance of Religion now profeſſed in the Church of England, as by Law eſtabliſh'd, or to the Analogy of Faith. With which Anſwer they were ſatisfied.

“ The ſecond Doubt was of this Rubrick in the Form of Baptiſm, Then the Prieſt ſhall make a + upon the Child's Forehead. Here their Queſtion was, Whether by the Croſſing of the Child there was made an Addition to the Sacrament as a Part thereof, and as though Baptiſm were imperfect without it? Whereunto it was anſwer'd, That the Book had no ſuch Meaning; and that the Croſſing of the Child was only a Ceremony ſignificant, and a profitable Circumſtance, according to the Words expreſs'd in the Book. With which Anſwer they were alſo contented.

“ The third Doubt was of theſe Words, in the Book of ordering Deacons and Prieſts, &c. Receive ye the Holy Ghoſt. It was anſwer'd, That the Biſhop did not thereby look upon himſelf to give the Holy Ghoſt, but only Inſtrumentaliter, even as the Miniſter gives Baptiſm when he ſays, I baptize thee in the Name of the Father, &c. Whereby he does not take upon him to be the Author or Giver of Baptiſm, but the Miniſter thereof only, as John the Baptiſt did, for Chriſt only is the Giver of the Holy Ghoſt and of Baptiſm: John and others are the Miniſters of the Sacrament, and of the Ceremony.

“ The Words are Chriſt's Words, uſed in the Admitting of the Apoſtles into the Miniſtry, and therefore us'd by us in the like Action, to ſignify that God, by our Miniſtry and Impoſition of Hands, as by his Inſtruments, doth give his Holy Spirit to all ſuch as are rightly call'd to the Miniſtry. With which Anſwer they were likewiſe ſatisfied.

“ The laſt Doubt was of baptizing by Women: Whereunto it was anſwer'd, That the Book did not name Women when it ſpake of private Baptiſm; and that their Subſcription was not requir'd to any Thing that was not expreſs'd in the Book. Upon theſe Anſwers given unto them by us, they did voluntarily, and without any Proteſtation at all, ſubſcribe to the three Articles ſet down for all Preachers and Miniſters to ſubſcribe unto. And upon this Satiſfaction given, their Suſpenſions were taken off.

His Character.

This Year Nicholas Sanders died in Ireland. He was born in Surrey, educated in New-College in Oxford, where he was King's Profeſſor of Canon-Law. When the Times turn'd againſt his Perſwaſion, he retir'd to Rome, where he was ordain'd Prieſt, and commenc'd Doctor of Divinity. He attended Cardinal Hoſius to the Council of Trent. And here by Diſputing and making Speeches, he rais'd himſelf a conſiderable Character. At laſt he was ſent Nuncio into Ireland, which was look'd on as a hazardous Undertaking. And ſo it prov'd: For upon the Miſcarrying of his Treaſonable Practiſes, he was forc'd to abſcond in the Woods and Bogs, where he periſh'd with Hunger. (h) This Sanders was a deſperate Rebel: His Buſineſs in Ireland, as Riſhton, who publiſh'd his Hiſtory, confeſſes, was to raiſe the Natives upon the Government; or to ſpeak in Riſhton's Words, to comfort the Afflicted Catholicks who had taken the Field in Defence of their Religion. (i) Cambden reports, That his Portmanteau, found about him when dead, was ſtuffed with Letters and Harangues to animate the Iriſh in their Revolt. And here, amongſt other Things, he gave them great Expectations of Succours from the Pope and the King of Spain. (k)

About three Years ſince he wrote a flaming Letter to the Roman Catholick Lords and Gentry of that Kingdom. He expoſtulates ſharply with them for not taking Arms againſt the Government, reproaches them with their Allegiance to the Queen, and plays all his Rhetorick to puſh them to Rebellion. To give the Reader Part of this peſtilent Diſcourſe: He begins with a wretched Perverſion of a Text of Scripture.

His Treaſonable Letter to the Iriſh Nobility, &c.

“Pardon me, ſays he, I beſeech you, if upon juſt Cauſe I uſe the ſame Words to your Honours, &c. which St. Paul wrote to the Galatians: Who has bewitched ye, that ye ſhould not obey the Truth? For unleſs ye are bewitched, what makes ye fight for Hereſy againſt the true Faith of Chriſt, for the Devil againſt God, for Tyrants that ſeize your Eſtates, take away your Lives, and damn your Souls; againſt your own Brethren, who run the utmoſt Hazards, ſpend their Treaſure and their Blood to reſcue you from theſe Miſeries? What can the Meaning be that you ſhould undergo ſuch Fatigues, exhauſt your Fortunes, and riſque Soul and Body; to ſo remarkable a Degree; and all for a wicked Woman? A Woman blemiſh'd in her Birth, and diſregarding her Chriſtianity: For which Reaſons the Vicar of Chriſt, her lawful Judge, and yours too, has depriv'd her of her Kingdom. All Catholick Princes, after intolerable Provocation have abandon'd her: Several Engliſh Lords and Gentlemen have drawn their Swords againſt her: Don't you ſee ſhe's likely to be left without Iſſue either to reward her Friends, or take Revenge upon her Enemies? Is ſhe not a Scandal to the Throne? And therefore can thoſe be true Friends to the Crown who don't make it their Buſineſs to diſplace her? Are you not ſenſible that the next Catholick Heir (for the Pope will take Care there ſhall be no other) muſt reckon all thoſe no better than Traitors that ſpend their Eſtates for a Heretick againſt his Title? How will you juſtify your ſelves to the Pope's Lieutenant when he appears amongſt you (as he will do ſhortly) at the Head of his Holineſs's Forces, and thoſe of other Catholick Princes? You will then be charg'd with abetting Hereſy, and with ſupporting an Heretical pretended Queen againſt a publick Sentence of Chriſt's Vicar? Can ſhe with her Chimerical Supremacy take off the Pope's Excommunication, and abſolve you from his Curſe? Her counterfeit Supremacy, I ſay, which the Devil inſtituted in Paradice when he made Eve Adam's Miſtreſs in God's Matters? Is not the adhering to her Intereſt the Way to bring a Blemiſh upon your ſelves, and ſtain you with the Suſpicion of Hereſy and Treaſon? And beſides, if the Catholick Heir lets looſe the Law upon you, your Lives and Eſtates are forfeited, and your Families undone for ever.

After this, he puts them in Mind that King Henry the Eighth, who firſt began the Schiſm, was unhappy in his Iſſue, and that his Line was extinguiſh'd: He gives another Inſtance in the Misfortune of Sir William Drury, who commanded in the Field againſt the Pope's General. And after having flouriſh'd a little upon the Goodneſs of the Cauſe, he intreats them to open their Eyes in Time, to honour the Divine Majeſty more than Hereticks, whom hitherto, ſays he, you have worſhipped above God. But through this laſt Sentence there is a Line ſtruck, and therefore it may be the Expreſſion was thought ſomewhat too ſtrong. His Letter is dated Feb. 21. 1580. (l)

This Sanders was particularly buſy in miſleading the Noble Fitzgerald, Earl of Deſmond, help'd to blow him up into Rebellion, and was principally inſtrumental in his Ruin. (m) To conclude with him: He was almoſt as bad an Hiſtorian as he was a Subject; but his Falſhoods having been detected at large already, I ſhall refer the Reader to that Performance. (n)

On the 7th of February John Fen, George Haddock, John Munden, John Nutter, and Thomas Hemertford, were indicted for High-Treaſon at Weſtminſter, brought in guilty, and all executed to the Rigour of the Sentence. The Iriſh Rebels being reduc'd, James Fitz-Euſtace, Viſcount Baltingla/s, got off into Spain, where he died with Melancholy. This Nobleman was ſtrongly in the Intereſt of the Court of Rome, and join'd the Rebellion. To engage the Earl of Ormond, who was deſcended from Archbiſhop Beckett's Siſter, he ventur'd to put him in Mind, That unleſs St. Thomas of Canterbury had loſt his Life for the Church of Rome, Butler would never have been Earl of Ormond. For to make ſome Satisfaction for Beckett's Death, King Henry the Second had granted his Anceſtors a noble Eſtate in Ormond. (p)

This Year Thomas Watſon, late Biſhop of Lincoln, departed this Life. He was a warm Roman Catholick, and ſuffer'd for his Perſwaſion in the Reign of King Edward the Sixth. He was preferr'd to the See of Lincoln by Queen Mary. At the Recovery of the Reformation he was impriſon'd in the Tower in the Year 1559. Here he continued 'till the Year 1582, when he was remov'd to Wisbich-Caſtle, where he died. Pitts gives him the Character of a Famous Preacher, a ſolid Divine, and a good Poet. He wrote a Volume of Sermons, a Latin Tragedy, and ſome Pieces of Poetry. *

To go back a little for the Church Affairs in Scotland. In October this Year there was a General Aſſembly at Edinborough. They deliver'd a Remonſtrance to the King under ſeveral Heads, ſome of which I ſhall mention.

They complain'd Papiſts were too much countenanc'd at Court; and that his Majeſty ſeem'd to favour the Enemies of Truth both in France and

and at home: That he had made the Church a great many fair Promiſes without performing any Thing; and that their Liberties and Privileges were continually wreſted from them: That the Thirds were leas'd out to the Prejudice of the Church: That Abbeys were diſpos'd off contrary to Act of Parliament; and no Proviſion made for the Miniſters who officiated at the Churches annex'd: That ſpiritual Preferments were beſtow'd upon Children, alienated in Tenure and Uſe, and erected into Temporal Lordſhips: That his Majeſty interpos'd too far with the Regale, and ſuperſeded the Proceſs of the Church in Matters properly Eccleſiaſtical. The reſt of the Remonſtrance goes directly into the State, and complains of Male-Adminiſtration. (q)

(g) Spotſwood Church Hiſt. p. 327. MSS. Acts of the Aſſembly.

The King, who was willing to pleaſe them, return'd a gracious Anſwer the next Day: He denies the Countenancing Roman Catholicks; but hopes they would not be too curious in their Enquiry about his Servants. As to his Correſpondence with foreign Princes, which they glanc'd at, he thought the Aſſembly would not diſallow a Commerce of this Kind for preſerving the Repoſe of the Kingdom; and that Difference of Religion did not bar Friendſhip, and make Alliances unlawful: And whereas they complain'd the Church had ſuffer'd in her Privileges, his Anſwer was, that ſince his taking the Government upon him, there had been more Laws made for the Service of Religion than ever: That as to the Alienation of the Church Revenues, that Grievance muſt be referr'd to the Parliament; and that he ſhould endeavour a Redreſs to the utmoſt of his Power. And as for his checking the Juriſdiction of the Church, he was only ſenſible of a ſingle Inſtance which look'd that Way: And that, he conceiv'd, was ſufficiently defenſible. The reſt relating to the State ſhall be omitted.

Idem.

This Anſwer ought to have given Satisfaction: But the Court and Miniſtry not being form'd to the Kirk's Inclination, they kept on their Chagrine, and nothing would pleaſe them. And now the Pulpits began to run Riot: For the Purpoſe, one John Dury, a Miniſter at Edinborough, took the Freedom to juſtifie the Surprizing the King at Ruthen: And being ſummon'd before the Council, he defended his Treaſonable Diſcourſe at firſt; but afterwards, upon better Advice, was brought to a Submiſſion. He was kept for ſome Time on his good Behaviour.

Melvil declines the Juriſdiction of the Council-Board.

Andrew Melvil's Declamation had a worſe Iſſue. This Gentleman had preach'd a ſeditious Sermon at St. Andrews, and arraign'd the Government in a provoking Manner: He told the Audience, That 'twas the Buſineſs of the Nobility and the Eſtates of the Realm to reform the Abuſes and Miſmanagement of the Court: And for this he alledg'd ſeveral Precedents, and particularly ſome in the Reign of James the Third. For this Diſloyal Invective he was order'd to appear at the Council-Board. But he demurr'd to their Juriſdiction; and was ſo hardy as to affirm, That what was deliver'd in the Pulpit ought firſt to be tried by the Presbytery: And that though the Expreſſions were Treaſonable, neither King nor Council ought to take Cognizance of them in the firſt Inſtance. And after ſome Pains had been taken with him to no Purpoſe, the Board went on to examine Witneſſes againſt him: Upon this he broke out into intemperate Language, and told the King he perverted the Laws both of God and Man. For this Misbehaviour he was order'd to Cuſtody at Blackneſs; but the Commitment being left to himſelf, he took a contrary Road in the Night, and made his Eſcape to Berwick. And now all the Pulpits declaim'd loudly againſt the Court: That the Reformation was ſtruck at, and the greateſt Man both for Learning and Zeal was baniſh'd the Kingdom, and forc'd to fly for his Life.

Ibid. & Refutat. Libell. &c.

Not long after, the Earl of Gowry was apprehended, and the Caſtle of Sterling ſurpriz'd by ſome of his Adherents. The Earl was tried for high Treaſon: One Article was, the concerting this Plot; he was found guilty, and executed. Several of the Preachers were inform'd againſt, for correſponding with the Rebels. A Summons was ſent to Mr. Andrew Hay, Parſon of Ranfrew, Mr. Andrew Polwart, Sub-Dean of Glaſcow, Mr. Patrick Galaway, and Mr. James Carmichael to appear before the Council. None but Mr. Hay made their Appearance. The other Three therefore being proclaim'd Traitors, fled into England. (r)

At the Parliament held now at Edinborough, his Majeſty's Declaration concerning the treaſonable Attempt at Ruthen was confirm'd. There was likewiſe an Act made to check the late Miſbehaviour of the Preachers. The Preamble ſets forth, That

May 22. 1584.

“ Foraſmuch as ſome Perſons being lately “ call'd before the King's Majeſty, and his Se- “ cret Council, to anſwer upon certain Points “ to have been enquired of them concerning “ ſome treaſonable, ſeditious, and contumelious “ Speeches utter'd by them in Pulpits, Schools, “ and otherwiſe, to the Diſdain and Reproach “ of his Highneſs, his Progenitors and preſent “ Council, contemptuouſly declin'd the Judg- “ ment of his Highneſs, and his Council, in “ that Behalf, to the evil Example of others to “ do the like, if timous Remedy be not provi- “ ded.

Several Acts of Parliament made againſt the ſeditious Preachers.

By the enacting Part, the King's Authority over all Perſons, as well Spiritual as Temporal, is confirm'd. The Declining to ſubmit to the Cognizance of the King and Council in all Matters whatever, is made Treaſon: The Impugning the Dignity and Authority of the Three Eſtates in Parliament, is forbidden under the ſame Penalty. All Juriſdictions Spiritual or Temporal, not approv'd by the King and Parliament, are aboliſh'd and diſcharg'd. “ 'Tis like- “ wiſe enacted, That no Subjects, Spiritual or “ Temporal, of what Quality ſoever, preſume “ to convene themſelves for holding Conven- “ tions or Aſſemblies to treat or conſult upon “ any Matters, Civil or Eccleſiaſtical, (except- “ ing in the ordinary Methods of Juſtice) with- “ out a ſpecial Licence from his Majeſty: And “ that none, of what Function, Quality, or “ Degree whatſoever, ſhall preſume privately “ or publickly, in Sermons, Declamations, or “ familiar Conferences, to utter any falſe, or “ ſlanderous Speeches to the Reproach and Con- “ tempt of his Majeſty, his Council and Pro- “ ceedings, or to meddle in the Affairs of his “ Highneſs's Adminiſtration, under the Penalty “ contain'd in the Acts of Parliament, againſt “ Makers and Tellers of Leaſing. * (s)

Miniſters to be depriv'd, for what Crimes.

By another Act, all Parſons, Miniſters, or “ Readers provided to Benefices ſince his High- “ neſs's Coronation (not having Vote in the “ Parliament) ſuſpected culpable of Hereſy, “ Papiſtry, erroneous Doctrine, common Blaſ- “ phemy, Fornication, Non-Reſidence (that is “ to ſay, not Reſiding within the Paroche, but “ abſent from it, and from the Kirk and his Of- “ fice for Four Sabbaths in the Year, without “ Leave from his Ordinary) Plurality of Bene- “ fices having Cure; but here the Clauſe of “ Non-Reſidence does not reach to thoſe of the King's Council, to thoſe who are Lords of the Seſſion, nor to ſuch as are abſent on his Highneſs's Service. To proceed; Simony and Dilapidation are added to the Reſt. Now any Clergyman not within the ſaving Clauſes, found guilty by the Biſhop of the Dioceſe, or the King's Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners of the Crimes abovemention'd, is to be depriv'd of his Office and Benefice. (t)

(t) Ja. 6. Parl. 8. cap. 132.

Buchanan's Books cenſur'd in Parliament.

And to conclude with this Parliament, “ Maſter George Buchanan's Chronicle, and his Book de Jure Regni apud Scotos are declared to contain ſundry offenſive Matters worthy to be deleete, or expung'd. 'Tis therefore ſtatuted and ordain'd, that every Perſon that has either or both thoſe Books, ſhall deliver them to the Lord Secretary, or his Deputies, within Forty Days, under the Penalty of forfeiting 200 Pounds Scots.

The Reaſon why theſe Books are order'd to be deliver'd into the Secretary's Office, is, “ That they may be purg'd of the ſcandalous Paſſages, not being fit to remain as Records of Truth to Poſterity. (w)

The Church endeavours to hinder the paſſing theſe Bills, but to no Purpoſe.

Moſt of theſe Statutes were unacceptable to the Miniſters. Therefore while the Bills were debating in the Houſe they endeavour'd to hinder their Paſſing, or at leaſt to get them poſtpon'd. To this Purpoſe, Mr. David Lindſay was ſent to intreat the King, that no Act in which the Church was concern'd, ſhould paſs till the Aſſembly was heard: The Earl of Arran * being inform'd of his Deſign, put him under an Arreſt, and prevented his Addreſſing the King: His holding Correſpondence with England was the Pretence for confining him. Lawſon and Balcanquel, Miniſters of Edinborough, hearing of Lindſay's Commitment, deſerted their Charge, and retir'd into England. They left a Paper behind them by Way of Apology for going off. Mr. Robert Pont, Miniſter of St. Cuthberts, and one of the Lords of the Seſſion, entred a publick Proteſtation againſt the Acts above-mention'd. This Inſtrument drawn up in Form, he put into the Hands of a Notary, when the Herauld, according to Cuſtom, was proclaiming the Acts. His Proteſtation ſet forth, That the Church had no due Conſideration in the Paſſing theſe Acts, and therefore they were not bound by them. For this bold Challenge, he was turn'd out of the College of Juſtice, and proclaim'd Traitor. (x)

The King's Declaration.

Upon this, Reports were ſpread, that the King was gone off to Popery: That ſeveral Acts were made to check the Courſe of the Goſpel, and to ſuppreſs all good Order and Polity in the Church. To prevent theſe Diſcourſes from making an Impreſſion, the King ſet forth a Declaration, in which the Reaſons for making theſe Statutes are recited. Amongſt the Motives which forc'd the King upon this Proviſion, theſe following are reckon'd, viz. “ The Approbation of the Ruthen Conſpiracy, by the Aſſembly; Andrew Melvil's refuſing to be tried at the Council-Board; the Faſt kept at the Entertainment of the French Ambaſſadors: Faſts order'd by the Kirk for the whole Kingdom, without the King's Leave or Knowledge; Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction uſurp'd by Miniſters and Lay-Gentlemen; altering the Laws at their Pleaſure, and many other reſembling Abuſes. And to give farther Satisfaction, ſeveral Articles were annex'd to the Declaration, to ſhew the King's Adherence to the Religion eſtabliſh'd; and that he intended nothing more than bringing the Church under an Uniform and unexceptionable Regulation.

The Court Libell'd.

But theſe Apologeticks were little regarded: Invective Anſwers came out, the Court was pelted in Proſe and Rhime, and great Clamours were made, that all the Preachers at Edinborough were menac'd with Hardſhip, and forc'd to fly. To quiet the People at this Quarter, the King order'd his Court-Clergy, Mr. John Craig, and Mr. John Duncanſon, to preach in the City. Not long after the Refugee Miniſters ſent a Letter to the Seſſion of the Church and Common Council of Edinborough to this Effect.

The Refugee Miniſters Remonſtrance againſt the Government.

That being ſenſible their Abſence would be Miſinterpreted, and a great many Calumnies thrown upon them, they thought it neceſſary to acquaint them with the Reaſons of their Withdrawing. And here they complain of the Injuſtice of the late Acts of Parliament: And that they were plainly repugnant to the Word of God: The Articles offer'd to ſome Miniſters for ſubmitting to Epiſcopacy, was another Grievance: This they call a tyrannical Government, and ſalute the Biſhops in the Language of groſs Libertines, and infamous Belly-gods. They declaim againſt the Order ſent to the Provoſt and Bailiffs of Edinborough, to apprehend all Miniſters that met at the Eldership, or that deliver'd any Thing in Pulpits, or elſewhere againſt the Statutes, and Adminiſtration: That in Caſe they took their uſual Freedom, they were threatned their Heads ſhould be laid at their Heels. Theſe Things put them under great Difficulties: For the plain Dealing of their Function could not be forborn without wronging their Commiſſion, and being falſe to God. Neither on the other Side could they uſe the Liberty of their Character, without being reckon'd Traitors to the King, and expoſing their Flock to the Danger of mal-treating their Paſtors. And therefore, after a long Debate with themſelves, they found 'twas the beſt Way to withdraw, and wait for better Times. In the Cloſe, they exhort the Burghers to adhere to their Doctrine, and recollect the Precautions they had given them, that Wolves would intrude, and Teachers be put upon them, which ſought Themſelves, and not Jeſus Chriſt. (y)

(y) Spotſwood's Church Hiſtory.

The King being much diſpleas'd with this Letter, had an Anſwer drawn up with Orders to the Seſſion, and Common Council to ſign it.

They receive an unacceptable Anſwer.

The Anſwer charges the Refugees with great Miſbehaviour in their Letter. The Seſſions and Common Council blame them for reflecting ſo undutifully upon the Acts of Parliament: That as for themſelves they found nothing in theſe Statutes but what was agreeable to the Word of God: And that therefore they were reſolv'd to follow the Apoſtle's Command, and be Subject to the Higher Powers. They cenſure the Refugees for quitting the Kingdom unproſecuted and unmenac'd: That their Withdrawing without acquainting their Flock, argued a Conſciouſneſs of Guilt, and was a Breach of the Conditions made between them: And that by their Letter they had drawn the Suſpicion of the Government upon them, as if they correſponded with Fugitives and Rebels: For theſe Reaſons, they diſown all Relation to the Refugees, renounce their Paſtorſhip, ſhip, thank God for diſcovering the ill Qualities of theſe Guides, and for reſcuing them from the Danger of ſuch Wolves.

The ſubſcribing this Anſwer by the Common Council, and Seſſion of the Church, was ſomewhat of a touchy Buſineſs. To ſtick ſuch Reproaches upon their Miniſters, and ſign them Fugitives, Rebels, and Wolves, they thought would be cenſur'd as a cowardly Compliance. On the other Side, being afraid to ſtand the King's Diſpleaſure, Sixteen of the Chief, after ſome Conteſt, put their Hands to the Letter. When the Refugees read the Anſwer, they were much diſturb'd at ſo unexpected a Return.

The Beginning of this Year the Earls of Angus and Marr, the Lord Glamis, and ſome others who ſurpriz'd Sterling, were forc'd to quit that Place, and retire into England. Theſe Men being demanded as Traitors by the King of Scots, were ſhelter'd by Walſingham. This Secretary wrote that they might be put a-ſhore upon Holy Iſland, for their better Security. But the Lord Hunſdon, Governor of Berwick, did not think fit to truſt theſe Scots with ſuch a Parcel of the Engliſh Dominions: And therefore refuſ'd to take Notice of the Secretary's Diſpatch, without expreſs Order from the Queen. This occaſion'd a Diſpute betwixt Walſingham and the Lord Hunſdon, in which the Latter ſeems to have carried his Point: For the Refugees were not ſuffer'd to enter the Holy Iſland. However, the Queen thought fit to ſhew them ſome Favour, to balance the contrary Faction in Scotland. For the Preachers of that Nation gave out, the King was upon the Point of renouncing his Religion: Tho' they had no Colour for this Calumny, excepting his natural Affection to the Queen his Mother, and his confiding moſtly in thoſe he thought firm to her Service. Soon after his Commitment, and being rack'd Thomas Lord Paget, and Charles Arundel Eſq; withdrew privately into France. And here, with other Engliſh Roman Catholicks, they complain'd of the Rigour of the Government: That by the ill Offices of Leiceſter and Walſingham, the Queen was diſpleas'd with their Party, without Provocation: That they were treated with the laſt Degree of contumely and hard Uſage: That Snares, and unuſual Methods to ſurprize them, were daily invented: That by theſe Contrivances they were drawn within the Law, and hamper'd in Treaſon, without any Thing to deſerve it: And that in ſhort, there was no Hopes of Security in their own Country, neither was this complaint altogether without Reaſon, for 'tis certain Setters were employ'd, and a great Deal of Art us'd to dive into People's Secrets: Letters were counterfeited, as if written by the Queen of Scots, and left in Roman Catholicks Houſes, and Emiſſaries poſted almoſt every where, to catch up Diſcourſe, and miſreport Converſation: And beſides, Informers were encourag'd in improbable Stories: And thus a great many were brought under Suſpicion for practiſing againſt the State, and ſeveral Perſons of Quality examin'd and confin'd, upon ſlender Informations. The Papiſts complain of hard Uſage.

(b) Cambden Eliz. pag. 354.

However, Cambden endeavours to juſtify all this Credulity, and ſtretch of Management. He obſerves the Papiſts had diſcover'd themſelves mal-intention'd to the Queen: That a Book was publiſh'd to puſh ſome of the Court Ladies upon ſerving her Majeſty as Judith did Holofernes. Who wrote this deſperate Pamphlet was not diſcover'd; but one Gregory Marten, educated in Oxford, and a Perſon of Learning, was ſuſpected for the Author.

The Queen diſpleas'd with the Rigors of the Magiſtracy.

Notwithſtanding this Provocation, the Queen who was willing to leave the Memory of a gentle Reign behind her, was very angry with the Magiſtracy and Judges for treating the Papiſts with ſo much Rigour. Some of thoſe concern'd in the Cognizance of theſe Matters, thought it neceſſary to publiſh a Paper in their Vindication. In this Defence they proteſted the Prieſts had milder Uſage than they deſerv'd. That they were never put to the Queſtion upon the Score of their Religion; but only when they lay under violent Preſumptions of practiſing againſt their Country and Prince. That Campian was never rack'd to that Degree as to hinder him from walking, or ſigning his Confeſſion; that Briant obſtinately refuſing to declare who wrote the Letters in Cypher found upon him, was denied Meat and Drink till he ask'd for it in writing. But the Queen not being ſatisfied with this Apology, order'd the Judges and the other Magiſtracy to forbear Racking and other Puniſhments: And not long after, Seventy Prieſts, ſome of which were condemn'd, and all of them under Proſecution, were ſet at Liberty, and baniſh'd. Amongſt theſe, the moſt conſiderable were Gaſper Heywood, Son of the famous Epigrammatiſt, and the Firſt Jeſuit who ſet footing in England; James Boſgrave, another of the ſame Order; John Hart, a very learned Divine, and Edward Riſhton, who publiſh'd Sander's Hiſtory, and made a Supplement to it. This laſt, it muſt be ſaid, did not make the Queen a ſuitable Return for giving him his Life.

Idem.

Idem.

To proceed, Throgmorton's Confeſſion, tho' denied with his laſt Breath, was generally believ'd, and ſome Papers were taken upon Chreiton, a Scotch Jeſuit, in his Voyage to Scotland: Theſe Papers, tho' torn and thrown into the Sea, were unexpectedly recover'd. They were afterwards brought to Wade, Clerk of the Council, who with great Dexterity ſet them together. Whether they were in Cypher, or not, is unrelated by Cambden. He only mentions an Expedition concerted againſt England by the Pope, the Spaniard, and the Guiſes.

And now the People's Fears were generally alarm'd, and Diſcourſes ſpread of a formidable Invaſion. From hence the Earl of Leiceſter took an Occaſion to ſet an Aſſociation on Foot for the Queen's Preſervation. 'Twas ſign'd by Men of all Ranks, who engag'd to purſue thoſe to Death who ſhould attempt any Thing againſt the Queen.

The Queen of Scots Overture to Queen Elizabeth.

The Queen of Scots perceiving her ſelf ſtruck at by this Aſſociation, being tired with hard Uſage, and expecting worſe, ſent her Secretary Nave to the Queen and Council with large Overtures. “She promis'd that upon Condition ſhe was ſet at Liberty, and receiv'd any Proof of the Queen's Friendſhip, ſhe was ready to enter into a cloſe Correſpondence with her Majeſty, to treat her with particular Marks of Regard, to forget all Miſunderſtandings between them, to own her rightful Queen of England, to renounce all Claim to the Crown of England during her Life, to attempt nothing either directly or indirectly againſt her, to declare againſt taking any Manner of Advantage from the Pope's excommunicating Bull, to ſign the late Aſſociation for her Majeſty's Security, and conclude a defenſive League with her; with a ſaving however, of the old Alliance between Scotland and France. But then theſe Propoſals were made, that neither during Queen Elizabeth's Life, nor after her Death, any Thing ſhould be done in prejudice, either of her own Right, or her Sons, to the Crown of England, before they had a Hearing in the Engliſh Parliament. For the Security of theſe Articles, ſhe was willing to continue a Hoſtage for ſome Time in England. Or if ſhe might have the Liberty of going out of this Kingdom, other Hoſtages ſhould be given. As for Scotland, ſhe engag'd to make no Alterations there, provided her ſelf and her Family might have the Freedom of their own Religion; and that ſhe would paſs an Act of Oblivion to indemnify the Scots againſt all Outrages, and Indignities put upon her: That ſhe would recommend ſuch a Council to her Son as were beſt diſpos'd to keep fair with England: That ſhe would endeavour to reconcile him to the Noblemen lately fled into England, provided they made an humble Submiſſion, and Queen Elizabeth would engage her Honour to aſſiſt the Crown, if they happen'd to go off from their Duty: That ſhe would not treat a Marriage for her Son, without pre-acquainting Queen Elizabeth: And ſince ſhe intended to do nothing without Conſulting her Son, ſhe deſires he may be join'd with her in this Treaty for a firmer Eſtabliſhment. And as for the King of France, ſhe did not doubt his coming in as a Party, and that he would likewiſe engage the Houſe of Lorrain in the ſame Stipulation. (c)

She deſir'd a ſpeedy Anſwer might be return'd, and that her Confinement might be ſomewhat inlarg'd for a farther Diſcovery of the Queen's Friendſhip.

The Accommodation daſh'd by the Clamour of the Scotch Miniſters, &c.

Queen Elizabeth ſeem'd extremely pleas'd with theſe Terms, and 'twas thought was not averſe from releaſing her Royal Priſoner, tho' a great many new Dangers were ſuggeſted to fright her from this Humanity. However, the Accommodation went on, but when 'twas almoſt finiſh'd, the Presbyterian Scots appear'd violently againſt it, and perplex'd the Matter. The Refugee Miniſters made a hideous Clamour in ſome of the Pulpits in London. They cried out, That if the Queen of Scots was ſet at Liberty, her Majeſty of England's Reign would be ſhort: That if Queen Mary was allow'd to govern jointly with her Son, both Kingdoms were ruin'd: And that there would be an End of the true Religion in Britain, if Popery was indulg'd that Princeſs, tho' only in her private Family. Neither was the Queen the only Subject of their Satyr: They treated the young King with ſuch Extremity of Language, that upon the Scotch Ambaſſador's Complaint, the Biſhop of London was commanded to ſilence all the Scotch about the City: And the ſame Order was ſent to the Reſt of the Biſhops. However, they carried on their Deſigns another Way, and endeavour'd to ſcatter their Sentiments amongſt the Engliſh. Some of theſe Scotch Preachers went to the Act in Oxford, where Gellybrand and his Brethren entertain'd them with great Friendſhip and Regard. And here a very remarkable Queſtion was put by the Scotch Preachers, and ſome Engliſh of the ſame Complexion: It was concerning the Proceeding of the Miniſter in his Duty without the Magiſtrate's Aſſiſtance, or waiting for his Approbation. The Queſtion ſeems to have been reſolv'd for the Independence of the Church. For this was the Opinion of the Presbyterians, both Scotch and Engliſh. And if this Doctrine had been guarded, made inoffenſive to the State, and not run out to an Evangelium armatum, all had been well. But that theſe Men mov'd in a wider Compaſs, and had ſome dangerous Enterprize in Hand, may partly be collected from Gellybrand's Letter to Field, his Words are theſe,

A Combination practis'd amongſt the Diſſenters.

I have already entred into the Matters, whereof you write, and dealt with Three or Four ſeveral Colleges, concerning thoſe among whom they live. I find, that Men are very dangerous in this Point; generally favouring Reformation, but when it cometh to the particular Point, ſome have not yet conſider'd of theſe Things, for which others in the Church are ſo much Troubled: Others are afraid to teſtify any Thing with their Hands, leſt it breed Danger before the Time. And after: Many favour the Cauſe of Reformation, but they are not Miniſters, but young Students, of whom there is good hope, if it be not cut off by violent Dealing before the Time. As I hear by you, ſo I mean to go forwards, where there is any Hope, and to learn the Number, and to certify you thereof. (d)

At the Meeting of the Parliament this Winter, the Diſſenters held a national Synod at London, purſuant to their former Reſolution and Synodical Diſcipline. That this was Matter of Fact, appears by Three Letters. The Firſt from Eleven Eſſex Miniſters to Field, in which they deſire to be certified, whether the Brethren meant to be exercis'd in Prayer and Faſting, and upon what Day: The Second was from Nine of thoſe Miniſters to Field and Clerk, where they write thus: We have elected Two godly and faithful Brethren, M. Wright, and M. Gifford to join with in that Buſineſs. The Third from Gellybrand to Field: In which he owns himſelf guilty of a great Omiſſion in theſe Words. Touching my Departure from that holy Aſſembly without Leave, &c. I crave Pardon both of you and them, &c. and thus commending this holy Cauſe to the Lord himſelf, and your godly Council to the Preſident thereof, I take my Leave.

And that this Party was not without Friends in the Houſe of Commons, appears by ſeveral Bills, and other Tranſactions in Parliament.

Anno 1584. The Book of Diſcipline mov'd to be read in the Houſe of Commons, but rejected.

The Houſes met November the 23d. And on the 14th of December Three Petitions in Favour of the Diſſenters were laid before the Houſe by Sir Thomas Lucy, Sir Edward Dymmock, and Mr. Gates. What Matter they contain'd, the Reader will be inform'd in a larger Addreſs by and by. The ſame Day Dr. Turner, a Member of the Commons, put the Houſe in Mind of a

Bill and Book which he had formerly laid before them. 'Twas drawn, he ſaid, by certain godly and learned Miniſters, and tended, as he conceiv'd, to the Glory of God, her Majeſty's Preſervation, and the publick Benefit; and therefore prayed it might be read.

Now the Book which Turner mov'd might paſs the Houſe, was A Book of the Form of Common-Prayers, &c. and contain'd the Sum of the Diſſenters Diſcipline. Their Petition in Behalf of it was this. May it therefore pleaſe your Majeſty, &c. That it may be enacted, &c. That the Book hereunto annex'd, &c. Entitled a Book of the Form of Common-Prayers, Adminiſtration of Sacraments, &c. And every Thing therein contain'd, may be from henceforth Authoriz'd, put in Ure, and practis'd throughout all your Majeſty's Dominions. * From hence it appears, theſe Addreſſers at leaſt, ſaw the Neceſſity of a ſtated Form for Divine Service, and did not think it fit to leave every Miniſter to his extemporary Effuſions. But they did not keep firm to this Reſolution: For the general Rule in their Rubrick is, That the Miniſter ſhall either pray by the Form there preſcrib'd, or elſe as the Spirit of God ſhall move his Heart, governing his Devotion with Reſpect to Time and Occaſion. †

To return: Againſt this Motion in the Houſe for the Diſſenter's Form of Common-Prayer, Sir Francis Knolles Treaſurer of the Houſhold, deliver'd himſelf in a few Words: He was ſeconded by Sir Chriſtopher Hatton, Vice-Chamberlain: This Gentleman dilated upon the Subject, and argued with ſo much Force, that the Houſe came to a Reſolve againſt Reading either the Bill or the Book. (e) As to the Book, 'twas the Presbyterian Scheme for Diſcipline already mention'd.

A Conference at Lambeth between ſome of the Biſhops and the Diſſenters.

This Month, at the Inſtance of ſome of the Council, the Two Archbiſhops and the Biſhop of Wincheſter receiv'd ſome Miniſters Objections againſt Conformity, and return'd them a ſufficient Solution. However, the Earl of Leiceſter being willing to afford the Diſſenters the utmoſt Advantage, and it may be imagining the Cauſe had not been fully argued, deſir'd the Archbiſhop the Controverſy might be farther debated at Lambeth. Whitgift agreed: The Diſſenters employ'd their beſt Managers, and the Conference laſted Four Hours. And now the Earl of Leiceſter, and the Miniſters of State declar'd themſelves ſurpriz'd at the Iſſue of the Diſpute: That they did not expect ſuch clear Principles, and ſuch Force of Perſuaſion, on the Archbiſhop's Side, nor ſuch trifling Exceptions, and ſo weak an Oppoſition from the other Party. And thus ſeeming fully ſatisfied with Whitgift's arguing, they promis'd to acquaint the Queen how Matters paſs'd: And over and above, endeavour'd to perſuade the Diſſenters to Conformity: But they did not hold long under this Diſpoſition. (f)

On the 25th of February, Sir Francis Knolles, Treaſurer of the Houſhold, made a Report of the Lords Anſwer to the Commons Petition in Favour of the Nonconformiſts. 'Tis digeſted under Sixteen Articles. The Title ſtands thus:

The humble Petitions of the Commons of the Lower Houſe of Parliament, to be offer'd to the Conſideration of the Right Honourable the Lords Spiritual and Temporal of the Higher Houſe.

The Commons petition the Lords in favour of the Diſſenters.

I. The firſt Article mentions, That whereas 'twas enacted in the 13th of the preſent Reign, That none ſhould be made a Miniſter, unleſs he was able to give an Account of his Faith in Latin to the Ordinary, purſuant to certain Articles paſs'd in a Synod held in the Year 1562. Or unleſs the Perſon to be ordained had a ſpecial Talent for Preaching: They deſire their Lordſhips to conſider, whether Proviſion ſhould not be made, that thoſe Perſons who have been ſince ordain'd upon lower Qualifications, ſhould be ſuſpended, unleſs they are able to ſtand the Teſt of the Statute.

II. The Second Article is in a manner co-incident with the firſt, and may be omitted.

III. The Third Article ſets forth, that the Form of Ordination of Prieſts, confirm'd by Act of Parliament, directs, That thoſe who are taken into the Miniſtry, ſhould be put in Mind that they are Paſtors and Watchmen, God's Stewards and Meſſengers: They deſire therefore their Lordſhips would conſider for ſome good Expedient, that none may be admitted to the Miniſtry, but ſuch as are ſufficiently furniſh'd for ſo high and ſolemn a Function.

IV. Since 'tis appointed in the Ordinal, That the Biſhops, with the Prieſts then preſent, ſhall lay their Hands upon every Perſon Ordain'd, without mentioning the Number of Prieſts required to be preſent: And ſince by a Statute made in the Reign of King Henry the VIIIth, (g) every Biſhop is oblig'd to have Six Chaplains at giving Orders; the Commons therefore deſire it may be conſider'd, Whether 'tis not convenient to make a Proviſion, that no Biſhop ſhall Ordain any Miniſter of the Word and Sacraments, without the Aſſiſtance of Six Miniſters at leaſt; and that none may be pitch'd on for ſuch an Aſſiſtance, excepting ſuch as have a fair Character for Life, Learning and Reſidence: That they teſtifie their joining with the Biſhop in this Ceremony, by ſubſcribing ſome Inſtrument for that Purpoſe. And laſtly, That the Ordination be publickly perform'd, and not in any private Houſe or Chapel.

V. The Fifth Article petitions, That none may be Ordained for the future, except thoſe who have either a Benefice with Cure of Souls, or the Offer of being entertain'd as a Preacher in ſome Pariſh, or a Graduate, Fellow, or Scholar of ſome Univerſity.

VI. That none be inſtituted, collated or admitted to a Curacy, without competent Notice given to the Pariſh where they are to officiate; that the People may have Time to enquire into the Regularity of the Perſon: And in caſe they find any Blemiſhes and Failings, they may diſcover it to the Ordinary.

VII. That no Oaths may be requir'd of the Clergy, either at Ordination, Inſtitution, &c. excepting ſuch as are expreſly enjoin'd by the Statutes of the Realm, and an Oath againſt Simony.

VIII. They deſire no Miniſter may be proſecuted either in the Eccleſiaſtical or Temporal Courts, for any ſmall Omiſſions, either in Ceremonies or reading the Common-Prayer.

IX. That Miniſters for the future may not be call'd before Officials and Commiſſaries, to anſwer Complaints touching Doctrine and Conformity; but that ſuch may be examin'd by the Archbiſhops and Biſhops, that the Cauſe may be tried, and the Cenſure manag'd with as little Prejudice to the Credit of the Perſon complain'd of, as may be.

X. That the Biſhops would reſtore ſuch godly and learned Preachers as have been ſuſpended or depriv'd for no other Crime, but only their Refuſal to ſubſcribe ſuch Articles as have been lately put to them. Or if this Favour may not be allow'd, they may have the Liberty at leaſt of Preaching in other Places to which they are invited.

XI. That the Biſhops would pleaſe not to examine Godly and Learned Preachers upon the Oath ex Officio; nor preſs them to anſwer Queſtions to accuſe themſelves, but proceed only upon Articles of Information: And that her Majeſty's Commiſſioners for Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical may be requir'd to manage in this Method, and not to cite any Miniſter out of his Dioceſe, unleſs for ſome remarkable Misbehaviour at the Inſtance of the Ordinary.

XII. That the Exerciſes of Propheſying may be allow'd within every Archdeaconry, upon Regulations ſet by the Ordinary.

XIII. That whereas Complaint is made of the Abuſe of Excommunications, as well in Regard of the Grounds and Cauſes upon which 'tis pronounc'd, as of the Perſons who execute the Sentence, they deſire their Lordſhips would pleaſe to conſider, whether a Bill might not be brought in to this Effect, viz. That in Caſes of Property, Contempt, &c. the Party caſt or offending, may be pronounc'd Contumax, inſtead of Excommunicated; and if after ſuch Denunciation the Party ſhall not give Satisfaction within Forty Days, that then his Contumacy ſhould be certified into the Chancery, and a Writ de Contumaci Capiendo awarded; and this Writ to have the ſame Force and Effect with that de Excommunicato Capiendo. They propoſe this Expedient to guard the Solemnity of Excommunication, and keep this higheſt Cenſure from being contemn'd.

XIV. Since 'tis not fit the Church ſhould be diſarm'd of the Power to excommunicate, they would have a Proviſo thrown in, that the Sentence may be executed upon Inceſt, Adultery, and ſuch ſcandalous Crimes, by the Biſhops themſelves, with the Aſſiſtance of grave Perſons; or at leaſt by ſome of the Clergy, with the like Aſſiſtance: And that this Sentence ſhould not be decreed by Chancellors, Commiſſaries, or Officials.

XV. That Proviſion may be made againſt Pluralities, and Licences for Non-reſidence.

XVI. That in caſe ſuch Faculties are ſtill continued, none may be permitted the Advantage of a Licence for Non-reſidence, unleſs he furniſhes the Pariſh with an able and ſufficient Preacher to officiate in the Cure: And that no Curate may be ſuffer'd to continue that Employment, unleſs he is qualify'd to preach, performs that Office every Week, and inſtructs the Youth in the Church Catechiſm. (h)

Paper-Office.

Thus much for the Petitions. The Subſtance of the Lords Anſwer deliver'd to the Committee of the Commons by the Lord Treaſurer and the Archbiſhop of York, is as follows. The Treaſurer's Anſwer was ſhort and general: He ſaid, 'Twas the Opinion of the Lords, That many of the Articles propos'd by the Commons were unneceſſary; That Proviſion was made for the reſt, and that Uniformity in Divine Service was ſettled by Parliament.

The Archbiſhop of York's Anſwer was larger, and more particular. The two firſt Articles he conceives ought not to paſs; and to anſwer their main Objection, he replies, That in ſuch Pariſhes where ſufficient Preachers were wanting, Divine Service and good Homilies were commonly read: And this it ſeems he thought ſufficient for the Peoples Inſtruction. He grants the Neceſſity of the third Article, but wholly diſagrees to the fourth. The fifth Article ſuggeſted for preventing a Miniſterium vagum, he was willing to allow; but he thought it ought to be drawn with ſome farther Savings: For, as 'twas penn'd already, he believ'd it might reach too far, and affect Deans, &c. The ſixth Article he wholly diſallow'd; in his Opinion 'twas tinctur'd with Popularity, and might occaſion a great deal of Squabble and Miſunderſtanding. The ſeventh Article he altogether diſlik'd, and declar'd for the Lawfulneſs, and publick Benefit of the Subſcription complain'd of. The eighth and ninth Articles he diſallow'd throughout, becauſe the Liberty deſir'd, would free their Miniſters from all kind of Juriſdiction, and make them in a manner independent of Church and State. The tenth Article he could not agree to, becauſe Deprivation was frequently neceſſary in terrorem; and that the Party depriv'd might make his Submiſſion, and recover his Preferment. The eleventh Article he diſlik'd, which is all that is enter'd upon the Journal. The twelfth Article he thought neceſſary, and would take Order for ſuch Exerciſes: But here the reſt of his Reply fails by the Negligence of the Clerk of the Houſe of Commons. The thirteenth and fourteenth Articles he confeſs'd, requir'd no more than what ſeem'd reaſonable; and yet upon a cloſe Enquiry would be found not without Inconvenience. For if Excommunication muſt not proceed upon Contumacy, and other Inſtances of Misbehaviour, tho' ſmall in themſelves, an unpractis'd Cenſure muſt be brought into the Church, which would draw a great deal of Innovation along with it. He added farther, That Excommunication in theſe Caſes was us'd for the ſame Purpoſe with Outlawries and Attachments in the Temporal Courts; 'twas only to try the Cauſe, and bring the Parties to their Anſwers; who upon their Appearance are abſolv'd of Courſe. However, he promis'd that himſelf, and the reſt of the Biſhops, would be particularly careful in this Matter; and that for the future no Excommunication ſhould be ſent out, excepting for Adultery, or ſome other ſcandalous Crime; or for ſuch Contumacies, againſt which there could be no Remedy any other Way. The Arch-Biſhop has hitherto deliver'd the Senſe of all the Biſhops, as he declares himſelf. As to the fifteenth and ſixteenth Articles he profeſs'd he would never for the future allow of any Pluralities for Life. He told them farther, That the Lords Spiritual approv'd their Proviſo; and that when any Temporary Diſpenſations were granted, Care ſhould be taken for unexceptionable Curates.

Idem.

The Aſſociation enacted.

The Aſſociation abovemention'd, was paſs'd into an Act this Parliament, and pointed directly upon the Queen of Scots. (h)

An Act injoining Jeſuits and Popiſh Prieſts to depart the Realm.

There was likewiſe an Act made againſt Roman Catholick Prieſts and Jeſuits, who practis'd ſometimes againſt the State upon the Excommunicating Bull of Pius Quintus: They are order'd by the Statute to depart the Kingdom within forty Days, and not to return under the Penalty of High Treaſon. This laſt Clauſe has ſome Proviſo mention'd in the Act. To proceed, Thoſe who knowingly receive, ſupport, and entertain any of theſe Prieſts and Jeſuits, are made guilty of Felony. All Seminary Prieſts or Religious, who within ſix Months after Proclamation don't return, ſubmit themſelves to her Majeſty, and take the Oath of Supremacy (i) either before the Biſhop of the Dioceſe, or two Juſtices of Peace, are adjudg'd Traitors: And thoſe who perform the Conditions requir'd, in caſe they don't keep themſelves at the Diſtance of Ten Miles from Court for the firſt Ten Years, their Submiſſion is void. Thoſe who make any Remittances to Seminaries, incur the Penalty of a Præmunire. Thoſe who know any ſuch Prieſts or Jeſuits, and don't diſcover them within twelve Days, are to be fin'd and impriſon'd at the Queen's Pleaſure. And if any Juſtice of Peace, or other Officer does not give Information of any ſuch Diſcovery made to him within eight and twenty Days, either to the Privy-Council, or Vice-Preſident of the North, or the Marches of Wales, he was to forfeit Two hundred Marks. And laſtly, Thoſe who ſent their Children to any foreign Seminaries, were to forfeit an Hundred Pounds. This Clauſe was only for her Majeſty's Life. (k)

Archbiſhop Whitgift's Letter to the Queen.

To the Queen's moſt Excellent Majeſty.

May it pleaſe your Majeſty to be advertis'd, that notwithſtanding the Charge of late given by your Highneſs to the Lower Houſe of Parliament, for dealing in Cauſes of the Church; albeit alſo according to your Majeſty's good liking, we have ſet down Orders for the admitting of meet Men into the Miniſtry hereafter; yet have they paſs'd a Bill in that Houſe Yeſterday touching the Matter, which, beſides other great Inconveniencies, (as namely the Trial of the Miniſters Sufficiency by Twelve Laymen, and ſuch like) hath this alſo, That if it paſs by Parliament, it cannot hereafter but in Parliament be alter'd, what Neceſſity ſoever ſhall urge thereunto; which I am perſwaded in ſhort Time will appear, conſidering the multitude of Livings not fit for Men ſo qualified, by reaſon of the ſmallneſs thereof: Whereas if it paſs but as a Canon from us, by your Majeſty's Authority, it may be obſerv'd or alter'd at your Pleaſure. They have alſo paſs'd a Bill giving Liberty to marry at all Times of the Year, without Reſtraint, contrary to the old Canons continually obſerv'd amongſt us; and containing Matter which tendeth to the Slander of this Church, as having hitherto maintain'd an Error. There is likewiſe now in Hand in the ſame Houſe a Bill concerning Eccleſiaſtical Courts, and Viſitations by Biſhops, which may reach to the Overthrow of Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, and Study of the Civil Laws. The Pretence of the Bill is againſt exceſſive Fees and Exactions in Eccleſiaſtical Courts; which Fees are none other than have been of long Time accuſtomed to be taken, the Law already eſtabliſh'd providing a ſharp and ſevere Puniſhment for ſuch as ſhall exceed the ſame; beſides an Order alſo which we at this Preſent have taken amongſt our ſelves for the better Performance thereof. I therefore moſt humbly beſeech your Majeſty to continue your gracious Goodneſs towards us, who with all Humility ſubmit our ſelves to your Highneſs, and ceaſe not daily to pray for your happy Eſtate, and long and proſperous Reign over us. (l)

Your Majeſty's Chaplain, and daily Orator moſt bounden, John Cantuar.

This Letter either found, or made the Queen of the Archbiſhop's Sentiment; for the Bills and Debates in the Lower Houſe came to nothing, and no Alteration paſs'd upon the Diſcipline of the Church this Seſſion. On the 29th of March the Queen made a Speech to both Houſes at the Prorogation of the Parliament. “She takes Notice, that ſome People had been buſie in finding Fault with the Clergy; That a Cenſure of this Kind reflected upon her ſelf. For ſince God had made her an Over-Ruler of the Church, her Negligence could not be excus'd, if any Schiſm or Hereſie was conniv'd at. She grants there may be ſome Miſbehaviour and Omiſſion amongſt the Body of the Clergy; and that ſuch Miſcarriage is common to all conſiderable Offices. All which, continues her Majeſty, if you my Lords of the Clergy do not amend, I mean to depoſe you. Look you therefore well to your Charges. (m)

The Queen refuſes to ſuffer any Alteration in the Diſcipline of the Church.

'Tis plain by this Speech, the Queen was led into a Miſperſwaſion concerning the Regale; ſhe delivers her ſelf as if ſhe had an Apoſtolical Commiſſion within her Dominions, and her Power was Paramount to the Epiſcopal College: The Parliament was prorogued to the 20th of May, and ſo on from Time to Time till the 14th of December 1586. when it was diſſolv'd.

Anno Dom. 1585.

The Convocation met on the 24th of November 1584. where little was done, excepting the granting a Subſidy. On the 18th of December John Hilton Clerk, impriſon'd by the High Commiſſion, for Error, Hereſie and Blaſphemy, was order'd to be convented. He made his Appearance on the 22d following, and confeſs'd the Accuſation, and that in a Sermon at St. Martins in the Fields; he had affirm'd the Old and New Teſtament are but Fables; That he had blaſphem'd our Saviour, and declar'd himſelf an Heathen. After this he gave in his Abjuration in Writing. Upon this Submiſſion Penance was injoin'd, with an Admonition premis'd, not to maintain and teach any ſuch Hereſies and Blaſphemies. As to the Diſcipline put upon him, he was not to preach, or exerciſe any Part of his Function without ſpecial Licence from the Archbiſhop. And ſecondly, a Recantation was order'd him in St. Martin's Church, where Dr. Cotton was to preach, and the Lower Houſe of Convocation was to be preſent. This Convocation ſat till the 21ſt of May, which was about ſeven Weeks after the Prorogation of the Parliament: From this Term 'twas prorogu'd from Time to Time by the Queen's Writ, 'till the Diſſolution, which happen'd on November the 15th An. Dom. 1586. (n)

The Convocation ſits ſeveral Weeks after the Prorogation of the Parliament.

The Diſſenters failing of Succeſs in the Parliament Houſe, were ſomewhat diſcouraged; Cartwright himſelf was willing to come towards an Accommodation, and made his Court by the Earl of Leiceſter. This Nobleman wrote to the Archbiſhop in his Behalf; and becauſe this Letter and the Anſwer ſhews the Earl's Affection to the Puritans, and the Archbiſhop's Caution, the Reader ſhall have them in their own Words.

My good Lord,

I moſt heartily thank you for your favourable and courteous Uſage of Mr. Cartwright, who hath ſo exceeding kindly taken it alſo, as I aſſure your Grace he cannot ſpeak enough of it, I truſt it ſhall do a great deal of good; and he proteſteth and profeſſeth to me to take no other Courſe, but to the Drawing of all Men to the Unity of the Church; and that your Grace hath ſo dealt with him, as no Man ſhall ſo command him, and diſpoſe of him as you ſhall; and doth mean to let his Opinion publickly be known, even in the Pulpit, if your Grace ſo permit him, what he himſelf will, and would all others ſhould do for Obedience to the Laws eſtabliſh'd. And if any little Scruple be, it is not great, and eaſie to be reform'd by your Grace, whom I do moſt heartily intreat to continue your Favour and Countenance towards him, with ſuch Acceſs ſometimes, as your Leiſure may permit: For I perceive he doth much deſire and crave it. I am to thank your Grace

The Archbiſhop's Anſwer.

My ſingular good Lord,

Maſter Cartwright ſhall be welcome to me at all Times, and uſing himſelf quietly, as becometh him, and as I hope he will, he ſhall find me willing to do him any Good; but to grant unto him as yet my Licence to preach, without longer Trial, I cannot, eſpecially ſeeing he proteſteth himſelf to be of the ſame Mind he was at the writing of his Book, for the Matter thereof, though not for the Manner: My ſelf alſo, I thank God, not alter'd in any Point by me ſet down, to the contrary: And knowing many Things to be very dangerous: Wherefore notwithſtanding I am content, and ready to be at Peace with him, ſo long as he liveth peaceably, yet doth my Conſcience and Duty forbid me to give unto him any farther publick Approbation, until I be better perſwaded of his Conformity. And ſo being bold to uſe my accuſtomed Plainneſs with your Lordſhip, I commit you to the Tuition of Almighty God, this 17th of July 1585.

This Year a Presbytery was ſet up at Hatfield Peveril in Eſſex, by one Carew a Puritan Preacher. Ailmer Biſhop of London being inform'd of this oppoſite Communion, ſummon'd the Preacher and ſeveral of his Congregation before himſelf and other Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners. Theſe Men, after Examination, were committed. As for Carew, his Ignorance, Heterodoxies and Aſſurance were very remarkable. He had his Miſſion only from the Peoples Election, deſpis'd all Cenſures of the Church, declaim'd againſt the Common-Prayer, and deny'd Chriſt's Deſcent into Hell. He maintain'd Diviſions ought to be kept on, becauſe our Saviour ſaid, I came not to ſend Peace, but a Sword. He held, the Soul of Man was Part of the Subſtance of God. By Conſequence, that the Soul was infinite; and that the Deity muſt ſuffer in the Fate of thoſe that were loſt. He had miſled his People to an Indifferency for the Sacrament of Baptiſm: They ſaid, It made no matter for the Water, ſo we have the Word. *

This Year a Conference was held at Halyrood-Houſe, between the King and the Miniſters touching Church Diſcipline; 'tis not regiſter'd in the Manuſcript Acts of the Aſſembly, but I found a Copy of it in the Paper-Office at White-Hall, which I ſhall tranſcribe into the Records. *

Fecknam's Death. Somewhat of his Character.

This Year John Fecknam late Abbot of Weſtminſter died; the greateſt Part of his Hiſtory having been given already, I ſhall only obſerve farther, That in the Reign of Queen Mary this Abbot did a great many good Offices to the Proteſtants. For Inſtance: The Earl of Bedford and the preſent Earl of Leiceſter were ſcreen'd, in ſome meaſure by him. He diſengag'd Sir John Cheek from ſome Difficulties, and interpos'd ſo far with Queen Mary for the Enlargement of her Siſter Elizabeth, that he ſuffer'd in his Intereſt at Court. Thoſe of his own Perſwaſion complain'd his Kindneſs was unreturn'd; for upon the Refuſal of the Oath of Supremacy, he was confin'd, and died a Priſoner in Wiſbich-Caſtle.

The Malcontent Lords, who fled into England for Shelter, rallied their Intereſt, and ventur'd to return into their Countrey. At their firſt appearing, they rais'd Forces, ſat down before Sterling and took it. The King, to prevent a Civil War, pardon'd them, and diſcarded Arran, and over and above reſtor'd them their former Poſts in the Government. And now a Parliament being held at Edenborough, the Miniſters who return'd with the Lords, not being contented with their Pardon, inſiſted ſtrongly upon a Repeal of the Acts paſs'd the laſt Year againſt their Diſcipline. The Lords, either diſliking the Motion, or conceiving the Thing impracticable, were willing to acquieſce under the preſent Eſtabliſhment. This Paſſiveneſs was highly reſented by the Miniſters, who charg'd the Lords with Breach of Promiſe; and which was more extraordinary, one William Watſon preaching before the King at Edinborough, reproach'd him with Mal-Adminiſtration; for which Miſbehaviour he was committed to the Caſtle of Blackneſs. But this Correction was not ſufficient to govern the ill Manners of the reſt: For one James Gibſon getting into the Pulpit at Edinborough, fell into a very intemperate Fit of Railing: He ſaid, That Captain James, * with his Lady Jezabel and William Steward (meaning the Colonel) were taken to be the Perſecutors of the Church, but that now 'twas ſeen to be the King himſelf, againſt whom he denounced the Curſe that fell on Jeroboam, that he ſhould die Childleſs, and be the laſt of his Race. Gibſon being call'd before the Council, maintain'd his Inſolence, and was committed. In England Archbiſhop Whitgift found himſelf embaraſs'd at the Council-Board: The Earl of Leiceſter, and ſome other great Men, tho' ſeemingly ſatisfy'd with the late Conference at Lambeth, endeavour'd to break the Archbiſhop's Meaſures, and ſupport the Puritans. He complains of this ill Uſage, that he was miſreported in his Management, oppos'd from unexpected Quarters, and that ſome of thoſe who profeſs'd Friendſhip, did not deal clearly with him. I ſhall give the Reader Part of his Letter to this Purpoſe.

The Archbiſhop's Expoſtulatory Letter to the Lord Treaſurer.

God knows, ſays he, how deſirous I have been to have my Doings approv'd by my ancient and honourable Friends: I have done nothing of Importance againſt the Sectaries without good Advice. They are my Enemies that ſay ſo, but I truſt my Friends have a better Opinion of me. Why ſhould I ſeek for any Confirmation of my Book after twelve Years Approbation? Or what ſhall I get thereby more than already I have? And yet if Subſcription may confirm it, 'tis confirm'd long ago by the Subſcription of almoſt all the Clergy of England *before my Time.—— I am burthen'd with Wilfulneſs; I hope my Friends are better perſwaded of me, to whoſe Conſciences I appeal. accounted willful. But I muſt be Content, vincit qui Patitur. * There is a Difference betwixt Wilfulneſs and Conſtancy. I have taken upon me, by the Place which I hold under her Majeſty, the Defence of the Religion, and the Rites of the Church of England: To appeaſe the Schiſms and Sects therein, to reduce all the Miniſters to Uniformity and due Obedience, and not to waver with every Wind: This alſo my Place, my Perſon, my Duty, the Laws, her Majeſty, and the Goodneſs of the Cauſe, require of me: And herein the Lords of her Highneſſes moſt honourable Privy-Council (All Things conſider'd) ought in Duty to aſſiſt and Countenance me. But how is it poſſible, after ſo long Liberty, and Lack of Diſcipline, I ſhould perform the Charge I have undertaken, if a few Perſons ſo meanly qualified (as moſt of theſe factious Sectaries are) ſhould be countenanc'd againſt the whole State of the Clergy, of greateſt Account both for Learning, Years, ſtaidneſs, Wiſdom, Religion, and Honeſty; and if open Breakers and Impugners of the Law, Young in Years, proud in Conceit, contentious in Diſpoſition, ſhould be maintain'd againſt their Governors, ſeeking to reduce them to Order and Obedience? Hæc ſunt initia Hæreticorum, & ortus, atque conatus Schiſmaticorum malé cogitantium, ut ſibi placeant, ut præpoſitum ſuperbo Tumore contemnant. Sic de Eccleſia receditur, ſic Altare profanum foris collocatur, ſic contra pacem Chriſti, & ordinationem atq; unitatem Dei rebellatur. That is, Pride and Contempt of Superiors, is the Principle of Mutiny, and the leading Motive to Hereſy and Schiſm. Thus they revolt from the Church; thus unhallow'd Altars are ſet up in foreign Societies, thus the Peace and Unity recommended, thus the Government inſtituted by Chriſt, is broken and oppos'd. —— I muſt not endure, continues the Archbiſhop, their notorious Contempt, unleſs I will become Æſop*'s Block, and undo all that has been hitherto done —— 'Tis certain, if Way be given to them upon their unjuſt Surmiſes and Clamours, it will be the Cauſe of that Confuſion which hereafter the State will be ſorry for. ——— I neither fear the Diſpleaſure of Man, nor the evil Tongue of the Uncharitable, who call me Tyrant, Pope, Knave, and lay Things to my Charge I never did, nor Thought.* Scio enim hoc eſſe opus Diaboli, ut ſervos Dei mendaciis laceret, & opinionibus falſis glorioſum nomen infamet, ut qui conſcientiæ ſuæ luce clareſcunt, alienis rumoribus ſordidentur. That is, “ 'Tis the Devil's Buſineſs to bring “ Miſreports upon God's Servants, to ſully their “ Reputation, and aſperſe their Innocence.” Thus, ſays the Archbiſhop, was St. Cyprian himſelf, and other godly Biſhops uſed, to whom I am not comparable. But that which grieves me moſt, that which is to be wonder'd at, and lamented, is that ſome of thoſe who Countenance theſe Men, and cry out for a learned Miniſtry, ſhould Watch their Opportunity, and be Inſtruments and Means to place moſt unlearned Men in the chiefeſt Places, and Livings of the Miniſtry, thereby to make the State of the Biſhops, and Clergy contemptible, and I fear Saleable. This Hypocriſy and Diſſembling with God and Man (in pretending one Thing and doing another) goes to my Heart, and makes me think God's Judgments are not far off. The Day will come when all Men's Hearts ſhall be open'd. In the mean Time I will depend upon him who never fails them that put their Truſt in him. (q)

Moſt of what I have tranſcrib'd, was written to the Lord Treaſurer Burleigh, in Anſwer to an expoſtulating Letter of that Nobleman, in Behalf of the Diſſenters. By the Tenor of the Archbiſhop's Defence, and his Complaint of Diſappointment from his Friends, 'tis eaſy to collect ſome great Men endeavour'd to embroil Matters, and break the Eccleſiaſtick Eſtabliſhment. That there was more Intereſt than Conſcience in this Practice.. That theſe Steps were not taken ſo much in Favour of the Puritans as to diſmantle Religion in General, and make Way for farther Depredations upon the Patrimony of the Church.

Divinity Lecture, ſet up at Oxford.

This Year Sir Francis Walſingham founded a Divinity Lecture at Oxford. The Reader was to diſcourſe upon the Fundamentals of Religion, and the Holy Scriptures, by Way of common Place: That the Controverſies ariſing from thence might be more particularly diſcuſs'd. This Lecture, as the Univerſity-Hiſtorian reports, was ſet up on Purpoſe to widen the Breach, and inflame the Difference between the Two Churches of England and Rome; for Walſingham had a ſtrong Biaſs towards Puritaniſm. To make the Deſign bear, Dr. John Reyonlds, a violent Antipapiſt, was Firſt plac'd in the Chair. The Lecture was much commended and throng'd by the young Students: But ſome People cenſur'd the Foundation: They ventur'd to ſay the Pretence of propagating Truth was only a Colour to convey Walſingham's Sacrilege out of Sight. For this Gentleman, it ſeems, during the Vacancy of the See of Oxford, had lop'd the Revenues. As for Dr. Reynolds, he made it his Buſineſs to read againſt the Hierarchy, and weaken the Authority of the Biſhops. And thus by the Aſcendant of Walſingham and their Chancellor Leiceſter, Divinity had a Sort of new Face at Oxford, and the Firſt Reformation was reform'd away in a great Meaſure. *

To ſay ſomething of Scotland; Andrew Melvil, who imagin'd the Acts of Parliament lately made for controling the Juriſdiction of the Aſſemblies, were drawn by the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews, projected a Revenge upon this Prelate. To this Purpoſe, he procur'd a Sort of Synod conven'd at St. Andrews. This Meeting conſiſted of a great Number of Barons, and others of the rich Laity, intermix'd with the Miniſters. Mr. James Melvil, couſin to Mr. Andrew, open'd the Aſſembly with a Speech. In this Exhortation, as they call it, he bore hard upon thoſe who ſuggeſted the Acts abovemention'd, and adviſ'd the Aſſembly to proceed againſt the Perſon known to be the chief Promoter. By this Deſcription he meant the Archbiſhop. This Advice was follow'd, and the Biſhop was cited to appear before them. When he came, he proteſted in the Firſt Place againſt their Juriſdiction. Having premiſ'd this, he deſir'd to know what Articles they had againſt him. They took no Notice of his Proteſtation, but charg'd him with ſuggeſting the Statutes made in the Year 1584: And with Penning the King's Declaration publiſh'd in purſuance of thoſe Acts. They charg'd him likewiſe with miſreporting the Brethren that retir'd into England. To this the Biſhop, repeating his Proteſtation, replied, “ That the Suggeſtion and “ Draught of the Statutes, were Things he had “ no Hand in: But when the Motion was made, “ and the Bills form'd, he voted for thoſe Pro“ viſions, and in this he had follow'd the Dire“ ction of his Conſcience: And that by the Se“ cond Act of that Parliament the Authority of “ the Three Eſtates was confirm'd and enacted “ to ſtand unaltered, according to the ancient “ Cuſtom of the Realm. (r) This the Aſſembly-men objected, was ſettling the Epiſcopal Juriſdiction, as it ſtood in Times of Popery. St. Andrews replied, “ The Biſhops were not an “ Eſtate conſider'd in themſelves, but that they “ repreſented the Eſtate of the Clergy, which “ was always reckon'd the Firſt Eſtate ſince the “ Kingdom was converted to Chriſtianity. He “ urg'd farther, That the Act laſt mention'd “ made no expreſs Proviſion for any Epiſcopal “ Juriſdiction: However, if the Circumſtances “ of Time and Place had been Favourable, he “ told them there was enough to be ſaid in De- “ fence of the Epiſcopal Authority. He like- “ wiſe reminded them, they were none of his “ Judges. At laſt, when he found them re- “ ſolv'd to go on with their Cenſures, he ap- “ peal'd to the King, the Council, the Three “ Eſtates of the Realm, or any other lawful Aſ- “ ſembly conven'd by his Majeſty.

When the Biſhop had left them, they entred into a Debate, whether they were to admit the Appeal, and ſtop the Proceſs. They divided upon the Queſtion, and upon collecting the Votes, had a Majority of Two for proceeding immediately to Excommunication. The Moderator, Wilkie, refus'd to pronounce the Sentence, neither would any other of the Aſſembly venture upon ſo hardy a Performance. And thus, when they were breaking up re infecta, and a good Part of them had left the Houſe, one Andrew Hunter, a young Fellow, deſir'd them to ſtay, and declar'd the Spirit had order'd him to pronounce the Sentence, and thus ſtepping into the Chair, he read the Form of Excommunication.

He is excommunicated by the Synod.

This Cenſure was return'd the next Day upon ſome Part of the Aſſembly. For Two of the Biſhop's Servants being at Church, prevail'd with one Mr. Samuel Cunningham, the Biſhop's Couſin, to go into the Reader's Seat, and pronounce the Sentence of Excommunication againſt Mr. Andrew, and Mr. James Melvil, and ſome other Miniſters of Fife, who had appear'd with moſt Heat agaiſt the Biſhop.

Some of his Exceptions to the Synod.

The Appeal was laid before the King: And here the Biſhop excepted againſt the Authority of their Synod, and the Method of their Proceedings. He alledg'd, the Meeting of the Aſſembly was expreſly againſt the Statutes of the Realm: That they were neither conven'd by his Majeſty's Letter, nor the Biſhop of the Dioceſe: That a ſecular Perſon preſided as Moderator: That the Meeting conſiſted of a Majority of the Laity, who were to have no Vote in Church Aſſemblies: And that if the Number of Divines had overbalanc'd the Reſt, they ought notwithſtanding, by the Apoſtle's Rule, to have been Subject to the Biſhop's Cenſure, and not brought him under Theirs. The reſt of his Allegations may be omitted.

Spotſwood's Church Hiſtory.

The King being inform'd of this Claſhing, gave Way to the Aſſembly, ſuffer'd the Biſhop to ſink, and reſign to a diſhonourable Submiſſion. For at the next Synod, inſtead of Diſcuſſing the Appeal, they came to a Sort of Compromiſe, which ran moſtly in Favour of the Aſſembly. 'Twas to this Effect:

He Submits to Terms of Diſadvantage.

By this Agreement the Biſhop either under his Hand, or by perſonally appearing, was to deny that he ever publickly challeng'd any Supremacy, or pretended himſelf a Judge over other Paſtors and Miniſters, or maintain'd that ſuch Claim had any Warrant or Foundation in Holy Scripture. And if any Thing of this Kind had been affirm'd, he was to declare it an Error againſt his Conſcience and Knowledge. He was alſo to deny his having claim'd any judicial Power over the laſt Aſſembly. That if he had done it, he was miſtaken: And that he was to blame for his imperious Behaviour, and Contempt of the Synod. He was likewiſe to promiſe more inoffenſive Behaviour for the Future. To ask Pardon for all paſt Failings and Omiſſions; to inſiſt upon no more Privilege and Juriſdiction than might be made good by the Word of God. And laſtly, he was to ſubmit his Doctrine and Behaviour to the Judgment of the general Aſſembly without any Contradiction or Appeal.

On the other Hand, the Aſſembly to give the King Satisfaction, and ſhew how willing they were to obey his Highneſs as far as their Conſcience would give them Leave, promis'd to declare the Proceſs imperfect, and the Sentence of Excommunication unpronounc'd, and reſtore the Biſhop to the Condition he was in before his Appearing at the St. Andrews Synod: But with this Proviſo, That he ſhould perform his Part of the Stipulation, and manage regularly for the Future.

The Biſhop was ſo over compliant as to ſign theſe Terms, and ſacrifice his Character to his Repoſe. However, this Exceſs of Humility was not ſufficient for general Satisfaction. Some of the bigotted Miniſters mov'd ſtrongly for maintaining the Proceſs, confirming the Sentence, and proteſted againſt the Accommodation agreed by the Majority.

At this Aſſembly there was a Motion for cenſuring the Miniſters who had ſubſcrib'd their Approbation of the Statutes made in the Year 1584. But upon Enquiry, the Number of theſe Subſcribers was found ſo conſiderable, that 'twas thought prudential to connive at ſome Difference of Sentiment, and not preſs the Matter any farther.

Idem.

The Laity not to Vote in the general Aſſemblies.

At this general Aſſembly, which met May the 10th, 1586, the Number of the Presbyteries was ſettled, and the Places of Seſſion fix'd, by the Lord Clerk of the Regiſter, at the Requeſt of the Divines. (s) By this Synod none are allow'd to Vote in the general Aſſemblies, but ſuch as the Scriptures have appointed Governors of the Church of God; that is Paſtors, Doctors, and Elders. As for other Perſons who have any Cauſe depending, or any Buſineſs to propoſe in the Aſſembly, they have the Liberty of being preſent: That is, they may give in their Petitions, and hear a Buſineſs argued, but neither the Laity, nor Deacons, have any Privilege of Suffrage. To go on with the Aſſembly, and give their own Words. There are Four ordain'd Offices, ſay they, ſet down to us by the Scripture, to wit, Paſtors, Doctors, Elders, and Deacons: And the Name of a Biſhop ought not to be taken, as it hath in Papiſtry, but is common to all Paſtors and Miniſters. (t) The Manuſcript mentions a Conference between the King's Council and ſome Commiſſioners of the Aſſembly at Holyrood Houſe. The Matter debated, was concerning the Authority of Biſhops. And here the Church Committee agreed ſome Privilege ſhould remain to the Biſhops. Now the Aſſembly refuſing to ſtand to the Agreement of their own Agents, the King's Commiſſioners came into the Houſe, and proteſted againſt their Proceedings, and declar'd every Thing null which was done by them. That which the Aſſembly inſiſted on was, That ſince a Biſhop was but an ordinary Paſtor, any Exceptions to the Regularity of his Life, or the Doctrine maintain'd by him, ſhould be tried by the Presbytery and Synod: And as to his Commiſſion in Church Affairs, he ſhould be under the Juriſdiction of the general Aſſembly. 'Twas upon theſe Heads the Commiſſioners diſagreed with them, and entred their Proteſtation. And thus the Meeting being upon the Point of breaking up, they ſent Three of their Members to the King, relax'd a little, and agreed upon this Temper;

The Miniſters refuſe to pray for the Queen of Scots.

The King of Scots being inform'd they were conſulting in England about taking away the Queen his Mother's Life, order'd the Divines to recommend her to God's Protection in their publick Devotions. This Common Office of Humanity which might have been perform'd to an Heathen, was abſolutely refus'd. And when the Order was repeated, and the Form drawn up, none but Mr. David Lindeſay at Leith, and the Court-Clergy could be brought to Compliance. And at Edinborough, which ought to have been Exemplary to the reſt of the Kingdom, the Diſobedience was moſt publick and provoking. The King upon this order'd Adamſon Biſhop of St. Andrews, to perform the Office; he was likewiſe to make a Sermon upon the Occaſion; and a Day was appointed for the Solemnity. The Miniſters being inform'd of this Preparation, prevail'd with one Cowper a young Man, unordain'd, to ſeize the Pulpit, and keep it againſt the Biſhop. The King coming to the Cathedral at the Hour appointed, and ſeeing Cowper in the Pulpit, told him, that Place was deſign'd for another; however, in caſe he would obey the Order, and pray for the Queen Mother, he might go on. To this, Cowper with an unuſual Confidence reply'd, He would do as the Spirit of God ſhould direct him. Upon this he was commanded down; but managing as if he intended to keep his Place, the Captain of the Guards ſtep'd forward to pull him out; upon which he threw out this Expreſſion, This Day ſhall be a Witneſs againſt the King in the great Day of the Lord. And then denouncing Judgment to the Burghers of Edinborough, he came down, and the Biſhop of St. Andrews preach'd, and perform'd the Office. In the Afternoon Cowper was order'd to appear before the Council; Walter Balcanquel and William Watſon, Miniſters, came along with him, where for ſome unbecoming Language, they were forbidden preaching at Edinborough during the King's Pleaſure: As for Cowper, he was ſent Priſoner to Blackneſs.

A Conſpiracy againſt Queen Elizabeth.

In June this Year a League Offenſive and Defenſive was concluded between England and Scotland at Berwick. The ſame Month this Alliance was finiſhed, a deſperate Plot againſt Queen Elizabeth was diſcover'd: I ſhall mention ſome little of it from Cambden, who form'd his Narrative from the Confeſſion of the Criminals. Some Engliſh Men in the Seminary at Rhemes, were ſo bigotted to the Court of Rome, ſo overſet with the Italian Doctrine of the Papal Supremacy, that they believ'd Pius the Vth's Excommunicating Bull little leſs than the Inſpiration of the Holy Ghoſt. The next Advance in their Belief made the diſpatching excommunicated Princes a meritorious Action; and that it was Martyrdom to miſcarry in the Enterprize. This Opinion was ſtrongly preſſed by Dr. Gifford, Gilbert Gifford, and Hodgkinſon Prieſts: And one John Savage, a Man of a Military Genius, was ſo throughly proſelyted to this Doctrine, that he readily undertook to kill the Queen. At the ſame Time they publiſh'd a ſort of paſtoral Letter to the Engliſh Roman Catholicks, not to diſturb the Government, or attempt any Thing againſt the Prince: That they ſhould have Recourſe to no other Expedient but Prayers and Tears: That theſe were the only juſtifiable Preparations for Chriſtian Subjects: And that Faſting and Devotion are the proper Defences againſt Perſecution. Theſe Men got a Report ſpread, that George Gifford, a Gentleman in the Queen's Guards, had ſworn to aſſaſſinate her Majeſty, and receiv'd a great Sum of Money from the Duke of Guiſe for this Purpoſe. A Commiſſion for trying the Queen of Scots.

Somewhat before this Time, one Ballard, a Seminary Prieſt, was ſent into France, to concert an Expedition againſt England. The Invaſion was to be furniſh'd by the Pope, the King of Spain, the Guiſes, and the Prince of Parma. This Ballard being diſpatch'd into England, to make an Intereſt for the Enterprize, was diſcover'd by Maud, one of Walſingham's Spies, who travell'd along with Ballard, and had been truſted to an Intimacy by him. Ballard coming to London, and going under the Name of Captain Foſcue, open'd the Buſineſs to Babbington, a young Gentleman of Derbyſhire: He was a Perſon of a good Family and Fortune, and of a promiſing Genius. The Enlargement of the Queen of Scots was Part of their Undertaking This Princeſs being weary of her Confinement, is ſaid to have exchang'd ſome Letters with Babbington: But that this Correſpondence reach'd to any Attempt againſt Queen Elizabeth's Life, was always denied by Her. However, the Worſt being believ'd, or at leaſt ſuſpected, Queen Elizabeth awarded a Commiſſion for her Tryal. The Inſtrument is directed to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, now one of the Privy-Council, to Sir Thomas Bromely Lord Chancellor, to the Lord Treaſurer Burleigh, to the Marqueſs of Wincheſter, to the Earls of Oxford, Shrewsbury, Kent, Derby, Worceſter, Rutland, Pembroke, Warwick, Leiceſter, and Lincoln, with ſeveral Barons, and other Members of the Privy-Council, with Five of the Judges. The Queen of Scots was tried at Fotheringay Caſtle in Northamptonſhire, where ſhe was then impriſon'd. When Notice was given her, ſhe refus'd at Firſt to appear in Court, and inſiſted on the Independency of her Condition, and declar'd ſhe had rather die a Thouſand Times over, than do any Thing which might injure her Royal Character, and imply that ſhe own'd her ſelf a Subject. However, ſhe condeſcended ſo far, as to ſay, ſhe was ready to make her Defence in a free and full Parliament. At laſt ſhe was prevail'd with to drop this Reſolution, and come into the Court. But here ſhe was not wholly unprovided with an Expedient. For to guard her Sovereignty, ſhe entred a Proteſtation in Writing againſt the Authority of her Judges. She behav'd herſelf with an Air of Majeſty becoming her Station, and replied to the Articles objected with great Strength, and Preſence of Mind: She was preſs'd hardeſt with the Evidence of her Secretaries, Nave and Curle: But neither of them were brought into the Court, which ſhe deſir'd. In ſhort, her Defence not giving Satisfaction, ſhe was found guilty.

By the Way, it may not be improper to obſerve, that the Archbiſhop of Canterbury's being put in the Commiſſion for trying the Queen of Scots, is a clear Evidence that the Privy-Council and the Judges, who may well be ſuppos'd to have perus'd this Inſtrument, were of Opinion, that a Biſhop's judging in capital Cauſes was was not inconſiſtent either with his Character, or the Engliſh Conſtitution. 'Tis true the Archbiſhop did not act, neither was there any Neceſſity for his doing ſo: For by the Tenor of the Commiſſion, a Majority of thoſe nominated were impower'd to try the Priſoner, and give Sentence.

October 29.

Soon after the Trial was over, the Parliament met at Weſtminſter. The Queen's Buſineſs not giving her Leave to come to the Houſe of Lords, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Lord Treaſurer Burleigh, and the Earl of Derby, Lord Steward, or any two of them, had a Commiſſion under the Great-Seal to open the Parliament, and to hold, adjourn, or prorogue it, as long as they thought fit. (x)

(x) D'Ewes's Journal, p. 391.

On the 12th of November, ſome of the Lords and Commons waited upon the Queen with an Addreſs from both Houſes for the Execution of the Queen of Scots. And here to gain her Majeſty's Conſent, John Puckering, Serjeant at Law, and Speaker to the Houſe of Commons, made a long Diſcourſe to reinforce the Addreſs: And ſince Sir Simon D'Ewes commends him for uſing many ſolid and excellent Reaſons, * the Reader ſhall have ſome of them. One of his Reaſons is drawn from the Danger of the Proteſtant Religion, if the Queen of Scots was ſuffer'd to live. But to ſuggeſt that Difference of Religion, or Fears of Perſecution, are warrantable Grounds to proceed againſt a Sovereign Princeſs, and ſend the Heir Apparent of the Crown into the other World by Way of Prevention: To ſuggeſt this, I ſay, looks like myſterious arguing: Whether reaſoning in this Manner is not conſulting Eaſe farther than Conſcience, and chuſing Iniquity rather than Affliction, (Job 36. 21.) the Reader muſt judge. The Speaker charges the Queen of Scots with a ſanguinary Temper, and ſays ſhe is acquainted with Blood. But this is Miſrepreſentation; for this Princeſs allow'd her Subjects a Toleration, diſturbed no Body upon the Score of Conſcience, and govern'd with remarkable Clemency, as hath been already related. He puts the Queen in Mind, that the Queen of Scots held up her Claim to the Crown of England, and believ'd herſelf rightful Sovereign at preſent. But this is wide of Matter of Fact; for the Queen of Scots had ſeveral Times ſolemnly own'd Queen Elizabeth's Right to govern, and pretended no Title to this Kingdom till after her Death. And to weaken the Queen's Compaſſion upon the Score of the near Relation between her and the Queen of Scots, the Speaker tells her Majeſty they were only Couſins in a remote Degree. As remote as they were, the Queen of Scots was next upon the Royal Line; and beſides that, her Father, King James the Fifth, was Couſin-German to Queen Elizabeth. But Serjeant Puckering endeavours to bring all the Engliſh to a much nearer Degree of Conſanguinity; for he tells the Queen, She is their Natural Mother: This Figure is ſomewhat ſurprizing: But he ſeems to have forgotten the Diſtinction between Civil and Natural Parents. He mentions God's Vengeance againſt Saul for ſparing Agag, and the Reprimand Ahab receiv'd from the Prophet for parting with Benhadad. The Caſe of Saul has been ſpoken to already, * and the other is foreign to his Point; for Benhadad attack'd the King of Iſrael with a formidable Army, and inſiſted upon intolerable Conditions before the Battle; neither had the King of Iſrael ever invited him to his Country or Protection. He argues farther, that the Magiſtrates who put thoſe Miſchievous Queen's Jezabel and Athaliah to Death are commended. But theſe Inſtances will neither of them bear: For Jezabel was but Queen Dowager: And beſides, her Execution was expreſly order'd by a Prophet. (y) And as for Athaliah, ſhe had no Title to govern. She was not deſcended from the Royal Line of David; upon whoſe Family the Crown was expreſly ſettled by God Almighty. (z)

A Convocation.

To ſay ſomething of the Convocation: There were two Schedules of Complaint brought up by the Lower-Houſe to the Biſhops. The firſt contains a Remonſtrance againſt ſeveral Diſorders in the Dioceſe of Norwich. The Complaint ſets forth the Canons were not obſerv'd; that unqualified Perſons were ordain'd and inſtituted; that Penances were commuted; that Excommunications were ſent out for Trifles; that regular and painful Preachers were diſcourag'd; and that Men were ſuffer'd to preach without Licence. The other Schedule laid before the Upper-Houſe, and endors'd Suffolk Archdeaconry, complains that the Communion was wholly omitted, or imperfectly adminiſter'd; that the Surplice was refus'd; that Holidays were not obſerv'd; that the Communion was frequently receiv'd in a ſitting Poſture; with ſome other Particulars of leſſer Conſideration. (a)

(a) Convoc. Journal.

What Proviſion was made does not appear in the Record. The Convocation was prorogued by the Archbiſhop to the 17th of February.

The Queen of Scots Death, and Part of her Character.

Soon after the Lords and Commons had deliver'd the Addreſs above-mention'd, the Lord Buckhurſt, and Beale, Clerk of the Council, were diſpatch'd to the Queen of Scots to acquaint her the Sentence of Death was paſs'd upon her; that 'twas approv'd by the Parliament; that both Lords and Commons had mov'd ſtrongly for the Execution; and that Juſtice and Neceſſity had forc'd them upon this Motion. They endeavour'd to perſwade her therefore to recollect herſelf for Repentance, and acknowlege her Offences againſt God and the Queen; giving broad Hints at the ſame Time that her Life and the Religion eſtabliſh'd in England were Things which could not ſtand together. She receiv'd this News with an Air of unuſual Pleaſure, return'd God Thanks, and congratulated her Condition, that ſhe was look'd on as a Perſon of ſome Weight and Significancy for recovering Religion. She earneſtly deſir'd ſhe might have a Catholick Prieſt to direct her Conſcience, and adminiſter the Holy Sacraments. They recommended the Biſhop and Dean of Peterborough for that Purpoſe: But theſe ſhe abſolutely refus'd, as being of a different Communion.

By the Mediation of the French Ambaſſador the Publication of the Sentence was reſpited: But in December, at the Inſtance of ſome of the Courtiers, 'twas proclaim'd in London with great Solemnity. When this News was brought to the Queen of Scots, ſhe was ſo far from being dejected, that ſhe thank'd God for her Condition: And by her Aſpect and Behaviour diſcover'd her Mind was not at all diſorder'd upon the Occaſion. And notwithſtanding her Keeper, Sir Amias Pawlet, had ſtrip'd her of all the Marks of Royalty and Regard, and reduc'd her to a vulgar Figure, ſhe receiv'd the Uſage with all the Temper imaginable: And having with great Difficulty prevail'd with him for Leave to write to Queen Elizabeth, ſhe ſent her a Letter to this Effect:

“She declares againſt her having any Unbenevolent Diſpoſition towards the Queen, returns God Thanks for his Permiſſion of the Sentence of Death; that he was pleas'd to put an End to her Pilgrimage, and deliver her from a troubleſome World. She deſires ſhe may be referr'd to no Subject for the following Requeſts; that the Grant of theſe Favours might come from the Queen's Hands, and be immediately directed by her Order; for from the Puritan Party,* who now fill'd ſome of the principal Poſts, ſhe could expect nothing that was friendly. In the firſt Place ſhe deſires, That after her Enemies had ſatisfied their Thirſt with her innocent Blood, her Body might be carried by her Servants into France; for in Scotland the Aſhes of her Anceſtors had been inſulted, and the Churches either pull'd down or prophan'd. And as for England, ſhe could not expect a Catholick Funeral there amongſt the old Kings of her Family: She deſires therefore to be ſo diſpoſed of that her Corps may reſt at leaſt, which the Body could never do while the Soul was in it. And ſince ſhe had Reaſon to ſuſpect the Barbarity of ſome People, ſhe deſires ſhe might not be privately made away; but that her Servants and others might ſee her die; that they might be Witneſſes ſhe died in the true Faith of Chriſt, and in the Communion of the Church; and that thus being in a Condition to atteſt her laſt Behaviour, they might ſilence the Calumnies which her Adverſaries might bring upon her Memory. Her third Requeſt was, That her Servants might have the Liberty to go where they pleas'd, and enjoy the Legacies ſhe had bequeathed them. She intreats the Queen by every Thing that's moving and ſolemn not to deny her theſe Things: She intreats her for Chriſt's Sake; ſolicits by the Relation between them, by the Memory of King Henry the Seventh, their common Anceſtor, and by her own Sovereign Dignity. Afterwards ſhe complains, that by the Order of ſome of the Queen's Council all Royal Furniture and Diſtinction was taken from her; and that ſhe had Reaſon to apprehend their Malice would break out into ſomething worſe. To this ſhe added, that if all her Papers which were ſeiz'd had been fairly produc'd, and read at her Trial, 'twould have evidently appear'd, that nothing but ſome People's anxious Solicitude for Queen Elizabeth's Security had occaſion'd her Death. And laſtly, ſhe earneſtly intreats the Queen to return her a few Lines under her own Hand. (b)

* A Zelotis Novatoribus, Cambden Eliz.

But whether Queen Elizabeth received this Letter, or not, is more than Cambden can affirm.

The Proceedings againſt her cenſur'd by Cambden.

This Hiſtorian relates, that thoſe who were unbiaſs'd, and judg'd fairly of Matters, thought the Queen of Scots hardly us'd. Their Reaſons were, Becauſe ſhe was an Independent Princeſs, and accountable to none but God Almighty: That Nearneſs of Blood call'd loudly for good Uſage from Queen Elizabeth: That when Queen Mary was driven out of her Kingdom by her rebellious Subjects, and had retir'd into England, Queen Elizabeth immediately diſpatch'd Henry Middlemore to her, and in the Word of a Princeſs, made her large Promiſes of Friendſhip and Protection: That notwithſtanding this Engagement for good Uſage, Queen Elizabeth order'd her into Cuſtody, and violated the Laws of Hoſpitality: That ſince the Queen of Scots was treated no otherwiſe than as a Priſoner ſurpriz'd, 'twas lawful for her to diſengage her ſelf, and recover her Liberty as well as ſhe could: That ſince ſhe was no Subject, ſhe could not commit Treaſon; for Equals can have no Juriſdiction upon each other: For this Reaſon the Emperor's Sentence againſt Robert King of Sicily was declared void, becauſe Robert was no Subject of the Empire: That Ambaſſadors if they concert a Plot againſt the Princes where they reſide, are privileg'd by their Character, and not to be tried for Treaſon; and if ſo, the Conſequence for Exemption holds ſtill ſtronger for Princes themſelves: That to bring Crown'd Heads to the Block, and put them in the Executioner's Hands, was a Thing without Precedent. Farther, that the Condemning the Queen of Scots was neither juſtifiable by the Scriptures, or the Civil Law: That 'twas likewiſe a Contradiction to the Engliſh Conſtitution; and which is more, it claſh'd directly with an Act of Parliament made in the 13th of the preſent Reign: By which 'tis enacted, That no Perſon or Perſons ſhall be hereafter Arraigned for any Offences mention'd in this Act, (that is, for denying the Queen's Title, or attempting any Thing againſt her Life,) unleſs the ſame Offence or Offences be proved by the Teſtimony, Depoſition, and Oaths, of two lawful and ſufficient Witneſſes; which ſaid Witneſſes ſhall, at the Time of the Arraignment of ſuch Perſon ſo offending, be brought forth in Perſon before the Party ſo arraigned Face to Face, and there ſhall avow and openly declare all they can ſay againſt the Party ſo arraign'd, unleſs the ſaid Party arraign'd ſhall willingly, without Violence, confeſs the ſame. (c)

Now the Benefit of this Proviſo was not allow'd the Queen of Scots at her Trial: For, as Cambden goes on, there was no Witneſs produc'd in Court, but ſhe was caſt by the Depoſitions of her Secretaries taken in Writing: But they never appear'd to juſtify their Evidence Face to Face, as the Statute requires. (d)

I ſhan't give the Reader the Mortification to open the laſt Scene of the Tragedy, and write the Circumſtances of her Death: Only in general it may be ſaid, her Fortitude and Devotion was very remarkable: She ſupported her Character with all imaginable Decency, and died like a Chriſtian, and a Queen.

Cambden gives her the Commendation of a Pious Princeſs; that ſhe had an invincible Greatneſs of Mind; that ſhe was a very fine Perſon, and extraordinarily qualified for the Functions of Government; that being forc'd out of her Kingdom by her natural Brother Murray, and other Ambitious and Ungrateful Subjects, ſhe took Shelter in England; that ſhe was ruin'd here by ſome Engliſhmen, over anxious about their Religion, and their Queen; and that on the other Side, ſome Roman Catholicks, eager to return England to the Pope's Obedience, puſh'd her upon dangerous Debates. And laſtly, that ſhe ſeems to have been diſpatch'd by the Mercenary Evidence of her Secretaries, who were brib'd into their Depoſitions, and never brought to be confronted in the Court. Thus far Cambden.

This unfortunate Princeſs died in the Forty ſixth Year of her Age, and the Nineteenth of her Impriſonment. She was buried in the Choir of Peterborough-Cathedral, where Wickam Biſhop of Lincoln preach'd her Funeral Sermon. To proceed; The Puritans giving further Provocations to the Government by practiſing upon their Plan, they were ſmartly proſecuted in the High Commiſſion Court. The Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners preſs'd the Laws very cloſe: But that which was moſt clamour'd againſt, was the putting the Oath Ex Officio upon them. By this Oath the Party was obliged to anſwer all Interrogatories, though never ſo unſerviceable. There were ſeveral Objections made againſt the Juſtice of this Form of Enquiry: 'Twas alledg'd, the tendering this Oath was contrary to the Common Law, and never practis'd by the Civil Magiſtrate. To this 'twas anſwer'd, that in capital Cauſes the Oath was not forc'd upon the Priſoner; but where neither Life nor Limb were concern'd, the Oath was uſually tender'd in Chancery, in the Council of Marches, and the Council in the North: That there were frequent Inſtances of ſuch Proceedings in other Courts of Record at Weſtminſter; where Judges have Time out of Mind given an Oath to Perſons ſuſpected of foul Dealing touching any Writ, Return, and other Matters not being capital.

Objections againſt the Oath Ex Officio, with the Anſwers in Defence of it.

'Twas urg'd, this Method was contrary to the Privileges of Nature, and the fundamental Laws of Liberty: By Vertue of which, Nemo tenetur ſeipſum prodere, No Body is bound to diſcover or betray himſelf. To this 'twas replied, That Homo proditus per Denunciationem, Famam, &c. tenetur ſeipſum Oſtendere; that is, When a Man's Miſbehaviour lies altogether out of Sight and Notice, he is not oblig'd to take an Oath to publiſh his Failings; but when his Practice is in ſome Meaſure reach'd by common Report, when he is preſented or inform'd againſt, in this Caſe the Fault can't be ſaid to lie conceal'd; and therefore the Governours in Church or State ought to make uſe of the beſt Expedient for a full Enquiry: That by this Means the whole Truth may come up, the Puniſhment be rightly proportion'd, and the Perſon more effectually reformed.

'Twas urg'd farther, that theſe Proceedings, Ex Officio, were practis'd only by Popiſh Prelates againſt thoſe of the Reformation. To this it was return'd, that Biſhop Bonner and Gardiner had the Oath Ex Officio put to them in King Edward the Sixth's Reign; and that the Court who urg'd the taking this Oath conſiſted of Biſhops, Privy Counſellors, Judges, Common Lawyers, and Civilians. (e)

Another Exception was, That the Scripture, which ought to be the Rule for Juſtice, affords neither Precept nor Precedent for ſuch Proceedings. To this 'twas replied, that there's no Neceſſity for either of theſe Authorities from Holy Writ; that there being nothing to condemn this Proceſs in the Old and New-Teſtament, was ſufficient to juſtify the Government: However, there is ſomewhat of a reſembling Inſtance in the Moſaick Law. For the Purpoſe, when a Man was found murder'd in the Field, the Elders of the next City were ſolemnly to declare to the Prieſt, and that with an Appeal to God Almighty, that they were wholly unconcern'd in the Murder. (f)

The laſt Objection I ſhall mention was, That no tranſmarine Proteſtant Churches manag'd in this Arbitrary Manner. To this 'twas replied, That even Geneva would furniſh two Inſtances to the contrary. This was, no doubt, Argumentum ad hominem, and ſtriking the right String with a Witneſs. The Inſtances are theſe: One Cumperel, a Geneva Miniſter, fix'd in a Pariſh within the Territory of that Republick, had a private Deſign of placing himſelf in the State of Bern: This was reckon'd a great Fault. When the Conſiſtory was inform'd of his Intentions, they put the Oath Ex Officio to him; and becauſe he refuſed to anſwer directly to ſome very cloſe Interrogatories, and there lay ſtrong Preſumptions againſt him, they came to a Reſolution that they had juſt Grounds to depoſe him from his Function. (g)

The other Geneva Precedent ſtands thus: One Balthaſer, a rich Widow in Geneva, had a Ball at her Houſe. This Diverſion is a great Crime by Calvin's Diſcipline. It happen'd that a Syndick, one of the four Chief Magiſtrates, and one Henrick an Elder, were two of thoſe that danc'd. When Calvin underſtood what was done, he convented them before a Conſiſtory; and though they were delated by no Body, the Oath Ex Officio was put to them to extort Matter of Fact. The Elder pleaded St. Paul's Rule to Timothy, Receive not an Accuſation againſt an Elder under two or three Witneſſes. This Plea was rejected, and Calvin call'd it no better than a pleaſant Jeſt. In ſhort, Henriek the Elder, tho' he made no Part in the Diverſion, was animadverted on for defending it. He was turn'd out of his Office, and impriſon'd for three Days. And more than that, one of the four Syndicks, or Chief Magiſtrates of the Town, was likewiſe ſuſpended from the Execution of his Office, 'till he had given ſome Proofs of his Repentance for being at the Ball. This Man reſign'd to the Conſiſtory, did Penance upon their Admonition, and ſo prevented his Commitment. There were ſeveral others, who being examin'd by Calvin upon their Oath, confeſs'd they were at this dancing Entertainment, upon which they were all ſent to Priſon. *

The Engliſh Diſſenters who refuſed this Oath may be rang'd under four Diviſions: Firſt, ſuch who would return no other Anſwer but this; If our Faults be hidden, tarry 'till the Lord comes, and makes the Councils of our Hearts manifeſt; * but if they they are manifeſt, let the Proſecutor and the Witneſſes appear. The ſecond Sort took the Oath with a Proteſtation, That they intended not to be bound to accuſe either themſelves or their Brethren. A third Sort had ſomewhat of a larger Principle towards Compliance: They thought themſelves oblig'd to diſcover both their own, and their Brethrens Faults, to remove Evil from the Land, as they call it; but for ſuch Actions which were ſtrein'd and miſconſtrued, and no Faults at all in the Judgment of the Party examin'd, theſe they believ'd themſelves not bound to diſcloſe. The laſt Sort took the Oath with a Proteſtation ſomewhat different from the ſecond: They declar'd they did not reckon themſelves bound to anſwer any Interrogatives to fortify any other's Teſtimony; but where the Crime had no Evidence to prove it, they conceiv'd they might fairly be ſworn to diſcover their Knowledge. For the Purpoſe, they thought a Preacher ought not to be examin'd upon Oath concerning any Part of his Sermon: For this they cited our Saviour's Anſwer to the High Prieſt, Why askeſt thou me? Ask them that heard me, they know what I ſaid. (i)

The Diſſenters Book of Diſcipline was lately reviſ'd, and approv'd by the Party. And now they began to form themſelves into Claſſes. Three of theſe Claſſes were ſet up in Northamptonſhire; one at Northampton, another at Daventry, and another at Kettring. The ſame Form of Government was likewiſe erected in moſt other Counties. (k) To ſay ſomething of the Buſineſs of theſe Claſſes, and the Manner of their Proceeding: At their Meeting, which was always in ſome private Houſe, they choſe a Moderator in the firſt Place. Their Method was this; One of them makes a Prayer for God's Direction in the Choice. This Miniſter takes a Seat by himſelf to receive the Scrutiny: Upon this all the Company give their Votes privately to him, and here the Choice turns upon a Majority. He that's choſen Moderator makes a Prayer for God's Bleſſing in the Management of his Office. After this he calls over the Names of the Brethren. The Authority of the Moderator continues 'till the next Meeting. At the Receſs of every Claſſis they always appoint a Time for meeting again: This Interval is ſometimes no more than a Fortnight, but ſeldom above three Weeks. If any extraordinary Emergency happens in the mean Time, the Moderator may ſhorten the Adjournment. When any Perſon is admitted into a Claſſis he engages to abſolute Submiſſion, and ſubſcribes himſelf ready to obey all the Orders and Decrees of that Society. For Inſtance, 'twas concluded at the Claſſis of Northampton, that when any Controverſy happens touching any Point of Doctrine, or Interpretation of Scripture, all the Brethren of that Claſſis were bound to ſtand by the Determination of the Majority: They likewiſe anſwer'd Caſes of Conſcience put to them, and reſolv'd Difficulties touching Contracts of Marriage. The Decrees and Reſolutions of the Claſſis were enter'd in a Book, which was always in the Cuſtody of their Regiſtrary.

Beſides theſe Claſſes there was another Meeting call'd the Aſſembly: 'Twas generally form'd out of two from every Claſſis. At this Committee they chuſe a Moderator, who preſides over the reſpective Claſſes 'till the next Aſſembly, which was commonly within ſix or eight Weeks. Buſineſs of more than ordinary Importance was manag'd here, and ſuch in which the Church was generally concern'd. For Inſtance; Writing of Letters to the Brethren at Oxford, Cambridge, and London, to acquaint them with their Proceedings, and receive their Directions for Diſcipline and Government. At ſuch Times 'twas likewiſe reſolv'd which of the Committee ſhould pen the Letter; and in the Northamptonſhire Diviſion Mr. Snape was commonly the Perſon. For this Purpoſe, they wrote to Travers in London, Gelybrand in Oxford, and to a Third in Cambridge. There were two material Points ſettled in the Northamptonſhire Aſſembly this Year: One was to take a Survey of all the Churches in that County; the other was for an Order to be obſerv'd at the enſuing Parliament. The Buſineſs of the Survey was to know the Value of every Benefice in the County, the Number of the Pariſhioners, who were the Incumbents, how they liv'd, and were qualified. And here thoſe who were commiſſionated for this Enquiry commonly made a very diſadvantagious Report of the Conformiſts. The Deſign of this Northamptonſhire Survey was to make a Precedent for other Counties; that by being thus furniſh'd with Information, they might give in a general Liſt to the Parliament of all the Clergy in England that oppos'd their Project. The other Buſineſs tranſacted in the Aſſembly above-mentioned, was a Reſolution to ſend one or two of every Claſſis with Credentials to London, to attend the Parliament. And here they were to join the Brethren of other Diſtricts; to offer a Conference for Diſputation, if 'twas thought proper; and to manage any other Buſineſs at Diſcretion. This Northamptonſhire Survey was approv'd by the Party in other Places, and practiſ'd in moſt Counties in England.

To add ſomething concerning the Methods of Cenſure in the Claſſes. For the Purpoſe; If a Lay-Man fell into a Fault, one of the Elders was to admoniſh him: If the Party prov'd obſtinate, the Elder muſt take two or three with him the ſecond Time. If he continued unreclaim'd after this laſt Reprimand, they barr'd him the Communion. If the Perverſeneſs of the Party was ſuch as to intrude upon the Communion, 'twas then reſolv'd he ſhould be refus'd upon Pretence of an Order in the Rubrick. And thus they found out a Method to maintain their own Diſcipline, and cover'd themſelves at the ſame Time with the Authority of the Common-Prayer. The Claſſes and Committees in the Country were under the Direction of the General Aſſembly at London. At this Grand Meeting Cartwright, Edgerton, or Travers, were commonly Moderators. Whatever was done here was reckon'd authentick: This was the laſt Reſort, and the over-ruling Authority. Hither the Brethren in the Country ſent their Queries, and applied for Advice.

The Country Claſſes under the Direction of the Aſſembly at London.

This Account of the Puritans Proceedings is taken from Depoſitions in the Courts of the High Commiſſion and Star-Chamber: And here the Deponents were generally Perſons preſent at the Aſſemblies.

About this Time, Sir Thomas Bromely, Lord Chancellor, departed this Life. And now the Queen offer'd the Seal to Archbiſhop Whitgift: But this Prelate excuſing himſelf upon the Score of his Age, and the Buſineſs of his Function, recommended his Friend, Sir Chriſtopher Hatton. The Motion being approv'd, this Gentleman had the Seal, and other Marks of that Office, deliver'd to him at Whitgift's Houſe at Croyden. *

To proceed; John Low, John Adams, and Richard Tipdale, were tried and found guilty of High-Treaſon, for being made Prieſts by the Authority of the Biſhop of Rome: For this they were hang'd, drawn, and quarter'd, at Tyburn. (l) But this ſhould have been plac'd to October the laſt Year.

June 20. 1587.

To take a Survey of the Affairs of the Church in Scotland: This Summer a General Aſſembly was conven'd by the King's Proclamation: The Deſign was to ſettle the Points of Difference between his Majeſty and the Church. But the Miniſters proving too ſtiff and pretending, the Meeting fail'd of Succeſs: For the Chancellor and Juſtice-Clerk coming to the Aſſembly, and requiring Satisfaction in the King's Name for the Miſbehaviour of James Gibſon and John Cooper Miniſters, and that Mongommery, Biſhop of Glaſcow, might be receiv'd without any Forms of Submiſſion, their Anſwer was, “That if the Church's Petitions were granted in the next Parliament, they would endeavour to bring Things to ſuch a Temper as might be beſt conſiſtent with the Honour of the Miniſtry, might ſatisfy the Offence of the Godly, and the Conſcience of their Brethren, againſt whom his Majeſty had taken Offence. And as for Mr. Robert Mongommery, they would diſpenſe with ſome Ceremonies us'd in admitting Excommunicates, provided the King was willing to remit ſomewhat of the Satiſfaction crav'd of the other two Brethren.” This peremptory Anſwer diſguſted the King ſo far, that he refuſed treating with them any farther at that Time. (m)

The Aſſembly at Edinborough refuſe to give the King Satiſfaction.

The Aſſembly continued ſitting 'till the Parliament met. At the Opening the Seſſion they ſent Mr. David Lindeſay, Mr. Robert Pont, and ſome other Commiſſioners, to the Parliament-Houſe: And here in the Name of the Church they deſir'd that the Prelates then preſent might not be ſuffer'd to ſit; their Reaſons were becauſe they had no Authority from the Church, and moſt of them executed no Function in it. Againſt this Motion, Mr. Edward Bruce, Abbot of Kinloſs, roſe up, and addreſſing the King, made a long Diſcourſe to prove the Right they had to ſit in Parliament, and vote for the Church. He complain'd the Miniſters had in a moſt illegal and diſorderly Manner thrown them out of their Buſineſs in the Church, and now they were trying to carry on their Encroachment, and deprive them of their Privilege in the State. This Uſage the Prelates hop'd his Majeſty would not ſuffer, but rather puniſh the Preſumption of the Petitioners. Mr. Robert Pont being ſomewhat too warm in his Reply, the King ſtopp'd the Conteſt, and order'd them to preſent their Petitions to the Lords of the Articles. But here the Aſſembly-Committee found no Satiſfaction as to this Particular.

The Aſſembly petition the Parliament againſt the Prelates.

July 29. 1587.

Some Time before the Courtiers had concerted a Project for conveying the Remainder of the Church-Lands to the Crown. The Colour was, The Augmentation of the Royal Revenues, and putting the King in a Condition of ſupporting his Dignity, without burthening the Subject with Taxes. To this Purpoſe a Bill was read, and paſs'd into an Act. Archbiſhop Spotſwood blames the Churchmen for their Cowardice and Perfidiouſneſs on this Occaſion; for deſerting the Intereſt of Religion, and not cruſhing the Deſign at the Beginning. The Preamble of the Statute bears ſomewhat hard upon the Munificence of former Princes, and inſinuates them laviſh and ſhort in their Conduct. (n) As for the Biſhops, Spotſwood makes ſomething of an Excuſe for them: The Presbyterians had handled them ſo roughly, that they were in a Manner forc'd to apply to the Protection of the great Men, and reſign themſelves wholly to the Pleaſure of the Court. (o) And as for the Aſſembly-Men, they were ſo eager to ruin the Prelates, ſo over-heated with Paſſion and Revenge, that they were not aware of the Snare, but ſuffer'd themſelves to be impos'd on by thoſe Perſons who lay at Catch for the Church-Lands. Theſe crafty Men perſwaded the Presbyterians that the only Way to gain their Point upon their Adverſaries, and finiſh the Ruin of Epiſcopacy, was to alienate their Patrimony; for when the Bulk of the Prelates Eſtates was once veſted in the Crown, no Body would accept the Function, and by Conſequence the Order muſt ſink. And here not only the Prelates, but the whole Church receiv'd a terrible Blow. 'Tis true, to ſtop the Clamour of the Presbyterian Miniſters, and bring them to an Acquieſcence, they were promis'd the whole Tythes ſhould be ſettled on them, and diſpos'd of at their Pleaſure. But the rich Laity after they had gain'd the Lands, broke in even upon this Branch of the Church's Revenue: For the Lords of the New Erections, as they call them, ſeiz'd the Tythes, impoveriſh'd the Miniſters, ſet the Tythes at a higher Rate, and haraſs'd the poor Farmers that were to pay them to a great Degree of Rigour.

Idem.

To mention ſome Part of the Body of the Act, and ſhew the Reader what a Sweep it made from the Church into the Exchequer.

The Scotch Annexation Act for conveying the Church Lands to the Crown.

Our ſaid Sovereign Lord, and his ſaid three Eſtates of Parliament, be the Force of this preſente Act, have united, annex'd, and incorporate, and unitis, annexis, and incorporatis, to the Crown of this Realme, to remaine therewith as annexed, and as it were Propertie thereof, in all Time cumming, and with our ſaid Soveraine Lord, and his Succeſſours for ever; All and ſindrie Landes, Lord-ſhippes, Barronies, Caſtles, Towres, Fortalices, Manſions, Manour Places, Milnes, Multures, Woodes, Schawes, Parkes, Fiſchinges, Tounes, Villages, Burrowes in Regalitie, and Barronie, Annual Rentes, Tennentes, Reverſiones, Cuſtomes great and ſmall, Few Farmes, Tenentes, Tennendries, and Service of free Tennentes. This Annexation Act was not paſs'd without ſeveral Proviſo's and Reſervations. For Inſtance: The Prelates Houſes or Caſtles where they reſided, the Tythes of Pariſhes, the Glebes, Parſonage and Vicarage Houſes, Lands granted to Colleges and Schools, and the Endowment belonging to Hoſpitals, are all forepriz'd and excepted, and left to the old Proprietors, purſuant to the Uſe of the firſt Settlement.

But then all Church-Lands already diſpos'd of by the King, and erected into Temporal Lordſhips and Baronies; all ſuch Grants and Diſpoſitions prior to the Date of this Act, are confirm'd to the reſpective Owners.

The King repents paſſing the Act of Annexation, and why.

The Advantage of this Act to the Crown was ſtrongly repreſented, to make Way for the Royal Aſſent. But ſoon after the Bill was touch'd by the Sceptre, the King found himſelf abus'd. (q) For a great many Eſtates which had been wreſted from the Church before, were confirm'd by this Act: And as for the reſt which were now veſted in the Crown, they were quickly granted away to the Courtiers. Theſe Gentlemen took Care to ſolicit for one another: That the Lands being thus divided amongſt a great many, the Recovery of them might be more impracticable. Thus when the King came to Maturity of Judgment, he found his Youth had been ſurpriz'd; that thoſe who contriv'd the Statute, had been playing their own Game: And thus he ſaw plainly what ſome People meant by Reformation. As for himſelf, he got little or nothing, excepting the Character of Impoveriſhing the Church, bringing a Change upon the Conſtitution, and maiming the firſt Eſtate of the Kingdom. 'Twas upon this Recollection that the King calls this Statute of Annexation, a Vile Act; and adviſ'd his Son Prince Henry to repeal it, if he did not find it done to his Hand. (r)

The Miniſters likewiſe, who either ſtood neuter, or promoted the Bill, miſs'd their Account; for the Tythes were not reſtor'd them as they expected: When they found themſelves over-reach'd, they began to make a Noiſe; but now 'twas to little Purpoſe.

Several Acts made in Favour of the Miniſters.

But before the Annexation Act paſs'd, there were ſeveral Statutes made in Favour of them. Theſe Proviſions laid their Jealouſie aſleep, and kept them in good Humour. To mention ſome of them: "By an Act made this Parliament, Jeſuits and Seminary Prieſts that did not depart the Kingdom within a Month after the Publication of the Statutes, were to ſuffer Death, and forfeit all their Moveables; and thoſe who knew their Character, and entertain'd them, were to forfeit the Revenue of their Eſtates for their Life-time: And that thoſe who either ſaid, or heard Maſs, or diſpers'd any Book or Letters to draw People from the true Religion, were to forfeit their moveable Goods, with the Life-Rents of their Lands for the King's Uſe. (s)

"Farther, Thoſe who imported any Books containing erroneous Doctrine, or ſuperſtitious Rites, and Papiſtical Ceremonies, were to be committed to Ward, and puniſh'd in their Perſons and Goods at the King's Pleaſure. (t)

By another Act, "All Miniſters preferr'd to Benefices of Cure, under Prelacies, are diſcharg'd from the Payment of the firſt Year's Fruits, and the fifth Penny of their Benefifices which had been lately paid to the Crown (u)

The Penalty for an excommunicated Perſon who intrudes into the Church, and refuſes to go out upon Admonition.

"And becauſe Divine Service was ſometimes diſturb'd, and the Miniſters outrag'd in performing their Office, 'tis enacted, That thoſe who are guilty of making any Tumult or Fray in any Church or Church-yard, are to incur the Forfeiture of all their Goods to the King. And that thoſe who lay under Spiritual Cenſures, and aſſaulted any Miniſter for not receiving them to Communion without Penance, were to forfeit all their moveable Goods. And if any excommunicated Perſon ſhall come into the Congregation at the Time of the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments and Common-Prayer, the Miniſter being inform'd of ſuch Intruſion, ſhall immediately charge the excommunicated Perſon in God's Name and the King's, to depart. But if the Perſon proves obſtinate, and ſtays in the Church, the Miniſter, after the Service is over, ſhall require as many of the moſt diſcreet and ſubſtantial Pariſhioners, as he ſhall think fit, to apprehend the excommunicated Perſon, and carry him before the Magiſtrate of the Precinct, who is to commit him till he gives ſuch Security for his Behaviour as the Miniſter ſhall appoint. The Elders who were preſent when the Offence was committed, were to engage, that the excommunicated Perſon ſhould reconcile himſelf to the Church. And laſtly, In caſe the Offender fail'd in performing his Part, he was to forfeit all his moveable Goods, and be puniſh'd at the King's Pleaſure. (w)

Anno Dom. 1587.

Notwithſtanding the Prelates were ſtrip'd of their Patrimony by the Annexation Act, they ſtill continued to ſit in Parliament, as appears by the Statute for regulating the Number of the Lords of the Articles; 'tis enacted, That the Number of this Committee ſhall be equally drawn out of every Eſtate; That the ſmalleſt Number of every Eſtate ſhall be Six, and the greateſt Ten. 'Tis likewiſe enacted, That each of the Three Eſtates were to appear in the Parliament-Houſe in diſtinct Apparels or Habits. (x)

The Reaſons ſuggeſted to the King of Spain for an Expedition againſt England.

The next Year, which the Aſtronomers predicted would produce ſomething extraordinary, a Deſcent upon England was concerted. The Pope, ſome Spaniſh Monks, and Engliſh Refugees, refreſh'd the King of Spain's Memory for this Expedition: That Prince's Arms had been employ'd in the Conqueſt of Portugal, and thus the Deſign againſt England ſlept for about Ten Years. But now conceiving him at leiſure, they endeavour'd to puſh him upon the Enterprize: They ſuggeſted, That ſince Providence had bleſs'd him with ſuch remarkable Proſperity, his Majeſty was bound to do ſomething by Way of Return; That nothing was more acceptable to God Almighty, or becoming a Chriſtian Prince, than enlarging the Pale of the Church; That this glorious Undertaking could no Way be executed to more Advantage than by conquering England, exterminating Hereſie, and reſtoring the Catholick Religion; That nothing could be more juſt than this War, not only upon the Score of its being neceſſary, but becauſe 'twas undertaken for the Maintenance of the Chriſtian Religion. To prove the Juſtice of the War more particularly, they alledg'd, the Queen of England was Excommunicated, perſiſted in her Diſobedience to the Church of Rome, abetted the Rebels in Flanders, made continual Depredations upon the Spaniards, ſeiz'd and plunder'd his Towns in Spain and America; and over and above, had lately outrag'd the Majeſty of all Crown'd Heads, in murdering the Queen of Scots. After they had thus flouriſh'd upon the Juſtice, they endeavour'd to ſhew the Advantage of the Undertaking, which I ſhall omit. (y)

In ſhort, King Philip was prevail'd with to follow the Advice: And thus the Invincible Armada was equipp'd. But what was the Iſſue of this Formidable Preparation, and how happily it miſcarried, I ſhall leave to the State Hiſtorian.

Anno Dom. 1588.

This troubleſome Year the Puritans were very active in perfecting their Schemes, ſubſcribing their Diſcipline, and drawing out to a farther Defiance of the Church of England. The Warwickſhire Claſſis, where Cartwright was generally Moderator, met upon the tenth Day of the fourth Month, as they call it; and here they determine the Queſtions ſent to them from the Cambridgſhire Synod. Some of their Reſolutions are as follow, viz.

The Reſolutions of the Warwickſhire Claſſis.

" That private Baptiſm is unlawful; That 'tis
" not lawful to read Homilies in the Church;
" That the Sign of the Croſs is not to be us'd
" in Baptiſm; That the Faithful ought not to " communicate with unlearned Miniſters: But " here they allow them to be preſent at the " Service, if they come on Purpoſe to hear a
" Sermon. Their Reaſon is, becauſe Lay-men,
" as well as Miniſters, may read Publick Ser-
" vice. That the Calling of Biſhops is unlawful;
" That within their Management of Cauſes
" Eccleſiaſtical, there is no Duty belonging to " them, nor any publickly to be given them:
" That 'tis not lawful to be Ordain'd by them,
" or to denounce Suſpenſions or Excommunica-
" tions ſent from them; That 'tis not lawful to
" acquieſce in the Biſhops Deprivation of any
" Perſon, excepting (upon Conſultation
" with the neighbouring Miniſters and the " Pariſhioners of the Miniſter deprived) they " find it expedient; otherwiſe the Perſon cen-
" ſur'd, is to continue his Function, till he is
" ejected by the Civil Magiſtrate. Farther,
" they reſolve, 'tis not lawful to appear in a
" Biſhop's Court, unleſs with a Proteſtation a-
" gainſt his Authority; That Biſhops are not to " be acknowledged either for Doctors, Elders or " Deacons: The Reaſon is, becauſe they have " no ordinary Calling. That touching the re-
" ſtoring their Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, it ought " to be prudentially manag'd, and ſuggeſted to
" the People only as Occaſion ſhould ſerve;
" That the People are not to be publickly ſoli-
" cited to the Practice of the Diſcipline, till they " are better inſtructed in the Theory. And laſt-
" ly, That Men of more improv'd Underſtand-
" ings are to be privately dealt with to come o" ver to the Diſcipline, as far as may be conſi-
" ſtent with the Peace of the Church. Thus far the Provincial Synod of the Warwickſhire Claſſis. (z)

At this Aſſembly the Book of Diſcipline receiv'd a farther Approbation, and was ſubſcrib'd by Cartwright, Fenn, and ſeveral other Miniſters; 'twas likewiſe handed about to other Claſſes for Subſcription. When this Book came to Northampton for the Purpoſe laſt mention'd, the Brethren agreed to a General Cenſure of each other: This was done partly by Way of Penance for their former Conformity to the Church, and partly to prepare them for a devout Submiſſion to the Book of Diſcipline. It ſeems this Reprimanding each other was done with ſo much Indiſcretion, Satyr, and Particularity, that it weaken'd their Correſpondence, brought them almoſt to a general Rupture, and made ſome of the Miniſters come off from thoſe Aſſemblies.

However, the greateſt Part cemented and kept together; and to make Way for the Introduction of their Project, and prepare the People for ſo great a Change, they thought it neceſſary to appear farther in Print. They had two Points to manage, to anſwer ſome Books written in Defence of Epiſcopacy, and to draw an Odium upon the Biſhops, and bring them under Contempt. Dr. John Bridges, Dean of Sarum, and afterwards Biſhop of Oxford, publiſh'd a Book entitled, A Defence of the Government of the Church of England. 'Twas chiefly levell'd againſt Beza, but ſo contriv'd as to meet with the Puritans Objections. To this an Anſwer was return'd, call'd, A Defence of the godly Miniſters againſt the Slanders of Dr. Bridges. Bridges reply'd, and the other Party publiſh'd a Rejoinder. About the ſame Time Dr. Some Maſter of Peterhouſe in Cambridge, publiſh'd a Diſcourſe againſt Penry, and expos'd the Paſſion and Weakneſs of this warm Puritan. This Book was ſoon after anſwer'd in a Libel call'd, Mr. Some laid open in his Colours. But the Defence of their Tenents, and repelling an Attack was not thought enough, tho' to ſpeak properly, themſelves were generally the Aggreſſors. But now they were reſolv'd to manage the War more vigorouſly, to aſſault their Enemies Camp, and charge the Head-Quarters of the Church: And in this Quarrel they ſcrupled the Uſe of no Weapons, or Method of Management. Where they could not reaſon, they took Care to rally and rail: To furniſh Libels and Buffoonry againſt the Biſhops, four of the moſt hot-headed and ſeditious of the Party, * club'd their Talents. This Junto publiſh'd a great many venomous Pamphlets under the Diſguiſe of Martin Mar-Prelate. Of this kind may be reckon'd, The Epiſtle to the Confocation-Houſe: The Epitome: The Demonſtration of Diſcipline: The Supplication: Diotrephes: Martin's Minerals: Have you any Work for a Cooper: Penry's Epiſtles ſent from Scotland: Theſes Martinianæ, or Martin Junior: The Proteſtation of Martin: Martin Senior: More Work for the Cooper: A Dialogue ſetting forth the tyrannical Dealing of the Biſhops againſt God's Children.

* Penry, Throgmorton, Eudale and Fenner.

Scandalous Pamphlets publiſh'd by ſome of the Puritans againſt the Biſhops and Church of England. Paul's Life of Archbiſhop Whitgift.

To ſilence theſe Clamours, and diſable this Railing, which was carried to the laſt Degree of Coarſeneſs and Paſſion; * Whitgift and the reſt of the Biſhops procur'd a grave and ſolid Anſwer to theſe Invectives; 'twas entitled, An Admonition to the People of England, and particularly levell'd againſt Martin Mar-Prelate. But it ſeems their Obſtinacy and Aſſurance was ſuch, that there was no Reaſoning them out of their Rudeneſs. 'Twas thought therefore the beſt Way to anſwer a Fool according to his Folly, and combat theſe Pamphleteers at their own Weapon. They were attack'd in this Manner by one Tom Naſh, in his Paſquil and Marforio, his Counter-Scuffle, Pappe with a Hatchet, &c. This Naſh had a Genius for Satyr, a lively Turn, and Spirit for the Encounter: By theſe Advantages, together with that of the Cauſe, he broke the Enemy at two or three Charges, and drove them out of the Field.

* Bancroft's Dangerous Poſitions, cap. 11, & 12.

As for the Puritan Libels, they were generally printed by one Walgrave, he had a travelling Preſs for this Purpoſe; 'twas remov'd from Moulſey near Kingſton upon Thames, to Fauſley in Northamptonſhire. The next Stage was Norton; from Norton 'twas ſhifted to Coventry; from thence 'twas carried to Wellſtome in Warwickſhire, and from thence to Mancheſter, where both Preſs and Printer were ſeiz'd by the Earl of Derby. The Charge of the Preſs was born by Knightly of Fauſley, a Gentleman of good Faſhion. This Man was drawn into the Cauſe by Snape and ſome other leading Miniſters of that County. But theſe theſe enterprizing People were brought into the Star-Chamber, and in Danger of receiving a ſmart Correction. But here, as it happen'd, the Perſon they had moſt inſulted, appear'd their Friend. For upon their Submiſſion, Archbiſhop Whitgift ſolicited ſtrongly for them, and prevail'd with the Court to diſcharge their Impriſonment, and remit their Fines. 'Tis ſomewhat remarkable, that the Puritans were moſt Active in ſetting up their Diſcipline, and ſcattering their ſcandalous Pamphlets, when the Spaniſh Armada was ſweeping the Seas, and menacing the Kingdom with a Conqueſt. 'Tis probable they thought themſelves priviledg'd at this Juncture, and that the Government had neither Leiſure nor Courage to call them to an Account. This mutinous Behaviour under ſo terrible a Criſis loſt them the Friendſhip of the Earl of Leiceſter and Sir Francis Walſingham. Theſe great Men, as 'tis ſaid, declar'd they had been horribly abus'd with their Hypocriſy, (a) This, tho' a late, might be a ſerviceable Diſcovery to their Patrons. For the Earl died this Year, and Walſingham within Two Years after.

Archbiſhop Whitgift ſolicits for the Diſcharge of ſome Puritans, and procures it.

That Walſingham abated in his Affection to the Puritans, may be collected from his Letter to Monſieur Critoy, a French Gentleman. From hence it appears, at leaſt in Walſingham's Opinion, That the Queen was willing to indulge Liberty of Conſcience, provided it might have been granted without Danger to the State: That ſhe was forced on rougher Expedients in her own Defence: And that 'twas only the Mutiny and Miſbehaviour of the Papiſts which drew the Severity of the Laws upon them. The Letter is a remarkable Paper, I ſhall give it the Reader in the Secretary's Words.

“Whereas you deſire to be advertis'd touching the Proceedings here in Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes, becauſe you ſeem to note in them ſome Inconſtancy and Variation, as if we ſometimes inclin'd to one Side, ſometimes to another; and, as if that Clemency and Lenity were not us'd of late, that was us'd in the Beginning: All which you impute to your own ſuperficial Underſtanding of the Affairs of this State; having, notwithſtanding, her Majeſty's doing in ſingular Reverence, as the real Pledges which ſhe hath given unto the World of her Sincerity in Religion, and of her Wiſdom in Government, well meriteth. I am glad of this Occaſion to impart that little I know in that Matter to you, both for your own Satisfaction, and to the End you may make uſe thereof towards any that ſhall not be ſo modeſtly and ſo reaſonably minded as you are. I find therefore her Majeſty's Proceedings to have been grounded upon Two Principles.

“1. The one, That Conſciences are not to be forc'd, but to be won and reduc'd by the Force of Truth, with the Aid of Time, and the Uſe of all good Means of Inſtruction and Perſuaſion.

“2. The Other, That the Cauſes of Conſcience, when they exceed their Bounds, and grow to be Matter of Faction, loſe their Nature; and that Sovereign Princes ought diſtinctly to puniſh their Practices and Contempt, tho' colour'd with the Pretence of Conſcience and Religion.

“According to theſe Principles, her Majeſty at her coming to the Crown, utterly diſliking the Tyranny of Rome, which had us'd by Terror and Rigour to ſettle Commandments of Men's Faith and Conſciences, though as a Prince of great Wiſdom and Magnanimity ſhe ſuffer'd but the Exerciſe of one Religion, yet her Proceedings towards the Papiſts was with great Lenity, expecting the good Effects which Time might work in them. And therefore her Majeſty reviv'd not the Laws made in the 28th and 35th Years of her Father's Reign, whereby the Oath of Supremacy might have been offer'd at the King's Pleaſure to any Subject, tho' he kept his Conſcience never ſo modeſtly to himſelf; and the Refuſal to take the ſame Oath without farther Circumſtance, was made Treaſon. But contrariwiſe, her Majeſty not liking to make Windows into Men's Hearts and ſecret Thoughts, except the Abundance of them did overflow into overt and expreſs Acts, or Affirmations, temper'd her Laws ſo, as it reſtraineth every manifeſt Diſobedience, in impugning and impeaching adviſedly and maliciouſly her Majeſty's ſupreme Power, maintaining and extolling a foreign Juriſdiction. And as for the Oath, it was alter'd by her Majeſty into a more grateful Form, the Hardneſs of the Name and Appellation of ſupreme Head was remov'd, and the Penalty of the Refuſal thereof, turn'd only into Diſablement to take any Promotion, or to exerciſe any Charge, and yet with Liberty of being re-inveſted therein, if any Man ſhould accept thereof during his Life. But after, when Pius Quintus had excommunicated her Majeſty, and the Bulls of Excommunication were publiſh'd in London, whereby her Majeſty was in a Sort proſcrib'd: And that thereupon, as upon a principal Motive or Preparative, followed the Rebellion in the North: Yet becauſe the ill Humours of the Realm were by that Rebellion partly purg'd, and that ſhe fear'd at that Time no foreign Invaſion, and much leſs the Attempt of any within the Realm, not back'd by ſome potent Succour from without, ſhe contented her ſelf to make a Law againſt that ſpecial Caſe of bringing and publiſhing of any Bulls or the like Inſtruments; whereunto was added a Prohibition upon Pain, not of Treaſon, but of an inferior Degree of Puniſhment, againſt the bringing in of Agnus Dei, hallowed Bread, and ſuch other Merchandize of Rome, as are well known not to be any eſſential Part of the Romiſh Religion, but only to be us'd in Practice as Love Tokens, to enchant the Peoples Affections from their Allegiance to their natural Sovereign. In all other Points her Majeſty continued her former Lenity: But when, about the 20th Year of her Reign, ſhe had diſcover'd in the King of Spain an Intention to invade her Dominions, and that a principal Point of the Plot was to prepare a Party within the Realm, that might adhere to the Foreigner; and that the Seminaries began to bloſſom, and to ſend forth daily Prieſts, and profeſſed Men, who ſhould by Vow taken at Shrift, reconcile her Subjects from their Obedience; yea, and bind many of them to attempt againſt her Majeſty's ſacred Perſon; and that by the Poiſon which they ſpread, the Humours of moſt Papiſts were alter'd, and that they were no more Papiſts in Conſcience, and of Softneſs, but Papiſts in Faction, then were there new Laws made for the Puniſhment of ſuch as ſhould ſubmit themſelves to ſuch Reconcilements, or Renunciations of Obedience. And becauſe it was Treaſon carried in the Clouds, and in wonderful Secreſy, and ſeldom came to Light: And that there was no Pre-ſuſpicion thereof ſo great, as the Recuſancy to come to Divine Service: Becauſe 'twas ſet down by their Decrees, That to come to Church before Reconcilement, was to live in Schiſm: But to come thither after Reconcilement, was abſolutely heretical and damnable: Therefore there were added Laws containing Puniſhment pecuniary againſt ſuch Recuſants, not to enforce Conſcience, but to enfeeble and impoveriſh the Means of thoſe of whom it reſteth indifferent and ambiguous, whether they were reconcil'd or no. And when notwithſtanding all this Proviſion, this Poiſon was diſpers'd ſo ſecretly, as that there were no Means to ſtay it, but by reſtraining the Merchants that brought it in: Then laſtly, there was added another Law, whereby ſuch ſeditious Prieſts of new erection were exil'd, and thoſe that were at that Time within the Land ſhipp'd over, and ſo commanded to keep hence upon Pain of Treaſon.

“ This hath been the Proceeding, tho' intermingled not only with ſundry Examples of her Majeſty's Grace towards ſuch as in her Wiſdom ſhe knew to be Papiſts in Conſcience, and not in Faction and Singularity; but alſo with an ordinary Mitigation towards the Offenders in the higheſt Degree committed by Law, if they would but proteſt, that in Caſe this Realm ſhould be invaded with a foreign Army by the Pope's Authority for the Catholick Cauſe, as they term it, they would take Party with her Majeſty, and not adhere to her Enemies.

“ For the other Part which have been offenſive to this State, tho' in other Degree, which named themſelves Reformers, and we commonly call Puritans, this hath been the Proceeding towards them a great While: When they inveighed againſt ſuch Abuſes in the Church, as Pluralities, Non-Reſidence, and the like; their Zeal was not condemn'd, only their Violence was ſometimes cenſur'd: When they refus'd the Uſe of ſome Ceremonies and Rites as ſuperſtitious, they were tolerated with much Connivance and Gentleneſs: Yea, when they call'd in Queſtion the Superiority of Biſhops, and pretended to bring a Democracy into the Church, yet their Propoſitions were heard, conſider'd, and by contrary Writings debated and diſcuſs'd. Yet all this while it was perceiv'd that their Cauſe was dangerous, and very popular: As becauſe Papiſtry was odious, therefore it was ever in their Mouths, that they ſought to purge the Church from the Relicks of Popery, a Thing acceptable to the People, who love ever to run from one extream to another. Becauſe Multitudes of Rogues and Poverty, were an Eyeſore and Diſlike to every Man: Therefore they put it into the People's Head, That if Diſcipline were Plaintive, there ſhould be no Beggars nor Vagabonds, a Thing very plauſible. And in like Manner they promiſe the People many other impoſſible Wonders of their Diſcipline; beſides, they open'd the People a Way to Government by their Conſiſtory and Presbytery, a Thing, tho' in Conſequence no leſs prejudicial to the Liberties of private Men, than to the Sovereignty of Princes, yet in the firſt Shew very Popular. Nevertheleſs this (except it were in ſome few that entred into extreme Contempt) was born with, becauſe they pretended but in dutiful Manner to make Propoſitions, and to leave it to the Providence of God, and the Authority of the Magiſtrate; but now of late Years, when there iſſued from them a Colony of thoſe that affirm'd the Conſent of the Magiſtrate was not to be attended; when under Pretence of a Confeſſion to avoid Slanders and Imputations, they combin'd themſelves by Claſſes and Subſcriptions; when they deſcended in that vile and baſe Means of defacing the Government of the Church by ridiculous Paſquils; when they began to make any Subjects in Doubt to take an Oath, which is one of the fundamental Points of Juſtice in this Land, and in all Places; when they began both to vaunt of their Strength and Number of their Partizans and Followers, and to uſe the Communications that their Cauſe would prevail, tho' with Uproar and Violence; then it appear'd to be no more Zeal, no more Conſcience, but mere Faction and Diviſion: And therefore, tho' the State was compell'd to hold ſomewhat a harder Hand to reſtrain them than before, yet it was with as great Moderation as the Peace of the Church and State could permit. And therefore, to conclude, conſider uprightly of theſe Matters, and you ſhall ſee her Majeſty is no Temporizer in Religion. It is not the Succeſs abroad, nor the Change of Servants here at Home, can alter her; only as the Things themſelves alter, ſo ſhe applied her religious Wiſdom to correſpond unto them, ſtill retaining the Two Rules before mention'd, in dealing tenderly with Conſciences, and yet in diſcovering Faction from Conſcience. Farewel,

Your loving Friend

Francis Walſingham.

By the Account Walſingham gives of the ſeditious Pamphlets publiſh'd by the Puritans, their menacing the Government, and ſubſcribing the Diſcipline, 'tis plain this Letter, tho' without date, was written not long before his Death.

To proceed; Secretary Knolles was another great Favourer of the Diſſenters, as has been obſerv'd. This Gentleman was a much better Stateſman than Divine: As to Church Government, he was a down right Eraſtian: I ſhall tranſcribe his Letter to Sir Francis Walſingham upon this Subject. *

“ On the 4th of February the Parliament met at Weſtminſter. There was little done this Seſſions relating to the Church, excepting an Act for puniſhing thoſe who took Bribes for electing Fellows, Scholars, Officers, and other Perſons in Colleges, Collegiate and Cathedral Churches, Schools, Hoſpitals, Halls, &c. The Statute likewiſe provides againſt Simoniacal Preſentations: And here 'tis enacted, That the Patron who receives any Sum of Money for a Preſentation or Collation, ſhall forfeit his Turn, and the Benefice or Dignity ſhall Lapſe to the Crown. And that thoſe “ who either take or make, any ſuch Simoniacal Promiſe, Grant, Bond, Covenant, or other Aſſurance, ſhall forfeit the double Value of any ſuch Benefice, Dignity, &c. And the Perſons corruptly procuring, or accepting any ſuch Benefice, Dignity, &c. is for ever diſabled from enjoying it by any other Title. And if any Perſon ſhall receive any Sum of Money, or other Benefit for reſigning a Be-

“ And laſtly; Thoſe who receive Money or other valuable Conſideration, for ordaining Prieſts or Deacons, or for Licenſes to preach, forfeit Forty Pounds, and the Party ſo corruptly ordain'd, Ten Pounds: And whatever ſpiritual Preferment he happens to gain within Seven Years after ſuch Ordination, the Statute declares all ſuch Benefices or Promotions void, and that the reſpective Patrons may diſpoſe of them as if the Clerk had been naturally dead.

Dr. Bancroft's Sermon at St. Paul's Croſs againſt the Puritans.

That this Parliament might be farther inform'd of the weak Pretences, and foul Practice of the Puritans, Dr. Richard Bancroft preach'd a very learned and ſignificant Sermon upon this Subject at St. Paul's Croſs. This Bancroft was ſome few Years forward preferr'd to the See of London, and at laſt to that of Canterbury. His Text, for the Purpoſe above-mention'd, was 1 John 4. 1. Dearly beloved, believe not every Spirit, but try the Spirits whether they be of God: For many falſe Prophets are gone out into the World.

Covetouſneſs, one motive to falſe Doctrine.

In proſecuting this Text, he gave a ſtrong Image of the Puritans, and painted them in glowing Colours: He ſet forth their intemperate Language againſt Biſhops, deſcrib'd their Ambition, and ſuch other indirect Motives that puſh'd them to Mutiny, and publick Diſturbance. Amongſt other Things he charges the Party with Covetouſneſs: He laments, That filthy Lucre was frequently made the Pretence for Reformation: And that the Proſpect many People had of plundering Biſhopricks, ſeizing the Endowment of Cathedrals, and ſcrambling for the Remainder of the Church Revenues, was the principal Cauſe of Nonconformity and Schiſm in this Church. He adds, That had not clear Evidence drove him upon this Cenſure, he ſhould have forborn the Imputation. To explain himſelf farther upon this Head, he divides the Nonconformiſts into Clergy and Laity, and conſiders their Plea and Pretenſions apart. Their Clergy make a warm Demand of all the Livings ſettled on the eſtabliſh'd Church. Theſe Eſtates, they pretend, ought to be convey'd to their Presbyteries. And for Fear of being underfurniſh'd, they put up a Claim to the Abbey-Lands. To this Purpoſe, in a Petition to the Parliament exhibited in the Name of the Commonalty, they lay it down for a Maxim in Divinity, that Things once dedicated to religious Uſes, are unalienable from their original Intendment: When they are thus encloſ'd by Vows, and ſolemn Conveyance, they ought never to be thrown open to the World. (c)

(c) Bancroft's Sermon at Paul's Croſs, pag. 22.

The Lay Nonconformiſts were of a quite different Sentiment, and ran boldly to a ſcandalous Extream. For this he quotes a Pamphlet, call'd, An Admonition to the People of England. Our Preachers ſay, theſe Lay-Puritans ought to live by the Example of Chriſt and his Apoſtles. Now nothing was more unprovided with Conveniencies than their Maſter. He had no Place where to lay his Head. And as for the Apoſtles, their Predeceſſors, Silver and Gold they had none. Now why ſhould theſe Men that go leſs in Induſtry and Merit, be better accommodated? Why ſhould thoſe who are ſo much inferior to the Apoſtles in their Qualifications, exceed them in Figure and Preferment? There is no Coarſeneſs either in Eating or Habit, which Men of their Profeſſion ought to repine at: Alas! Their Dignities and Promotions do but hinder them in their Buſineſs, and diſſerve their Character.

Luke the 9th.

Acts the 3d.

The Lay Puritans Argument againſt the Clergy, turn'd upon them.

And to turn theſe Men's Artillery upon them, and ruin them by their own Reaſoning, he borrows ſome of the Principles of the German Anabaptiſts: And here he directs his Diſcourſe to the poorer Sort of the Audience in this Manner.

“ My Brethren, ſays he, theſe Gentlemen of the Laity uſe you extreamly Ill. The Children of God you know are Heirs of the World: The Earth is the Lord's, and the Saints are to inherit it. The Wicked therefore do but Uſurp the Bleſſings of Providence, and hold their Eſtates by a wrong Title. You have an equal Share with thoſe of the beſt Diſtinction in the Kingdom of Heaven: Why then will you ſuffer your ſelves to be thrown out of your Property upon Earth, and acquieſce under ſo unequal a Diſtribution? In the Apoſtles Times, the Faithful had all Things common: Then thoſe who had Eſtates ſold them, and laid the purchaſe Money at the Apoſtles Feet, and every one had his Share in Proportion to his Neceſſity: And ſince the Chriſtian Religion is ſtill the ſame, why is the Uſage ſo very different? But alas ſo it is: You are but little better than Beaſts of Burthen to the wealthier Sort. Your Landlords make no Scruple to rack your Rents, to grind your Faces, and exhauſt your Bodies. And to what End is all this Oppreſſion in Liberty and Livelihood? 'Tis to maintain an unneceſſary Equipage, to humour their Pride, and feed their Luxury: 'Tis to ſupply their Pockets for Gaming, and furniſh their Diverſions of Hawking and Hunting. And are theſe warrantable Motives to keep the greateſt Part of the World low and uneaſy? To make them wear out their Lives in Labour and Poverty? Why don't you puſh for Redreſs of theſe Grievances, and revive the Practice of the Apoſtles Times? To attempt ſomething of this Kind, would be Charity to your wealthy Neighbours, no leſs than your ſelves. For theſe bulky Eſtates of theirs do but Pamper their Pride, abate their Zeal, and check their Progreſs in Virtue. Indeed, unleſs you make them primitive Chriſtians in their Fortunes, they'l ne'er be ſo in their Lives: Unleſs you reduce them to Evangelical Poverty, and reſcue them from their Riches, they muſt be undone. (d)

(d) Bancroft's Sermon.

Dr. Bancroft puts the Queſtion to the wealthier Part of the Audience, how they like this Doctrine? And if they are unwilling to have it practis'd upon themſelves, they ſhould take Care not to urge it againſt the Clergy.

Thus much for Covetouſneſs: To make the Text bear upon the Diſſenters in other Reſpects, he ſhews on what a weak Foundation they erected their Diſcipline: That there was no Traces of this Scheme from the Apoſtles Time down to Calvin: That the Parity theſe Men are ſo earneſt to bring into the Church, was made a Mark of Infamy in the Aerian Hereticks. Farther, he repreſented the great Danger which muſt inevitably follow, if private Men ſhould Conteſt the Conſtitutions of the Church, and preſume to over-rule that which had been ſettled by ſo conſiderable an Authority. And as to their Complaint of the Rigour of Forcing them upon Subſcription of Articles, he endeavours to juſtify this Impoſition by the Precedent of Geneva, and ſome other reform'd Churches in Germany. (e) The Doctor proceeds to inſiſt upon the Excellency and Unexceptionableneſs of the Common-Prayer-Book: Shews what Commendation had been given it by foreign Divines: How 'twas approved by Bucer, Aleſius and Fox: By the Parliaments and Convocations of this Realm: How Archbiſhop Cranmer had defended it againſt the Papiſts, and Biſhop Ridley againſt Knox and others. And here he argues from the Abſurdity in Extemporary-Prayers. And how often ſuch unpremeditated Devotions ſlide into Indecency and Irreverence. At his next Advance he maintains the Superiority of Biſhops over Presbyters, argues for the Civil Supremacy, and alarms the Audience with the Danger they had Reaſon to apprehend from the Practice and Principles of the Diſciplinarians. This Sermon was manag'd with great Learning and Strength of Argument, and in all likelihood made an Impreſſion. And of this the Act of Grace at the Breaking up of the Parliament, ſeems ſomething of a Proof: For thoſe who did not come to Church, hear Divine Service, and conform themſelves to the Eccleſiaſtical Eſtabliſhment, were excepted from the Benefit of this Statute. (f)

(f) 31 Eliz. cap. 16.

But before I part with the Doctor's Sermon, I muſt obſerve he charges the Diſſenters with denying the Regale, and transferring the Pope's Supremacy upon their Presbyteries and Eccleſiaſtical Senates. (g) This Opinion he makes Part of their Heterodoxies in his dangerous Poſitions, &c. And in his Survey of the pretended Holy Diſcipline. To mention the Articles upon which they are impeach'd. "In their whole Book of Diſ- "cipline there's no mention of any Authority or "Office In or Over the Church, belonging to "the Civil Magiſtrate. He has no Vote or "Place in any of their Synods, except he is "choſen an Elder: He has no Power aſſign'd "him to convene a Synod, neither is his Aſſent "requir'd to any of the Canons. (h) And in his Survey he lays down more of their Principles from Cartwright's Tracts, and other Writings of unqueſtionable Authority. The Propoſitions extracted are in theſe Words.

The Diſſenters Principles with Reſpect to the Civil Supremacy.

The Chriſtian Sovereign ought not to be called the Head under Chriſt, of the particular and viſible Churches within his Dominions. (i) No Civil Magiſtrate hath Præ-eminence (by ordinary Authority) to determine of Church Cauſes. No Civil Magiſtrate in Councils or Aſſemblies for Church Matters, can either be chief Moderator, Over-ruler, Judge, or Determiner. No Civil Magiſtrate hath ſuch Authority, as that without his Conſent, it ſhould not be lawful for Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, to make any Church Order or Ceremony. No Civil Magiſtrate ought to receive either Tenths or firſt Fruits of any Eccleſiaſtical Perſons. The Judgment of Church Matters pertaineth to God: They ought ordinarily to be handled by the Church Officers: The Principality or Direction of the Judgment of them, is by God's Ordinance pertaining to the Miniſtry of the Church. As for the making of Orders and Ceremonies in the Church, they do (when there is a conſtituted and order'd Church) pertain unto the Miniſters of the Church, and to the Eccleſiaſtical Governors: And that as they meddle not with the making of Civil Laws, and Laws for the Commonwealth, ſo the Civil Magiſtrate hath not Power to ordain Ceremonies pertaining to the Church. The Miniſters are to determine of Controverſies as they ariſe, and to make or aboliſh needful or hurtful Ceremonies. And farther, 'tis Cartwright's Aſſertion, That in Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes, an Infidel or profane Magiſtrate has the ſame Right with Chriſtian Princes. (k)

Elizabeth Q.

The Senſe of the Ancients upon this Queſtion.

Now it may not be improper to enquire into the Senſe of Antiquity upon this Queſtion: That is, whether the Fathers ſtand on Bancroft's, or the Puritans Side. And here it can't be denied, the Authority of the Ancients muſt have a great Weight in pronouncing upon the Controverſy. Their living ſo much nearer the Apoſtolical Times, muſt give them a Preference to the Moderns: And make them better Judges of the Privileges and Practice of the Church.

That this Spiritual Society was govern'd by Officers of her Own for the Three Firſt Centuries, is beyond all Queſtion. (l) Now whether the Fathers believ'd the Civil Magiſtrate's turning Chriſtian remov'd the Seat of Eccleſiaſtical Authority, and convey'd this Spiritual Government to the State: Whether, I ſay, the Converſion of Princes inferr'd ſo great a Change as this, in the Opinion of the Fathers, is what I ſhall briefly examine. This Queſtion may be divided into Two Branches, that is, with Reſpect to Matters of Faith and Matters of Diſcipline. That Princes were not to ſettle Controverſies of Faith, and Over-rule the Deciſions of the Hierarchy in Diſputes of this Nature, is ſuppos'd evident from the firſt Four general Councils. Thus the Arian Controverſy was examin'd and determin'd by the Council of Nice, and not by Conſtantine the Great. Macedonius was declar'd a Heretick by the Council of Conſtantinople, and not by the Emperor Theodoſius: The Heterodoxies of Neſtorius and Eutyches were anathematiz'd by the Councils of Epheſus and Chalcedon: Neither did the Emperors Theodoſius the Younger, or Marcian offer to diſcuſs the Doctrine, or interpoſe in the Cenſure. This is frankly own'd by the Princes themſelves: For inſtance, Theodoſius the Younger, in his Letter to the Council of Epheſus, makes no ſcruple to declare, "That 'tis utterly unlawful for a "Perſon not of the Epiſcopal Order, to con- "cern himſelf in Eccleſiaſtical Debates:" But that this Declaration is ſpoken only with Reference to Matters of Faith, appears by what goes before; "I have ſent, ſays the Emperor, Count "Candidian to the Synod, but with theſe In- "ſtructions, that he is not to intermeddle in "Queſtions of Belief, for that would be a very "ill unjuſtifiable Thing. *

(l) See 1ſt Vol. of this Church Hiſtory.

* 'Ἀθέμιτον γάρ. Epiſt. Theod. Synod Epheſ. Part 1. cap. 35.

When Valentinian the Emperor was importun'd by the Eaſtern Biſhops to call a Council for recovering the Conſubſtantial Creed which had ſuffer'd under Conſtantius, He return'd them this Anſwer, "That himſelf being a Lay-man, 'twas "not lawful for him to interpoſe in Affairs of "this Nature. You therefore, ſays he, that "are Biſhops, whoſe Buſineſs it is, to ma- "nage Things of this Kind, meet where you "pleaſe." (m) Upon this Anſwer, the Biſhops held a Synod at Lampſacum: But all that can be inferr'd from this Teſtimony is, that the Emperor believ'd Points of Faith foreign to his Cognizance, not that he thought it beyond his Prerogative to call a Council: For 'tis plain he gives the Biſhops leave to meet. This Return which Valentinian made to the Biſhops Requeſt, he afterwards put in his Reſcript, that is, That Debates concerning Belief, were to be decided by the Clergy. St. Ambroſe alledg'd this Law when Valentinian the Younger requir'd him to diſpute in the Palace with the Arian Biſhop Auxentius; St. Ambroſe pleaded this Law in Excuſe of his Refuſal, "Let no Body, ſays he, interpret this to Obſtinacy, ſince I only take the Benefit of the Law made by your Majeſty's Father of Au-

(m) Sozom. Lib. 6. cap. 7.

guſt Memory. And then he cites the Words of the Reſcript. * For Princes to define and govern in theſe Matters, was a Thing altogether without Precedent in St. Ambroſe's Opinion: He expoſtulates ſomewhat warmly with the Emperor upon this Occaſion. “When did your Majeſty “hear that Lay-men ever tried Biſhops upon “Articles of Belief? Can we practice Flattery “to that Degree of Abjection as to throw up “the Privilege of our Character, and own “that Authority which God has given us, is “transferr'd upon others? The reſt of this Teſtimony has been already mention'd in Grindal's Letter to the Queen.

To give another Inſtance for this Point: The Emperor Marcian declar'd in the Council of Chalcedon, “That his coming thither was not “to exerciſe any Power in determining the “Controverſy about Eutyches, but only to enforce the Decrees of the Fathers with the “Civil Sanction. (n)

And to conclude this Head, St. Ambroſe, at the Council of Aquileia, reproaches Palladius an Arian Biſhop, for betraying his Character, and appealing to a Temporal Court to purge himſelf from Heterodoxy. St. Ambroſe profeſſes he is perfectly aſham'd of him, and pronounces him unworthy of his Function. *

Secondly, To examine the Caſe of Diſcipline: That is, whether the Clergy are to anſwer for any Miſbehaviour in their Office before the Civil Magiſtrate. This is a nice Queſtion, and I deſire the Reader would take me for a Reporter.

Now the Clergy may be conſider'd, either as they are Members in the State, or Officers in the Church: Under the Firſt Denomination they are undoubtedly Subject to the Laws and Juriſdiction of the Prince. The Queſtion is concerning their ſacerdotal Capacity: That is, when any Queſtion ariſes touching any Defect in Ordination, or Breach of Canons: In ſhort, touching any Thing which relates purely to their Office, and lies within the Compaſs of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline: The Queſtion is, I ſay, whether theſe are not privileg'd Caſes, and proper to the Cognizance of the Hierarchy: And whether the making Conſtitutions for regulating this Matter, is not a Branch of that Authority which our Saviour has lodg'd in his Church.

To cite ſome Authorities of the Ancients upon this Queſtion: When the Biſhops in the Council of Nice happen'd to claſh, and carried their Grievances to Conſtantine the Great, the Emperor refus'd to arbitrate the Difference: His Reaſon is very remarkable. “God, ſays he, has made “you Biſhops, and given you a Commiſſion to “be our Judges, and 'tis by no Means convenient, that a Man ſhould judge thoſe who are “call'd Gods. (o)

The Emperor Conſtantine's Opinion in the Conteſt with the Donatiſts.

To proceed; The Conteſt with the Donatiſts was a Debate of this Nature. The Donatiſts pretended the Ordination of Cecilian, Biſhop of Carthage, was null: Their Exception was, That thoſe who ordain'd him were Traditors: That is, they had deliver'd up their Bibles to the Heathens in the Dioclesian Perſecution: That this Crime diſabled their Character, and brought Cecilian within the Contagion. This was purely a Crime within the Function of an Eccleſiaſtick: And here the Queſtion was, whether Cecilian was to be excommunicated; whether his Ordainers were Traditors; and whether a Crime of that Nature made them incapable of conveying a ſacerdotal Character: The Donatiſts diſtruſting their Cauſe, applied to Conſtantine the Great, the Emperor wrote to Melchiades, Biſhop of Rome, and ſome other Biſhops of Italy and Gaul, to try the Cauſe: Theſe Prelates gave Judgment for Cecilian. Upon this, the Donatiſts appeal'd to the Emperor, which he took very ill, and expoſtulates ſharply with them for their Perverſeneſs. Amongſt other Things, “He “tells them they ought to receive the Sentence “of the Biſhops with the ſame Regard as if our Saviour had ſate upon the Bench.” (p) And a little after the Emperor calls the Donatiſts a Company of Madmen: And that by making ſo unaccountable an Appeal, they manag'd like the Devil's Retinue. Officia Diaboli, perquirunt ſæcularia, relinquentes Cæleſtia. O rabida Furoris Audacia! Thus the Emperor declin'd receiving the Appeal, and order'd a Council at Arles to decide the Diſpute. For as St. Auſtin relates, neq; enim auſus eſt Chriſtianus Imperator ſic eorum tumultuoſas & fallaces querelas ſuſcipere, ut de judicio Epiſcoporum qui Romæ ſederant, ipſe judicaret: Sed alios Epiſcopos dedit: That is, to tranſlate the Paſſage ſoftly, the Emperor thought it an overhardy Undertaking, to bring the Cauſe to a Rehearing before himſelf: At laſt, being fatigued with the Importunity of the Donatiſts, he gave Way to their Application on Purpoſe to ſtop their Clamour: But then he deſign'd to beg the Biſhop's Pardon for bringing their Deciſion to a Review, and trying the Cauſe after them. (q)

Farther; When St. Athanaſius was charg'd at the Council of Tyre, with breaking the Communion Cup, and throwing down the Altar, Count Dionyſius came into the Synod with a Guard to keep good Order. This military Appearance look'd like menacing the Council, and over-awing the Biſhops. Upon this ſcore St. Athanaſius complains of the Figure and Proceedings of this Council. “If the Biſhops, ſays he, are to be “Judges, and pronounce upon the Cauſe, “which Way can the Emperor be concern'd in “the Aſſembly? (r)

The Diſcourſe between Conſtantius and Liberius.

In the next Reign, when Conſtantius had conven'd ſome of the weſtern Biſhops at Milan, to confirm the Council of Tyre's Sentence againſt St. Athanaſius, Liberius Biſhop of Rome, Paulinus of Triers, Dionyſius of Milan, Lucifer of Sardinia, and Euſebius of Vercelles, choſe rather to be baniſh'd than Comply. Now by the Emperor's Convening theſe Biſhops for this Purpoſe, and the Anſwers they gave for their Refuſal, it ſeems pretty plain, both Sides were agreed, the Depoſing a Biſhop belong'd to the Juriſdiction of thoſe of his own Order. To give the Reader a little of the Diſcourſe between Conſtantius and Liberius upon this Occaſion. Conſtantius begins “with very hard Words againſt Athanaſius, ſolicits Liberius to conform to the Synod of Tyre, “and hold no Communion with him. Liberius “replies, That the Proceſs in Eccleſiaſtical “Courts ought to be manag'd with great Equity: And therefore deſires his Majeſty to convene a Synod. That then, upon hearing the “Evidence on both Sides, if it appear'd Athanaſius deſerv'd a Cenſure, it ſhould paſs upon him. “But, ſays he, we can't condemn a Man without allowing him his Defence, and going “thro' the cuſtomary Forms of the Church. (s)

The Emperor who was violently prepoſſeſs'd againſt Athanaſius, lets Liberius know, that the Throwing this wicked Man, as he calls Athanaſius, out of his Function, would be a greater Satisfaction to him, than all the Victories he had gain'd in the Field. Sir, replies Liberius, “don't make the Biſhops Inſtrumental in Revenging your private Quarrels. The Hands of “Eccleſiaſticks ought to be employ'd in Bleſſing,

The Emperor requires him to ſubſcribe Athanaſius's Condemnation, and he ſhould have Leave to go to his See at Rome, otherwiſe nothing but Puniſhment was to be expected. Ibidem.

In this Diſcourſe between Conſtantius and Liberius, there is ſomething very remarkable of another kind. The Emperor begins with him thus; "Since you are a Chriſtian and a Biſhop "of our Capital, we thought fit to ſend for "you, and require you to break off all Religious Correſpondence with that Wretch Athanaſius. When Liberius refuſ'd to reſign himſelf to Conſtantius's Pleaſure, Epictetus a Court-Biſhop interpoſ'd: Sir, ſays he, to Conſtantius, Liberius's Incompliance does not proceed ſo much from a Regard for the Nicene Faith, or the Authority of the Church, but becauſe he has a Mind to brag to the Roman Senate, that he has foil'd the Emperor. Upon this the Emperor falls hard upon Liberius: What a ſmall Part of Chriſtendom, ſays he, do you make, that you ſhould ſtand ſingle in Defence of an ill Man, and diſturb the Peace of the Roman Empire, and indeed of all the World beſide? To this Liberius replies, Suppoſing I ſtand by my ſelf in this Matter, the Cauſe is ne'er the worſe for want of Company. For formerly there were only Three that denied Obedience to the King's Command. Now if the Modern Doctrine of the Papal Supremacy had been receiv'd in this Age, there's Reaſon to believe that ſuch leſſening Queſtions would not have been put by the Emperor, neither would Liberius have anſwer'd in ſo paſſive unpretending a Manner. For had the Court of Rome's Claim for Univerſal Paſtorſhip been then acknowledg'd; had the Biſhop of Rome been look'd on as Chriſt's Vicar; had his Power been reckon'd Paramount to all the Biſhops of Chriſtendom, Conſtantius would have ſaluted him in Terms of greater Regard, not ſunk him to a common Biſhop; nor told him how ſlender a Part he made with Reſpect to the reſt of his Order. And if the Emperor ſhould have thus far forgotten the Preeminence of the Biſhop of Rome, it may fairly be ſuppoſ'd Liberius would have put him in Mind of it. Liberius was a plain Dealer, and a Man of Reſolution, as appears by his Manner before the Emperour: 'Tis very unlikely therefore he would be ſilent, when his Privileges were thus overlook'd, and the Honour of his See thus plainly attack'd. And on the other ſide, it ſeems no leſs evident, that could Conſtantius have depoſ'd Athanaſius by his Imperial Authority, he never would have ſolicited the Catholick Biſhops with ſo much Earneſtneſs.

The Emperor however, it may be, thinking himſelf concern'd in Honour not to yield, ſent for the Five Famous Biſhops abovemention'd, and commanded them to ſign the Sentence at Tyre againſt Athanaſius, and communicate with the Arians. The Biſhops ſtrangely ſurpriz'd at this Order, told his Majeſty, this was not agreeable to the Proceedings of the Church. To this the Emperor return'd, his Pleaſure was Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitution; that the Biſhops of Syria paid this Deference to his Commands, and therefore, ſays he, either ſubmit or be baniſh'd. This arbitrary Manner was extremely new to the Biſhops: However, they were not at all overſet with the Emperor's Purple, but deliver'd themſelves with a decent Freedom. They put him in Mind of the Day of Judgment, deſir'd him not to maim the Eccleſiaſtical Authority, nor drive the Regale too far into the Church. (t) The Emperor being provok'd with this Remonſtrance, would not ſuffer them to go on. In ſhort, his Paſſion was ſo far rais'd, that he drew his Sword, and order'd them to be ſent off. But afterwards, recollecting himſelf, he remanded ſome of them back, in hopes of ſhaking their Conſtancy; but the Event did not anſwer: For the holy Biſhops, as Athanaſius expreſſes it, ſhook off the Duſt of their Feet, diſregarded the Emperor's Threatning, and went chearfully into Baniſhment. (u)

Paulinus Dionyſius's, &c. Anſwer to the Emperor Conſtantius.

The famous Hoſius Biſhop of Corduba, who preſided at the Council of Nice, adher'd to Athanaſius, and lay croſs to the Arians Deſigns. This Biſhop had ſo great a Reputation, that unleſs they could bring him over, they deſpair'd of carrying their Point. The Emperor therefore ſent for him, and tried him every Way, but to no Purpoſe: At laſt he was treated very ruggedly, and before this the Emperor imagining ſuch Uſage might make him relent, preſs'd him to comply in a Letter. Hoſius continued firm, and return'd the Emperor an extraordinary Anſwer.

Part of Hoſius's Letter to Conſtantius.

"He complains ſecular Perſons engag'd too far "in managing the Impeachment againſt Athanaſius." To ſpeak in his own Perſon, I entreat "your Majeſty that you would forbear your "Methods of Violence, and neither write Letters, nor ſend your ſecular Judges to take Cognizance of theſe Matters. When was ever "any Thing of this Kind done by your Brother Emperor Conſtans? When was any Biſhop "baniſh'd in his Reign? Or did he ever appear "upon the Bench to try Cauſes relating to the "Church and Clergy? Or did any of his Court-Officers ever menace People to ſign a Sentence "againſt any Churchman? I entreat your Majeſty would wave theſe Proceedings. Remember you're a mortal Man, ſtand in awe "of the laſt Judgment, and keep your ſelf unblemiſh'd againſt that Day: Don't interpoſe "in Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, nor lay your Commands upon us in Things of this Kind, but rather learn from us how theſe Things are to be "manag'd: God has entruſted you with the "Government of the Empire, and us Biſhops "with that of the Church. If any Perſon ſhould "ſeize your Adminiſtration, or ſurprize your "Prerogative, he would be guilty of breaking "the Divine Ordinance; ſo be pleaſed to conſider, the Biſhops have their proper Juriſdiction; "have a Care therefore, your drawing the Buſineſs to your own Cognizance, which belongs to Eccleſiaſticks, does not make you "deeply anſwerable. 'Tis written, Render unto "Cæſar the Things which are Cæſars, and unto "God the Things which are Gods. As Civil Government is no Part of our Claim, ſo neither "does burning Incence belong to your Majeſty. "My Regard for your Salvation makes me "write to you in this Manner.

This Teſtimony of Hoſius is very remarkable; and that the Reader may ſee his Senſe is fairly tranſlated, I ſhall tranſcribe the Original into the Records. (w) This Teſtimony conſidering the Perſon is of no ſmall Weight; now what Character Hoſius had in the Church of that Age, may be collected from the Report of the Arian Biſhops his Enemies, who we may imagine would not exceed Truth in his Commendation. Theſe Men, in their Addreſs to Conſtantius, acquaint him, That unleſs Hoſius was brought into their Intereſt, all that either themſelves ſelves, or his Majeſty had done already, would ſignifie nothing. 'Tis true, ſay they, the Biſhop of Rome, and ſeveral other Biſhops are baniſh'd; we have carried Terror and Severity through a great Part of Chriſtendom; but all your Majeſty has done for the Cauſe will turn to no Account, ſo long as Hoſius remains upon his See; while this Biſhop continues poſſeſs'd, all the reſt of his exil'd Order are in Effect at Home, and unreduc'd: For his Perſuaſiveneſs, and the Strength of his Character, is ſufficient to draw all the Party down upon us. This Man governs Synods, and whatever he writes is every where heard and regarded. He drew the Nicene Creed, and proclaim'd the Arians Hereticks all the World over. If this Biſhop therefore is ſuffer'd to live in his Dioceſe, the baniſhing the others is wholly inſignificant. Your Way therefore, Sir, is to direct your Proſecution principally againſt him, and don't let any Regards of his Age give check to your Juſtice. (x)

By this Addreſs of the Arians, 'tis plain they reckon'd Hoſius a Biſhop of a greater Figure, and one that ſway'd the Intereſt of the Church more than Liberius himſelf. But if the Pope had been look'd on as the Sovereign Paſtor, he would not only have been an Over-balance to Hoſius, but have out-weigh'd the whole Epiſcopal College. And if this had been the Doctrine of thoſe Times, the Arians in all likelihood would never have ſolicited the Emperor in this Manner, nor laid the Streſs of the Cauſe, as it were, upon Hoſius's Authority.

Athanaſius's Remonſtrance againſt the Proceedings of Conſtantius.

To return: The celebrated Athanaſius himſelf remonſtrates ſtrongly againſt Conſtantius's Proceedings, with reſpect to himſelf: He complains the Emperor made uſe of one Epictetus, and three other unworthy Court-Biſhops, to ſet up Felix againſt Liberius; and that they conſecrated this Intruder in the Palace, but that the People ſtood off from them, and refus'd to own their Communion. And now, ſpeaking of the Emperor Conſtantius, he delivers himſelf in this manner. "In what, ſays he, has this Prince come ſhort of Antichriſt? Or which Way can Antichriſt go farther at his Appearing? Will he not find Preſidents from this Court to plain his Way, and carry on his Impoſture? For this Prince invades the Right of the Conſiſtory, makes his Palace the Court for Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes, and is both Proſecutor and Judge himſelf; and when he finds the Indictment flag, and the Evidence at a Stand, his Majeſty ſets forth the Charge, and turns Manager. And thus thoſe who are unjuſtly delated, are over-born by Force. He was plainly thus byaſs'd with Paſſion in Athanaſius's Cauſe; for when the Biſhops, Paulinus, Lucifer, Dionyſius and Euſebius took the Freedom to produce the Retractation of Urſacius and Valens's Teſtimony againſt Athanaſius, the Emperor refus'd to give any Credit to the Record of their Confeſſion; but riſing up in Court, declar'd himſelf an Evidence againſt Athanaſius. Upon this the Biſhops told him, His Majeſty could not be a legal Evidence, unleſs the Perſon impeach'd was brought into Court, and allow'd to make his Defence; That ſince it was not a Matter of Property, or Civil Juſtice, the Emperor's Teſtimony could not be taken upon Content; that ſince a Biſhop was to be tried, Conſtantius would be oblig'd to wave his Imperial Character, to ſubmit to the cuſtomary Forms, and manage upon a Level with the Criminal. The Emperor, as Athanaſius goes on, taking this Diſcourſe for an Exceſs of Liberty, baniſh'd the four Biſhops; and now being more incens'd againſt Athanaſius, he publiſh'd a ſevere Proclamation, order'd the Arians his Dioceſe, and gave them leave to manage at Diſcretion. "Theſe Proceedings, ſaith Athanaſius, are frightful Exceſſes, and lively Repreſentations of Antichriſt. For who can ſee the Emperor leading the pretended Biſhops, and preſiding upon the Eccleſiaſtical Bench, without ſaying, the Abomination of Deſolation ſpoken of by Daniel the Prophet, has receiv'd its Accompliſhment? For ſince this Prince, who wears the Character of a Chriſtian, preſſes into the Holy Place, and ſtanding there, haraſſes the Churches, overbears the Canons, and makes them give Way to his ſecular Authority? Since Things are thus manag'd who can ſay the Chriſtians enjoy any Peace under this Reign? Who can deny but that they are rather in a State of Perſecution, and ſuch a Perſecution as never was heard of, nor it may be never will be, till 'tis rais'd by that Son of Perdition. (y)

Notwithſtanding the great Plainneſs of this Remonſtrance, we don't find Athanaſius cenſur'd by any of the Ancients upon this Score. S. Baſil, St. Gregory Nazianzen, and many others of the Fathers give him an extraordinary Character. And which is ſomewhat more remarkable, Conſtantine Junior, Conſtantine the Great his Son, Jovian, Marcian and Juſtinian, mention him with great Regard, and without the leaſt Abatement. Now this would ſcarcely have been done, had he abetted any Eccleſiaſtick Encroachment upon the Crown. (z) But to argue in Defence of the Learned Biſhop, and Famous Confeſſor Athanaſius, would be an Injury to his Memory, and a very unneceſſary Undertaking. St. Hilary an eminent Prelate and Confeſſor, in his Addreſs to the Emperor Conſtantius, ſpeaks to the ſame Meaning and Plainneſs with St. Athanaſius. *

Several Emperors Declarations againſt interpoſing in the Diſcipline of the Church.

To proceed: The Emperor Marcian deliver'd in three Articles to the General Council of Chalcedon, to be paſs'd into Canons. He declares he reſerv'd theſe Points to be ſettled by them, thinking it much more proper they ſhould be decreed by the Council, than eſtabliſh'd by a Civil Sanction. (a) This Draught was paſs'd into Canons, but not in the ſame Form drawn up by his Majeſty. Thus, tho' the Emperor obſerv'd ſome Inſtances of Miſbehaviour in the Monks and Clergy, which requir'd Diſcipline, yet he thought it too much to make a Proviſion himſelf, but left the Correction to the Synod, as being the proper Seat of Authority for theſe Matters.

This Council affords another remarkable Inſtance: For here in the Caſe of Photius, Metropolitan of Tyre, 'tis determin'd by the Synod, That the Imperial Reſcript is of no Force againſt the Canons: And yet this Caſe related only to a Conteſt of Juriſdiction between a Metropolitan and one of his Provincial Biſhops. And which is farther obſervable, the Emperor's Reſcript carried the whole Authority of the Civil Legiſlature; for neither the Nobility, nor the Commons had any Share in making Laws: This Privilege was reſign'd long agon in the Lex Regia, which enacts the Princes Pleaſure a Law; the Words are, Quicquid Principi placuit, Legis vigorem habeat.

Farther, The Weſtern Emperor Honorius was of the ſame Opinion with Marcian, and ſpeaks ſomewhat fuller to the Point. The Paſſage in his Letter to his Brother Arcadius, who reign'd in the Eaſt, ſtands thus. "If any Religious Controverſie happens among the Governours, of the Church, the Matter ought to be tried by the Biſhops; 'tis their Buſineſs to in-

Or "which Way can Antichriſt go farther at his "Appearing? Will he not find Preſidents from "this Court to plain his Way, and carry on "his Impoſture? For this Prince invades the "Right of the Conſiſtory, makes his Palace the "Court for Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes, and is both "Proſecutor and Judge himſelf; and when he "finds the Indictment flag, and the Evidence at "a Stand, his Majeſty ſets forth the Charge, "and turns Manager. And thus thoſe who are "unjuſtly delated, are over-born by Force. He was plainly thus byaſs'd with Paſſion in Athanaſius's Cauſe; for when the Biſhops, Paulinus, Lucifer, Dionyſius and Euſebius took the Freedom to produce the Retractation of Urſacius and Valens's Teſtimony againſt Athanaſius, the Emperor refus'd to give any Credit to the Record of their Confeſſion; but riſing up in Court, declar'd himſelf an Evidence againſt Athanaſius. Upon this the Biſhops told him, His Majeſty could not be a legal Evidence, unleſs the Perſon impeach'd was brought into Court, and allow'd to make his Defence; That ſince it was not a Matter of Property, or Civil Juſtice, the Emperor's Teſtimony could not be taken upon Content; that ſince a Biſhop was to be tried, Conſtantius would be oblig'd to wave his Imperial Character, to ſubmit to the cuſtomary Forms, and manage upon a Level with the Criminal. The Emperor, as Athanaſius goes on, taking this Diſcourſe for an Exceſs of Liberty, baniſh'd the four Biſhops; and now being more incens'd againſt Athanaſius, he publiſh'd a ſevere Proclamation, order'd the Arians his Dioceſe, and gave them leave to manage at Diſcretion. "Theſe Proceedings, ſaith "Athanaſius, are frightful Exceſſes, and lively "Repreſentations of Antichriſt. For who can "ſee the Emperor leading the pretended Biſhops, and preſiding upon the Eccleſiaſtical "Bench, without ſaying, the Abomination of Deſolation ſpoken of by Daniel the Prophet, has receiv'd its Accompliſhment? For ſince this "Prince, who wears the Character of a Chriſtian, preſſes into the Holy Place, and ſtanding "there, haraſſes the Churches, overbears the "Canons, and makes them give Way to his ſecular Authority? Since Things are thus manag'd who can ſay the Chriſtians enjoy any "Peace under this Reign? Who can deny but "that they are rather in a State of Perſecution, "and ſuch a Perſecution as never was heard of, "nor it may be never will be, till 'tis rais'd by "that Son of Perdition. (y)

(y) 2 Theſſ. 2. 3. See Records, Num. XCII.

Notwithſtanding the great Plainneſs of this Remonſtrance, we don't find Athanaſius cenſur'd by any of the Ancients upon this Score. S. Baſil, St. Gregory Nazianzen, and many others of the Fathers give him an extraordinary Character. And which is ſomewhat more remarkable, Conſtantine Junior, Conſtantine the Great his Son, Jovian, Marcian and Juſtinian, mention him with great Regard, and without the leaſt Abatement. Now this would ſcarcely have been done, had he abetted any Eccleſiaſtick Encroachment upon the Crown. (z) But to argue in Defence of the Learned Biſhop, and Famous Confeſſor Athanaſius, would be an Injury to his Memory, and a very unneceſſary Undertaking. St. Hilary an eminent Prelate and Confeſſor, in his Addreſs to the Emperor Conſtantius, ſpeaks to the ſame Meaning and Plainneſs with St. Athanaſius. *

Several Emperors Declarations againſt interpoſing in the Diſcipline of the Church.

To proceed: The Emperor Marcian deliver'd in three Articles to the General Council of Chalcedon, to be paſs'd into Canons. He declares he reſerv'd theſe Points to be ſettled by them, thinking it much more proper they ſhould be decreed by the Council, than eſtabliſh'd by a Civil Sanction. (a) This Draught was paſs'd into Canons, but not in the ſame Form drawn up by his Majeſty. Thus, tho' the Emperor obſerv'd ſome Inſtances of Miſbehaviour in the Monks and Clergy, which requir'd Diſcipline, yet he thought it too much to make a Proviſion himſelf, but left the Correction to the Synod, as being the proper Seat of Authority for theſe Matters.

(a) Concil. Chalced. Act. 6.

This Council affords another remarkable Inſtance: For here in the Caſe of Photius, Metropolitan of Tyre, 'tis determin'd by the Synod, That the Imperial Reſcript is of no Force againſt the Canons: And yet this Caſe related only to a Conteſt of Juriſdiction between a Metropolitan and one of his Provincial Biſhops. And which is farther obſervable, the Emperor's Reſcript carried the whole Authority of the Civil Legiſlature; for neither the Nobility, nor the Commons had any Share in making Laws: This Privilege was reſign'd long agon in the Lex Regia, which enacts the Princes Pleaſure a Law; the Words are, Quicquid Principi placuit, Legis vigorem habeat.

Farther, The Weſtern Emperor Honorius was of the ſame Opinion with Marcian, and ſpeaks ſomewhat fuller to the Point. The Paſſage in his Letter to his Brother Arcadius, who reign'd in the Eaſt, ſtands thus. "If any Religious "Controverſie happens among the Governours, "of the Church, the Matter ought to be tried "by the Biſhops; 'tis their Buſineſs to in-

"terpret the Divine Laws, and ours to practiſe "accordingly. (a)

The Emperor Juſtinian's Novels run much to the ſame Senſe: "If any Eccleſiaſticks Miſbe-"haviour calls for Correction, the Matter ſhall "be decided, and the Puniſhment appointed by "the Biſhops. Of theſe Things the Temporal "Judges ſhall take no Cognizance. For we "won't have Buſineſs of this Kind brought be-"fore them. Enquiries and Proſecutions of "this Nature ought to be made in Eccleſiaſtical "Courts, and corrected by the Cenſures of the "Church, purſuant to the Regulation of the "Canons, and the Tenor of our holy Religion. "Neither is the Management of Church Diſci-"pline in this Manner, any Ways derogatory to "the Laws of our Empire. (b)

To give another Inſtance, nothing can be more full than the Emperor Baſilius's Declaration at the Eighth general Council of Conſtantinople. "I pronounce it, ſays this Prince, utter-"ly unlawful for any Lay-Perſon whatever to "debate any Eccleſiaſtical Argument, or to "oppoſe the Univerſal Church, or any Oecu-"menical Synod: For the diſcuſſing Points of "Religion belongs to Patriarchs, Biſhops, and "Spiritual Guides, with whom God has en-"truſted the Power of Binding and Looſing: For "a Lay-Man, tho' never ſo well qualified in "Point of Virtue, Learning and Diſcretion, is "ſtill but a Lay-Man: He is a Sheep, and no "Shepherd. But on the other Side, a Biſhop, "tho' he fails remarkably in Regularity, is "notwithſtanding a Spiritual Paſtor, as long as "his Character continues upon him: And it "does by no Means become the Sheep, to riſe "upon the Shepherd. (c)

From hence 'tis evident the Emperor bars himſelf, no leſs than his Lay Subjects, from being Judges in Eccleſiaſtical Affairs. Upon the Whole, as the learned Beveridge obſerves, 'tis clear by this Teſtimony, and the others abovemention'd, that the Chriſtian Emperors left the Diſcipline of the Clergy, conſider'd as Clergy, and all Eccleſiaſtical Conteſts between thoſe of their own Order; and in ſhort, all Church Matters of what Kind ſoever, to Eccleſiaſtical Judges: That is, to the Biſhops who are commiſſionated by our Saviour for this Purpoſe. And for this Reaſon 'tis, that theſe Emperors never made any Laws for Eccleſiaſtical Regulations, either with Reſpect to Things or Perſons, till the Matter of theſe Civil Proviſions had been firſt decreed in ſome Epiſcopal Synod. (d)

The Decrees of the Council of Arles and Antioch to this Purpoſe.

Farther; In the firſt Council of Arles held in the Reign of Conſtantine the Great, 'tis decreed, That if any Magiſtrate who profeſs'd Chriſtianity, ſhould break in upon the Diſcipline of the Church, he was to be excommunicated. (e)

And even in the Reign of Conſtantius himſelf, who carried the Regale much higher than any Prince of thoſe Times, 'tis ordain'd at the Council of Antioch, that if any Biſhop depos'd by a Synod, ſhould inſtead of appealing to a more numerous Council, apply to the Emperor for Redreſs, and refer the Cauſe to his Majeſty, if any Biſhop ſhou'd manage in this Manner, he was not ſo much as to be heard by the Epiſcopal College in his Defence, nor ever to expect the Recovery of his See. (f) St. Chryſoſtom loſt his Archbiſhoprick upon Pretence of this Canon. (g)

As to Matters of Diſcipline, which relate to Ceremonies, and regulating the Adminiſtration of Divine Service; theſe Things ſeem to lie within the Compaſs of the Regale, and belong to the Civil Legiſlature: For did not the Jewiſh Kings ſettle the Courſe of the Prieſts, and appoint the Levites their Function? But to this 'tis anſwer'd, There's no arguing from the Jewiſh, to the Chriſtian Conſtitution: For the Learned De Marca obſerves the Jewiſh Kings Regulations in Religious Affairs were not without the Conſent of the Sanhedrim; and for this he cites their Hiſtorian Joſephus. (h) Now this great Council conſiſted of a conſiderable Number of Prieſts and Levites, beſides Secular Perſons of Condition. (i) To this it may be added, that the High-Prieſt ordinarily preſided in the Sanhedrim. 'Tis replied farther, That David, Solomon, and Hezekiah, had Inſtructions from God Almighty to inſtitute the New Temple Service, and govern the Oeconomy in the Church. As for the two firſt, 'tis plain they were Prophets no leſs than Princes: They were guided by Inſpiration, and wrote Part of the Canon. And as to the Matter in Queſtion, the appointing the Furniture of the Temple, and ſettling the Miniſtration of the Prieſts and Levites, all this was done by particular Direction from Heaven. (k) Thus David declar'd, The Lord made me underſtand in Writing by his Hand upon me, even all the Works of this Pattern: Or as it ſtands in the Vulgar, All theſe Things came to me written with the Hand of the Lord, that I might underſtand all the Works of this Pattern. Thus David by the Inſtruction of the Holy Spirit gave Solomon a Model of the Temple, and preſcrib'd him the Method for regulating the Courſes of the Prieſts and Levites, and all the Service of the Houſe of the Lord. * But this is not all: This Train of Religious Ceremonies was likewiſe preſcribed by Gad and Nathan, which is ſuppos'd to anſwer the Inſtance from Hezekiah: For 'tis ſaid expreſly, That this Prince ſet the Levites in the Houſe of the Lord with Cymbals, with Pſaltries, and with Harps, according to the Commandment of David, and of Gad the King's Seer, and Nathan the Prophet: For ſo was the Commandment of the Lord by his Prophets. (l) From hence 'tis inferr'd, That Chriſtian Princes can draw no Precedents for the Regale from theſe Inſtances in the Old Teſtament: For the Jewiſh Kings govern'd in theſe Matters by Supernatual Impulſe, and Prophetick Direction: They did not act upon Civil Prerogative, upon any Power reſulting from the Royal Character: They declar'd plainly their Warrant came immediately from Above; and that they had Prophets ſent to them on Purpoſe to manage in this Manner.

The Jewiſh Kings acted by Divine Appointment in religious Affairs.

Thus far therefore the Puritans ſeem not ill fortified againſt Bancroft's Attack. However, the Doctor has not a few Engliſh Biſhops, and other eminent Divines of the Reformation, in his Sentiment. (m) The Doctor's Opinion, in his own Words, is briefly this, "That the King hath "Ordinary Authority in Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical: "That he is the Chiefeſt in the Deciſion and "Determination of the Church Cauſes: That "he hath Ordinary Authority for making all "Laws, Ceremonies, and Conſtitutions, of the "Church: That without his Authority no ſuch "Laws, Ceremonies, or Conſtitutions, are or "ought to be of Force. And laſtly, That all "Appellations, which before were made to "Rome, ſhould ever be made hereafter to his "Majeſty's Chancery to be ended and deter-"mined, as the Manner now is by Delegates. (n) Now the Queſtion will be, Whether theſe Engliſh Divines of the 16th and 17th Centuries, who fall in with Bancroft's Doctrine, are conſiſtent with the Fathers, or not? That is, Whether in their Diſcourſes upon this Subject, they don't either over-look ſome of the moſt conſiderable Teſtimonies of the Antients, or fail in their reconciling Anſwers, or advance Contradictory Aſſertions? If any Thing of this ſhould happen, the Cauſe would be ſomewhat perplex'd: For 'tis a common Saying, The Stream runs cleareſt near the Fountain-Head. The Primitive Doctors being but a few Removes from the Apoſtles, ſeem the beſt Judges of the Privileges and Practice of the Church. Theſe Fathers were ſome of them Confeſſors for the Fundamentals of Chriſtianity, Men of the braveſt Reſolution, and highly recommended both for Life and Learning. The Antients, may ſome People ſay, compar'd to the Moderns, are like Homer's Heroes; they are even Single, an Over-match for numerous Bodies, and able to drive whole Armies before them.

The Ancients ſuppos'd preferable to the Moderns.

Dr. Bancroft having cited the Fathers againſt Cartwright, and the reſt of the Diſciplinarians, makes the Compariſon in theſe Words, For Mr. Calvin and Mr. Beza I do think of them and their Writings as they deſerve: But I think better of the Ancient Fathers I muſt confeſs it. (n) Now how far Bancroft's Preference of the Fathers to Calvin and Beza will affect the Teſtimony of the Moderns, ſhall be left to the Reader's Conſideration.

An abſolute Submiſſion not due from the Church to the Regale.

That an abſolute Submiſſion in Eccleſiaſtical Matters is not due from the Church to the Crown; that Princes have not any Authority to diſſolve the Epiſcopal College, to ſtrike the Hierarchy dead, or arreſt their Functions at Pleaſure; that the Civil Sovereignty does not reach thus far, is granted by a late learned Advocate for the Regale. His Words are theſe: "Whenever the Civil Magiſtrate ſhall ſo far abuſe his Authority as to render it neceſſary for the Clergy, by ſome extraordinary Methods, to provide for the Church's Welfare, that Neceſſity will warrant their taking of them. (o) When the Danger is apparent, and the Neceſſities of the Church will not bear the farther Delaying of Synods, and the Prince does refuſe to let them meet, they muſt rather venture his Diſpleaſure, and do it of themſelves, than be wanting in ſuch Circumſtances to the Church's Safety and Preſervation. (p)

Theſe reaſonable Conceſſions put me in Mind of a Paſſage in Euſebius: This Hiſtorian reports that the Emperor Licinius forbad the Biſhops to meet in Synods: But this, ſays Euſebius, was an enſnaring impracticable Command: This Law could not be obey'd without ſubverting the Conſtitution of the Church. (q)

The Learned Gentleman above-mention'd, in his State of the Church, &c. repeats the Conceſſions in his two other Tracts more at large in theſe Words; "Should we be ever ſo unhappy under a Chriſtian Magiſtrate as to be denied all Liberty of theſe Aſſemblies, tho' the Governors and Fathers of the Church ſhould with all their Care and Intereſt endeavour to obtain it: Should he ſo far abuſe his Prerogative, as to turn it not only to the Detriment, but to the Ruin of all true Religion and Morality among us; and thereby make it abſolutely Neceſſary for ſomething extraordinary to be done to preſerve both: In ſuch a Caſe of Extremity, I have before ſaid, and I ſtill adhere to it; that the Biſhops and Paſtors of the Church muſt reſolve to hazard all in the Diſcharge of their Duty: They muſt Meet, Conſult, and Reſolve on ſuch Meaſures as by God's Aſſiſtance they ſhall think their Unhappy Circumſtances do require, and be content to ſuffer any Loſs, or to run any Danger for their ſo doing. For then the Prince would only have the Name of a Chriſtian, but would Act like an Infidel; and ſo having thrown off the Care and Protection of the Church, it would naturally return to the Biſhops and Paſtors, to whom Chriſt committed it, to take upon themſelves the Care and Protection of it. (r)

From hence it may be obſerv'd, firſt, That the Biſhops and Paſtors muſt be Judges of the Caſe when this Neceſſity comes up: Otherwiſe the Remedy is impracticable, and this expedient for preſerving the Church ſignifies nothing. For we may be aſſur'd a Prince, who acts like an Infidel, will never Confeſs his Rigour, publiſh his Mal-Adminiſtration, and tell the Biſhops when the calamitous Juncture happens, when 'tis neceſſary for them to re-aſſume their Authority, and act independently of the Regale. Now if the Biſhops are Judges of the Neceſſity, the Conſequence is, That 'twill be lawful for them to act upon their own Judgment, and exert their Character whenever they believe the Emergency calls for it. From whence 'twill follow, the People will be oblig'd to acquieſce in the Regulations of their Paſtors in Spiritual Matters, tho' contrary to the Pleaſure of the State. For if the Biſhops have a Right to govern, it muſt be the People's Duty to ſubmit to their Government.

I obſerve, Secondly, That this learned Author aſſerts, that Chriſt committed the Care and Protection of the Church, to the Biſhops and Paſtors. But he is not pleas'd to give any Evidence for the Revoking this Commiſſion: That the Paſtors ſhould be thus reduced only by Baptizing a Prince, and receiving him a Lay-Member into their Society, is none of the cleareſt Propoſitions. That the Church ſhould loſe her Authority by making a Prince a Member of Chriſt, a Child of God, and an Inheritor of the Kingdom of Heaven: That the Church by conveying ſo great a Benefit, and adminiſtring ſo glorious a Sacrament, ſhould loſe her Power, and forfeit her Charter for Government; that the Caſe ſtands thus, I ſay, will require more Proof than is obvious at firſt Sight, or commonly produc'd upon this Occaſion.

The Doctrine of ſome learned Papiſts touching the Regale.

To proceed; Bancroft in his Survey takes Notice, that both Puritans and Papiſts go ſome Lengths in their Submiſſion to the Regale. For the Papiſts he cites the Teſtimony of Harding, Fecknam, and Sanders. The Words are theſe, Good Kings may put Biſhops and Prieſts in Mind of their Duties, and bridle both their Riot and Arrogancy. The Prince, by the Word of God, may make Laws for the Obſervation of both Tables, and puniſh the Tranſgreſſors. I do here preſently offer my ſelf, to receive a corporal Oath upon the Evangeliſts, that I do utterly think, and am perſuaded in my Conſcience, that the Queen's Highneſs is the only ſupreme Governor of this Realm, and of all other her Highneſs's Dominions and Countries, &c. And further, I ſhall preſently ſwear, that her Highneſs hath under God, the Sovereignty and Rule over all Manner of Perſons, born within theſe her Highneſs's Realms, of what Eſtate Eccleſiaſtical or Temporal, ſoever they be. Fatemur, Perſonas Epiſcoporum qui in toto Orbe fuerunt, Romano Imperatori Subjectos fuiſſe: We Confeſs, That the Perſons of all the Biſhops in the World, were Subject to the Roman Emperor. Rex præeſt hominibus Chriſtianis, verum non quia ſunt Chriſtiani, ſed quia ſunt Homines, & quoniam ipſi Epiſcopi ſunt Homines, Epiſcopis etiam ea ex parte Rex præeſſet: The King ruleth Chriſtians, not as they are Chriſtians, but as they are Men, and becauſe Biſhops are Men, the King in that Reſpect, hath Authority over them.

Saunders de Viſib. Monarch. Lib. 2, cap. 3.

The Famous de Marca, Archbiſhop of Paris, diſcourſes at large upon this Subject. I ſhall give the Reader his Opinion in a few Words: He aſſerts that the calling Councils, and confirming their Decrees, is a Branch of the Regal Authority, and that the firſt general Councils were confirm'd by the Emperors. (s) And that theſe Princes were addreſs'd by the Biſhops to ratify their Synods. And here to prevent Miſconſtruction, he throws in an explanatory Sentence; that Deciſions of Faith, and Ceremonies relating to the Sacraments, bind the Conſcience without the Intervention of the Civil Magiſtrate. However, 'tis Part of the Prince's Office to maintain the Canons, and re-inforce the Cenſures of the Church with Penalties upon Property or Perſon. He grants that Princes have a Right to be preſent in Councils, either in Perſon, or by their Repreſentatives. That 'tis their Privilege to ſee that nothing is acted in theſe Aſſemblies to the Prejudice of the State. For this Reaſon, 'tis their Buſineſs to inſpect the Canons, and examine their Tendency, before they paſs them into Laws for the Subject.

(s) De Concor. ſacerd. & Imper. Lib. 6. cap. 17. & 22. Id. Lib. 2. cap. 10.

That Princes not only confirm'd the Councils in General, but ſometimes ſelected particular Canons for the Civil Sanction. And here Juſtinian has gone farther than all the Reſt of the Emperors: And yet de Marca is of Opinion he has not exceeded in the Exerciſe of the Regale. For, as the Biſhop continues, he has not made any Proviſions altogether New, in Matters purely Eccleſiaſtical: He has only taken ſome of the Old Canons into the Laws of the Empire, and enlarg'd ſome Branches of them: That this is no more than what belongs to a Chriſtian Prince: And that he is bound by his Religion to make Laws in Defence of Chriſtianity. (t)

Id. Lib. 2. cap. 11.

(t) Auguſt. contra Creſcon. Lib. 3. cap. 51. Id. Epiſt. 50. ad Bonifac.

That the Emperor Juſtinian manag'd with this Reſerve, appears by his Reſcript. It has always been our princely Care, ſays he, to preſerve ancient Cuſtom and Diſcipline, which we never ſet aſide unleſs by Way of farther Improvement: And that this has been more eſpecially our Maxim in Eccleſiaſtical Affairs. For theſe Things are the Regulations of the Fathers, or rather the Suggeſtion of the Holy Spirit. For whatever is decreed by Apoſtolical Authority, is certainly the Appointment of Heaven. And a little after, he adds, We look upon our ſelves as Guardians and Protectors of Antiquity. (u)

(u) Juſſio Juſtin. pro Privileg. Conc. Byzac.

Thus for Inſtance. This Emperor's Conſtitutions concerning the Offices, Behaviour, and Privileges of the Clergy, and Religious, are all drawn, either from the Old Canons, or cuſtomary Practice. Thus much is confeſs'd by Juſtinian himſelf: (w) That the Emperor's explaining himſelf to this inoffenſive Senſe, made his Novels receiv'd by the Eaſtern and Weſtern Church, without Remonſtrance or Oppoſition.

(w) Juſtin. Novel. 6. c. 1. Θεσπίζομεν τοίνυν τοῖς θείοις διὰ πάντων ἑπόμενοι κανόσιν. Nov. 123 c. 36. Κελεύομεν κατὰ τοὺς Μοναχικοὺς κανόνας; & paſſim ſimilia Verba occurrunt.

De Marca goes on in his Acknowledgment of the Regale: He maintains that Princes are ſo far Guardians of the Canons, that they may lawfully diſplace Biſhops uncanonically poſſeſs'd. (x) That in Virtue of their Chriſtianity, they are bound to promote the Intereſt of the Spiritual Society, of which they are Members: And therefore, that 'tis Part of their Office to prevent the Growth of Scandal in the Church, and give Check to Schiſm and Hereſies. Neither is this Aſſiſting the Church with the ſecular Authority, any Office miniſterial to the Hierarchy, any ſtooping to the Mitre, or Diſadvantage to the Royal Character. On the Contrary, 'tis an independent Branch of the Civil Sovereignty: 'Tis a Function reſulting from the Authority of a Chriſtian Prince: Of a Chriſtian Prince, to whoſe Government it belongs to promote the Service of God, the Honour of our Saviour's Kingdom, and the Intereſts of the other World. And laſtly, That De Marca mayn't ſeem to overſhoot in his Conceſſions, he reports a Paſſage, with Approbation, from Facundus Hermianenſis. This Author was an African Biſhop, and liv'd in the Reign of Juſtinian. Now this Emperor happen'd to interpoſe in the Controverſy of the Three Chapters. This, Facundus thought altogether foreign to the Cognizance of the Secular Magiſtrate. He endeavours therefore to perſuade Princes to draw in this Compaſs of the Regale, and manage by the Preſident of the Emperor Marcian: His Words are to this Senſe: "That reſerv'd Prince of famous Memory, was "very ſenſible, that King Uzziah's Attempt to "ſacrifice was not unpuniſh'd; and yet this "Miniſtration was lawful to every Prieſt, tho' "of the Second Order: By greater Force of "Conſequence this religious Emperor was convinc'd, that 'twas not within his Authority to "diſcuſs thoſe Articles of the Chriſtian Faith "which had been regularly ſettled: That an "Enquiry of this Kind, or the making new "Canons, belongs to none but to a Synod of "Biſhops. For this Reaſon he was contented "with the Civil Prerogative; he only fortified "the Church Conſtitutions with Penal Laws, "but declin'd advancing ſo far with the Regale, as to make any new Canons. (x) De Concord. ſacerd. & Imper. Lib IV cap 2. Ibid. pag. 233. Id. Lib. 2. cap. 10.

(y) Facund. Hermian. Lib XII. cap. 3.

And this may ſerve for a Taſte of the Opinions of ſome of the learned Papiſts, not wholly bigotted to the Court of Rome. To go on, and give the Reader an Account in a Word or Two, what the old Diſſenters deliver'd upon this Subject.

The Diſſenters Sentiments upon this Queſtion.

Our Meanings is not (ſaith Cartwright) utterly to ſeclude the Magiſtrate out of our Church-Meetings, for oftentime a ſimple Man, and (as the Proverb ſaith) the Gardiner hath ſpoken to good Purpoſe, &c. He may be Aſſiſtant, and have his Voice in ſuch Aſſemblies. The Prince (z) may call a Council of the Miniſtry, and (a) appoint both the Time and the Hours for the ſame. The (b) Civil Magiſtrate is not utterly to be excluded from ſuch Aſſemblies as do meet for the Deciding of Church Cauſes and Orders: He may be there Aſſiſtant and have his Voice, but he may not be either Moderator there, nor Determiner, nor Judge. (c) Neither may the Orders or Decrees there made, be ſaid to have been done by the Prince's Authority. And therefore in Times paſt, the Canons of Councels were not call'd the Emperors, but the Biſhops Decrees. (d) Princes may be Aſſiſtant in Councels, and ought to defend the ſame Aſſembled: If any behave themſelves there Tumultuouſly, or otherwiſe Diſorderly, the Prince may puniſh him. (e) The Prince ought to confirm the Decrees of ſuch Councels: To (f) ſee the Decrees executed, and to (g) puniſh the Contemners of them. (h)

(h) Bancroft's Survey, Chap. 23.

Here Bancroft obſerves, That the Doctrine of the Puritans is much the ſame with that of the Papiſts upon this Head: And this he urges as a Diſadvantage to their Cauſe. But with due Regard to his Memory, this Objection has little Weight: For the Agreement between the Papiſts and Puritans in any Point of Religion, does not prove the Thing either true or falſe. For neither of theſe Communions are always Right, or always Wrong. And this may ſerve for a ſhort View of the Argument touching the Regale. And here again I deſire the Reader to take me but as a Reporter of Part of the Controverſy: Not that I pretend to determine the Queſtion, or fix the Barriers betwixt the Church and State.

The Puritans Plea for Church Power inſufficient.

But then in the next Place, whatever independent Authority may belong to the Church, the Puritans can make out no Claim to this Privilege. The Diſſenters miſtake the Seat of Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, and lodge it in wrong Hands. Churches conſiſting of Presbyters without a Biſhop at the Head of them, is altogether unprecedented in the Primitive Times, and what the Ancients by no Means allow of. To make good this Aſſertion, I ſhall briefly prove theſe Two Things: Firſt, that the Order of Biſhops, from the Beginning of Chriſtianity, was diſtinct from that of Presbyters, and Superior to it. Secondly, That Orders conferr'd by Presbyters were reckn'd Null and Inſignificant by the ancient Church.

Three Orders with different Degrees of Power ſettled in the Church by our Saviour and his Apoſtles.

To prove the firſt Point, it may be obſerv'd, That our Saviour, who founded the Chriſtian Church, was the Firſt and ſole Biſhop, or chief Governor. For while our bleſſed Saviour continued upon Earth, the Apoſtles did not execute the Epiſcopal Function: They neither ordain'd, nor acted in the Exerciſe of Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction: They only baptiz'd and preach'd the Goſpel, which is the proper Buſineſs of Presbyters or Prieſts. But our Saviour, at his Aſcenſion, transferr'd his Power for governing the Church upon his Apoſtles, and veſted them with the Epiſcopal Authority. The Form of Conſecrating them to this Office, is ſet down in theſe Words. Peace be unto you: As my Father hath ſent me, ſo ſend I you: And having ſaid this, he breath'd upon them, and ſaid unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghoſt. 'Tis granted our Saviour had ordain'd his Apoſtles before this Time: But then 'twas only to preach the Goſpel, and work Miracles. † But 'twas not 'till after his Reſurrection, that he gave them their Commiſſion in theſe ſolemn Words: As my Father hath ſent me, ſo ſend I you: 'Twas now he convey'd a fuller Communication of the Divine Spirit, by the Circumſtance of Breathing upon them, and ſaying, Receive ye the Holy Ghoſt: From whence 'tis plain, that by this laſt and more ſolemn Ordination, the Apoſtles were rais'd to a greater Dignity, and had new Powers given them: That is, they had a Power to ordain others, and exerciſe Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline. By the Suggeſtion of the Holy Spirit, Three other Apoſtles were added to the Eleven, That is Matthias, Paul, and Barnabas. * Theſe Fourteen being cloath'd with a full Authority for Governing and perpetuating the Church, ordain'd Presbyters and Deacons to a Share in the Adminiſtration. † Now ſince thoſe who were commiſſionated to govern in Chief, and conſtitute theſe ſubordinate Officers, were afterwards call'd Biſhops; for this Reaſon the Apoſtles are likewiſe ſtiled Biſhops, by ſeveral of the Fathers. (i) And thus even the Apoſtolate is called 'Επισκοπὴ, or a Biſhoprick, as it is Tranſlated. * This Epiſcopal Authority was for ſome Time the Privilege of the Apoſtles, and manag'd only by them. But Chriſtianity ſpreading upon the Progreſs, and the Death of the Apoſtles beginning to draw near, they communicated their governing Character to others, and fix'd them in diſtinct Churches: And thus the firſt Powers were deriv'd from one Age to another, and this Spiritual Society made immortal. For Inſtance, Evodius was veſted with this Extent of Authority, and fix'd in the See of Antioch: Linus or Clemens were made Biſhops of Rome: And to mention no others, Titus had the ſame Epiſcopal Poſt in Crete, and Timothy at Epheſus. That Titus exercis'd the Function of a Biſhop in Crete is affirm'd not only by Euſebius, Theodoret, St. Ambroſe, St. Jerome, and others, but likewiſe by St Paul himſelf. † That Timothy manag'd with the ſame Advantage and Superiority, appears by St. Paul's Inſtructions to him: The Apoſtle cautions him againſt Ordaining any Perſons without a previous Enquiry; and that he ſhould not receive an Accuſation againſt an Elder, unleſs ſupported by Two or Three Witneſſes. Now to what Purpoſe were theſe Directions ſent to Timothy, unleſs he had a Commiſſion to ordain, and try Cauſes; an Authority to conſtitute and govern Presbyters? * Thus St. Paul in his Epiſtle to the Philippians † mentions Timothy as a Collegue, and joint Commiſſioner with himſelf. And the Epiſtle is directed to the Philippians in the Name of Both. The Text is, Paul and Timotheus, the Servants of Jeſus Chriſt, &c. Theſe Two are mention'd together with Marks of Diſtinction as Perſons of the firſt Claſs in the Church. The Two inferior Orders are ſet forth in the latter Part of the Verſe in theſe Words, with the Biſhops and Deacons. That theſe were of a different Rank from St. Paul and Timothy, may be collected from the Order of the Text, and the Manner in which they are mention'd: And that by the Denomination of Biſhops, we are only to underſtand Presbyters in this Place, is affirm'd by St. Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, and St. Jerome, in their Homilies and Comment upon the Text. Particularly Theodoret reports, That in theſe early Times, thoſe who were the Chief Governors in the Church, and had the Power of Ordination, were ſcarcely as yet ſtiled Biſhops, but Angels * and Apoſtles. And here this Father obſerves, that not only the Twelve Diſciples choſen by our Saviour, but likewiſe the Seventy, Paul and Barnabas, and a great many others, were called Apoſtles. (k) Thoſe, ſays he, who are now called Biſhops, were then ſtiled Apoſtles. Upon this Ground, he affirms, Epaphroditus, who carried this Epiſtle to the Philippians, had an Epiſcopal Character, becauſe St. Paul calls him their Apoſtle. (l) Farther, 'tis generally agreed by the Fathers, that in this Age of the Apoſtles, Presbyters were called Biſhops. And for this Reaſon, the Syriack Tranſlation, as the learned Beveridge obſerves, renders theſe Words, σὺν 'Επισκόποις καὶ Διακόνοις with the Presbyters and Deacons. † And which is very remarkable, in almoſt all Places of the New-Teſtament, where the Word 'Επίσκοπος or Biſhop occurs, 'tis tranſlated by Presbyter in the Syriack Verſion. * And thus 'Επισκοπὴ, or the Office of a Biſhop is tranſlated, the Office of a Presbyter. † Now 'tis difficult to conjecture what can be the Reaſon of tranſlating in this Manner; excepting this, that when this Verſion was made, Biſhop and Presbyter were equivalent Terms, and uſed to mark Perſons in the ſame Office. However, 'tis plain by the Records of Antiquity, that either towards the End of the Apoſtles Times, or very ſoon after, the Term Biſhop and Prieſt were diſtinguiſh'd, and carried a different Idea: And that thoſe to whom the Apoſtles convey'd their Authority, and left for their Succeſſors, took the Diſtinction of Biſhops, as moſt ſuitable to their Office; (m) and quitted the Title of Presbyter, or Prieſt, to thoſe of the Second Order.

The Presbyterians Argument from the 1ſt of Philip. v. 1. conſider'd.

But here it may not be improper to take Notice that the Presbyterians endeavour to wreſt the firſt Verſe of the firſt Chapter to the Philippians, from the Expoſition above-mention'd: And from St. Paul's mentioning the Biſhops and Deacons, they conclude there was but Two Orders of Eccleſiaſticks in the Apoſtles Days: And that theſe Two Diſtinctions were only Presbyters and Deacons.

Deacons. Their Reaſon for this laſt Aſſertion is, becauſe the Text does not throw in any third Order between Biſhops and Deacons. But how ſlenderly they are founded, and how ill their Inference is drawn from the Apoſtles Words, may be eaſily ſhewn.

For, firſt, Epaphroditus, who is ſuppoſed to be conſtituted Biſhop of Philippi, by the Apoſtles, was at Rome when St. Paul wrote this Epiſtle, and was afterwards ſent with it unto *Macedonia. Now ſince Epaphroditus carried this Epiſtle, what Reaſon is there for ſaluting him with the Biſhops, as they are call'd, fix'd at Philippi? Farther, granting Epaphroditus was not promoted to the See of Philippi at the Writing of this Epiſtle, yet the higheſt Order of the Clergy, that is, a Biſhop, ſtrictly taken, may be comprehended under this Form of Salutation, no leſs than Preſbyters of the ſecond Claſs. And therefore ſuppoſing Epaphroditus was not Biſhop of Philippi, they might have another ſingle and diſtinguiſh'd Governour in that Station. But to make a farther Conceſſion; Suppoſing the Philippians had no ſingle Governour Paramount to the Preſbyters when St. Paul wrote to them, 'twill by no Means follow, that there were only two Orders of Eccleſiaſticks in that City. For can it be imagin'd there was no Apoſtle preſiding over the Biſhops and Deacons? 'Tis not to be ſuppos'd that the Apoſtles ſhould forbear taking Care of the Churches as ſoon as they were founded, and quit the Helm before they had furniſh'd every Church with a diſtinguiſh'd and peculiar Governour: And that ſome Apoſtle ſat in the Chair of Philippi, and not only preſided over that Church, but left a Succeſſor in the ſame Station, is expreſly affirm'd by Tertullian. Now this Father living ſo near the Apoſtles Age, muſt be allow'd an unexceptionable Evidence. His Words are theſe; "You, ſays he, that are diſpos'd to make an exact Enquiry into the Hiſtory of your Salvation, take a View of the Apoſtolical Churches, where the Chairs they preſided in are to be ſeen; where their Epiſtles are read in their own Hand. By which Remains the very Voice and Pourtraict of them are, as it were, ſounding in the Ears of the Audience, and preſerv'd to the preſent Age. For Inſtance, Do you dwell near Achaia? You have Corinth for this Purpoſe: If you don't live remote from Macedonia, Philippi and Theſſalonica will give you the ſame Satisfaction. If you travel into Aſia, you have Epheſus for another Apoſtolick See. If you border upon Italy, Rome has the ſame honourable Privilege. (n)

* Phil. chap. 2. v. 25.

(n) Tertull. de Preſcript. adverſus Heret. cap. 36.

Here the Reader may ſee Philippi is reckon'd among the reſt of the Cities where the Apoſtles had their Chair, and preſided in Perſon: And that a Succeſſion of Biſhops was continued upon theſe Sees with particular Marks of Honour; that this Succeſſion was continued till Tertullian's Time, is evident by this Sentence abovemention'd; Apud quas ipſæ adhuc Cathedræ Apoſtolorum præſidentur. Now conſidering the Philippians had ſo generouſly furniſh'd St. Paul with Conveniences; ſince he treats them with ſuch particular Regard, as to ſend them this Canonical Epiſtle, and eſpecially ſince the Church of Philippi was founded by this Apoſtle.* For theſe Reaſons 'tis likely St. Paul might keep the Charge of this See in his own Hand, till upon the Proſpect of his Martyrdom, he ſettled a Succeſſor. But there is no need of inſiſting farther upon this; That neither St. Paul nor Timothy were plain Preſbyters or Deacons, but an Order ſuperior to both, is confeſs'd by the Preſbyterians themſelves. They affirm likewiſe, That by Biſhops, in the Place abovemention'd, we are to underſtand Preſbyters. From this Conceſſion it evidently follows, That there were at leaſt three Orders in the Church when the Apoſtles were alive: And 'tis certain the firſt Order of theſe three was, at their Deceaſe, every where ſettled. Now how this Diſtinction could have gain'd ſuch an early Eſtabliſhment, unleſs founded by the Apoſtles, is unimaginable to conceive. That the Form of Church Government was Monarchical, and under the Conduct of the Biſhops towards the latter End of the Apoſtles Times, and ſo forward, appears from unqueſtionable Records. To produce ſomething of this Kind: Clemens Romanus conſtituted Biſhop of Rome by the Apoſtles, endeavours to recover the Corinthians from their turbulent Humour, and preſſes their keeping within the Compaſs of their Station, in theſe Words: "The High-Prieſt, ſays he, had his peculiar Buſineſs preſcrib'd: The Prieſts of the ſecond Order had their Poſts aſſign'd them; and the Levites had Miniſtrations particular to their Diſtinction: And Laymen likewiſe are tied to peculiar Duties. I would have all of you, my Brethren, keep within your own Station, and not break through your Bounds into foreign Buſineſs. (o)

* Acts 16.

The Chriſtian Hierarchy founded upon the Model of the Jewiſh.

Clem. Rom.

(o) 1 Epiſt. ad Corinth.

From hence 'tis plain, Clemens Romanus deſcribes the Chriſtian Hierarchy under the ſame Names and Diſtinctions as they ſtood rang'd in the Jewiſh Oeconomy. His Reaſon muſt be, That this Diſtribution of the Prieſthood was thought proper for Chriſtianity; and that our Saviour and his Apoſtles had transfer'd it, from the Synagogue, to the Church. And thus ſeveral others, beſides Clemens Romanus, call the Biſhop, High-Prieſt; the Presbyter, Ἱερεὺς; and Deacons, Levites: That St. Clemens points at the Orders of the Clergy then ſettled in the Chriſtian Church, appears plainly from what follows after his Recital of the Diſtinction of High-Prieſt, Prieſt, and Levite. "My Brethren, ſays he, let every one of you be careful to move within his Station, &c." From hence it may be clearly infer'd, That the foregoing Diſtinctions in the Synagogue were applicable to the Caſe of the Corinthians; that their Hierarchy was in ſome Meaſure form'd upon the Jewiſh Model; That the Biſhop was in Lieu of the High-Prieſt, the Presbyters of the Inferiour Prieſts, and the Deacons repreſented the Levites: And that theſe three Orders had their Aſſignment of peculiar Buſineſs: And therefore he exhorts all of them to keep within the Bounds of their reſpective Employments. Neither is the Paſſage which follows ſoon after in this Epiſtle, any Contradiction to what is here deliver'd The Paſſage is this; "That the Apoſtles, after our Saviour's Reſurrection, Ordain'd their firſt Converts Biſhops and Deacons in the Places where they travell'd; and that this was done for the Benefit of thoſe who ſhould afterwards turn Chriſtians.

But here the Reader may obſerve, 'tis plain from the Citation, that St. Clemens does not deſcribe the Church as 'twas then conſtituted, but as it ſtood immediately after our Saviour's Reſurrection. However, even then there were three Diſtinctions in the Clergy: Firſt Apoſtles, next Biſhops or Presbyters, and under them Deacons. Biſhops, in the commonly receiv'd Senſe, ſucceeded to the Apoſtles; but then 'twas not neceſſary the Apoſtles ſhould raiſe the Epiſcopal Character for Succeſſion, till they were almoſt ready to retire themſelves: But that they did fix the Settlement of three Orders in the Church, is plain by the Teſtimony of St. Clemens already cited. Neither could this holy Biſhop be ignorant under what Diviſions, under what Diverſity of Powers, the Apoſtles had rang'd the Officers of the Church, ſince himſelf was made Biſhop of Rome by St. Peter or St. Paul.

Ignatius full for three diſtinct Orders.

Farther: The famous St. Ignatius govern'd the See of Antioch before the Death of Clemens Romanus; he likewiſe held a Correſpondence with ſome of the Apoſtolical College, 'tis therefore impoſſible he could be unacquainted with the Form of Government conſtituted by the Apoſtles, with the different Orders they had ſettled in the Hierarchy; and the Proportions of Power aſſign'd to each of them. Now St. Ignatius in thoſe Epiſtles, which unqueſtionably belong to him, frequently mentions the three Orders of Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons; and here the Biſhop is always diſtinguiſhed as their Supreme. (p)

Farther Proof for this Point.

Thus 'tis evident, that at the End of the Apoſtolick Age, at leaſt, there were three diſtinct Orders ſettled in the Church; and that they were afterwards kept on, is no leſs unqueſtionable. For Inſtance, In the Year of our Lord 142. which at moſt is but Three and forty Years after the Death of St. John, Pius the 1ſt. was promoted to the See of Rome. This Prelate, in an undoubted Epiſtle of his to Juſtus Biſhop of Vienne, ſpeaks thus: "Since the Brethren have elected you Biſhop of the noble City of Vienne, let the Epiſcopal Habit put you in Mind of your Duty, and take Care to manage up to the Function to which our Lord has call'd you." And a little after he ſubjoins; "Let the Prieſts and Deacons regard you as the Servant of Chriſt." Here Juſtus the Biſhop and his Prieſts and Deacons are diſtinctly mention'd.

Epiſcoporum veſtitus. Beveridge's Pandect. Canon. Annot.

In the Year of our Lord 180. Irenæus was Biſhop of Lyons. This eminent Father expreſly affirms, that the Biſhops ſucceeded the Apoſtles; and that the Apoſtles put the Government of the Churches into their Hands. (q) He likewiſe mentions Presbyters or Prieſts, in ſeveral Places. * As for Deacons, they occur but ſeldom in his Writings. However, no Body denies the Settlement of this Order from the Beginning: From whence the Conſequence is, That in Irenæus's Time there were three Diſtinctions of the Clergy in Gaul; and that in this early Age the Churches in Alexandria and Carthage were furniſhed with the three Orders abovemention'd, is evident from the Teſtimonies of Tertullian, Clemens Alexandrinus and Origen. "The High-Prieſt, ſays Tertullian, that is, the Biſhop, has the original Right of adminiſtring Baptiſm; from hence 'tis deriv'd to the Prieſts and Deacons, but not unleſs they have a Commiſſion from the Biſhop." (r) And elſewhere ſpeaking of the floating Condition of Heretical Communions, he obſerves "Their Biſhops were frequently thrown out of their Character, and that their Prieſts and Deacons were promoted to thoſe Orders without proper Diſtances of Time. Clemens Alexandrinus mentions the three different Ranks of Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons, and believes them founded upon a Reſemblance of the Angelick Orders. (s) Origen upon the 15th of St. Matthew has theſe Words; "Such a Biſhop, ſays he, does not deſire a good Work—— And you'll ſay the ſame Thing concerning Prieſts and Deacons." And in his ſecond Homily upon Numbers, in his ſecond Homily upon the Canticles, and elſewhere he makes expreſs Mention of Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons.

From all theſe Authorities of the Ancients, nothing can be more evident than that the three diſtinct Orders of Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons, were ſettled immediately after the Death of the Apoſtles; and that not in a few Places, but in Aſia, Africa and Europe; that is, in all Parts of the then known World. Farther, the Officers of the Church being thus generally and early rang'd under theſe Diſtinctions, this, if we had no other Proof, would ſufficiently demonſtrate, that theſe three Orders were of Apoſtolick Inſtitution: For 'tis unimaginable to conceive that all the Churches of Chriſtendom, ſo remote from each other, ſhould agree in the ſame Form of Government, in the ſame Eccleſiaſtick Diſtinctions, unleſs this Inſtitution had been convey'd to them by the Apoſtles, from whom they receiv'd their Chriſtianity.

And laſtly, 'Tis particularly remarkable, that no Canons, no Decree of any Council, no Writings of any of the Fathers, mention either the raiſing, or confirming of any of theſe three Offices. 'Tis true, the ancient Canons afford a great deal touching the Ordination of Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons; they regulate their Functions, and ſettle the reſpective Limits of each Order: But neither Canons, Councils, nor Fathers mention their being firſt inſtituted in any Part of Chriſtendom, by any Authority, excepting that of the Apoſtles. Neither indeed was it in the Power of any Council to transform the Original Government, to introduce new Orders, and bring a Change upon the Apoſtolick Inſtitution: For 'twas a Privilege peculiar to the Apoſtles to determine the Form of Government, and ſettle the Diſtinctions of the Clergy, no leſs than to deliver the Articles of Belief.

Orders given by none but Presbyters, always accounted null for the firſt 1500 Years.

Secondly, I ſhall now prove in a few Words, That Orders conferr'd by Presbyters, have been all along reckon'd null and inſignificant. The Learned Beveridge obſerves, That from the Beginning of Chriſtianity to the Sixteenth Century, no Perſon was ever look'd on as one of the Inferiour Clergy, much leſs a Prieſt, unleſs he was ordain'd by ſome Biſhop; and that this was the Opinion of the Univerſal Church for Fifteen hundred Years together. To give ſome Inſtances: When the ſecond General Council at Conſtantinople had pronounc'd Maximus no Biſhop, they immediately add, That thoſe ordain'd by him ſhould not be allow'd any Eccleſiaſtick Character. (s) Thus when Athanaſius was charg'd by the Arians, that Macarius, one of his Deacons, had broken the Communion-Cup; a Synod at Alexandria meeting at that Time, examin'd this Article. And here, upon Enquiry, they found there was neither Prieſt nor Deacon where the profane Outrage was ſaid to be committed; there was no Eccleſiaſtick in that Place, excepting one Iſchyras, who pretended himſelf Ordain'd by one Colluthus: Now upon Examination 'twas found this Colluthus was no more than a Presbyter or Prieſt. Upon this the Synod pronounces Iſchyras no Prieſt, nor in any Clerical Station; and that he was no more than a mere Layman. The Words of the Synod being very remarkable, I ſhall give them the Reader. How came Iſchyras to be a Prieſt? Who Ordain'd him? Was it Colluthus? Yes, Matter of Fact ſtands thus. Well, but Colluthus being never any more than a Prieſt, all his Ordinations have been declar'd null; and thoſe promoted by him were pronounced Laymen, and treated as ſuch; That they were receiv'd to the holy Euchariſt no otherwiſe than thoſe of the Laity; and that this was ſo evident, that no Body could deny it. (t)

This Declaration of the Alexandrian Synod is confirm'd by the Council of Sardica, where Iſchyras is diſclaim'd from being a Prieſt. The Arians, ſay theſe Fathers, rewarded Iſchyras for his falſe Evidence, with the Title of a Biſhop, tho' the Man is not ſo much as a Presbyter. (u)

'Tis no Wonder therefore, that St. Jerome, tho' a great Champion for the Privilege of Preſbyters, ſhould own the Authority for giving Orders peculiar to Biſhops. (w)

From this Practice and Declaration of the Church, Gregory the 3d. lays it down for a Rule, That when 'twas queſtionable whether the Perſon who Ordain'd a Prieſt, was a Biſhop or not, the Perſon was to be Re-ordain'd by the Dioceſan before he was admitted to any Prieſtly Function. (x)

This Regulation was ſo religiouſly obſerv'd by the ancient Church, that the ſecond Council of Sevil being inform'd, That at an Ordination of a Prieſt and two Deacons, the Biſhop being troubled with ſore Eyes, only laid his Hands upon them; but that the ſolemn Benediction, or Form in the Ordinal was pronounc'd by a Preſbyter. Upon this Information the Council decreed, "That this Ordination carried Scandal, but "nothing of Authority with it: And therefore "'twas highly reaſonable they ſhould be ſet aſide, "and diſclaim'd in their reſpective Pretenſions." (y) And this may ſerve for the Proof of this Point. From hence the Reader may conclude, That if Calvin, Beza, or any other Abettors of Presbyterian Parity, had lived in the Time of the Fathers, they would have been very indifferently receiv'd. This may eaſily be collected from the Principles and Practice of the Univerſal Church. To give another Inſtance: What was it that mark'd Aerius and his Party for Hereticks? Was it not their confounding the Character of Biſhops and Prieſts, and ſetting them on the Level? I don't ſpeak this to reproach the Diſſenters, or ſuggeſt any Methods of Rigour; my Intention is only to reſcue them from their Prejudices, to bring them to Recollection, and awaken them out of their Schiſm. But now 'tis Time to come off the Digreſſion; if that which lies within the Matter of the Hiſtory, and improves the Serviceableneſs of the Work, may properly be called ſo.

To proceed: Having mention'd what was enacted in the laſt Parliament, with Reference to the Church, I ſhall obſerve what was done in Convocation. This Aſſembly met at St. Pauls on the 13th of November; there was nothing done, excepting the Grant of two Subſidies, till the 15th Seſſion. And now the Archbiſhop brought in certain Orders to be obſerv'd through the whole Province. Firſt, That ſingle Benefic'd Men ſhould be oblig'd to conſtant Reſidence: But here was an Exception of Liberty for Prebendaries, and Chaplains to the King, or ſome Peer. There was likewiſe a Saving for thoſe who were allow'd Non-reſidence by Act of Parliament. However, in theſe Caſes they ſhould be compell'd to keep a licens'd Preaching-Curate. Secondly, Double-benefic'd Men were to reſide equal Proportions of Time upon their reſpective Livings, and to provide a licens'd Curate where they are abſent. Thirdly, Benefic'd Men abſent an Hundred and twenty Days, were to keep licens'd Curates, Fourthly, Scandalous Miniſters guilty of notorious Crimes, muſt be remov'd, and never admitted to any Cure. Fifthly, Unlearned Miniſters underqualify'd to Catechiſe, are barr'd Admiſſion to any Cure. Sixthly, None ſhall be allow'd to place or diſplace a Curate without Authority from the Archbiſhop, or Biſhop of the Dioceſe. Theſe Orders drawn by the Archbiſhop, were agreed to by both Houſes, who promiſ'd to obey and execute them. Seditious Pamphlets publiſhed by the Puritans.

This Year ſome ſeditious, no leſs than Heterodox Pamphlets, were publiſh'd by the Puritans. I ſhall mention ſome few of the Aſſertions. 'Tis here affirm'd, That if Princes hinder them that ſeek for this Diſcipline, they are Tyrants both to the Church and Miniſters; and being ſo, may be depos'd by their Subjects. That they which are no Elders of the Church, have nothing to do with the Government of it. That if their Reformation be not haſtned by the Magiſtrate, the Subjects ought not to tarry any longer, but muſt do it of themſelves. That there were many Thouſands which deſir'd the Diſcipline; and that great Troubles would enſue if it were deny'd them. That their Presbyteries muſt prevail: And that if it be brought about by ſuch Ways and Means as would make the Biſhops Hearts ack, let them blame themſelves. Martin Mar-Prelate in his ſecond Book may explain this Paſſage; for this Author adviſes the Parliament then aſſembled, to put down Lord Biſhops, and bring in the Reformation which they look'd for, whether her Majeſty would or not. (a)

I ſhall conclude this Year with the Death of Edwyn Sandys Archbiſhop of York: He was deſcended from a Gentleman's Family at St. Bees in Cumberland, bred in Cambridge, and one of the Exiles in Queen Mary's Reign; the reſt of his Character and Preferments has been touch'd already.

September, Anno Dom. 1589.

An Aſſembly of the Diſſenters at Cambridge.

The Puritans mov'd vigorouſly in their Buſineſs, and held a Synod in St. John's College in Cambridge. And here they made ſeveral Corrections in their Book of Diſcipline: 'Twas likewiſe agreed, That as many as were willing ſhould ſubſcribe it. Cartwright, Snape, Allen, Gifford, Perkins, Barber, Harriſon, and the Deponent Stone, made Part of this Aſſembly. About the ſame Time another Synod was held at Ipſwich. (b)

After the Defeat of the Armada, ſome People misbehav'd themſelves upon the Succeſs, printed Invectives againſt the Spaniſh Nation, and outrag'd King Philip himſelf. The Queen was diſpleas'd at this Buffooning Licence: For though this Prince was an Enemy, a Regard was due to the Royal Character. The Preſs being more particularly the Biſhop of London's Care, the Lord Treaſurer ſent to him to complain of a Doggrel Pamphlet upon this Subject. The Biſhop was of the Treaſurer's Opinion, and ſaid, It had been much better to have return'd Thanks to God Almighty for the Deliverance, than ſpent their Satyr and Scurrility upon the Spaniards, and inſulted Crown'd Heads. This Libel, it ſeems, was firſt printed at Oxford, which made the Biſhop ſurpriz'd at the Conduct of that Univerſity. In ſhort, he promiſ'd the Treaſurer to call Toby Cook, who printed it at London, to an Account. *

After the Death of the Earl of Leiceſter, Sir Chriſtopher Hatton was choſen Chancellor of Oxford. This Gentleman endeavour'd to ſupply the Omiſſions of his Predeceſſor. For the Purpoſe, he took Care that thoſe who were admitted to any Degree, ſhould be examin'd in Points of Belief, and paſs a kind of Reform'd Teſt. He likewiſe endeavour'd to prevent the Roman Catholicks carrying off the young Students to their Seminaries beyond Sea. And laſtly, he brought the Univerſity to a more unexceptionable Conduct, and reſtrain'd their Exceſſes in Cloaths. *

To paſs on, and look over the Affairs in Scotland. Francis Earl of Bothwell being touch'd with Remorſe of Conſcience, offer'd to make a publick Acknowledgment of the Scandal he had given by his Licentiouſneſs, and ſubmit to any Satisfaction the Church ſhould appoint. This Submiſſion was receiv'd, and the Nobleman did publick Penance in Mr. Robert Bruce's Church, and promis'd a more regular Behaviour. (c)

Some of the Scotch Miniſters object againſt the Ceremony of anointing Princes.

In the Beginning of the next Year the King of Scots who had lately made a Voyage to Norway and Denmark, return'd with his Queen to Leith. This Princeſs was Ann, Daughter to Frederick the 2d King of Denmark. The next Day after the King's coming to Edinborough, the Council met to ſettle the Form for the Queen's Coronation; the King reſolv'd to have it done with all imaginable Solemnity. And becauſe all the Biſhops were out of Town, and none of them could come up againſt the Time, Mr. Robert Bruce was pitch'd on to perform the Ceremony. Some of the Edinburgh Miniſters that had more Scruples than Diſcretion, excepted to the Circumſtance of Anointing; they ſaid, 'twas a Jewiſh Ceremony, and aboliſh'd at the Coming of Chriſt; That this Cuſtom was ſince brought into Chriſtian Countries by the Pope, and therefore not to be continued. To theſe Objections 'twas anſwer'd, "That the Ceremony of Unction had no Jewiſh Original, neither was it "us'd by that Nation only; That 'twas practis'd "in other Kingdoms beſides that of Judea, was "evident from Scripture. For Hazael was anointed King of Syria by Elijah, and Cyrus King of "Perſia is called the Lord's Anointed by the Prophet Eſaiah; That ſince both theſe Princes, "who were foreign to the Law and Nation of "the Iſraelites, were anointed, 'tis plain the Ceremony was no ways peculiar to the Jews. "And whereas they pretended 'twas introduc'd "by the Court of Rome, that was more than "could be prov'd. And ſuppoſing the Objection "true, 'twas foreign to the Point: For no Man "of common Senſe would ſtand off from a Cuſtom merely becauſe 'twas us'd by the Papiſts; "for at this Rate we muſt part with a great many commendable and beneficial Uſages. Since "therefore the Function and Authority of Princes is the ſame 'twas at firſt, and continues unalter'd in all independent Monarchies, why "ſhould the Unction be quarrell'd any more "than the reſt of the Solemnity? Why ſhould "this Circumſtance be ſcrupled more than the "carrying the Sword and Sceptre before "them?

This Anſwer, one would have thought, would have been ſufficient to have diſintangled the Matter; but no Arguments being ſtrong enough to ſtrike through the Miniſters Prejudices, the King ſent for them, and finding their Obſtinacy unmanageable, he told them, "He would by "no Means diſpenſe with the Omiſſion of this "Ceremony: And if Mr. Robert Bruce refus'd to "uſe it (for it ſeems they had threatned this "Gentleman with Church Cenſures) he would "poſtpone the Coronation till ſome of the Biſhops could come to Town.

This unexpected Reſolve put them upon a ſecond Debate; and Mr. Andrew Melvil being wholly averſe againſt a Biſhop's officiating at the Coronation, drop'd his Opinion, and gain'd a Majority for Compliance. And thus on the Sunday following the Queen was crown'd by Mr. Robert Bruce in the Abby-Church of Halyrood-Houſe; and here all the cuſtomary Uſages were obſerv'd in the Solemnity.

The Aſſembly petition the King for three Things.

In June this Summer, a General Aſſembly met at Edinborough, where the King was preſent. The Moderator Mr. Patrick Galaway addreſs'd his Majeſty for Three Things. Firſt, That the Church's Juriſdiction might have a firmer Settlement; And that all Acts prejudicial to the ſame, might be reſcinded. The next was for clearing the Country of Jeſuits, Seminary Prieſts, and all Excommunicated Perſons that diſturb'd the eſtabliſh'd Religion. Thirdly, To make a competent Proviſion for the Miniſters out of the Pariſh-Tythes where they officiated; and to apply the Surpluſage to the Encouragement of publick Schools, for the Maintenance of the Poor, and the Reparation of Churches. To the firſt his Majeſty anſwer'd, That in all Parliaments the firſt Act was to guard the Liberty of the Church; and that he would take Care this Cuſtom ſhould be obſerv'd as formerly. In return to their ſecond Petition, he told them, 'Twas well known how earneſtly he had purſu'd that Matter before his Voyage to Denmark, and that he ſhould ſtill continue to put the Laws in Execution. As to the third, he adviſ'd them to ſelect a Committee out of the Aſſembly to conſult with his Council upon the beſt Ways and Means for making their Requeſt practicable.

The Feuds ſuppreſs'd by the King.

After this, the King diſcourſing of the Feuds kept up in the Kingdom, and the Murders and Barbarities conſequent to thoſe Quarrels, recommended putting a Stop to this Miſchief. He put the Aſſembly in Mind their Character oblig'd them to be particularly ſolicitous in promoting Friendſhip and Peace. He deſir'd them therefore to preſs that Point in their Sermons, and dilate upon the Sin and Scandal of ſuch deſperate Revenge; and that they ſhould employ ſome of the moſt diſcreet of their Body to reconcile Families, and take up Differences in the Country. This Motion of the King's was much commended, as it deſerv'd. In ſhort, this Prince never gave over, till he broke the barbarous Cuſtom, and got the Feuds wholly ſuppreſs'd. This was done partly by calling the exaſperated Parties before the Council, and obliging them to refer their Quarrels: And partly by making ſtrict Laws againſt thoſe who diſturb'd the publick Peace.

An Order of the Aſſembly for ſubſcribing the Book of Diſcipline.

Before I take leave of this Aſſembly, 'twill be neceſſary to mention an Order paſs'd there, viz. That all ſuch that then bore Office in the Kirk, or from thenceforeſhould bear any Office in it, ſhould ſubſcribe the Book of Diſcipline. The Act of the Aſſembly as it ſtands upon Record, is as follows.

April. Anno Dom. 1590. Snape ſummon'd before the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners, and requir'd to anſwer cretain Interrogatories.

To return to England: The Steps the Puritans had taken, being now diſcover'd by ſome of their own Party, and their Progreſs trac'd from Point to Point, ſome of the leading Men were ſummon'd before the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners. For Inſtance: Snape was ſent for from Northamptonſhire, and had Interrogatories put to him: He wrote to Barebone and Stone, two diſſenting Miniſters, gave them an Account of the Proceedings of the High-Commiſſion-Court, and how he was impriſon'd upon refuſing to give Satisfaction. He exhorts his Friends to Reſolution, and ſeems to be of Opinion, That 'twas more adviſeable that ſome Man of Courage and Conduct ſhould be diſpens'd with to anſwer Queſtions, rather than run the Hazard of a Diſcovery by ſome weak or wicked Brother.

Theſe Letters being intercepted, gave more Light into the Myſtery, and ſuggeſted Meaſures to the Government

And thus ſome Things, which were but Jealouſy and Suſpicion before, were now open'd to Evidence and Matter of Fact.

Udal a diſſenting Miniſter indicted upon the 23 Eliz. cap. 3.

The Government thus awaken'd, found it neceſſary to let the Law looſe, and not connive any longer. The firſt that was call'd to Account by the Temporal Courts was Udall, a Nonconforming Miniſter. He was one of the Four who furniſh'd thoſe ſcandalous Libels which were lately diſpers'd through the Kingdom. But that which gave the higheſt Provocation was his writing a Book entituled, The Demonſtration of Diſcipline which Chriſt hath preſcrib'd in his Word for the Government of his Church, in all Times and Places, untill the World's End. He addreſſes his Preface to the ſuppoſed Governours of the Church of England: And after this renouncing their Authority, outrages them in the following Expreſſions; Who can deny you, ſays he, without bluſhing, to be the Cauſe of all Ungodlineſs? Seeing your Government is that which giveth Leave to a Man to be any Thing, ſaving a ſound Chriſtian. For certainly it is more free in theſe Days to be a Papiſt, Anabaptiſt, of the Family of Love, yea, as any moſt wicked whatſoever, than that which we ſhould be. And I could live theſe twenty Years, as well as any ſuch in England, (yea, in a Biſhop's Houſe it may be,) and never be moleſted for it: So true is that which you are charg'd with in a Dialogue lately come forth againſt you, and ſince burnt by you, that you care for nothing but the Maintenace of your Dignities, be it to the Damnation of your own Souls, and infinite Millions more.

July 23. 1590.

For this whole Book, and more eſpecially for this lewd Paſſage in the Preface, he was indicted at an Aſſizes held in Croyden for the County of Surrey, and by ſufficient Evidence brought in guilty. The Priſoner pleaded his Indictment was grounded upon the Statute 23 Eliz. cap. 2. enacted for puniſhing ſeditious Words againſt the Queen: But that the Book for which he was proſecuted contain'd no offenſive Paſſages againſt the Queen; that whatever Satyr there might be in this Tract, it pointed only upon the Biſhops, and therefore could not fall within the Compaſs of that Statute. Againſt this Plea 'twas reſolv'd by the Judges, That thoſe who ſpeak againſt her Majeſty's Government in Caſes Eccleſiaſtical, her Laws, Proceedings, or Eccleſiaſtical Officers, which ruled under her, did defame the Queen.

He is brought in guilty.

Upon this Reſolution, and the Evidence heard, the Court allow'd him the Favour of having this Queſtion put, that is, Whether he would declare upon his Credit and Conſcience that he was not the Author of the Book for which he ſtood indicted? If he had anſwer'd this Queſtion affirmatively, 'tis thought the Judges and Jury would have overlook'd the Evidence, and taken his Word: But having not Aſſurance enough to purge himſelf, which, by the Way, is an Argument his Conſcience was none of the worſt, the Jury could do no leſs than find him guilty. However, the Archbiſhop prevail'd with the Court to reſpite Judgment: But the Puritans giving farther Suſpicions of Mutiny againſt the State, he was brought to the Bar at Southwark in March following, and there Sentence of Death was given againſt him. And here the Archbiſhop, who valued Udall for his Parts and Learning, interpos'd again in his Behalf, and addreſs'd the Queen for a Pardon. And though this was denied, he ſucceeded ſo far as to procure a Reprieve. Notwithſtanding this forgiving Temper in the Archbiſhop, and the friendly Office done by him, he was aſpers'd by ſome People for bringing on the Proſecution of the Priſoner. To take off this Imputation, 'twas argued in his Defence, that ſeveral ſeditious Sermons might have been charg'd upon Udall as well as the Writing that Book, which would have made him ſtill more criminal in the Eye of the Court: And that whereas one Catsfield could have preſs'd him harder than the reſt of the Witneſſes, he was never call'd to the Bar to give in his Evidence, the Jurors being fully ſatisfied with what had been laid before them already. And thus the Indictment being rightly grounded, the Proſecution favourable, and the Evidence full, the preſerving his Life was an undeniable Inſtance of the Archbiſhop's Goodneſs. Stow takes no Notice of his being executed afterwards, from whence we may conclude he was repriev'd from Time to Time, and left to the Courſe of Nature.* His Son Ephraim prov'd the Reverſe of his Father. He was benefic'd at St. Auſtin's near St. Paul's Church-Yard, and ſuffer'd deeply for his Conformity to the Church: He was ſequeſtred in the Reign of King Charles I. for refuſing ſome ſchiſmatical and rebellious Oaths and Covenants: This Uſage had one remarkable Circumſtance of Barbarity in it: For his Wife, then Bedrid, was turn'd out of Doors, and left in the open Streets.

Saravia writes in Defence of Epiſcopacy.

While the Government was proceeding againſt the Puritans, in the Proſecution of Udall, and the Impriſonment of Snape, Cartwright and ſome others, the Learned of each Side, were no leſs engag'd in the Defence of their reſpective Sentiments. To mention ſomething of this Kind: Adrian Saravia, born in the lower Germany, a Perſon well skill'd in Eccleſiaſtical Antiquity, was a ſtrong Aſſertor of Epiſcopacy. This Doctrine being diſcourag'd in his Native Country, where the Parity of Miniſters was an Article of their publick Confeſſion, he caſt himſelf upon the Protection of the Church of England. He had ſome Time before recommended himſelf to the Epiſcopal Communion, by his Anſwer to Beza's Book De triplici Epiſcopatu. Not long after his Arrival in England, he publiſh'd a very learned Book De diverſis Gradibus Miniſtrorum Evangelii. In this Tract he proves Biſhops not only of a ſuperior Degree, but of a different Order from Prieſts. This Book was dedicated to the Miniſters of the Belgick Churches, where, tho' not very welcome, it paſs'd without Contradiction: But Beza, Danæus, and the reſt of the Genevians, gave it a warmer Reception. They look'd upon the Principles as ſubverſive of their Eccleſiaſtical Government, and therefore reſolv'd to try their Strength upon it. Beza, it ſeems, had other Buſineſs, and therefore leaves the Undertaking to Danæus. This Man, whoſe Talent lay more in Railing than Reaſoning, made little on't. Beza therefore finding it neceſſary to reinforce Danæus, publiſh'd an Anſwer in the Year 1593, to which Saravia replied the next Year. Beza after this, ſeem'd to have enough of the Controverſy, and lay by. As for Saravia, his Merit was not overlook'd by the Engliſh Biſhops. He was made Prebendary of Weſtminſter, and conſider'd in other Reſpects to his Satisfaction.

Beza's Conceſſions to Archbiſhop Whitgift.

To proceed; the Miniſter of the Italian Church in London, not contented with the Privileges granted the French and Dutch Congregations, publiſh'd a Book in Defence of the Holy Diſcipline. Upon this, Dr. Mathew Suttliff, Dean of Exeter, printed a Latin Tract concerning the Form and Eſſentials of the Catholick Church. * This Suttliff printed a learned Diſcourſe againſt the Engliſh Puritans, entitled, The falſe Semblance of counterfeit Diſcipline detected; In which he takes the Scheme to Pieces, diſcovers the Novelty from Point to Point, and diſproves the Arguments alledg'd in its Defence. In his Latin Book he attack'd Presbytery with a great Deal of Force, preſs'd a little upon the Quarter of Geneva, and mention'd Beza in the Controverſy. This Miniſter thinking himſelf ill uſed, becauſe mention'd without Approbation, complains of the Affront in a Letter to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and calls Suttliff a petulant Railer. For this Freedom he was not only call'd to an Account by Saravia in his Replication, but the Archbiſhop ſent him a reprimanding Anſwer for Intereſting himſelf in the Diſputes touching Religion in England. He let him know he had been much too forward and Deciſive, and occaſion'd no ſmall Diſturbance. Beza perceiving the Archbiſhop and Saravia were likely to prove an overmatch, retir'd from the Combat, and left the Engliſh Puritans to ſhift for themſelves. And to do ſomething by Way of Reparation for his Intermeddling, he writes to the Archbiſhop in Terms of Reſpect, and ſalutes him in the Language of his Character. In this Addreſs he acquaints him, “ That in his Writings concerning Church Government, he only oppos'd the Hierarchy of Rome, but never had any Intention to reflect upon the Engliſh Eccleſiaſtical Polity; nor to preſs Conformity to the Genevian Diſcipline. He grants, that provided there was an Agreement in the Doctrine, Churches might differ defenſively enough in other Matters. And here he throws in a very ſerviceable Limitation, that in this Latitude, nothing unwarranted by Antiquity, ſhould be indulg'd. And that there might be a better Harmony amongſt the Reform'd in Chriſtendom, he hopes the ſacred Epiſcopal College would always continue, and manage their Privilege with Equity and Moderation. This Letter is much more friendly to Epiſcopacy than that written to Knox already mention'd: But Beza ought not to be blam'd for ſelf Contradiction: For if Time and Recollection had recover'd him from ſome Part of his Miſtakes, ſo much the better. Some of theſe Things did not come up till Three or Four Years after the Time I am upon; but for the Affinity of the Matter, I have laid them together.

Thomas Cartwright brought before the High Commiſſion, and charged upon ſeveral Articles. Septemb. 1.

To proceed; this Year Thomas Cartwright, Batchelor of Divinity, was brought before the Queen's Commiſſioners for Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes, and the Oath Ex Officio put to him to anſwer Interrogatories. The Articles upon which the Interrogatories were form'd, are as follow:

“ 1. Imprimis, We object and articulate againſt him, that he being a Miniſter (at leaſt a Deacon) lawfully call'd, according to the godly and lawful Orders of this Church of England, has renounc'd the ſame Orders Eccleſiaſtical as an Antichriſtian and unlawful Manner of Calling to the Miniſtry.

“ 2. Item, That he departing this Realm into foreign Parts without Licence, as a Man diſcontented with the Form of Government Eccleſiaſtical, here by Law eſtabliſh'd, the more to teſtify his Diſlike and Contempt thereof, and of the Manner of his former Vocation and Ordination, was contented in foreign Parts (as at Antwerp, Middleborough, or elſewhere) to have a new Vocation, Election, or Ordination by Impoſition of Hands to the Miniſtry, or unto ſome other Order or Degree Eccleſiaſtical, and in other Manner and Form, than the Laws Eccleſiaſtical of this Realm do preſcribe. Let him declare upon his Oath the particular Circumſtances thereof.

“ 3. Item, That by Virtue or Colour of ſuch his latter Vocation, Election, or Ordination, becoming a pretended Biſhop or Paſtor of ſuch Congregation as made Choice of him, he eſtabliſhed, or procured to be eſtabliſhed at Antwerp, and at Middleburgh among Merchants, and others her Majeſty's Subjects, a certain Conſiſtory, Seminary, Presbytery, or Eldership Eccleſiaſtical, conſiſting of himſelf, being Biſhop, or Paſtor, (and ſo Preſident thereof,) of a Doctor, of certain Ancients, Seniors, or Elders for Government Eccleſiaſtical, and of Deacons for diſtributing to the Poor.

“ 4. Item, That by the ſaid Elderſhip, and the Authority thereof, certain Engliſh born Subjects were called, elected, or ordain'd by Impoſition of Hands, to be Miniſters or Eccleſiaſtical Doctors (being not of that Degree before) as Hart, Travers, Griſe, or ſome of them; and ſome that were alſo Miniſters afore, according to the Orders of the Church of England, as Fenner, Acton, were ſo called, and other Engliſh Subjects were alſo called, and likewiſe ordain'd Elders, and ſome others were ordain'd Deacons, in other Manner and Form, than the Laws Eccleſiaſtical of the Realm do preſcribe, or allow of.

“ 5. Item, That ſuch Elderſhip ſo eſtabliſh'd, under the Preſidentſhip of him the ſaid Thomas Cartwright, had uſed (beſides this Authority of this Vocation, and Ordination of Officers Eccleſiaſtical) the Cenſures, and Keys of the Church, as publick Admonition, Suſpenſion from the Supper, and from Execution of Offices Eccleſiaſtical, and the Cenſures of Excommunication; likewiſe Authority of making Laws, Decrees, and Orders Eccleſiaſtical, and of dealing with the Doctrine and Manners of all Perſons in that Congregation, in all Matters whatſoever, ſo far as might appertain to Conſcience.

“ 6. Item, That he the ſaid Thomas Cartwright, in the publick Adminiſtration of his Miniſtry there, among her Majeſty's Subjects, us'd not the Form of Liturgy, or Book of Common-Prayer, by the Laws of this Land eſtabliſh'd, nor in his Government Eccleſiaſtical, the Laws and Orders of this Land; but rather conform'd himſelf in both to the Uſe and Form of ſome other foreign Churches.

“ 7. Item, That ſince his laſt Return from beyond the Seas, being to be plac'd at Warwick, he faithfully promiſ'd (if he might but be tolerated to preach) not to impugn the Laws, Orders, Policy, Government, nor Governors in this Church of England, but to perſuade and procure ſo much as he could, both publickly and privately, the Eſtimation and Peace of this Church.

“ 8. Item, That he, having no Miniſtry in this Church (other than ſuch as before he had forſaken, and ſtill condemneth as unlawful) and without any Licence (as Law requireth) he hath ſince taken upon him to preach at Warwick, and at ſundry other Places of this Realm.

“ 9. Item, That ſince his ſaid Return, in ſundry private Conferences, with ſuch Miniſters and others, as at ſundry Times by Word and Letter, have aſk'd his Advice or Opinion, he hath ſhewed Miſlike of the Laws and Government Eccleſiaſtical, and of diverſe Parts of the Liturgy of this Church: And thereby perſuaded, and prevail'd alſo with many in ſundry Points, to break the Orders and Form of the Book of Common-Prayer, who obſerved them before, and alſo to oppoſe themſelves to the Government of this Church, as himſelf well knoweth, or verily believeth.

“ 10. Item, That in all, or moſt of ſuch his Sermons and Exerciſes, he hath taken Occaſion to traduce, and inveigh againſt the Biſhops, and other Governors under them in this Church.

“ 11. Item, That he hath grown ſo far in hatred and diſlike towards them, as that at ſundry Times, in his Prayer at Sermons, and namely preaching at Banbury, about a Year ſince, in ſuch Place as others well diſpoſed, pray for Biſhops, he prayed to this, or like Effect; Becauſe that they, which ought to be Pillars in the Church, do bend themſelves againſt Chriſt, and his Truth, therefore, O Lord, give us Grace, and Power, all as one Man, to ſet our ſelves againſt them. And this in Effect (by Way of Emphaſis) he then alſo repeated.

“ 12. Item, That Preaching at ſundry Times and Places, he uſually reacheth at all Occaſions, to deprave, condemn, and impugn the Manner of Ordination of Biſhops, Miniſters, and Deacons; ſundry Points of the Polity, Government, Laws, Orders, and Rights Eccleſiaſtical, and of the publick Liturgy of the Church of England, contain'd in the Book of Common-Prayer, as namely, the Uſe of the Surplice, the Interrogatories to God-fathers, &c. In the Name of the Infants; the Croſs in Baptiſm, the Ring in Marriage, the Thankſgiving after Child-birth, Burials by Miniſters, the Kneeling at the Communion, ſome Points of the Litany, certain Collects and Prayers, the Reading of Portions of Scripture, for the Epiſtle and Goſpel, and the Manner of Singing in Cathedral Churches and others.

“ 13. Item, That Preaching at the Baptizing of one Job Throgmorton's Children, he ſpoke much of the Unlawfulneſs, and in Derogation of the Government, Polity, Laws, and Liturgy Eccleſiaſtical of this Realm; and to the Juſtification of a Government by Elderſhips in every Congregation, and by Conference and Synods, &c. Abroad, as divine Inſtitutions commanded by Chriſt, and the only lawful Church Government: Seeking to prove and eſtabliſh ſuch Elderſhips out of that Word in one of the Pſalms, where Thrones are mention'd.

“ 14. Item, That by Toleration and Impunity, he did grow ſo confident, and withal implacable againſt the Laws, Government, and Orders of this Church of England, that he could not endure Mr. Bourdman, and others (preaching ſundry Times at Warwick) to ſpeak in Defence thereof, but took upon him to confute in ſundry Sermons there, theſe Things which the ſaid Bourdman had truly and dutifully, in that behalf ſpoken and deliver'd.

“ 15. Item, That in his Sermons at Warwick and elſewhere, within the ſaid Time, he often deliver'd many frivolous, ſtrange, and undiſcreet Poſitions: As namely; that to kneel down and pray when a Man comes into Church, or pray there privately, was but to offer the Sacrifice of Fools. That it was requiſite, all the Hearers that were able, ſhould ſtand upon their Feet during Sermons; and diſcourſing about Women, and their Child-birth, &c. did ſpeak thereof ſo indiſcreetly and offenſively, that ſundry of them in great Grief, had conſpired to have miſchiev'd him with Stones in the open Streets.

“ 16. Item, That by his Perſuaſions, privately and publickly deliver'd, ſundry Perſons in and about Warwick, were appointed to impugn both in Words and Deeds, the Laws, Orders, and Rites, preſcrib'd by the Book of Common-Prayer; inſomuch as both his own Wife, by his Procurement and Conſent, refuſed after Child-birth, to come, and give Thanks in ſuch Place of the Church, and in that ſolemn Manner as thereby is preſcrib'd; and ſome other Women alſo of that Town, by ſuch Example and Perſuaſion, did uſe the like Contempt.

“ 17. Item, That ſundry Times (or at leaſt once) when he communicated at the Lord's Supper there, he ſate, or ſtood upon his Feet; and divers others induc'd by his Perſuaſions and Example, both then and at other Times, did the Like. And, That at other Times there, or in other Places, where he hath communicated, both himſelf and others, (as he had appointed or perſuaded afore) did walk along and receive the Sacrament of the Miniſter, as they paſs'd by him.

“ 18. Item, That for theſe, and ſuch like Diſorders, he was preſented to the Biſhop of Wigorne, his Ordinary. Before whom being convented in the Conſiſtory there, he ſpake to the Juſtification, and Upholding of ſuch Doing of his, and of others: And there very publickly, and offenſively affirm'd, and diſputed, that the Book of Common-Prayer, &c. is not eſtabliſh'd by Law.

“ 19. Item, That when by Authority from the ſaid Biſhop, for his Contempt, he was ſuſpended from Preaching, & ab omni Functione Miniſterii, he appeal'd from the ſaid Suſ-“ penſion, yet did not proſecute within a Year after; whereby (the Cauſe being according to Law remitted again to the Biſhop) he, the ſaid Thomas Cartwright, according to the former Proceedings, falling again into the Sentence of Suſpenſion (which was alſo intimated, and made known unto him) nevertheleſs in Contempt of the Authority Eccleſiaſtical, he hath preach'd at Warwick, Coventry, and elſewhere ſince the ſaid Time.

“ 20. Item, When one of his Men Servants had committed Fornication, and gotten a Baſtard in his Houſe, he, taking upon him the Authority of the Ordinary, did appoint unto the Delinquent a publick Form of Penance or Satisfaction, in St. Maries Church at Warwick, and cauſed him to perform the ſame.

“ 21. Item, Since his placing at Warwick, he, with others, (at ſuch Times as they thought fit) have agreed to have, and ſo have had, divers publick Faſts, without the Queen her Authority, and have invited, and perſuaded both ſundry Perſons to be there preſent, and alſo certain to preach, to the Number of Three, Four, or Five, ſucceſſively, one after another, being all noted to be ſuch, as miſlike and impugn ſundry Points of the Laws, Government, and Liturgy Eccleſiaſtical of this Church of England. In which Sermons, both he the ſaid Cartwright, and ſuch others alſo as then preached, did impugn and inveigh againſt the preſent Laws, Government, Polity, and Liturgy Eccleſiaſtical of this Church of England.

“ 22. Item, That from Time to Time, ſince his Abode in Warwick, by his Practice and Dealing, he hath nouriſh'd a Faction, and Heart-burning of one Inhabitant there againſt another, ſevering them in his own, and his followers Speeches, by the Names of the Godly, or Brethren favouring Sincerity, and the Profane.

“ 23. Item, That he doth know, or credibly heard, who were the Penners, Printers, or ſome of the Diſperſers of the ſeveral Libels going under the Name of Martin Mar-Prelate, or the Demonſtration of Diſcipline of Diotrephes, and ſuch like Books, before it was known to Authority: And yet in Favour of ſuch, and Contempt of good Laws, did not manifeſt the ſame to any who had Authority to puniſh it.

“ 24. Item, That being asked his Opinion of ſuch Books, he anſwer'd thus in Effect, or ſomething tending this Way, viz. (meaning the Biſhops and others there touch'd) would not amend by grave Books and Advertiſements, and therefore it was meet they ſhould thus be dealt with, to their farther Reproach and Shame.

“ 25. Item, That for, and in the Behalf of the Church of England, he penned, or procur'd to be penned, all or ſome Part, of a little Book, intitled in one Part, Diſciplinâ Eccleſiæ ſacra Verbo Dei deſcripta; and in the other Part, Diſciplinâ Synodica ex Eccleſiarum Uſu, &c. And after it was perus'd by others, whom he firſt acquainted therewith, he recommended the ſame to the Cenſures, and Judgments of more Brethren (being learned Preachers) and ſome others, aſſembled together by his Means, for that and other like Purpoſes; which, after Deliberation, and ſome Alterations, was by them, or moſt of them, allow'd as the only lawful Church Government, and fit to be put in Practice: And the Ways and Means for the Practiſing thereof in this Realm, were alſo then, or not long after, agreed or concluded upon by them.

“ 26. Item, That for the better, and more due Practice of it within the Space of theſe ſeven, ſix, five, four, three, two, or one Year laſt Paſt, the ſaid Thomas Cartwright, and ſundry others (as aforeſaid, according to former Appointment and Determinations by them made) have met in Aſſemblies termed Synods, more general, (as at London, at Terms, and Parliament Times; in Oxford at the Act; in Cambridge at the Times of Commencement, and Sturbridge Fair) and alſo more particular and provincial Synods, and at Claſſes, or Conferences of certain ſelect Miniſters, in one, or more Places of ſundry ſeveral Shires, as Warwick, Northamptan, Rutland, Oxford, Leiceſter, Cambridge, Norfolk, Suffolk, Eſſex, and others.

“ 27. Item, That at ſuch Synods and Conferences it hath been concluded, That all the Miniſters which ſhould be receiv'd to be either of the ſaid General Synods, or of any more particular and Provincial, or of a Claſſis, or Conference, ſhould ſubſcribe to the ſaid Diſcipline, that they did allow it, would promote it, practiſe it, and be govern'd by it. And according to the Form of a Schedule hereunto annex'd, or ſuch like, both he the ſaid Thomas Cartwright and many others, at ſundry, or ſome General Aſſemblies, as at Provincial, and at ſeveral Conferences, have within the ſaid Time, ſubſcribed the ſame, or ſome Part thereof.

“ 28. Item, That at ſuch Synods, and all other Aſſemblies, a Moderator of that Meeting was firſt by him and them choſen, according to the Preſcription of the ſaid Book. And at ſome of ſuch Meetings and Aſſemblies amongſt other Things, it was reſolv'd and concluded, That ſuch particular Conferences in ſeveral Shires ſhould be erected; how many Perſons, and with what Letters from every of them, ſhould be ſent to the General Aſſembly: And that one of them at their coming home to their Conference ſhould make known the Determinations of the General Aſſembly, to be by every of them follow'd and put in practice: Which Courſe in ſundry Places of this Realm hath (within the Time aforeſaid) been accordingly follow'd and perform'd.

“ 29. Item, That he with others in ſome ſuch Claſſis or Conference, or in a Synod, or more General Aſſembly holden, did treat and diſpute (among other Points) theſe Six Articles contain'd in another Schedule annex'd and ſet down their Reſolution and Determination of them.

“ 30. Item, That he with others aſſembled in ſuch a General Aſſembly or Synod at Cambridge, did conclude and decree (as in another Schedule annex'd, or in ſome Part thereof is contain'd) which Decrees were made known afterwards at Warwick to ſundry Claſſes there by his Means aſſembled, and allow'd alſo by them then met together in the ſame, or like Form.

“ 31. Item, That at all ſuch ſeveral Meetings, Synods and Conferences within the ſaid Time, many other Determinations, as well what ſhould be done and perform'd, or omitted, as alſo what ſhould be holden conſonant to God's Word, or diſagreeing from it, have been ſet down by the ſaid Thomas Cartwright and others.

“As namely, That all admitted to either Aſſembly ſhould ſubſcribe the ſaid Book of Diſcipline, Holy and Synodical. That thoſe who were ſent from any Conference to a Synod, ſhould bring Letters Fiduciary or Credence: That the laſt Moderator ſhould write them: That the Superſcription thereof ſhould be to a known Man of the Aſſembly then to be holden: That no Book made by any of them ſhould be put in Print, but by conſent of the Claſſis at leaſt: That ſome of them muſt be earneſt, and ſome more mild and temperate, whereby there may be both of the Spirit of Elias and Elizeus: That all admitted amongſt them ſhould ſubſcribe, and promiſe to conform themſelves in their Proceedings, Adminiſtration of Sacraments, and of Diſcipline, to the Form of that Book; and that they would ſubject themſelves to the Cenſuring of the Brethren, both for Doctrine and Life. And laſtly, That upon Occaſion, when any their Brethren ſhall be ſent by them upon Affairs of the Church (as to the great Meetings, Parliament, &c.) they all would bear their Charges in Common: That there might be no Superiority amongſt them, and that the Moderatorſhip (as it happen'd) is not a Superiority or Honour, but a Burthen: That no profane Writer, or any other than Canonical Scripture, may be alledg'd in Sermons: That they ſhould all teach, that the Miniſtry of thoſe who did not preach, is no Miniſtry, but a mere Nullity: That it is not lawful to take any Oath whereby a Man may be driven to diſcover any Thing Penal to himſelf, or to his Brother, eſpecially if he be perſwaded the Matter to be lawful, for which the Puniſhment is like to be inflicted; or having taken it in this Caſe, need not diſcover the very Truth: That to a Biſhop, or other Officer Eccleſiaſtical (as is us'd now in the Church of England) none Obedience ought to be given, neither in appearing before them, in doing that which they command, nor in abſtaining from that which they inhibit: That in ſuch Places as the moſt of the People favoured the Cauſe of Sincerity, Elderſhip ſhould warily and wiſely be plac'd and eſtabliſh'd, which Conſiſtory in ſome Places hath been either wholly, or in Part erected accordingly; yea, in ſome Colleges in the Univerſity, as he knoweth, hath heard, or verily believeth. (d)

(d) The Copy of theſe Articles were found in Travers's Study after his Death, by a Perſon who gave them to Fuller. Fuller's Church Hiſt. Book 9. pag. 198.

I thought it not improper to inſert theſe Articles at length, as they were drawn by the High-Commiſſion Court. For this Cartwright was a leading Man, and the Oracle, as it were, of the Nonconformiſts. So that a Narative of his Principles and Practice, is in ſome Meaſure a Hiſtory of the Party.

Cartwright refuſes to anſwer the Interrogatories, and is committed.

Some Time before Cartwright receiv'd his Summons, the Non-conforming Miniſters being apprehenſive they ſhould be preſs'd with Interrogatories, had a Meeting in London; here the Queſtion was put, Whether 'twas fit and convenient, that Mr. Cartwright after his Commitment, (for they expected no leſs) ſhould diſcover all, or any of the Matters which paſs'd in Conference and Diſputation in any of their former Aſſemblies, or not? This Synod conſiſted of the following Miniſters, Cartwright, Charke, Travers, Egerton, Barbon, Barber, Oxenbridge, Gellybrand, Culverwell, and Stone the Deponent. (e)

Which Way this Queſtion was reſolv'd in the Meeting, is not ſet down in the Depoſitions; but by Cartwright's Behaviour 'tis plain 'twas determin'd in the Negative. For about a fortnight after, this Divine being convented before Ailmer Biſhop of London, the two Chief Juſtices, Juſtice Gawdy, Serjeant Puckering, Attorney-General Popham, and ſeveral other Commiſſioners, refus'd the taking an Oath to anſwer the Articles above-mention'd: And here he ventur'd to ſtand off againſt the Opinion of the whole Court. For every one of the Commiſſioners aſſur'd him upon their Credit, That by the Laws of the Realm he was oblig'd to take the Oath, and anſwer the Queſtions put to him. But Cartwright deſir'd to be excus'd, and told them, He thought the Laws of God brought him under no ſuch Neceſſity. Upon this Noncompliance he was ſent to the Fleet, to which Place ſeveral of his Brethren had been committed ſome Time before. And to name them, thoſe impriſon'd in the Fleet, and other Goals in London, were Humphrey Fenn, Andrew King, Daniel Wight, John Payne, Edward Lord, Edmund Snape, William Proudlove, Melancthon Jewel, and Wigginton.

A farther Account of the Book of Diſcipline.

To mention ſome few more of the Puritan Singularities from the Book of Diſcipline. Firſt, with Reſpect to Divine Service; the Miniſter that preaches appoints the Pſalm that is to be ſung. After the Pſalm a ſhort Diſcourſe was to be made to inſtruct the Congregation in their Preparation for Prayer. Then the Miniſter makes a Prayer containing a Confeſſion of Sin, concluding with the Lord's Prayer. After Sermon the Preacher was to make a Prayer that the Audience might be improv'd by what was deliver'd. The reſt of the Directions under this Head are agreeable to the Geneva-Rubrick. (f)

(f) Diſcipliina, &c. de Officio Miniſt. &c. Bancroft's Dangerous Poſitions, Book 3. chap. 12.

Under the Article of Baptiſm, the Book of Diſcipline runs thus: Let not Women only offer Children to Baptiſm, but the Father, if it may be conveniently, or ſome other in his Name. Let Perſuaſions be us'd, that ſuch Names that do ſavour either of Paganiſm or Popery be not given to Children at their Baptiſm, but principally thoſe whereof there are Examples in the Scriptures.

Diſciplin. &c. de Baptiſmo. Bancroft Ibid

The Puritans Singularity in giving Names at Baptiſm.

The Puritans were very ſtrict in keeping cloſe to this Rule, as may be collected from the odd Names they gave their Children: Such as, The Lord is near, More Tryall, Reformation, Diſcipline, Joy again, Sufficient, From above, Free-gifts, More-Fruit, Duſt, &c. And here Snape was remarkably ſcrupulous; for this Miniſter refus'd to baptiſe one Chriſtopher Hodkinſon's Child, becauſe he would have it chriſten'd Richard. Snape acquainted Hodkinſon with his Opinion before-hand, he told him he muſt change the Name, and look out for one in the Scripture. But the Father not thinking this Fancy would be ſo ſtrongly inſiſted on, brought his Son to Church: Snape proceeded in the Solemnity till he came to Naming the Child; but not being able to prevail for any other Name than Richard, refus'd to adminiſter the Sacrament: And thus the Child was carried away, and afterwards baptiz'd by a Conforming Clergy-man.

Bancroft Ibid.

Their Opinion of the Biſhop's Authority in giving Orders, &c.

To mention one Particular more touching the Diſcipline of theſe Diſſenters, with Reſpect to their Miſſion. When any Perſon, not already a Miniſter in their Way, is deſign'd by them for that Office, they command him to go to the Biſhop of the Dioceſe for his Writings, as they call them. But here they conſider the Biſhop no otherwiſe than as a Civil Magiſtrate; and therefore Letters of Orders, or a Licence to preach, are look'd on only as Legal Securities to keep them in a Living formerly taken, or to ſcreen them from Proſecution in Preaching amongſt their own Party. For Inſtance: Mr. Snape being a Clergy-man, rerenounc'd his firſt Calling or Ordination before the Claſſis: And being a Man of Character among the Nonconformiſts, his Declaration upon this Subject deſerves a Recital.

Idem Book 3. chap. 14.

Touching the Subſtance of my Calling to the Miniſtry, I affirm that I had it of the Church of God, being approved by the Learned and Godly Neighbour-Miniſters, and choſen by the People of my Charge, to that Function. Touching that Allowance that I had of the Biſhop, I take it to be a Thing merely Civil, belonging to a Civil Magiſtrate, which Authority he hath by Act of Parliament: And which therefore I might lawfully receive at his Hands for the peaceable Execution of my Miniſtry.

The Enthuſiaſm and Conſpiracy of Coppingher, Arthington and Hacket.

About this Time Coppingher, Arthington, and Hacket, began to act the Enthuſiaſts in a deſperate Manner; they pretended Prophetick Impulſe, and that they had an Extraordinary Call to ſet up the Puritan Diſcipline. Coppingher and Arthington were Gentlemen, but of ſlender Fortunes. Hacket lived at Oundle in Northamptonſhire, where he firſt ſerv'd Mr. Huſſey, and afterwards Sir Thomas Treſham: He had the Character of a vain, quarrelſom, licentious Fellow; his Memory is ſaid to be his only good Quality, and this he made uſe of to very ill Purpoſe: For 'twas his Cuſtom to bring off Part of a Sermon at Church to ridicule it in an Ale-houſe. Afterwards he pretended himſelf awaken'd by the Preaching of the Nonconformiſts, turn'd Puritan, and made an intimate Acquaintance with one Wigginton a bigotted Miniſter of that Perſuaſion. And now being in his Chaleur de Neophyte, he rail'd ſtrongly againſt the Church of England; and to make himſelf remarkable, and raiſe a Reputation for carrying on the Diſcipline, he put on an Appearance of great Sanctity, pretended to ſupernatural Qualifications, and made the People believe he knew their Thoughts, and could work Miracles. The Matter of Fact, it ſeems, was not diſputed, tho' aſſign'd to different Cauſes: For ſome took him for a Magician; and others thought this Privilege a Reward of his Piety. His Enthuſiaſm or impoſterous Practice was diſappointed at York and Lincoln: In both theſe Places he gave out, the Spirit of St. John Baptiſt was tranſmigrated into him; and that his Meſſage was to prepare the Way of the Lord before his ſecond coming to Judgment. But here the Magiſtracy was ſo far from believing his Miſſion, that they order'd him to be whipp'd, and ſent out of Town.

Hacket pretends to the Commiſſion of a Prophet.

Notwithſtanding this Rebuke, he went on with his Frenzy: And tho' he began with Hypocriſie, yet now he ſeems to have been an Enthuſiaſt in earneſt, and to have paſs'd his Impoſture upon himſelf. He was a Perſon of no Learning, however by Warmth of Temper and frequent Practice he had gotten a remarkable Talent for Extempore Prayer. And affecting Rumbling and Bombaſt in his Devotion, he was much admir'd by the ignorant Crowd. And now the Deluſion working ſtrong, he fancy'd himſelf honour'd with an extraordinay Calling: He challeng'd the Character of a Prophet of God's Vengeance where his Mercy is refuſ'd; and declar'd, That if Reformation was not eſtabliſh'd in England this Year, the three great Plagues of Sword, Peſtilence and Famine, would fall upon it. (g)

Coppingher believes himſelf under the Privilege of an extraordinary Miſſion.

Wiggington the Nonconformiſt Miniſter brought Hacket to Coppingher, and made an Acquaintance between them. And afterwards Arthington and Lancaſter a Schoolmaſter, were taken into the Junto. Coppingher was a ſtrong Viſionary, at leaſt in Pretence. He talk'd of ſupernatural Privilege, and immediate Correſpondence with Heaven; and that God had reveal'd a wonderful Myſtery to him: He knew a Way to bring the Queen and all her Council and Nobility to Repentance; or at leaſt to diſcover thoſe for Traitors who refus'd to relent. The Meaning of Repentance, was the ſetting up the Presbyterian Diſcipline. Coppingher acquaints Wiggington with this Myſtery, who gave no Diſcouragement to his Pretenſions, but Arthington and Lancaſter diſlik'd the Motion; told him, the Proſecution was impracticable, and likely to prove unfortunate in the Iſſue. Coppingher who was willing to put his Credentials to the Teſt, and gain the Approbation of the Puritan Miniſters, wrote a long Letter to Cartwright upon this Subject. This was not done without ſomething of Invitation on Cartwright's Part; he had, it ſeems, offer'd to examine Coppingher's Proof of an Extraordinary Calling. Coppingher, to ſatisfie him, tells him, That after a ſolemn Faſt, and other Religious Preparations, he was thrown into an Extatick Dream, carried into Heaven, and had the Glories of that Place diſcover'd to him; That he had a ſtrong Impulſe for ſome extraordinary Undertaking, and believ'd it the Suggeſtion of the Holy Spirit; That to prevent being led into Miſtakes by the Forwardneſs of Imagination, he had written for Advice to ſeveral Preachers, both in England and elſewhere; That at laſt he wrote to a ſilenc'd Miniſter in the City; That this Miniſter aſſur'd him, God continued ſtill to work extraordinarily in ſome Perſons for ſpecial Purpoſes. He tells Cartwright, that in caſe he approv'd his Miſſion, he would give him a Detail of his Deſign, and acquaint him with the Particulars he had in Charge; That the Buſineſs of his Letter was to deſire Cartwright's Reſolution of ſome Queſtions, with ſome Directions upon the Matter of what he was going about.

The Queſtions to be reſolv'd are as follows:

Firſt, Whether in theſe Days there are any Extraordinary Workers and Helpers to the Church, either Apoſtles, Evangeliſts, or Prophets, where Need requires more or leſs? Or Nazarites, Healers, Admoniſhers, in any ſpecial Sort?

Secondly, If there is ſtill ſuch Extraordinary Perſons, is not their Calling immediately from God, and his Spirit a Seal unto their Spirits, through which they have ſuch excellent Gifts and Graces of Wiſdom, Knowledge, Courage, Magnanimity Zeal, Patience, Humility, &c. as do manifeſt ſuch their Calling to the Church?

Thirdly, If ſuch Graces and Gifts ſhall appear, whether may the Church enter into the Conſideration of the Succeſs which God may pleaſe to give, Yea, or No? If they may, in what Manner are they to proceed with ſuch a Perſon extraordinarily call'd?

Fourthly, If it ſhall be confeſs'd, that there may be Extraordinary Callings from God to the End of the World, the next Queſtion is, Whether ſuch Callings may be found in a Country where the Goſpel is truly preach'd, and the Sacraments (in ſome ſort) truly adminiſter'd, tho' not univerſally, but here and there; not perfectly, but in Part; and where the true Diſcipline is not eſtabliſh'd, but oppugn'd by the publick Magiſtrate, &c?

Fifthly, If it ſhall be anſwer'd, That no Extraordinary Callings are to be look'd for, but where there is a Waſte of the Church, Whether can it be ſaid truly, that there is a Waſte of the Church, where the Prince and the chief Magiſtrates are ignorant of the Neceſſity of the Diſcipline, oppoſing themſelves againſt it, perſecuting ſuch as ſeek it; by Means whereof all wicked

Perſons whatſoever are admitted to publick Exerciſe of the Word, and to the Lord's Table: Whether, I ſay, may it be hop'd for, that God for his Glory's ſake, and the Good of the Church, may extraordinarily call ſome Perſon by giving him a Spirit above others to deal with the Magiſtrate in the Name of God: To provide that the People may be every where taught, and true Diſcipline executed where the People already have Knowledge?

Idem.

Sixthly, Where Paſtors, Doctors, Elders, Widows, &c. are wanting in the Church eſtabliſhed, and only a Miniſter thruſt upon the People to be their Paſtor, without their choice or Liking; Whether it can be truly ſaid a Man ſo plac'd (tho' furniſh'd with all inward Gifts and Graces of God's Spirit fit for that Calling) has the lawful and perfect Calling of a Miniſter, or no?

Feb. 13 1590.

Upon Cartwright's receiving this Letter, he ſent Coppingher a cautious Meſſage, That he ſhould attempt nothing but by Advice, and manage with Prudence and Circumſpection. This Anſwer gave Coppingher no Satisfaction, who preſs'd for a more particular Reſolution. Upon which a Day was fix'd to diſcourſe him: That his Motion was thus far conſider'd, appears by his ſecond Expoſtulatory Letter to Cartwright; in which he complains he had been check'd in his Undertaking for the Service of God and the Church; and deſires the Day appointed for the Conference might hold: His Reaſon is, becauſe the Juncture would not admit of any farther Delay: That 'twas well known ſome People were in Danger of their Lives; and that unleſs he had been hindered, he could have procured their Releaſe before now. And towards the Cloſe he conjures Cartwright to adviſe the Preachers to deal ſpeedily and circumſpectly, leſt ſome Blood of the Saints be ſhed. (h)

Cartwright and ſome others diſengag'd from Coppingher.

But the diſſenting Miniſters diſtruſting Coppingher's Conduct, and probably not liking his Deſign, broke their Appointment for the Conference, and refuſ'd to correſpond with him any longer. And to take their Leave, Cartwright, Travers, Charke, and Egerton ſent him Word by Hockenbull, That they would leave him to himſelf, or rather to Satan: And that they thought him unworthy to be conferr'd withal.

Idem.

He is encourag'd by Wiggington.

Wiggington prov'd a much kinder Caſuiſt, and gave him an affirmative Reſolution to his Queſtions, under his Hand: 'Tis to this Effect, That God does, and will continue to raiſe up extraordinary Aſſiſtants to his Church, under all the Diſtinctions put by Coppingher in his firſt Queſtion: That the Authority of theſe extraordinary Perſons cannot be diſcover'd to themſelves by any other Means, excepting by God's Spirit: Neither can it be known to others, but by the good Effects it produces. That a Perſon thus call'd, need not put many Queſtions to mortal Men for the Juſtifying his Calling: However, he muſt have the Character of a pious Man before he enters on the Undertaking; eſpecially, if he has the Misfortune of being a known Libertine formerly. That where the principal Magiſtracy of any Country are Ignorant and untaught, there it may be truly ſaid that Country is out of Order, Deſolate, or Waſte: And that this Reaſoning holds much ſtronger when not ſo much as the 30th or 40th Part of a Kingdom, is well conſtituted, or inſtructed.

Elizabeth Q.

Wiggington in another Paper of his own Hand, endeavours to maintain ſuch extraordinary Callings by Two Inſtances: His firſt is in a Perſon mention'd by Joſephus, who paſs'd thro' the Streets at Jeruſalem, and denounc'd Deſtruction before 'twas beſieg'd. His next Inſtance was of a Man that came from Yorkſhire to London, declar'd he had ſeen an Angel in a Viſion, and was charg'd to foretel the Judgments of God which ſhould ſhortly fall upon the whole Kingdom.

From hence it appears, That Wiggington was the ſilenc'd Preacher hinted by Coppingher in his firſt Letter to Cartwright: And that he agreed to faſt and pray with ſome others, for a farther Evidence of his Miſſion. (i) The reſt of Coppingher and Hacket's Story comes up the next Year.

A Conteſt between the Aſſembly at Edinborough, and the Lords of the Seſſion.

Anno Dom. 1591.

Before I enter therefore upon the Remainder, I ſhall entertain the Reader with the Eccleſiaſtical Affairs in Scotland. A general Aſſembly being conven'd at Edinborough, there happen'd a great Conteſt between this Body, and the Lords of Seſſion. The Diſpute was concerning the Juriſdiction of the reſpective Courts: The Occaſion was this; John Graham, one of the Lords of the Seſſion, was charg'd with ſuborning a publick Notary to forge an Inſtrument: The Notary confeſs'd upon Examination, That the Inſtrument ſign'd by him, was brought to him engroſs'd by William Graham, brother to John, and that he knew nothing of the Contents. Now Forgery being capital in Scotland, he was proſecuted for the foul Practice, caſt, and executed. Graham inrag'd at this Diſcovery, enters an Action againſt Simpſon, Miniſter of Sterling, pretending he had over-aw'd the Notary into a falſe Confeſſion. The Miniſter complains to the Aſſembly; upon which Graham was ſummon'd to anſwer the Scandal rais'd upon one of their Members: He, making his Appearance, told them, he was ready to make good the Charge againſt Simpſon, before competent Judges. This was conſtrued Pleading in Bar to the Juriſdiction of their Court: The Aſſembly therefore replied, he muſt ſtand to their Judgment, or be cenſur'd for the Slander. Upon this the Lords of the Seſſion ſent a Meſſage to deſire the Aſſembly not to intermeddle in Buſineſs proper to the Cognizance of the Temporal Courts; and which was now in due Form of Law depending before them. The Aſſembly anſwer'd, That their Proceedings were no Encroachment upon the Privilege of Seſſion, neither did they intend to reach into Matters belonging to the Magiſtracy: But the Purging one of their own Members from Scandal, might be manag'd, they conceiv'd, without Derogation to any Civil Judicatory: They deſire them therefore not to be diſconcerted at the Churches going on with a Proceſs of this Nature. The Lords diſmiſs'd with this Anſwer, ſent for John Graham, who excepted to the Juriſdiction of the Aſſembly, affirm'd the Cauſe was of a Civil Nature, and ought to be tried before the Lords of the Seſſion. The Aſſembly on the other Hand, voted themſelves the proper Judges, order'd Graham to plead before them, and that otherwiſe they would proceed to Sentence againſt him. The Lords look'd upon theſe Proceedings as downright Invaſion: And that under this Colour, any Miniſter might challenge an Exemption from Pleading in the Civil Courts, and be carried off to the Bar of the Church. They reſolv'd therefore at firſt, to ſend a Prohibition to the Aſſembly, and command them to ſtop the Proceſs. But Conteſting their Juriſdiction thus far, being thought Unſeaſonable, they drop'd this Reſolution, and agreed to compound the Matter: And thus an Accommodation was ſettled by a Compromiſe, that neither Seſſions, nor Aſſembly, ſhould proceed any farther. (k)

The Aſſembly paſſes a Revocation of all Alienations of Church Revenues.

This Aſſembly exerted themſelves, tho' with inſignificant Spirit, on another Head: They paſs'd a general Revocation of all Things done in Prejudice of the Churches Patrimony: And that whether ſuch Alienations were made by beneſic'd Miniſters, or by any others of Eccleſiaſtick Character. This was thought a good Expedient for reviving the Claim to the Tythes and Eſtates which had been lately convey'd to the Laity: But thoſe who had enrich'd themſelves with the Plunder of the Church, ridicul'd this Revocation; It muſt be ſaid the Aſſembly had diſabled themſelves in a great Meaſure from purſuing their Claim, by ſuppreſſing the ancient Diſtinctions of the Hierarchy, and altering the Form of the Church, upon which theſe Privileges and Eſtates were all along ſettled.

To return to the Engliſh Nonconformiſts, who 'tis thought, intended not to continue Paſſive under their Diſappointments. 'Twas ſuſpected, not altogether without Cauſe, that ſome of theſe Men deſign'd to reſcue their Brethren from Confinement; Wiggington's Letter to one Porter at Lancaſter, looks towards this Meaning, and ſeems to menace the Government. His Words are theſe.

Maſter Cartwright is in the Fleet, for Refuſal of the Oath, (as I hear) and Maſter Knewſtubbs is ſent for, and ſundry worthy Miniſters are diſquieted, who have been ſpar'd long. So that we look for ſome Bickering e're long, and then a Battle, which cannot long endure. (l)

Another from Scotland upon the ſame Subject.

That there was an Expectation of ſome bold Puſh, may be conjectur'd from a Letter written by a Scotch Gentleman to his Friend in England. I attend, ſays he, your next Anſwer, as well of the Eſtate of your Church, as of all other Affairs. For there is here great Word of ſundry Uproars which I truſt be falſe, or repreſ'd in due Seaſon by her Majeſty. That ſome Attempt upon the State was concerted, appears farther by Letters and Papers found upon Hacket, Coppingher, and Arthington: But of this by and by.

At preſent I ſhall proceed to mention the Application made by the Presbyterians to the King of Scots. Some of the moſt Eminent of the Party ſolicited this Prince to write to Queen Elizabeth for gentle Uſage. They procur'd two Letters for this Purpoſe: The laſt was directed to one Johnſon, a Scotch Merchant in London: This Gentleman deliver'd it to the Queen, who having read it, laid it before the Council; I ſhall give it the Reader in the King's Words.

The King of Scots's Letter to Queen Elizabeth, in behalf of the Engliſh Nonconformiſts. June 12. 1591.

Right Excellent, High and Mighty Princeſs, our deareſt Siſter and Couſin, in our heartieſt Manner, We recommend us unto You. Hearing of the Apprehenſion of Mr. Udal and Mr. Cartwright, and certain other Miniſters of the Evangel within your Realm; of whoſe good Erudition and faithful Travels in the Church, We hear a very credible Commendation, howſoever, That their Diverſity from the Biſhops and others of your Clergy, in Matters touching them in Conſcience, hath been a Mean by their Delation, to work them your Miſliking; at this preſent we cannot (weighing the Duty which we owe to ſuch as are afflicted for their Conſcience in that Profeſſion) but by our moſt effectuous and earneſt Letter interpone us at your Hands to ſtay any harder Uſage of them for that Cauſe. Requeſting you moſt earneſtly, That for our Cauſe and Interceſſion it may pleaſe you to let them be reliev'd of their preſent Strait, and whatſoever farther Accuſation, or purſuit depending on that Ground, reſpecting both their former Merit, in ſetting forth the Evangel, the Simplicity of their Conſcience in this Defence, which cannot well be, their Let by Compulſion, and the great Slander which could not fail to fall out upon their farther Streightning for any ſuch Occaſion. Which We aſſure us your Zeal to Religion, beſides the Expectation We have of your good Will to pleaſure us, will willingly accord to our Requeſt, having ſuch Proofs from Time to Time of our like Diſpoſition to you in any Matters which you recommend unto us, and thus right Excellent, right High and Mighty Princeſs, Our dear Siſter and Couſin, We commit you to God's Protection.

Edinburgh, June the 12*th*, 1591.

The Queen looking upon this Letter as extorted from the King by the Importunity of the Kirk, rather than Proceeding from his own Inclination, took little Notice of it.

Cartwright brought a ſecond Time before the High Commiſſion.

To go back a little to the farther Proſecution of the Diſſenters. In May this Summer, Cartwright was brought from the Fleet to London-Houſe before ſeveral of the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners. And here Biſhop Ailmer charg'd him with Three Things. Firſt, That he petition'd the Council for Liberty upon falſe Suggeſtions, counterfeiting Diſeaſes with which he was not troubled. Secondly, That he had miſreported the Oath tender'd to him, to the Council. And Thirdly, That he had ſeveral Times own'd, that a Man who liv'd up to the Ceremonies and Diſcipline of the Church of England might be ſav'd; from whence the Biſhop inferr'd the Inſignificancy of a farther Reformation. When Ailmer had done, Cartwright began to ſpeak, but was ſtop'd by Sir John Popham, Attorney General. This Gentleman ſuggeſted how dangerous a Thing it was for Men to be governed by their own Singularities, and pretend Conſcience for Diſobedience to the Conſtitution. That the Oath to anſwer Interrogatories was warranted by the Laws and ancient Uſages of the Kingdom: That he had Two Things to urge againſt Mr. Cartwright; one was the Breach of the publick Peace by unlawful Meetings, and Regulations for Diſcipline: The other, was an Offence againſt the Juſtice of the Realm, by refuſing the Oath now tender'd: That this Oath was offer'd in other Courts: Neither did he believe any Perſons learned in the Laws could think it unlawful.

The Lawfulneſs of the Oath for anſwering to Interrogatories maintain'd by Attorney-General Popham.

Dr. Lewin, a Civilian, and another of the Commiſſioners, told Cartwright he was much miſtaken in calling it an Oath ex Officio: For that the Tendering the Oath was injoin'd by the Queen's Commiſſion. And here Dr. Bancroft obſerv'd, That the Methods of this Court had not been always exactly the ſame; and that in ſome Commiſſions, the Clauſe of examining upon Oath had been omitted. The Biſhop diſagreed with the Doctor upon this Point. He had been a Commiſſioner Thirty Years, and vouch'd the Practice of Inſerting the Oath for all that Time. Bancroft told Cartwright he had taken this Oath Twenty Years ſince, and ask'd him which Way the Courſe of Time could Work upon the Matter of this Teſt, and make that unlawful which was lawful before. To this Cartwright return'd, that he then took the Oath with an expreſs Reſervation, and beſides, that he was now farther inform'd in the Point. Bancroft inſiſted, That every Perſon that had done an injury, was oblig'd to make an Acknowledgment, and give Satisfaction; and that this Reaſon would ſtill hold ſtronger from the Subject to the Prince. Cartwright replied, That this general Rule muſt come under ſome Exceptions: And an Inſtance being demanded, he argued, that if he had reported any Thing to the Diſadvantage of a Third Perſon, who knew nothing of it; in this Caſe 'twas not agreeable to the Rule of Charity to relate what had paſt, to the injur'd Perſon. His Reaſon was, becauſe ſuch a Confeſſion might probably break Friendſhip which would otherways have continued: But I ſhall leave this Caſuiſtry to the Reader. To proceed; Bancroft objected to Cartwright, that none could be receiv'd into their Conferences or Meetings, without ſubſcribing a Submiſſion to all Orders preſcrib'd by the governing Part: And that if the Interpretation of a Text of Scripture was thus determin'd, none of their Communion had the Liberty of going off from it: And that their Proceeding in this Manner was Matter of Fact, was affirm'd by the Depoſition of Three or Four Witneſſes. As to the requiring Subſcriptions from thoſe admitted, much leſs ſuch Subſcriptions as Bancroft mention'd, Cartwright declar'd, that neither himſelf nor any he knew of, had done any ſuch Thing. Laſtly, Bancroft objected the dangerous Reſerves in the Diſſenters Diſcipline. That they deſign'd to drive over the Laws, and force their Reformation upon the Government. For this Jealouſy he brings Inſtances from ſome of the Engliſh Refugees at Geneva, from the French Hugonots, from Calvin and Knox To this Cartwright returns a lame Anſwer, and overlooks Matter of Fact. (m) But for this I ſhall refer the Reader to what has been already related.

(m) Strype's Life of Biſhop Aylmer.

And now it may not be improper to give a more particular Account of the Articles charg'd upon the Nonconforming Miniſters in Priſon. The Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners having ſpent ſome time in examining Witneſſes, and other preparatory Buſineſs, referr'd the farther Proſecution to the Lords of the Star-Chamber. And here an Information was preferr'd againſt the Diſſenters by the Attorney General. The Complaint ſuggeſts, “That ſome ſeditious People had form'd a Government of the Church, conſiſting of Doctors, Paſtors, Elders, Deacons, and ſuch like. That a new Form of Common-Prayer, and Adminiſtration of the Sacraments, and Church Diſcipline, compriz'd in a Book, entitled, Diſciplina Eccleſiæ ſacra, Dei verbo deſcripta, had been lately ſet forth, together with other Books and Pamphlets of a reſembling Nature. That the Defendants had unlawfully and ſeditiouſly aſſembled themſelves together concerning the Premiſſes. That in thoſe Aſſemblies they had treated of, and concluded upon ſundry ſeditious Articles in Allowance of the ſame Books, and of the Matters therein contain'd. That in ſome of thoſe Aſſemblies, the Defendants had ſubſcrib'd thoſe Articles, and put Part of them in Execution: That for theſe Miſdemeanors they had been brought before the High Commiſſioners, where they refus'd to take the Oath for anſwering ſuch Interrogatories as were to be put to them on her Majeſty's Behalf: That under Pretence of Diſcipline and Charity, they claim'd a Power of intermedling in all Sorts of Cauſes whatſoever: And that they had perſuaded ſundry of her Majeſty's Subjects to refuſe the taking an Oath to anſwer to any Matter that might concern the unlawful Proceedings, and Doings of themſelves, their Brethren and Teachers.

A Bill preferr'd in the Star-Chamber againſt ſeveral Nonconforming Miniſters.

To go on with the Narrative of this Affair.

“To the Bill of Complaint, the Defendants in their Anſwer have confeſs'd their Refuſing to take the Oath before the Commiſſioners: And to the reſt of the moſt material Matters have made an evaſive and inſufficient Anſwer. That this Anſwer being referr'd by the Court to the Conſideration of the Chief Juſtices, the Chief Baron, and Mr. Juſtice Gawdy, theſe Reverend Judges mark'd the Queſtions where their Anſwers were ſhort and unſatisfactory: That notwithſtanding this Reſolution of the Judges, their next Anſwer was little leſs Imperfect: That when Interrogatories were afterwards put to them upon the Parts of the Bill, they declin'd making Anſwer to the main Queſtions: That the Judges, at the Inſtance of the Court, pointed out more diſtinctly the Interrogatories which ought to have been clearly and directly anſwer'd: That the Defendants, notwithſtanding being examin'd upon theſe Interrogatories, refus'd to anſwer.

The Queſtions put to them were theſe.

The Defendants refuſe to Anſwer ſeveral Queſtions. June 23. 1591.

“Where the ſaid Aſſemblies were made, when, and how often? Who were at the ſame Aſſemblies as well as themſelves? What Matters were treated of in the ſame Aſſemblies? Who made or ſet forth, corrected or reform'd the ſaid Book of Diſcipline, or any Part thereof? Who ſubſcrib'd, or ſubmitted themſelves to the ſame Book, or to the Articles therein concluded, beſides the ſaid Defendants? Whether in a Chriſtian Monarchy the King is to be accounted among the Governors of the Church, or among thoſe which are to be govern'd by Paſtors, Doctors, or ſuch like?

“Whether in a well order'd Church, it is lawful for the ſovereign Prince to ordain Orders and Ceremonies appertaining to the Church? Whether Eccleſiaſtical Government eſtabliſh'd by her Majeſty's Authority within the Church of England, be lawful, or allow'd by the Word of God? Whether the Sacraments miniſtred within her Majeſty's Dominions, as they be ordained by the Book of Common-Prayer to be miniſtred, be godly and rightly miniſtred?

Idem.

The Proſecution of theſe Miniſters occaſion'd a farther Conſultation amongſt ſome of the Party, which Way the Priſoners might be aſſiſted. But before any Thing was either done for them by their Friends, or againſt them by the Star-Chamber, another ſurpriſing Buſineſs broke out. I ſhall therefore now proceed to finiſh the Story of the Three Impoſtors above-mention'd. Theſe Men, were by this Time, as they pretended, thoroughly convinced of the Lawfulneſs of their Miſſion: And that 'twas now Time to hang out the Signal, to make a Blaze, and ſet up Hacket. Things being thus far believ'd, or concerted, Coppingher and Arthington came to Hacket's Lodgings, and here after ſome preparatory Prayers for the Direction of the Holy Spirit, Arthington charged Coppingher in the Name of the Lord Jeſus to break off his Devotions, and anoint the King (meaning Hacket) with the Holy Ghoſt. Upon this, Coppingher roſe from his Knees; and after Three profound Reverences to Hacket then in Bed, approach'd to perform the Ceremony. Hacket taking him by the Hand, told him, there was no Occaſion for his anointing him, for he had been anointed already in Heaven by the Holy Ghoſt. Then Coppingher deſiring they might receive his Commands, he gave them their Inſtructions in theſe Words. (n)

Coppingher and Arthington proclaim Hacket King of Europe in Cheapſide.

Go your Way both, ſays he, and tell them in the City, that Chriſt Jeſus is come with his Fan in his (n) Coſin's Conſpiracy for pretended Reformation.

Hand, to judge the Earth. And if any Man aſk you where he is, tell them he lies at Walker's Houſe by Broken Wharf: And if they will not believe it, let them come and kill me, if they can; for as truly as Chriſt Jeſus is in Heaven, ſo truly is he come to judge the World.

The Subſtance of what they deliver'd.

Coppingher and Arthington obey'd the Orders immediately. The Firſt pretended to be the Prophet of Mercy, and the other the Prophet of Judgment. Coppingher publiſh'd his Meſſage below Stairs; and then both of them running into the Streets, went on in the Diſcharge of their Commiſſion, adding over and above from themſelves, Repent, England, Repent. When they came towards the Croſs in Cheapſide, the Crowd grew ſo big that they could paſs no farther.

Upon this, they mounted an empty Cart, and harangued the People. And here they began to dilate farther upon Hacket's Character, to blazon his Authority, and proclaim his Buſineſs and their own. And to prevent Miſtakes, in the Delivery they had ſet down their Speech in a Paper, which they read in the Cart. The Subſtance of it was, that Hacket repreſented Chriſt by a Communication of his glorified Body, by his principal Spirit, as their Cant goes on; by the Office of parting the Good from the Bad, with his Fan in his Hand; and by Eſtabliſhing the Reformation, and the Holy Cauſe, throughout all Europe; This Diviſion, it ſeems, they took for the whole World. That theſe glorious Things were immediately to be accompliſh'd; and that themſelves were Two Prophets ſent to proclaim his Dignity, and preach Submiſſion: For that Hacket was King of Europe, and ought to be obey'd as ſuch. That all Princes were to hold of him as Lord Paramount: That the Queen had forfeited her Crown, and deſerv'd to be depos'd. In the Cloſe, they charge Two Lords and another Member of the Privy Council with Treaſon, and pray'd God to confound them.

Their Deſigns againſt the Queen, Privy Council, &c.

That theſe Men deſign'd Violence againſt the Government, appears by their Letters and Examination. For Inſtance, Coppingher ſpeaking of the Lords of the Council, uſes this Expreſſion, The Lord pardon their Souls, for in their outward Man they muſt be puniſh'd, tho' they repent. (o) And the Time for executing their Plot drawing nigh, Coppingher adviſes that all her Majeſty's Privy Council ſhould be commanded to keep their Houſes or Apartments, for Fear of Stirs and Danger.

(o) Coppingher's Letter. Bancroft's Dangerous Poſitions, Book 4. Chap. 11.

Ibid.

Farther, Arthington confeſs'd, that he verily believ'd Hacket intended to have ſet aſide her Majeſty, to have murder'd thoſe Noblemen which oppos'd his Enterprize, and to have done ſomething more, which he had not Courage to expreſs. As to the Queen, they ſaid ſhe deſerv'd to be depos'd for giving Credit and Countenance to the Biſhops and ſuch other wicked Perſons, and for mal-treating her good Subjects. What was farther confeſs'd by Hacket, ſhall be related by and by.

They are examin'd and impriſon'd.

The Entertainment the Miſſionaries met with in the City, was ſhort of their Expectation and Deſert. For as on the one Hand, the People admir'd their Reſolution, and heard their Blaſphemy and Treaſon, without ſhewing any Signs of Diſlike: So on the other Hand they did not receive them with Acclamations: They did not declare for Hacket, ſalute him with his Royal Titles, nor offer themſelves as a Guard. Coppingher and Arthington being thus diſappointed, as 'tis moſt likely, and balk'd of an Inſurrection, return'd to Hacket's Lodging. When this ſurprizing Scene was open'd, the Court was at Greenwich: When the News came, the Queen diſpatch'd Two of the Privy Council to examine the Matter. About one in the Afternoon, Coppingher, Arthington and Hacket were brought before ſome of the Privy Council, and the Lord Mayor. When they appear'd, they kept on their Hats, and refus'd to pay any Reſpect: And being demanded the Reaſon of this Rudeneſs, their Anſwer was, they were Perſons of much greater Quality than thoſe that pretended to examine them. Thus they ſupported the Character they had taken, with a great Deal of inſolent Aſſurance. Hacket at his firſt Examination held up his Pretenſions, own'd that he had mov'd Coppingher and Arthington to deliver the Meſſage God had charg'd them with, declar'd the Queen had forfeited her Crown by ſuffering her Miniſters to apply to extraordinary Methods for eſtabliſhing Religion. But being afterwards ſet upon the Rack, he acknowledg'd her Majeſty his lawful Sovereign, and declar'd himſelf ſorry for his Miſbehaviour: Adding withal, That if Coppingher and Wiggington were cloſely examin'd, they would make a conſiderable Diſcovery of Treaſon. And now the Two prophetick Heraulds, and their Principal, were committed. And upon the 26th of July, Hacket was tried at the Old Baily, and Two Indictments found againſt him. The Indictments ſet forth, That Hacket had publiſh'd that Queen Elizabeth was not Queen of England: That he had defac'd her Majeſty's Arms, and ſtruck a Dagger thro' the Heart of her Picture, with ſome other treaſonable Practices already mention'd.

Hacket brought to his Tryal.

Hacket pleaded guilty to one Indictment, and ſtood mute to the other. And thus there was no Occaſion, either for the Queen's Council to open the Charge, or to bring any Evidence againſt him. However, for publick Satisfaction the Attorney and Solicitor General, ſet forth the Treaſon carried on by Hacket, and the other Two. The Attorney General * obſerv'd, That theſe Plots and Conſpiracies had their Riſe and Encouragement from the Sectaries. That Coppingher in a Letter to Udall bid him, and the reſt in Priſon, not be diſpirited; for that himſelf and ſome others had taken a Courſe for their ſpeedy Deliverance: That Letters menacing the Government were diſpers'd in the Street Five or Six Days before Hacket was proclaim'd: That printed Pamphlets were found in Wiggington's Chamber, to be ſent to a great Number of Women. But who theſe Women were, the Attorney was not willing to Name.

* Popham.

The Queen's Solicitor † diſcours'd, That no Treaſon was more dangerous than that which was wrap'd up in Myſtery, and went under Diſguiſe. And that thoſe who cover'd their Rebellion with Pretences of Zeal for Religion, did commonly moſt miſchief.

† Egerton.

This Remark he made good by Inſtancing in the Anabaptiſts at Munſter, and the Ravages committed by the Boors in Germany. After this he recited ſome of Hacket's treaſonable and blaſphemous Expreſſions, already mention'd. Then the Recorder gave Judgment upon him. In the Interval between the Sentence and the Execution, he was viſited by ſeveral Divines, and brought to Sobriety and Repentance. But when he came to ſuffer, he relaps'd into Raving and Blaſphemy, and died in that deſperate Condition. (p)

He Blaſphemes at his Death.

July 28. 1591.

Coppingher refus'd to eat for Eight Days, and died ſtarv'd in Bridewel. Arthington, upon Hacket's Execution, wrote to the Privy Council, deſir'd their Lordſhips to intercede for his Pardon to the Queen, confeſs'd his being ſeduc'd, and made a farther Diſcovery.

Now what the Principles were that work'd theſe Men to this ſurprizing Pitch, what were the main Springs of the Enterprize, and what Motions hurried them to ſuch deſperate Declarations and Deſigns, is not eaſy to account for. Whether Heat of Temper, Streins of Hypocriſy, or Diabolical Illuſion, carried them thus far, is ſomewhat uncertain. 'Tis poſſible they might think it neceſſary to flaſh in the Face of the Crowd, and give their Confidence a Luſtre; and that the People were not to be gain'd without bold Puſhing, and extraordinary Pretentions. But let this be as it will, 'tis pretty plain the Men were ſhort of Diſtraction: For though Art or Enthuſiaſm might make their Conduct very odd, and carry them to Flights of Singularity; granting this, yet that they were unſeiz'd by Madneſs appears by the Conſiſtency of their Letters, by the Reſerves of their Management, and by the Dexterity of their Anſwers when examin'd. This the learned Coſins proves at large in Vindication of the Queen's Juſtice, and draws a Parallel betwixt them and John a Leiden, Rotman, and Kniperdoling, at Munſter.

Theſe Enthuſiaſts not under Diſtraction.

Whether the Nonconformiſt Miniſters behaved themſelves unexceptionably in this Juncture.

Now whether the Nonconforming Miniſters may be clear'd from approving the Deſigns of theſe Impoſtors is ſomewhat queſtionable: That ſomething of a Correſpondence was held, may be conjectur'd from Coppinger's Letter to Udal already mention'd; that Cartwright had condeſcended ſome Lengths to ſatisfy Coppingher's Conſcience, appears by another Letter of this Gentleman; in which he deſires his Friend to give great Thanks to good Mr. Cartwright for ſatisfying him in ſome Queſtions, which at the firſt he thought little Uſe to be made of. (q) In this Letter Coppinger takes Notice that Hockenhull, who brought him the renouncing Meſſage from Cartwright and the other Preachers above-mention'd; Coppinger, I ſay, takes Notice that Hockenhull miſreported theſe Nonconforming Miniſters, exceeded his Commiſſion, and deliver'd their Diſlike in harſher Terms than they had given him.

(q) Coppinger's Letter to a Friend, May 21. 1591. Bancroft's dangerous Poſitions, Book 4. Chap. 8.

Farther, 'twas expected that at the End of Trinity Term this Year, Cartwright, and the other Miniſters in Priſon would have been brought to their Trial in the Star-Chamber. And now ſomething of Rigour being apprehended from the Proceſs, Coppinger writes theſe menacing Expreſſions to Lancaſter, the School-maſter. (r) If our Preachers in Priſon, ſays he, do appear to Morrow in the Star-Chamber, and our great Men deal with them ſo as 'tis thought they will; if God does not throw ſome fearful Judgment amongſt them, ſo as ſome of the Chief go not alive out of the Place, then never give Credit to me in any Thing whilſt you live. But Cartwright and the reſt not being called for by the Court, this deſperate Reſolve came to nothing.

(r) Bancroft, Ib. Chap. 9. June 24. 1591.

The Reader may obſerve farther, That Coppingher, Arthington, and Hacket, the ſame Morning they made their ſeditious Proclamation in Cheapſide, came to Wigginton, and told him that Cartwright had done more againſt Antichriſt than any Perſon living ſince the Apoſtles; that Wigginton himſelf was a Man of equal Merit; and that Lancaſter exceeded them both. They likewiſe aſſur'd Wigginton, That Reformation and the Lord's Diſcipline ſhould be immediately eſtabliſh'd.

Id. Chap. 10.

Farther, Arthington confeſs'd in his Examination, That one Penry, a Puritan Miniſter, wrote to him from Scotland, to acquaint him That Reformation muſt ſhortly be erected in England, and that he took him for a true Prophet. This Penry was in London when Hacket was proclaim'd; and 'tis probable, if the Train had taken Fire, and the Mob kindled he might have made his Advantage of the Juncture: That he waited the Event ſeems not very unlikely, becauſe when Hacket was executed he poſted immediately towards Scotland.

Id. Chap. 10.

That ſome of the Diſſenting Miniſters in London were acquainted with Coppingher's Intention, is plainly affirm'd by himſelf. He grants the Warrantableneſs of the Buſineſs was not denied; but they thought the Weight was more than he could move, and that the Enterprize could not be attempted without Danger to himſelf and the Cauſe. This was Egerton's Senſe, who notwithſtanding he would not venture to approve Coppingher's Extraordinary Calling; yet for Fear of giving Diſcouragement, he threw in this qualified Expreſſion, That he would be loath to quench the Spirit of God in him, or hinder his Zeal.

Id. Chap. 14.

To fortify this Suſpicion upon the Diſſenters, 'tis obſerv'd that a great many bold Libels were publiſh'd about this Time to over-awe the Biſhops and Magiſtracy, and to fright them into laying the Reins on the Neck of the Faction. Some of the Expreſſions, as Bancroft reports, are very remarkable. For the Purpoſe: They threaten, "That if the Brethren are diſturb'd, great Troubles will enſue: That 'tis Time to ſet up the Diſcipline themſelves, without waiting any longer for Parliaments: That there are greater Numbers in this Intereſt than can be ſuppreſſed: That there are a Hundred thouſand of this Sentiment in England, who if they addreſs her Majeſty for the Diſcipline, ſhe can't refuſe them without Danger: That the Biſhops ſhall be treated here as they were in Scotland, and ſent packing with the Monks and Friars; with a great deal more to this Purpoſe.

Id. Chap. 11.

From what has been already related it appears, that Cartwright, Egerton, Travers, Charke, and others, were acquainted that Coppingher had ſome deſperate Deſign in Hand; that he laid Claim to an extraordinary Calling, pretended a Privilege from the common Rules of Duty, and had diſcover'd a general Reſolution of doing ſome Things by no Means juſtifiable. Now why did not theſe Miniſters combat his Enthuſiaſm, cenſure his Meaſures, and do their Utmoſt to bring him off his Deſigns? Why did not they lay open the Iniquity of his Principles, and reſcue him from ſo damnable a Deluſion? Now it does not appear any great Pains was taken towards his Recovery: But if they deſpair'd of Succeſs, and found him incorrigible, why did they not inform againſt him, and lay open the Danger to the Government? What made them conceal their Knowlege, venture the Iſſue, and ſuffer Coppingher and the reſt to run the Length of their Diſtraction? Theſe are Queſtions, I am afraid, not eaſily anſwer'd.

Stone's Confeſſion with Reference to the Diſſenters.

To proceed; The ſame Day Hacket was executed, Thomas Stone, Parſon of Warkton in Northamtonſhire, took the Oath to anſwer to Interrogatories, and was examin'd in Grays-Inn by the Examiner for the Star-Chamber. This Stone was, notwithſtanding his Living, a Diſſenting Miniſter, and had a Share in the Conſultations and Aſſemblies of the Puritans: He gave an Account of the greater and leſſer Aſſemblies, where they met, how often, and what Perſons aſſiſted in them. He likewiſe anſwer'd ſeveral Queſtions concerning the Authority by which they met, who were Moderators, what Points were debated, and what Cenſures exerted. Moſt of which Par-

Particulars having been mention'd upon other Occaſions, I ſhall paſs over. (s)

This Confeſſion of Stone was ill taken by his Party: They look'd upon it as an unkind Singularity, and a Reflection upon the reſt. To wipe off this Aſperſion, he found it neceſſary to draw up the Reaſons of his Compliance with the Government thus far.

" Firſt, He thought it unlawful to refuſe an " Oath given by a lawful Magiſtrate in Behalf " of the Prince, for a lawful End. Secondly, " That having taken ſuch a lawful Oath, he had " not the Liberty to ſay nothing, and much " leſs to deliver any Untruth. Thirdly, That had " he not been under the Engagement of an " Oath to diſcover his Knowlege, yet he conceiv'd ſuch a Silence unwarrantable which " gave juſt Suſpicion of Treaſon, Rebellion, " Sedition, &c. Fourthly, He thought ſuch Concealment might be of ill Precedent, and encourage Traitors, and other Malefactors, to " keep their Accomplices undiſcover'd. Fifthly, " That the clearing of a doubtful Fact requires " the laying open the Circumſtances. Sixthly, " That Silence which ſmothers an important " Truth, and leaves it unſupported with Evidence, is unlawful. Seventhly, That the Concealing Matter of Fact any longer was impracticable: His Reaſons were, becauſe ſeveral Letters of the Miniſters impriſon'd had " been intercepted; ſome falſe Brethren had given Information; and ſome weak People had " been ſurpriz'd into voluntary Confeſſions; and " laſtly, becauſe ſeveral Diſſenters were of his " Opinion, and reſolv'd to anſwer upon Oath " when call'd to it. Eighthly, That the Reputation of a Miniſter eſpecially ought to be " preferr'd to his Liberty, &c. But by this " myſterious Refuſing to anſwer Queſtions, a " great many good Miniſters have ſuffer'd in " their Character. Ninthly, Standing mute to " Interrogatories of this Kind has occaſion'd " the Commitment of ſome People, and lengthen'd the Confinement of others: And over " and above, has made them ſuſpected of a Practice againſt the State. Tenthly, Refuſing to " anſwer Interrogatories touching Religion, argues either Guilt, or Want of Courage. (t)

(t) Tranſcrib'd by Fuller from Stone's Letters, Church-Hiſt. Book 9.

Theſe are the main Grounds Stone went upon in his Vindication. Whether this Defence gave his Party Satiſfaction or not, is more than I can affirm. However, 'tis certain the Ingenuity of his Confeſſion recommended him to the Biſhops: And thus looking on him as a Man of Conſcience, they ſuffer'd him to enjoy his Living, notwithſtanding his Nonconformity.

This Year the Univerſity of Dublin was founded by Queen Elizabeth.

The Conteſt between Hooker and Travers.

About this Time the Conteſt between Hooker and Travers began: The firſt was Maſter, and the other Lecturer, of the Temple. Hooker was a general Scholar, and particularly well read in the Fathers, Councils, and Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory. Travers was a good Orientaliſt, and ſeem'd farther improv'd in Words than Things: He was of the ſame College with Cartwright, and had made an Acquaintance with him. From Cambridge he travell'd to Geneva, where he fell into an Intimacy with Beza and the Conſiſtory, and was much affected with their New Diſcipline. After ſome Time he return'd into Flanders, and was made a Miniſter by the Presbytery of Antwerp; * that is, they did what they could towards the giving him a Holy Character. And here he preach'd with Cartwright to the Engliſh Factory. When he came over, he was recommended to the Lord Burleigh, who entertain'd him as Chaplain. And now nothing but his ſcrupling Conformity could have hindred his Preferment; but not being able to paſs the Teſt of the Ceremonies and Articles, he found himſelf embarraſs'd. However, the Intereſt of his Patron procur'd him the Lecture of the Temple. And here managing with Addreſs, and preaching plauſibly, he was much valued among the Students. He had ſeveral good Qualities to recommend him; for his Geſtures were moving and graceful, his Delivery affecting enough, his Method was clear and artificial, and his Style Rhetorical. By theſe Advantages he gain'd upon the Long-Robe, diſinclin'd them to the Engliſh Hierarchy, and brought them to a Fancy for the Geneva Model. And 'twas thought the wrong Impreſſion the Lawyers receiv'd from Travers's Preaching, made ſome of them afterwards abet the Puritans in the Houſe of Commons. Travers being thus planted in London, and having the Character of a celebrated Preacher, made a Figure among the Diſciplinarians, preſided for the moſt Part in their Claſſical Meeting, and tranſmitted their Reſolutions to their Churches in the Country. Upon this raiſed Ground Travers ſtood when Hooker was made Maſter of the Temple: This Divine was a thorough Conformiſt, and a Perſon of great Learning and Judgment. He made it his Buſineſs to recover the Audience to a due Regard for the Worſhip and Government of the Engliſh Church. Nothing could be more ſolid and inſtructive than his Matter: But then his Manner was not very engaging; his Voice was neither muſical, nor ſtrong; his Geſtures were languid, and his Periods drawn out too far. In ſhort, there was neither Sound or Motion to make his Way, and he had little more than the Strength of his Reaſoning to aſſiſt him: And bare Argument without Equipage and Oratory is not always ſucceſsful. However, the more judicious Part of the Audience reach'd the Senſe through theſe Diſadvantages; and thus his Sermons were not without their Effect. Travers was ill pleas'd with Hooker's Management, and made it his Buſineſs to confute that in the Afternoon which the other preach'd in the Morning. Hooker being a Man of a gentle unpretending Temper, took no Notice of this Uſage for ſome Time: But at laſt, concluding theſe Pulpit-Combats might prove unſerviceable, he complain'd to the Archbiſhop. This Complaint happen'd to be made at a ſeaſonable Juncture; for now Cartwright, Snape, and ſome other leading Men of the Puritan Perſwaſion, were brought before the High Commiſſion. And thus the Commiſſioners finding the Nonconformiſts puſhing and troubleſome, they ſign'd an Order for the ſilencing Travers in the Temple and elſewhere. The Order was paſs'd upon theſe Suggeſtions; " That he was no lawfully ordain'd Miniſter " according to the Church of England: That he " preach'd without being licenſed: That he " had openly preſum'd to confute ſuch Doctrine " as had been publickly deliver'd by another " Preacher, without giving Notice of theſe " controverſial Sallies to the lawful Ordinary: " And that this Liberty was contrary to a Proviſion made in the Seventh Year of this Reign, " for avoiding Diſturbances in the Church.

* This appears by their Certificate of May the 14th, 1588.

Travers ſilenced by the High Commiſſion.

He petitions the Council, but without Succeſs.

Travers had too much Spirit and Intereſt to acquieſce under this Diſcouragement: He petitions the Lords of the Council for Redreſs, and excepts to the Legality of the Proceedings againſt him. But when the Articles were preſſed cloſe, he made but a weak Defence. For the Purpoſe, to the Charge of his executing the Function of a Preſbyter without lawful Orders, he replied no more than that by Virtue of the Communion of Saints, all Ordinations were equally valid in a Chriſtian Church. As to his Preaching without a Faculty in Form from the Dioceſan, his Anſwer was, The Biſhop of London had recommended him by two Letters to the Templers; and this he conceiv'd tantamount to a Licence for preaching to that Congregation. And laſtly, As for his Claſhing with Hooker, and endeavouring to diſprove his Sermons, he conceiv'd St. Paul's withſtanding St. Peter to his Face would juſtify his Conduct; for where Truth is likely to ſuffer, all Regard to Perſons muſt be overlooked. Hooker, in his Anſwer to Travers's Supplication, rub'd out theſe Colours. And thus Travers miſcarried at the Council-Board. The Archbiſhop not forgetting to remind the Lords of what ill Conſequence it might be, to ſuffer a Man ſo dangerouſly furniſh'd both with Parts and Principles, to harangue the Inns of Court.

This Diſappointment was made eaſy in ſome Meaſure to Travers by an Invitation he receiv'd from Adam Loftus, Archbiſhop of Dublin, and Chancellor of Ireland. This Prelate gave him an Offer of the Provoſtſhip of Trinity-College in that City, which he accepted. He liv'd not many Years in this Iſland: Whether his being unacceptable upon the Score of his Nonconformity, or a Proſpect of that Kingdom's being embroil'd, brought him back into England, is uncertain. After his Return hither he was leſs enterprizing, and the Edge of his Zeal was ſomewhat rebated. And thus, though with a ſlender Fortune, he paſs'd the Remainder of his Time more comfortably. (u)

(u) Fuller's Church Hiſt.

The Nonconformiſts being ſomewhat ſeverely handled by the High Commiſſion, endeavoured to diſarm that Juriſdiction. To this Purpoſe they fram'd Objections againſt the Authority and Proceedings of the Court. The Occaſion was this; One Caudrey, Parſon of South-Luſnam, in the County of Rutland, had been proſecuted in the High Commiſſion for preaching againſt the Book of Common-Prayer, and refuſing to officiate in Divine Service purſuant to the Directions of the Rubrick. Theſe Articles being prov'd upon him, he was depriv'd by the Biſhop of London, and ſome other of the Queen's Commiſſioners for Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes. He acquieſc'd for four Years in the Judgment of the Court: But now incited, as 'tis thought, by ſome Lawyers of Travers's Party, he reſolv'd to queſtion the Authority of that Commiſſion, and by Conſequence the Legality of his Deprivation. To this Purpoſe, he brings an Action of Treſpaſs againſt one George Atton for breaking his Cloſe, which was Parcel of the aforeſaid Rectory. The Jury gave a ſpecial Verdict; that is, they found the Matter of Fact alledg'd in the Action true: But whether 'twas juſtifiable or not, this they referr'd to the Judgment of the Court. (w)

(w) Coke's Reports, p. 5. Caudrey's Caſe.

A Reſolution of the Judges concerning the King's Eccleſiaſtical Supremacy.

The Cauſe was argued at Length by the Council at the Bar, and by the Bench; who having conſulted the Judges of the other Courts, came at laſt to this Reſolution, That the Act of 1 Eliz. cap. 1. concerning Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, was not a Statute introductory of a new Law, but declaratory of the Old: That this Act does not annex any Juriſdiction to the Crown, but that which in Truth was, or of Right ought to be, by the ancient Laws of the Realm Parcel of the King's Juriſdiction, and united to his Imperial Crown, and which lawfully had been, or might be exerciſed within the Realm.

Ibid.

'Twas reſolv'd farther by all the Judges, That if the Act 1 Eliz. cap. 1. had never been made, that the King or Queen of England, for the Time being, may make ſuch an Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion (as was in Force when the Caſe was argued) by the ancient Prerogative and Law of England. Their Ground is, That by the ancient Laws of this Realm the Kingdom of England is an abſolute Empire, conſiſting of one Head, which is the King: And that this Kingly Head is furniſh'd with Plenary Power, Prerogative, and Juriſdiction, to render Juſtice to every Part of this Body in all Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical or Temporal. Their Reaſon is, Becauſe otherwiſe he ſhould not be a Head of the whole Body. After this, they come to a Recital of the Cauſes which by the Laws of England are to be tried in Eccleſiaſtical Courts. In this Liſt they reckon Blaſphemy, Apoſtacy from Chriſtianity, Hereſies, Schiſm, ordering Admiſſions, Inſtitutions of Clerks, Celebration of Divine Service, Rights of Matrimony, Divorces, General Baſtardy, Subtraction and Right of Tythes, Oblations, Obventions, Dilapidations, Reparation of Churches, Probat of Teſtaments, Adminiſtration and Accounts upon the ſame, Simony, Inceſts, Fornications, Adulteries, Solicitation of Chaſtity, Penſions, Procurations, Appeals in Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes, Commutation of Penance. Theſe, and ſuch other Cauſes as do not belong to the Cognizance of the common Laws of England, are to be determined and decided by Eccleſiaſtical Judges according to the King's Eccleſiaſtical Laws of this Realm.

Coke, ibid. Fol. 9.

In this Reſolution there are ſeveral remarkable Things maintain'd by theſe reverend Judges.

Remarks upon the Reſolution.

Firſt, That an Authority to aſſign ſuch natural-born Subjects as the King or Queen ſhall think fit for the Exerciſing all manner of Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, and for the reforming and correcting all manner of Hereſies, Schiſms, Offences, &c. which by any Spiritual or Eccleſiaſtical Power or Authority can or may be lawfully reform'd or order'd; that ſuch an Authority was, or of Right ought to be, by the ancient Laws of the Realm, Parcel of the King's Juriſdiction, and united to his Imperial Crown; and which lawfully had been, or might be, exercis'd within the Realm.

Now by qualifying their Aſſertion with this Disjunctive, that all This had lawfully been, or might be, exercis'd, 'tis plain the Judges were ſenſible the Regale had not been always carried out to this Extent: Unleſs they knew this, we muſt ſuppoſe them ſtrangely unacquainted with the Hiſtory of former Times.

Id. Fol. 8.

Secondly, 'Tis reſolv'd by all the Judges, that if the Statute of 1 Eliz. cap. 1. had never been enacted, the Crown might have made ſuch an Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion, and erected ſuch a Court as gave Judgment againſt Caudrey. And if ſo, this Act for reſtoring the Antient Juriſdiction to the Crown ſeems, as to this Branch at leaſt, altogether unneceſſary. Upon the Whole, it muſt be ſaid this Deciſion declares ſtrongly for the Prerogative.

Ibid.

Thirdly, The Reverend Judges Found this Force and Extent of the Regale upon the Abſoluteneſs of the Engliſh Monarchy; they make it a Crown-Jewel, and a Quality eſſential to Civil Sovereignty. Now 'tis well known the Roman Emperors were much more abſolute than the Kings of England have been, at leaſt, for ſome late Centuries. Therefore if the Regale, with the Compaſs above-mention'd, is a neceſſary Branch of the Prerogative Royal, it will follow by inevitable Conſequence, That all the Heathen Emperors from Tiberius to Conſtantine the Great, had a Right to exerciſe all Manner of Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, and to viſit, reform and correct all Hereſies, Schiſms, Offences, &c. which by any Manner of Spiritual or Eccleſiaſtical Power or Authority can, or may be lawfully executed, or redreſs'd. And thus thoſe Princes who are no Members of the Spiritual Society, muſt be Heads of it. And thoſe who profeſs their Diſbelief of the Chriſtian Faith, have the whole Government and Diſcipline of the Church lodg'd in their Hands. And by this Reaſoning they may erect a Court of Pagan Commiſſioners to exert Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures, and pronounce in Caſes of Hereſie and Schiſm. Now whether this Way of arguing can be reconcil'd to the Commiſſion granted by our Saviour to the Apoſtles and their Succeſſors, to the Practice of the Primitive Church, to the Perpetuity of the Chriſtian Religion, the Reader may judge by what I have formerly obſerv'd upon this Subject. To fortifie the Reſolution of theſe Reverend Judges, the Learned Sir Edward Coke cites ſeveral Hiſtorical Paſſages, and Law-Caſes. But the Pertinency and Force of theſe Authorities has been conſider'd already, and therefore I ſhall add nothing farther. (x)

Coke from fol. 9, to fol. 40.

A Complaint againſt the High Commiſſion, and other Spiritual Courts.

The Nonconformiſts miſcarrying in Cawdrey's Caſe, made a more direct Attack upon the High Commiſſion and the Biſhops Courts. They complain'd in Print, That the Queen could not convey that Authority which was exercis'd by the High Commiſſioners, and that they had no Power to tender the Oath ex Officio: And that the Spiritual Courts were only to take Cognizance of Teſtamentary and Matrimonial Cauſes. To This the Civilians reply'd, That to conteſt the Authority veſted in the Queen by Act of Parliament, was downright Invaſion of the Prerogative Royal, and Subverſive of the Government. And as for the ordinary Epiſcopal Courts, they had not exceeded their Bounds. From hence they proceeded to a Defence of the Oath ex Officio, upon ſome of the Grounds already mention'd. In this Controverſie Dr. Richard Coſins Dean of the Arches, diſtinguiſh'd himſelf in a Learned Tract, intitled, An Apology for Proceedings in Courts Eccleſiaſtical, &c.

Notwithſtanding the Misfortune of the Combat, the Puritans rallied the Cauſe in a Book call'd, A Petition to her Majeſty. The Deſign of this Pamphlet was to perſwade the People, That the Eccleſiaſtical Government ought to be chang'd, and the Presbyterian Diſcipline ſet up: That this latter was practis'd in the Primitive Church, and commanded to be continued thro' all Ages: That the Nonconformiſts had done nothing againſt the Statute of 23 Eliz. cap. 2. and that Udall was illegally condemn'd: That the Abettors of the Conſiſtory are unjuſtly charg'd with Innovation and Diſloyalty. After this the Author makes it his Buſineſs to draw an Odium upon the Engliſh Hierarchy.

By theſe publick Challenges the Queen was fully convinc'd the Puritans were not to be govern'd by Gentleneſs and Connivance, and that nothing but Fear and Impotence would make them ſit down and be quiet. To cure the Stubborneſs of their Temper, ſhe provided a harſher Remedy in the next Parliament; but of that afterwards.

Petitions preſented by the Kirk to the Parliament.

In the mean Time I ſhall bring the Reader to the Parliament held at Edinborough, where ſeveral Petitions were exhibited in behalf of the Kirk. Firſt, That the Statutes made in the Year 1584. againſt the Liberties and Diſcipline of the Church, might be repeal'd, and the Diſcipline now practis'd, confirm'd. Secondly, That the Annexation Act ſhould be repeal'd, and Reſtitution made of the Churches Patrimony. Thirdly, That the Abbots, Priors, and other Prelates carrying the Diſtinctions of Eccleſiaſticks, and voting in that Quality for the Church, without Commiſſion from the Aſſemblies, might not be admitted for the future as Members of Parliament. And, Fourthly, That an effectual Remedy might be provided for purging the Realm of Idolatry and Blood. The ſecond and Third Petitions were ſet aſide; to ſatisfie the laſt, 'twas enacted, That Saying of Maſs, Receiving of Jeſuits, Seminary Prieſts, and Trafficking Papiſts againſt the King's Majeſty, and Religion preſently profeſs'd, ſhould be a juſt Cauſe to infer the Pain and Crime of Treaſon. (y) This Statute came ſhort of what was deſir'd by the Kirk; for the Trafficking againſt Religion, as they call it, was not made Treaſon, unleſs an Attempt againſt the Prince could be made out. As to the Complaint of Murther, 'twas left to the Courts of Juſtice.

The Presbyterian Government and Diſpline ſettled by Act of Parliament.

The granting their firſt Petition ſtuck for ſome Time: The King was unwilling either to abrogate the Acts of 1584. or confirm the preſent Diſcipline: He was apprehenſive this might prove a dangerous Conceſſion, and that the Miniſters would prove very troubleſome under ſuch Privilege. But on the other ſide, ſeveral of the Nobility being diſaffected to the Reformation, and ſuſpected for a Correſpondence with Spain, and Bothwell having lately eſcaped out of Cuſtody, and forc'd Halyrood-Houſe, the King thought it neceſſary to ſtrengthen his Intereſt by obliging the Kirk. And thus the Statute paſs'd, by which 'tis enacted, "That it ſhall be lawful to the Kirk and Miniſters every Year at leaſt, and oftener pro re nata, as Occaſion and Neceſſity ſhall require, to hold General Aſſemblies; with this Proviſo however, That the King or his Commiſſioners ſhall be preſent at each General Aſſembly, and appoint the Time and Place for the next Meeting. But in caſe neither his Majeſty, nor his Commiſſioners appear in the Aſſembly, that then the Aſſembly may fix theſe Circumſtances themſelves. Farther, the Synodical and Provincial Aſſemblies held twice a Year, are ratify'd and confirm'd; and ſo are the Presbyteries, and particular Seſſions, together with the whole Juriſdiction and Diſcipline of the Kirk agreed on by his Majeſty in Conference with certain of the Miniſters. The Tenor of the Articles agreed, is as follows.

" Matters to be treated in Provincial Aſſemblies.

"These Aſſemblies are conſtituted for weighty Matters, to be manag'd by mutual Conſent and Aſſiſtance of Brethren within the Province, as Need requires. This Aſſembly has Power to debate, order and redreſs all Things omitted, or miſmanag'd in the particular Aſſemblies. It has Authority to depoſe the Office-bearers in that Province; and in General, this Aſſembly has the whole Power of the particular Elderſhips of which it conſiſts.

" Matters to be tranſacted in the Presbyteries.

"The Presbyteries have Authority within their Bounds to ſee the Churches are kept in good Order; to enquire into the Misbehaviour of thoſe within their Precincts, and to endeavour their Recovery by Admonition or Correction. It belongs to this Elderſhip to take Care the Word of God is preach'd in its Purity within their Bounds; That the Sacraments are rightly adminiſtred, the Diſcipline maintain'd, and the Eccleſiaſtical Revenues fairly diſtributed.

(x) See this Church Hiſt. Vol. 1. And above Vol. 2.

(y) Ja. 6. Parl. 12. cap. 122.

“It belongs to theſe Presbyteries to execute the Decrees made in the Provincial and General Aſſemblies, and to make Conſtitutions for Order and Decency in the particular Kirk where they govern; provided that they alter no Regulations made by Provincial or General Aſſemblies; And that they acquaint the Provincial Aſſemblies with the Conſtitutions made by them. They have Power to excommunicate the Obſtinate, the Forms of Law, with Reſpect to Time, and other Circumſtances, being obſerv'd.

“As to particular Kirks, if they are lawfully govern'd by ſufficient Miniſtry and Seſſion, they have Power and Juriſdiction in their own Congregation, in Matters Eccleſiaſtical.

Theſe Articles agreed by the King and the Miniſters, are confirm'd by the Statute which declares, “and Enacts, the ſaid Aſſemblies, Presbyteries and Seſſions, with their Juriſdiction and Diſcipline aforeſaid,” to be in all Times coming moſt juſt, good and godly in the ſelf; “Any Statutes, Canon, Civil or Municipal Laws to the contrary notwithſtanding. And all Acts made in Favour of the Papiſtical Kirk, and tending to the Prejudice of the Liberty of the true Kirk of God, are abrogated, caſſed and annull'd.

Farther, 'Tis enacted, That the Hundred and nine and twentieth Act of the Parliament held at Edinborough, Anno Dom. 1584.* ſhall be no Ways prejudicial nor derogate any Thing to the Privilege that God has given to Spiritual Office-bearers in the Kirk, concerning Heads of Religion, Matters of Hereſie, Excommunication, Collation, or Deprivation of Miniſters, or any ſuch eſſential Cenſures, eſpecially grounded, and having Warrant by the Word of God. (z)

(z) Ja. 6. Parl. 12. cap. 116.

This Act of 1584, which eſtabliſh'd the Regale, is repealed in general and guarded Expreſſions. 'Twas thus couch'd without Queſtion to ſecure a Reſerve for the King's Eccleſiaſtical Supremacy. 'Tis declar'd the Act of 1584. ſhall be no Ways prejudicial to the Spiritual Office-bearers in the Church: But then 'tis not preciſely ſet forth what thoſe Privileges are, nor who muſt be Judges whether they are warranted by the Word of God, or not.

Laſtly, The Statute made in the ſaid Year 1584. “granting Commiſſion to Biſhops, and other Eccleſiaſtical Judges to receive his Highneſs's Preſentation to Benefices, to give Collation thereupon, and to govern in all Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical, is declar'd to be expir'd, and of none Effect: And that for the future all Preſentations to Benefices ſhall be directed to the reſpective Presbyteries.

Ibid.

Thus Epiſcopacy was at laſt aboliſh'd, and Presbytery made the Eſtabliſh'd Religion.

The Queen's Progreſs to Oxford, Sept. 1592.

To return to England. In September this Year the Queen made her laſt Progreſs to Oxford, where ſhe was entertain'd with all imaginable Regard. Beſides other Exerciſes there was a Divinity Act kept in St. Mary's, Dr. Weſtphaling Biſhop of Hereford, determin'd upon the Queſtion, An liceat in Rebus Divinis diſſimulare? His Reſolution was, That a Chriſtian might be allow'd to keep Part of his Belief to himſelf, but never to deſert the Truth, or profeſs any Thing contrary to it. One of the Opponents argued, 'That ſince 'twas lawful to diſpute upon Religious Points, 'twas lawful to diſſemble ones Opinion; and that he was now counterfeiting what he did not believe, and yet was engag'd in a lawful Exerciſe. This was look'd on as an ingenious Turn, and commended by the Court.

The Queen took her leave in a Latin Speech, in which after having expreſs'd her Eſteem of the Univerſity in very obliging Terms, ſhe caution'd them againſt Innovation in Religion, and put them in Mind of Conformity to the Laws eſtabliſh'd. Her Majeſty told them, ſhe expected they ſhould follow, and not lead the Conſtitution; not diſpute whether the Laws might be mended, but keep cloſe to what was already ſettled.*

* Wood Hiſt. & Antiq. Univerſ. Oxon. Lib. 1.

The Queen in the latter End of the Winter ſummon'd a new Parliament, which began at Weſtminſter the 19th of February, and ſate till the 10th of April, when 'twas diſſolv'd. The famous Coke then Solicitor-General, was choſen Speaker of the Houſe of Commons: To the cuſtomary Requeſt for Liberty of Speech, the Lord Keeper Puckering return'd this Anſwer in the Queen's Name, he told him, Wit and Speech, two moſt neceſſary Things did moſt Harm. As to privilege of Speech, ſays the Chancellor, 'tis granted: But you muſt know what Privilege you have; 'tis not a Licence for every one to ſpeak what he liſts, or to throw out every Fancy that comes into his Brain: But your Privilege is to ſay Yea, or No. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, her Majeſty's Pleaſure is, That if you perceive any idle Heads that are hardy enough to run themſelves upon Danger, that will venture to meddle with Reforming the Church, and Transforming the Commonwealth; if any ſuch Bills are offer'd, her Majeſty's Pleaſure is, that you ſhould not receive them, till they are view'd by thoſe, who 'tis fitter ſhould conſider ſuch Things, and can better judge of them. (a)

What the Queen meant by granting Liberty of Speech to the Commons.

(a) D'Ewe's Journal of the, Houſe of Lords, pag. 460.

Morrice Attorney of the Court of Wards, and a Member of the Lower Houſe, made a Speech for bringing in two Bills againſt Inquiſitions in the Spiritual Courts, offering the Oath ex Officio, and Impriſonment upon Refuſal to ſwear. Morrice's Speech, tho' ſeconded by ſome others, was anſwer'd by Dr. Lewin a Civilian; but having had Occaſion to ſpeak to this Subject already, I ſhall wave what was objected or return'd by either ſide. The Queen being advertis'd of theſe Proceedings, ſent for the Speaker, and commanded him to deliver the following Meſſage to the Houſe: That the Calling and Diſſolving of Parliaments; That the Aſſenting or Diſſenting to any Bills paſs'd there, was Part of the Prerogative Royal; That her Majeſty's Intention in calling this Parliament, was only that God might be more religiouſly ſerv'd; and that thoſe who neglected his Service, might be forc'd to Reformation and Duty by ſome ſharper Expedients; That the Lord Keeper had acquainted the Lower Houſe, That 'twas the Queen's Pleaſure they ſhould not meddle with Matters of State, or Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical; That ſhe wonder'd any could be of ſo high Commandment, as ſhe ſpeaks, to attempt a Thing ſo expreſly contrary to what ſhe had forbidden; and that ſhe was highly offended with this Liberty. And laſtly, ſhe charg'd the Speaker to tell them, That 'twas her expreſs Command, that no Bill touching Matters of State, or Reformation in Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical be exhibited. And upon my Allegiance (continues the Speaker to the Houſe) I am commanded, if any ſuch Bill be exhibited, not to read it. (b) And thus the Bills above-mentioned were ſtifled.

She commands the Speaker not to read any Bill relating to Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes.

An Act againſt Diſſenters.

For a farther Reſtraint upon the Puritans, an Act was made for retaining the Queen's Majeſty's Subjects in their due Obedience. The Statute begins thus: For the preventing and avoiding ſuch great Inconveniencies and Perils as might happen and grow by the wicked and dangerous Practice of ſeditious Sectaries, and diſloyal diſloyal Perſons, 'tis enacted, That if any Perſon above the Age of Sixteen Years, ſhall obſtinately refuſe to repair to ſome Church, Chappel, or uſual Place of Common Prayer, to hear Divine Service, or ſhall forbear to do the ſame for the Space of a Month without lawful Cauſe, or ſhall at any Time after Forty Days from the End of this Seſſion, by Printing, Writing, or expreſs Words, purpoſely practice, or go about to move or perſwade any of her Majeſties Subjects, or any others within her Highneſs's Dominions, to deny, withſtand, or impugn her Majeſties Power and Authority in Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical: Or to that End and Purpoſe ſhall adviſedly or maliciouſly move or perſwade any other Perſon whatſoever from coming to Church, to hear Divine Service, or to receive the Communion according to her Majeſties Laws and Statutes aforeſaid; or to come to, or be preſent at any lawful Aſſemblies, Conventicles, or Meetings, under Colour or Pretence of any Exerciſe of Religion, contrary to her Majeſties ſaid Laws and Statutes; that then every ſuch Perſon ſo offending, and thereof lawfully convicted, ſhall be committed to Priſon, there to remain without Bail or Mainprize, till they ſhall conform, and yield themſelves to come to ſome Church, Chappel, or uſual Place of Common Prayer, and hear Divine Service, and make ſuch open Submiſſion and Declaration of their Conformity, as by this Act is afterwards appointed. (c)

The Form of the Submiſſion was this:

The Form of Submiſſion.

I A. B. do humbly confeſs and acknowledge, that I have grievouſly offended God in contemning her Majeſties godly and lawful Government and Authority, by abſenting my ſelf from Church, and from hearing Divine Service, contrary to the godly Laws and Statutes of this Realm, and in uſing and frequenting diſordered and unlawful Conventicles and Aſſemblies, under Pretence and Colour of Exerciſe of Religion: And I am heartily ſorry for the ſame, and do acknowledge and teſtifie in my Conſcience, that no other Perſon hath, or ought to have any Power or Authority over her Majeſty. And I do promiſe and proteſt, without any Diſſimulation, or any Colour or Means of any Diſpenſation, that from henceforth I will from Time to Time obey and perform her Majeſties Laws and Statutes in repairing to the Church, and hearing Divine Service, and do mine uttermoſt Endeavour to maintain and defend the ſame.

The Offenders againſt this Statute, who refus'd to make this Submiſſion, were to abjure the Realm, and not to return without her Majeſty's ſpecial Licence, under the Penalty of ſuffering as Felons, without Benefit of the Clergy. By another Clauſe, All thoſe who entertain'd or reliev'd ſuch Diſſenters after Notice given of their Recuſancy, were to forfeit Ten Pounds a Month. But here there was an Indemnifying Proviſo for thoſe who reliev'd their near Relations. 'Twas likewiſe provided, That no Popiſh Recuſant, or Feme Covert, ſhall be compell'd to abjure by Virtue of this Act. And laſtly, the Wife was not to loſe her Dower, neither was any Corruption of Blood to grow upon the Score of any Offence therein mention'd. This Act, tho' made to continne no longer than the End of the next Seſſion of Parliament, was afterwards kept in Force by the two ſucceeding Parliaments of this Reign. (d)

An Act againſt Popiſh Recuſants.

There was another Act made this Seſſions againſt Popiſh Recuſants, by which they are confin'd within Five Miles of their reſpective Dwellings: And in caſe they travel farther than this Diſtance, they were to forfeit all their Goods and Chattels, together with their Lands and Tenements during Life: And that thoſe who refus'd to conform themſelves to the Act, were to abjure the Realm for ever, and not to return without ſpecial Licence, under the Penalty of ſuffering as Felons. And if ſuch Recuſants had neceſſary Buſineſs to travel out of the Compaſs of Five Miles, they were to get a Licence under the Hands of two Juſtices of Peace, with the Aſſent in Writing of the Biſhop of the Dioceſe, or of the Lieutenant, or ſome Deputy-Lieutenant of the ſaid County. Thoſe who offended againſt this Statute, were to be diſcharg'd, provided they made a Submiſſion before Conviction. The Form is much the ſame with that injoined the Puritans, only with this Difference, That the Popiſh Recuſants were to make their Submiſſion in theſe Words: I do acknowledge and teſtifie in my Conſcience, that the Biſhop or See of Rome has not, nor ought to have any Power or Authority over her Majeſty, or within any her Majeſties Realms or Dominions. (e)

An Act to confirm the Grants of Abbey Lands.

By another Act all the Abby-Lands which came to the Poſſeſſion of King Henry the VIIIth, and all Conveyances of ſuch Lands made by him to any Perſon, are confirm'd to the Crown, and Grantees reſpectively. All Patents likewiſe made by King Henry the VIIIth. for the Foundation or Endowment of any Dean and Chapter, or College, are declar'd and enacted good and effectual in the Law, touching every Thing relating to the Premiſes. (f)

(f) 35 Eliz. cap. 3.

At the Beginning of this Parliament Mr. Peter Wentworth and Sir Henry Bromley deliver'd a Petition to the Lord Keeper, to deſire him to move the Upper Houſe to join with the Commons in addreſſing the Queen to entail the Succeſſion of the Crown. For this Motion they were commanded by her Majeſty to forbear coming to the Houſe, and not to ſtir from their Lodgings. The next Day they were call'd before the Council and committed: Wentworth was ſent to the Tower, and Bromely, and Welſh a Knight for Worceſterſhire were committed to the Fleet. (g)

The Convocation met on the 20th of February at St. Paul's; but excepting the Grant of two Subſidies, little or nothing was done. On the 11th of April, the next Day after the Diſſolution of the Parliament, the Convocation was diſſolv'd by the Queen's Writ. *

To proceed: That Suffragan Biſhops were continued to this Time, appears by Whitgift's Regiſter, where one John Sterne Batchelor of Divinity, is enter'd Suffragan of Colcheſter: He was conſecrated by the Archbiſhop, the Biſhops of London, Rocheſter, and Briſtol. Ailmer Biſhop of London preſented this Sterne, and one William Fiſher Clerk, to the Queen; and her Majeſty made Choice of Sterne. Barrow and Greenwood's Tenents.

In the Year 1587. John Greenwood, Clerk; and Henry Barrow, Gentleman; were brought before the High Commiſſion, for maintaining and ſpreading ſchiſmatical and ſeditious Doctrine. Their moſt remarkable Tenents were as follow. They held, “ That the Church of England was “ no true Church: That the Worſhip in this “ Communion was downright Idolatry: That “ unſanctified Perſons were taken into the “ Church: That the conforming Preachers had “ no lawful Calling: That no Biſhop or “ Preacher, preaches Chriſt ſincerely or truly: “ That the People of every Pariſh ought to “ chuſe their Biſhop: And that every Elder, “ tho' neither Doctor or Paſtor, is a Biſhop. “ That all of the Preciſer Nonconformiſts, who re- “ fus'd the Ceremonies of the Church, ſtrain at “ a Gnat, and ſwallow a Camel: And are no “ better than cloſer Hypocrites; ſuch as Cart- “ wright, Wiggington, &c. That all thoſe who “ make or expound any printed or written Ca- “ techiſms, are idle Shepherds: As Calvin, Ur- “ ſin, Nowel, &c. That the Children of Uſu- “ rers, Drunkards, and ſuch ungodly Parents, “ ought not to be baptiz'd. And laſtly, That “ Praying by a Form, is Blaſphemous.

Being committed for theſe ſcandalous Doctrines, they promis'd to recant, and were inlarg'd upon giving Bond. But 'twas not long before they made an ill Uſe of their Liberty, broke out into farther Exceſſes, and perverted more Proſelytes. Their principal Followers were Saxio Billet, Gentleman; Daniel Studley, Girdler; and Robert Bowler, Fiſhmonger. Theſe with Barrow and Greenwood, were committed to the Fleet in the Year 1588. During their Confinement, Cartwright had a Conference with them. For Barrow, it ſeems, had declar'd that he had neither Writ, nor done any Thing, but what he could juſtify by Cartwright's Principles. What the Reſult of this Conference was, is not known: But when Archbiſhop Whitgift, and Dr. Ravis his Chaplain, deſir'd Cartwright to engage in a ſecond Conference, he would by no Means agree to it: Upon which Barrow fell into a Strain of Expoſtulation, complain'd of his being deſerted: That he had taken his Grounds from Cartwright: And that thoſe Tenents which brought him to Priſon, were nothing but Concluſions drawn from Cartwright's Premiſſes.

Barrow, Greenwood, and the Three others above-mention'd, were indicted at the Old Baily, for Writing and Publiſhing ſeveral ſeditious Books tending to the Slander of the Queen and State. The Indictment was grounded upon the 23 Eliz. cap. 1. They were all brought in Guilty, and had Judgment to ſuffer as Felons.

March 21. Anno Dom. 159$\frac{2}{3}$.

Before the Execution, Dr. Andrews, afterwards Biſhop of Ely; Dr. Parry, afterwards Biſhop of Worceſter; Dr. Biſſe, Archdeacon of Taunton, and Dr. White, Reſidentiary of St. Paul's, were ſent to Barrow to exhort him to a Recantation. After they had diſcourſed him ſome time, he told them, “ they were not the Men “ he moſt diſliked in the preſent Differences. “ For tho', ſays he, you are miſtaken, yet you “ think your ſelves in the Right, and walk up “ to that Light God has given you. But I can't “ but complain of Mr. Cartwright and his Bre- “ thren, by whoſe Books we have been taught “ your Calling is Antichriſtian. Upon this Dr. White told him, That thoſe Callings which he reproach'd as Antichriſtian, had been approv'd by Archbiſhop Cranmer, Biſhop Ridley, and ſeveral others of eminent Piety, who were Martyrs for their Religion in Queen Mary's Reign. Barrow reply'd, Moſt true it is, that they and others were Martyrs in Queen Mary's Days: But theſe holy Bands of mine, ſays he, ſhaking his Fetters, are much more glorious than any of theirs; becauſe they had the Mark of Antichriſt in their Hands. (k) In ſhort, theſe Learned Men were not ſo ſucceſsful as to make an Impreſſion upon the Priſoners, or recover them from their Heterodoxies. On the laſt of March Barrow and Greenwood were brought to Tyburn in a Cart, and carried back to Newgate; but proving incorrigible, both under Menacing, and Mercy; they were executed on the 6th of April following. The other Three were Repriev'd, being look'd on as Criminals of a more pardonable Guilt.

Penry, a Nonconformiſt Miniſter indicted for ſeditious Writings.

The Matter charg'd againſt him in the firſt Indictment.

About this Time, John Penry, a Nonconformiſt Miniſter, was indicted for publiſhing ſcandalous Writings againſt the Orders of the Church, and againſt the Queen. To deſcribe the Temper of this Man, and his dangerous Tenents, I ſhall give the Reader part of the Two Indictments found againſt him. The firſt Indictment ſets forth, That Quidam J. P. nuper de London Clericus, Deum præ Oculis ſuis non habens, &c. apud Edinburg. infra Regnum Scotiæ, adviſate & cum malitioſâ Intentione contra Dominam Reginam, & Felonicè ut Felo dictæ Dominæ Reginæ deviſavit, & ſcripſit quaſdam falſas, ſeditioſas, & ſcandaloſas Materias in Defamationem dictæ Dominæ Reginæ nunc, & ad Inſtigationem, Suſcitationem, & Motionem Rebellionis & Inſurrectionis infra hoc Regnum Angliæ in his Anglicanis Verbis ſequentibus inter alia, viz. The laſt Days of your Reign (Regnum dictæ Dominæ Innuendo) are turn'd rather againſt Chriſt Jeſus, and his Goſpel, than to the Maintenance of the ſame; And I have great Cauſe of Complaint, Madam, (dictam Dominam Reginam Innuendo) nay, the Lord and his Church hath Cauſe to complain of your Government (Gubernationem dictæ Dominæ Reginæ Innuendo) not ſo much for any outward Injury, as I, or any other of your Subjects have received, as becauſe we your Subjects this Day are not permitted to ſerve our God under your Government (Gubernationem dictæ Dominæ Reginæ Innuendo) according to his Word, but are ſold to be Bond Slaves, not only to our Affections, to do what we will, ſo that we keep our ſelves within the Compaſs of eſtabliſh'd Civil Laws, (Leges dictæ Dominæ Reginæ innuendo) but alſo to be Servants to the Man of Sin, and his Ordinances, And it is not the Force which we ſeem to fear, that will come upon us, for the Lord may deſtroy both you, (dictam Dominam Reginam innuendo) for denying, and us for ſlack ſeeking of his Will, by Strangers, I come unto you with it, if you wil, hear it, that our Caſe may be eaſed, if not, that yet Poſterity may know that you have been dealt with, and that this Age may ſee that there is no great Expectation to be look'd for at your Hands (Manus dictæ Dominæ Reginæ innuendo) And amongſt the reſt of the Princes under the Goſpel, that have been drawn to oppoſe themſelves againſt the Goſpel, you (dictam Dominam Reginam innuendo) muſt think your ſelf to be one, for until you ſee this Madam (dictam Dominam Reginam innuendo) you ſee not your ſelf, and they are but Sycophants and Flatterers whoſoever tell you otherwiſe. Your ſtanding is and hath been by the Goſpel, it is little or ſmally beholding unto you, for any Thing that appeareth, the Practice of your Government, (Gubernationem dictæ Dominæ Reginæ innuendo)

innuendo) ſheweth, That if you could have ruled without the Goſpel, it would have been to be feared whether the Goſpel ſhould be eſtabliſhed, or not; for, now that you are eſtabliſh'd in your Throne, and that by the Goſpel, you (dictam Dominam Reginam innuendo) have ſuffer'd the Goſpel to reach no further than the End of your Scepter (Sceptrum dictæ Dominæ Reginæ innuendo) limited unto it, and briefly, Madam, you (dictam Dominam Reginam innuendo) may well ſee the Foundation of England rooted up, but this Cauſe (Cauſam dicti J. P. & aliorum Schiſmaticorum & Sectariorum infrà hoc Regnum Angliæ innuendo) will you never ſee ſuppreſs'd, And now whereas we ſhould have your Help (Auxilium dictæ Dominæ Reginæ innuendo) both to join our ſelves to the true Church, and to reject the falſe, and all the Ordinances thereof, we are in your Kingdom (Regnum dictæ Dominæ Reginæ innuendo) permitted to do neither, but accounted ſeditious Men, if we affirm either one or the other of the former Points. And therefore Madam, you (dictam Dominam Reginam innuendo) are not ſo much an Adverſary to us poor Men, as unto Chriſt Jeſus, and the Wealth of his Kingdom, And but Madam (dictam Dominam Reginam innuendo) yet thus much we muſt needs ſay, that in all likelihood, if the Days of your Siſter Queen Mary, and her Perſecution had continued to this Day, this Church of God in England had been far more flouriſhing than at this Day it is, And now, Madam, (dictam Dominam Reginam innuendo) your Majeſty may conſider what Good the Church of God hath gotten at your Hands (Manus dictæ Dominæ Reginæ innuendo) even outward Peace, with the Abſence of Chriſt Jeſus; and his Ordinances, otherwiſe, as great Troubles likely to come as ever were in the Days of your Siſter. (l)

The Second Indictment ſets forth, That the ſame J. P. nuper de London, Clericus, primo die Martii, Anno Regni Dominæ Elizabeth, Dei Gratia triceſimo tertio extra hoc Regnum Angliæ, & extra Dominationem dictæ Dominæ Reginæ, viz. apud Edinborough infra Regnum Scotiæ adviſatè & cum Malitioſâ Intentione deviſavit, & ſcripſit, quaſdam, falſas, ſeditioſas & ſcandaloſas Materias in Defamationem dictæ Dominæ Reginæ, & ad ſuſcitationem & motionem Rebellionis, &c. in his Anglicanis Verbis ſequent. inter alia, videlicet, What has England anſwer'd, ſurely with an impudent Forehead ſhe hath ſaid, I will not come near the Holy One, and as for the Building of his Houſe, I will not ſo much as lift up a Finger towards that Work, nay, I will continue the Deſolations thereof; And if any Man ſpeaketh a Word in the Behalf of this Houſe, or bewaileth the Miſery of it, I will accompt him an Enemy to my State, As for the Goſpel, and Miniſtry of it, I have already received all the Goſpels, and all the Miniſteries that I mean to receive, I have received a Reading Goſpel, and a Reading Miniſtry, a Pompous Goſpel, and a Pompous Miniſtry, a Goſpel and a Miniſtery that ſtrengtheneth the Hands of the Wicked in his Iniquity, a Goſpel and a Miniſtry that will ſtoop to me, and be at my Beck, either to ſpeak or to be mute, when I ſhall think good; briefly, I have received a Goſpel and Miniſtry that will never trouble my Conſcience with the Sight of my Sins, which is all the Goſpels, and all the Miniſtries that I mean to receive; And I will make a ſure Hand, that the Lord's Houſe, if I can chuſe, ſhall be no otherwiſe edified, than by the Hands of ſuch Men as bring unto me the foreſaid Goſpel, and the foreſaid Miniſtry: And, as for the general State either of the Magiſtracy, of the Miniſtry, or of the common People (Magiſtrat. Miniſtros, & populum hujus Regni Angliæ innuendo) behold, nothing elſe but a Multitude of Conſpirators againſt God, againſt the Truth, againſt the Building of his Houſe, againſt his Saints and Children, and conſequently againſt the Wealth of their own Souls, and publick Peace and Tranquility of this whole Kingdom, and you ſhall find amongſt this Crew, (innuendo Archiepiſcopos, Epiſcopos, & Miniſtros Eccleſiæ hujus Regni Angliæ per Authoritatem regiam, & leges & ſtatuta ejuſdem Regni, infra hoc Regnum manutent.) nothing elſe but a Troupe of bloody Soul-Murtherers, ſacrilegious Church-Robbers, and ſuch as make themſelves fat with the Blood of Men's Souls, and the utter Ruin of the Church, and it is now grown, and hath been of long Time a common Practiee of theſe godleſs Men (Magiſtrat. & Judices infra hoc Regnum Angliæ, per dictam Dominam Reginam aſſignat. & manutent. innuendo) to make of the Statutes ordain'd for the Maintenance of Religion, and common Quietneſs, a Pit wherein to catch the Peaceable of the Land (hoc Regnum Angliæ innuendo) and becauſe our Councel (Concilium privat. dictæ Dominæ Reginæ innuendo) may be truly ſaid to delight in this Injury and violent Oppreſſion of God's Saints and Miniſters; therefore, whenſoever the Lord ſhall come to ſearch for the Sins of England with Lights, as Zephaniah ſaith, he will ſurely viſit our Councel (dictum Concilium dictæ Dominæ Reginæ innuendo) with an heavy Plague, becauſe they are undoubtedly frozen in their Dregs, and perſwade their own Hearts, that the Lord will do neither good nor evil in the Defence of his Meſſengers and Children; And then they ſhall feel what it is to wink at (much more to procure) the Oppreſſion of the Church of Chriſt, I (dictum J. P. Innuendo) will not in this Place charge our Councel (dictum Concilium dictæ Dominæ Reginæ innuendo) with that which followeth in Jeremy, upon the Place before alledg'd, namely, that they execute no Judgment, no, not the Judgment of the Fatherleſs; But this I will ſay, that they cannot poſſibly deal truly in the Matter of Juſtice between Man and Man; Inſomuch, as they bend all their Forces to bereave Chriſt Jeſus of that Right which he hath in the Government of the Church; the which ungodly and wicked Courſe, as they (dictum Conſilium dictæ Dominæ Reginæ innuendo) have held on ever ſince the Beginning of her Majeſty's Reign, (Regimen dictæ Dominæ Reginæ innuendo) ſo at this Day they have taken greater Boldneſs, and grown more rebellious againſt the Lord, and his Cauſe than ever they were. Ad magnum Scandalum & Defamationem dictæ Dominæ Reginæ, Subverſionem Legum hujus Regni Angliæ, &c. (m)

Penry's Character and Management.

By the Heat of this Expoſtulation, the Reader may judge of what Spirit Penry was of. He had lain at Edinborough for ſome Time, as the Indictment ſets forth. His Buſineſs without Queſtion was, to ſolicit for the Cauſe, and make an Intereſt with the Kirk. From hence he played his

Libels into England upon the Church and State. He is very intemperate in his Remonſtrance: Takes the utmoſt Liberties of Satyr, arraigns the Adminiſtration, and endeavours to bring an Odium upon the Queen and Biſhops. He ſtaid at Edinborough till Hacket's Plot was concerted, and began to come forward. And when the Juncture appear'd ſomewhat promiſing, he told Arthington in a Letter, That Reformation muſt ſhortly be erected in England. (n) Upon this Proſpect he comes for England: And upon the Miſcarriage of Hacket's Buſineſs, retir'd into Scotland, as has been already obſerv'd. About the Beginning of the laſt Seſſions, he ventur'd to make another Journey to London. And notwithſtanding his endeavour to paſs Incognito, he was diſcover'd by the Vicar of Stepney, committed and tried at the King's-Bench Bar; the Indictment was grounded upon the 23d of Eliz. cap. 1. (o)

May 29. 1593.

A poſthumous Pamphlet of Penry*'s publiſh'd.*

He was found guilty, and not long after executed at St. Thomas Wattrings: Care was taken that the Mob might not have Notice of the Time when he ſuffer'd, for Fear ſome Tumult might have happen'd. This Penry had a bold and buffooning Manner of Writing: He had a principal Share in thoſe ſcurrilous Pamphlets which went under the Title of Marten-mar-Prelate, as has been already related. Soon after his Execution, another ſeditious Pamphlet of his Writing was publiſh'd: 'Tis entitled, The Hiſtory of Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, applied to the Prelacy and Miniſtry of the Church of England, by Mr. John Penry, a Martyr of Jeſus Chriſt. The Publiſher, to raiſe the Author's Character, and give Force to the Performance, informs the Reader in his Preface, "That Mr. John Penry was a godly "Man, learned, zealous, and of a moſt Chriſtian Carriage and Courage: That he was "born and bred in the Mountains of Wales, and "with all godly Care and Labour, endeavour'd "to have the Goſpel preach'd among his Countrymen, whoſe Caſe he greatly ſeem'd to pity, wanting all the ordinary Means for their "Salvation. That being us'd by God for a "ſpecial Inſtrument in the Manifeſtation of his "Truth, he was hardly intreated, impriſon'd, "condemn'd, and executed, and ſo ſuffer'd "Martyrdom for the Name of Chriſt: And "more particularly, that he was adjudg'd at "the King's-Bench by Sir John Popham, Lord "Chief Juſtice, and the reſt of the Judges then "aſſembled, on the 25th of the Fifth Month, "and executed on the 29th of the ſame. That "he was not brought to Execution the Next, Second or Third Day, as moſt Men expected, "but that when Men did leaſt look for it, he "was taken while he was at Dinner, and haſtily bereav'd of his Life, without being ſuffer'd "(tho' he much deſir'd) to make a Declaration "of his Faith towards God, or his Allegiance "to the Queen.

And in his Poſtſcript to the Preface, he concludes thus: "That Penry was apprehended, "adjudg'd, and executed for the Truth of "Chriſt, whatſoever other Things were pretended againſt him.

Cartwright relents, and is inlarg'd by the Archbiſhop's Intereſt.

The Preſſing the Law thus cloſe, ſtruck a Terror into the Party, and made the Diſſenters of all Sorts leſs Enterprizing againſt the Government. And now Cartwright either out of Caution or Conviction, began to relax a little, and give Way to prudential Conſiderations. Archbiſhop Whitgift being inform'd this leading Nonconformiſt was coming about, reſolv'd to encourage his Diſpoſition. To this Purpoſe he ſolicited the Queen in his Behalf, procur'd him his Liberty, and her Majeſty's Pardon. The Archbiſhop likewiſe gave him Leave to ſettle at Warwick, where he was Maſter of the Hoſpital founded by the Earl of Leiceſter. Here he had the Liberty of Preaching, upon Condition that he ſhould neither write, preach, nor act, againſt the Conſtitution of the Church of England. Cartwright anſwer'd the Terms, and kept within the Bounds preſcrib'd. However, the Queen was not pleas'd with his being ſo much conſider'd, and thought the Archbiſhop had gone too far in his good Nature. But Whitgift conceiv'd Cartwright might deſerve more Indulgence than Travers, tho' both of them were ordain'd in a foreign Communion. For Travers had never any other Orders but thoſe receiv'd from the Presbyters at Antwerp. But Cartwright had a much better Conveyance of his Character, and was Canonically ordain'd in the Church of England. To give him his due, he was not ungrateful for the Favours receiv'd. For from this Time onwards, he treated the Archbiſhop with a ſuitable Regard, and continued quiet and inoffenſive to his Death, which happen'd about Ten Years after. (p)

A general Aſſembly at Dundee.

In the latter End of April this Year, there was an Aſſembly held at Dundee in Scotland. To prevent the Encroachment of the Kirk upon the Prerogative, Sir James Melvil was ſent to ſignify the King's Pleaſure. His Inſtructions were digeſted under ſeveral Articles.

Several Things requir'd of the Kirk by the King.

Firſt, The King let them know, he would not ſuffer the Diminution of his Honour: And expected they ſhould be leſs arbitrary in appointing the Place, and Time for their Aſſemblies. Before they broke up therefore, he commanded them to ſend Two or Three of their Members to Court, to receive his Orders when, and where, they were to meet next.

Secondly, They were requir'd to make a Decree to check the Confidence and Indiſcretion of the Miniſters, and forbid them declaiming in the Pulpit againſt the Proceedings of his Majeſty and Council: And that Deprivation might be the Penalty of ſuch Miſbehaviour.

Thirdly, That ſince Mr. Craig was worn up with Age, his Majeſty deſir'd the Aſſembly to nominate Five or Six Miniſters, that he might chooſe Two of them to officiate in his Family.

Fourthly, That every Presbytery ſhould be order'd to advertiſe his Majeſty of the Practices of the Papiſts, and thoſe who abetted or entertain'd Bothwell.

And Fifthly; That they ſhould appoint ſome of their Number to cauſe the Magiſtrates in Sea-Port Towns to examine thoſe who embarked, or came Aſhore: And ſend up their Names to Court: That by ſuch ſtrict Enquiries, the Attempts upon the eſtabliſh'd Religion, might be the better diſcover'd. (q)

To the Two firſt complaining Articles, the Aſſembly return'd a General, not to ſay an evaſive Anſwer. As to their Meetings, they ſent the King Word they ſhould govern themſelves by the Act of Parliament made laſt Year. And for Satiſfaction to the Second Article, they made an Act couch'd in theſe looſe ambiguous Terms: That is, they prohibited all Miniſters to utter in Pulpit any raſh or irreverent Speeches againſt his Majeſty, or Council, or their Proceedings: But to give their Admonitions upon juſt and neceſſary Cauſes, with all Fear, Love, and Reverence. The King look'd upon this as a trifling Reſtraint, as a Reſerve for intemperate Liberty, and no better than down-downright Colluſion. And being thus diſappointed, he took little Notice of the Kirk's Addreſs againſt conveying the Tythes to the Laity, and erecting them, as they ſpeak, into Temporalties.

The Aſſembly prohibits Commerce with Spain.

At this Aſſembly an Ordinance was made, that none of the Kirk of Scotland ſhould travel into any Part of the King of Spain's Dominions, for the Buſineſs of Commerce. The Reaſon was, becauſe the Merchants might be call'd in Queſtion by the Inquiſition, and menac'd out of their Religion. Therefore unleſs the King of Spain could be prevail'd with not to moleſt the Reform'd in their Perſons or Effects upon the Score of their Belief, they forbid going into his Territories, under Pain of Excommunication.

The Merchants ſhock'd at this Decree, petition'd the King and Council for Liberty of Trade, and ſucceeded. But the Government, it ſeems was no ſufficient Shelter. For the Miniſters went on with their Cenſures with ſo much Vigour, that the Merchants were glad to reſign and compound the Matter. In ſhort, they promis'd to break off their Commerce with Spain, as ſoon as their Accounts could be ſettled, and their Effects withdrawn.

They endeavour to alter the Market-Day of Edinburgh, but without Succeſs.

The next Advance in Diſcipline was to put down the Monday Market in Edinburgh. They prevail'd ſo far as to get their Act ſeconded by the Magiſtracy and common Council. But this Reformation was ſtrongly diſlik'd by the Shoemakers. Theſe Tradeſmen coming in a Body to the Miniſters Houſes, threatn'd to drive them out of Town, if they preſs'd that Matter any farther. This Ruffle made an Impreſſion; and the Kirk flagging in their Reſolution, let the Market continue as before: Their Acquieſcence made a Jeſt at Court, where 'twas ſaid, That Raſcals and Sowtars could obtain at the Miniſters Hands, what the King could not, in Matters more reaſonable.

The Kirk excommunicate the Roman Catholick Lords.

Some Roman Catholick Lords having taken Arms upon Pretence of getting Grievances redreſs'd, they were ſummon'd to appear before the laſt Parliament: But the Summons not being drawn in Form of Law, the Eſtates referr'd the Proſecution to the King and Council. This was reſented by the Kirk, and interpreted to Favour and Partiality. The Miniſters of the Synod of Fife therefore meeting at St. Andrews, excommunicated the Earls of Angus, Huntley and Arrol, the Lord Home, and Sir James Chiſholm. They likewiſe ſent Letters to all the Presbyteries to publiſh their Cenſure in the Churches. And for a ſupplemental Proviſion, they requir'd the Miniſters of Edinburgh to meet ſome of the well affected Barons to conſult, and take proper Meaſures for the Defence of Religion, and putting a Stop to counter Deſigns. The King ſent for Mr. Robert Bruce, a Miniſter of Character, and order'd him to ſtop the Publication of the Synod's Cenſure: His Majeſty told him the Sentence was neither Juſt in the Ground, nor legal in the Form: That none of theſe Perſons were within the Juriſdiction of the Synod of Fife, nor ſo much as cited to anſwer the Articles objected: And that if the Kirk was thus Arbitrary in their Diſcipline, it might prove of ill Conſequence to the Subject. Bruce replied 'twas not in his Power to ſtop the Publication, or ſuperſede the Reſolution of the Brethren: That the Miniſters of Fife had particular Reaſons for their Proceedings, and were to account for what they did to the general Aſſembly. The King told him, with ſomewhat of Reſentment, that ſince he found the Diſcipline abus'd, and that no Redreſs was to be expected from the Kirk, he would provide a Remedy himſelf.

Idem.

The Publication of the Cenſure went on notwithſtanding, and a conſiderable Number of Miniſters and Barons met at Edinburgh. The King was then upon his Progreſs to Jedburgh for quieting ſome Diſturbances in the Borders. The Earls of Angus, Huntley, and Arrol, met his Majeſty on the Way at Falaw, beg'd they might be brought to their Tryal, and referr'd the Time and Place to his Majeſty's Pleaſure. Upon this, by the Advice of the Council, they were order'd to go to Perth, and ſtay there till the Proſecution was ready.

The Kirk petitions the King touching this Matter.

When this was known, the Aſſembly ſent Commiſſioners to the King to deſire the Tryal of theſe Popiſh Lords might be put off to a longer Time: That by this Means the Profeſſors of Religion, who intend to bring in a Charge of Treaſon againſt them, may have Time to examine the Buſineſs, and reſolve upon a proper Expedient.

Secondly, That according to the cuſtomary Proceedings in ſuch Caſes, thoſe excommunicated and treaſonable Apoſtates (as the Kirk expreſs themſelves) may be committed to ſafe Cuſtody in Edinburgh, Dundee, and Sterling, till the Eſtates ſhall have ſettled the Circumſtances of the Tryal.

Thirdly, That the Jury may not be nominated at the Suggeſtion of the Priſoners, but by the Proſecutors, Profeſſors of the Goſpel.

Fourthly, That the Criminals above-mention'd, being excommunicated by the Church, and cut off from the Society of Chriſt's Body, may not be admitted to their Tryal, or have the Benefit of Law, till they are reconcil'd to the Church.

Fifthly, If his Majeſty is unalterably Reſolv'd not to change the Time or Place of their Tryal, they then deſire, that ſuch as profeſs Religion may be admitted for a Guard to his Majeſty to defend his Perſon from Violence, and to proſecute the Criminals to the Utmoſt; which they are fully determin'd to do, tho' at the Hazard of all their Lives.

The King at the Reading the Title of the Addreſs, was ſomewhat diſpleas'd: He told them, that ſince the Aſſembly had met without his Conſent, he would not own them in the Quality of Commiſſioners: But notwithſtanding he refus'd to treat them under that Character, he condeſcended to hear them as Subjects; and to give Satisfaction, he acquainted them that the Time and Place for the Tryal of theſe Lords was aſſign'd by the Advice of the Council. That upon farther conſidering the Matter, he found the Time too ſhort, and the Town of Perth not ſo convenient: And therefore had appointed a Meeting of the States at Linlithgow, by whoſe Advice he ſhould govern this Affair: That ſince theſe Noblemen were brought to their Tryal at the Requeſt of the Miniſters, he was ſomewhat ſurpriz'd they ſhould now Addreſs him for delaying it. And laſtly, he aſſur'd them Care would be taken that the Judges and Jury ſhould be Perſons unbiaſs'd, and well affected to Religion.

They order the Subjects to meet, and appear in Arms.

The Commiſſioners reported the King's Anſwer to their Principals. The Aſſembly being unpleas'd, made a Reſolve to proſecute the Lords, and to appear in Arms at the Place aſſign'd for the Tryal. To this Purpoſe, ſome of the Members ſtaid at Edinburgh to give Notice to the reſt. The King being inform'd of this Reſolution, ſent for the Miniſters that were in Town, and put them in Mind how groſly they had fail'd in their Duty, by preſuming to draw the Subjects together in Arms without his Authority: And charg'd them not to execute any Thing of that Kind. To this they return'd a canting rebellious Anſwer in theſe Words, That it was the Cauſe of God, and in Defence thereof they could not be deficient. Upon this the King iſſued out a Proclamation to forbid all Perſons meeting in Arms.

And refuſe to obey the King's Proclamation.

Notwithſtanding this Proclamation, great Numbers came to Edinburgh, where the Eſtates were conven'd, and the People began to riſe in all other Parts of the Country. The Tryal of the Popiſh Lords was refer'd to a Committee of the Eſtates, who had likewiſe an Authority to conclude upon an Expedient for the Preſervation of Religion, and quieting the Diſorders in the Kingdom: And that their Deciſion was to have the ſame Force as if it had been made by the Parliament. Several of the Miniſters likewiſe had the Liberty to ſit with the Committee if they pleas'd: But then their Buſineſs was only, as far as it appears, to ſuggeſt and argue, but not to vote with the Reſt. The Committee, after a long Debate, agreed upon ſeveral Heads. I ſhall mention only ſome of them.

Articles agreed on by the Committee of the Eſtates at Edinburgh, with Reſpect to the Roman Catholicks.

Firſt, That ſuch as have not yet profeſs'd the Reform'd Religion, or deſerted it, ſhould conform before the Firſt of February next, give Satisfaction, and ſubmit to the Orders appointed them by the King, and the Church: And in Caſe they pretended Scruple of Conſcience, they ſhould quit the Realm, and tranſport themſelves to ſuch Countries as his Majeſty ſhould appoint: And not return home till they reſolv'd to turn Proteſtants, and ſatisfy the Church. And that during their Baniſhment, themſelves and their Heirs, ſhould enjoy their Eſtates, and have the Liberty of conſtituting Proxies or Attornies to defend their Right, and appear for them in Courts of Juſtice.

That the Earls above-mention'd, and others of that Perſuaſion, ſhould neither diſpute, nor allow any Diſputing, at their Tables againſt the Reform'd Religion: That they ſhould entertain a Miniſter in their Houſes, admit of Conferences for diſentangling them from their Errors, and that they may be the better prepar'd to ſubſcribe the Confeſſion of Faith.

That ſuch of them as make it their Choice to depart the Country, rather than conform to the Religion eſtabliſh'd, ſhall give Security to forbear entring into any Concert with Jeſuits, and others againſt Religion, and the State: And that they ſhould keep no ſuch Correſpondence before they Embark.

Id. pag. 400.

And laſtly, That in the mean Time the Church ſhall convent all ſuſpected Perſons before them, and demand Satisfaction: And in Caſe they prove obſtinate, delate their Names to the King and Council: And that Maſters, and Landlords, ſhall be oblig'd to anſwer for Perſons under their Charge and Juriſdiction.

Biſhop Ailmer*'s Death.*

To return to England, where the next Thing that occurs is, the Death of John Ailmer, Biſhop of London. He died in the Seventy third Year of his Age, and was buried at St. Paul's. He was deſcended from an ancient and conſiderable Family of the Ailmers of Ailmer-Hall in Norfolk. They pretend to a Saxon Original, and claim a Relation to the Ailmers, Earls of Devonſhire and Cornwal, before the Conqueſt. A younger Branch of the Family tranſported themſelves into Ireland, where they intermarried with the Fitz-geralds, and one of them was Lord Chief Juſtice of the King's-Bench, in the Reign of King Henry the VIIIth. As to the Biſhop, he was a Perſon of Learning and Reſolution, govern'd with Vigour, and was ſtrict in requiring Conformity. Part of his Character, which has been touch'd already, is comprehended in theſe Two Verſes upon his Monument.

He was ſucceeded by Richard Fletcher, Biſhop of Worceſter.

The latter End of Auguſt this Year, Prince Henry, the King of Scots Eldeſt Son was baptiz'd with great Solemnity: The Sacrament was adminiſtred by Cunningham, Biſhop of Aberdeen.

William Reynolds, His Death and Charcter.

This Summer William Reynolds, an eminent Roman Catholick Divine, departed this Life. He was extracted from a wealthy Family at Pinhoe in Devonſhire. His Uncle Jerom Reynolds, Dr. in Divinity, took ſome Care of his Education at firſt. He was afterwards ſent to Wincheſter-School, from thence to New College in Oxford, where he appear'd a promiſing Genius, and made a conſiderable Proficiency in moſt Parts of Learning. He went in with the Reformation at firſt, and continued in our Communion ſeveral Years: But it ſeems Biſhop Jewel's Works, which fix'd a great many other People, unſettled Reynolds. He fancied this Prelate did not manage the Argument fairly; and that his Reaſonings were looſe and inconcluſive. He went to Rome upon this Diſſatisfaction, and reconcil'd himſelf to that Church. And having travell'd thro' the greateſt Parts of Italy and France, he ſettled at Rheimes, where Cardinal Allen gave him a friendly Entertainment, and made him Divinity and Hebrew Profeſſor in the Engliſh College. He overfatigued himſelf with Study, which occaſion'd the Breaking a Vein, and haſten'd his End. Pitts reports him a Poet, an Orator, an Hiſtorian: That he had skill in Muſick and Mathematicks; that he was a Philoſopher, a Linguiſt, and an eminent Divine. To mention ſome of his Works: He addreſs'd a Tract upon the Holy Euchariſt to the King of Scots, againſt one Bruce, a Scotch Miniſter: He wrote another Diſcourſe in Defence of the Rhemiſh Tranſlation of the New-Teſtament, againſt Dr. Whitaker, Divinity Profeſſor at Cambridge. And at the Inſtance of the Heads of the Holy League in France, he publiſh'd an ill Diſcourſe to juſtify the Arms of the Leaguers againſt the Government. And to mention only one more; he wrote a Book by Way of Dialogue, intitled, Calvino Turciſmus: This Book, tho' left imperfect at his Death, was afterwards finiſh'd and printed by his Friend William Gifford, who dedicated it to Albert Archduke of Auſtria. (r)

Cardinal Allen his Death, &c.

His Patron, Cardinal Allen, died about two Months after. He was deſcended from a Gentleman's Family in Lancaſhire, bred in Oxford, and was Principal of St. Mary's-Hall. When the Reformation came on he retir'd to Doway in Flanders, where he ſtudied Divinity, and was made Profeſſor in that Faculty. This Allen was the firſt who drew the Engliſh Refugees together, and form'd them into an Academical Society at Doway and Rheimes. Here their Capacities were examin'd, their Buſineſs preſcrib'd, and their Poſts aſſign'd them. Some of them engag'd the Proteſtants in Print, and ſpent their Time in Controverſial Divinity; others collected Memoirs upon the Perſecution of their Friends in England, and digeſted the Accounts they received ved into a Kind of Martyrology. Allen had a conſiderable Share in maintaining the Doctrine of his Church: He wrote ſeveral Tracts, too long to mention. It muſt be granted his Merits, with reſpect to his own Communion, ran high, for which he was created a Cardinal by Sixtus Quintus. His Death was much regretted by the Roman Catholicks: For beſides the Services of his Pen, he kept the Engliſh Papiſts from breaking out into Miſunderſtandings, and made up the Differences between the Secular Prieſts and Jeſuits.

A Miſunderſtanding between the Seculars and Jeſuits in Wiſbich Caſtle.

But this Accommodation was but of ſhort Continuance; for after Allen's Death the Prieſts and Religious, confin'd in Wiſbich-Caſtle, came to an open Rupture. The Occaſion was this: One Father Weſton, alias Edmunds, a Jeſuit, pretended to make Orders, and ſet up for Governour over all the reſt; and to conceal his Ambition, he gave out this Authority was forc'd upon him by Henry Garnet, the Engliſh Provincial. But thoſe of his own Society, who reſign'd to his Pretenſions, were miſled, as ſome ſay, by the counterfeit Sanctity of the Jeſuits, by large Shares in the Diviſion of the Contributions, and by Promiſe of Preferment in Caſe of Succeſs. (s)

The Majority of the Seculars refus'd to come under Weſton's Command: They alledg'd this Poſt had been offer'd to Watſon, Biſhop of Lincoln, who died Priſoner in the Caſtle: That this Prelate refus'd this governing Diſtinction as unſuitable to their preſent Circumſtances: That Affliction and Confinement were great Levellers, and ought to put a Stop to Projects of Dominion: And that if any Order could pretend to Preference and Juriſdiction, the Benedictines had the beſt Claim: For theſe Religious had been ſettled in England near a Thouſand Years.

Idem.

Weſton, to cover his Encroachment, took a modeſt Title, and only ſtiled himſelf Agent for the Priſoners. 'Twas thought his Forwardneſs was under-hand encourag'd by the Jeſuits both in England, and elſewhere. The Bottom of the Buſineſs was probably to try the Temper of the Secular Prieſts: And if they had prov'd tame and paſſive under Weſton's Pretentions, they might have made a Precedent of it; and Garnett the Provincial, 'tis likely, would have ſtretch'd his Authority over all the Engliſh Seculars.

About this Time a Roman Catholick Prieſt of Character came to Wiſbich: He had been very ſerviceable to the Priſoners in collecting and conveying Contributions. And thus being a Friend to both Parties, they agreed to refer the Difference to his Arbitration. He gives the Cauſe againſt the Jeſuits, and orders Weſton to deſiſt from his Claim of Superiority. The Jeſuits, notwithſtanding they had referr'd the Controverſy to him, ridicul'd his Award, and refus'd to ſtand by it.

Weſton oblig'd by his Provincial to lay down his Claim.

Soon after they came to another Compromiſe, and two Prieſts by the Conſent of both Parties were ſent for to put an End to this Diſpute. Theſe Referrees declar'd Weſton's Agency would create Miſunderſtandings too miſchievous in the Conſequence, and therefore ought to be given up: And Weſton once more refuſing to abide by the Reference, an Order was with ſome Difficulty procur'd from the Provincial Garnett to command him to lay down his Claim. (t) But this Accommodation amounted to no more than a Truce; for the Conteſt between the two Orders broke out again not long after.

The Puritans having miſcarried in their open Attacks upon the Church, endeavour'd to carry on their Deſigns more under Covert. Their magnifying the Sabbath-Day, as they call Sunday, was a ſerviceable Expedient for this Purpoſe. Preaching the ſtrict Obſervance of this Feſtival had a ſtrong Colour of Zeal, and gain'd them the Character of Perſons particularly concern'd for the Honour of God Almighty. To what Degrees of Rigour this Doctrine was ſtrein'd the Reader may ſee by ſome of the Aſſertions in Dr. Bound's Book of the Sabbath, printed this Year. This Divine maintains:

Bound's Doctrine concerning the Obſervation of the Sabbath.

1ſt, That the Command of Sanctiſying every Seventh Day, in the Moſaick Decalogue, is moral, and perpetual.

2dly, That whereas all other Parts in the Jewiſh Oeconomy were to ceaſe under Chriſtianity, this of the Sabbath was only to change the Day, but to remain unalter'd in other Circumſtances.

3. That the Reſt upon this Day muſt be particular and diſtinguiſh'd, and quite different from the cuſtomary Uſage. He defines the Manner of this Reſt by affirming, 4thly, That Scholars muſt not ſtudy the creditable Sciences, nor Lawyers entertain Clients, nor peruſe Evidences; Serjeants, Apparators, and Summoners, muſt be prohibited executing their reſpective Offices: Juſtices of Peace are not to take Examinations, nor act upon that Day. To ring more Bells than one is pronounc'd unlawful. (u) No publick Entertainments or Wedding-Dinners are to be made. Under this Inſtance of Reſtraint, there was an odd Reſerve of Liberty for Lords, Knights, and Gentlemen of Faſhion: But which Way this Ceremony could conſiſt with Bound's Principles is difficult to imagine. And laſtly, All Diverſions lawful upon other Days were to be forborn; and no Perſon was to diſcourſe of Recreations, News, or Buſineſs.

This Doctrine being ſingular in Strictneſs, and thoſe who recommended it Perſons of unexceptionable Behaviour, grew very popular, and great Numbers were proſelyted to it. The Learned notwithſtanding were divided in their Opinion. Some look'd on this Doctrine as agreeable to the Holy Scriptures, and a ſeaſonable Revival of ancient Truth. Others believ'd Bound built upon a weak Foundation; and that though his Inferences might be right, his Principles were wrong. However, ſince they tended to the Advancement of Piety, they thought it more ſerviceable to let the Miſtake paſs upon the People. Others look'd farther, and cenſur'd theſe Aſſertions as a Reſtraint of Chriſtian Liberty, and throwing us back to the Moſaick Diſpenſation. Beſides, 'twas reaſonably ſuſpected Bound could have no friendly Deſign in this Performance: 'Tis plain he ſtruck at ancient Uſage and the Authority of the Church; and that by appearing ſo ſtrongly for the ſtrict Obſervation of the Lord's-Day, his Intention was to put down the other Feſtivals: That he wrote upon this View is pretty evident by his affirming, That he ſees not where the Lord has given any Authority to his Church ordinarily, and perpetually to ſanctify any Day, excepting that which he hath ſanctified himſelf. And farther, he urges it as a Proof of Degeneracy and Innovation in the Church of Rome, that they had rais'd ſeveral Days to an Equality of Regard with the Seventh; that their Religious Offices were as ſolemn, and their Prohibitions of Working as peremptory, for Holidays as Sundays. Beſides, the Diſſenters might have a farther Reaching in preſſing theſe Sabbatarian Rigours; and that by gaining the People to this new Doctrine they might improve their Intereſt, and recover ſome Part of the Ground they loſt in the Miſcarriage of their Diſcipline; it ſeems ſome of the Party run the Doctrine to a ſcandalous Extremity, and deliver'd frightful Paradoxes in the Pulpit. They were ſo hardy as to ſay, That to do any ſervile Work or Buſineſs on the Lord's Day, was as great a Sin as to kill a Man, or commit Adultery. In Somerſetſhire, That to throw a Bowl on the Lord's-Day was as great a Sin as to kill a Man. In Norfolk, That to make a Feaſt, or dreſs a Wedding-Dinner on the ſame, was as great a Sin as for a Father to take a Knife and cut his Child's Throat. And in Suffolk, That to ring more Bells than one on the Lord's Day, was as great a Sin as to commit a Murder. (w)

Upon theſe Exceſſes a Complaint was preferred againſt ſome of the Preachers, and their Books order'd to be deliver'd to the Biſhops and Magiſtracy by Whitgift and the Chief Juſtice Popham. But notwithſtanding this Care in the Government the Doctrine ſpread, and catch'd upon the People. The Nonconformiſts were not wanting in their Endeavours: For in moſt of their Books they made it their Buſineſs to reinforce the Subject, and preſs the Practice. Thomas Rogers, a Clergyman of Character, obſerves, That what the Brethren wanted in Strength and Learning they ſupplied in Conduct and Art: That when they found their Presbyteries not defenſible againſt the Attacks of the Church, they quitted their old Works, and rais'd new ones; and that from hence they play'd their Artillery with no ſmall Advantage. (x) 'Tis a Comfort to my Soul, ſays this Divine, and will be to my dying Hour, that I have been the Man and the Means that the Sabbatarian Errors are brought into Light and Knowlege of the State, &c.

A Conteſt at Cambridge concerning the Five Points.

To proceed; For ſome Time paſt there had been a warm Diſpute among the Reformed in England about Predeſtination, Free-Will, the Force of Divine Aſſiſtance, Perſeverance, and the Extent of Redemption. The Puritans held the Calvinian Side: And here it muſt be confeſs'd, they were abetted by no ſmall Numbers of the Conforming Clergy. The Arminian Tenents, as they were afterwards call'd, were look'd on as bordering upon Popery, which made ſome People ſtart at them. Thus Travers, in his Complaint to the Council againſt Hooker, ſuggeſts this Article amongſt the reſt, That he had taught another Doctrine of Predeſtination than what was laid down in the Word of God, as it was underſtood by all the Churches which profeſs'd the Goſpel. Calvin's Scheme of Predeſtination was fortify'd by Perkin's Golden Chain, publiſh'd about four Years ſince. But that which brought it the neareſt to a publick Eſtabliſhment, was the Countenance of the Lambeth Articles. This Doctrine, handed from Geneva by the Engliſh Refugees, and propagated by Cartwright in the Margaret-Profeſſor's Chair, had gain'd great Footing in Cambridge, eſpecially amongſt the Heads; inſomuch that thoſe who held the other Side of the Queſtion were reckoned little better than Novelliſts. Dr. Whitaker, the Queen's Profeſſor, fell in with Perkins. This Party having ſtated the Controverſy to their own Liking, and drawn the Articles into Form, laid them before Archbiſhop Whitgift: But then they had taken Care to prepoſſeſs him with an ill Opinion of thoſe who differ'd from them: That they had behav'd themſelves mutinouſly, and diſturb'd the Harmony of the Univerſity. Dr. Whitaker, and ſome other eminent Predeſtinarians, were diſpatch'd to London on this Meſſage. The Archbiſhop having a great Value for Whitaker upon the Score of his Performance againſt Cardinal Bellarmine, and being willing to put an End to the Differences amongſt the Students, enter'd upon a farther Debate of the Queſtion. To this Purpoſe, he ſent for Dr. Fletcher Elect of London, Dr. Richard Vaughan Elect of Bangor, Dr. Trindall Dean of Ely, Dr. Whitaker, and the reſt of the Divines who came from Cambridge, and propos'd the Points above-mention'd to their Conſideration. This was done at Lambeth on the 10th of November: Theſe Prelates and Divines, after ſome Conſultation, came to the following Reſolution, digeſted under Nine Heads, and call'd the Lambeth Articles. They ſtand thus:

The Lambeth Articles ſettled the Calvinian Way.

1. Deus ab æterno Prædeſtinavit quoſdam ad Vitam, Quoſdam reprobavit ad Mortem.	1. God from all Æternity has predeſtinated ſome Perſons to Life, and ſome he has reprobated, or doomed to Death and Deſtruction.
2. Cauſa movens aut Efficiens Prædeſtinationis ad Vitam non eſt Præviſio Fidei, aut Perſeverantiæ, aut bonorum Operum, aut ullius Rei quæ inſit in Perſonis Prædeſtinatis, ſed ſola Voluntas bene Placiti Dei.	2. The Moving or Efficient Cauſe of Predeſtination unto Life, is not the Divine Præſcience of Faith, or of Perſeverance, or of good Works, or of any other commendable Quality in the Perſon predeſtinated, but only the Good-will and Pleaſure of God.

That Archbiſhop Whitgift believ'd the Articles true under this State, I think is pretty plain from his aſſenting to them. The learned Heylin endeavours to relieve his Memory from this Imputation, and ſuppoſes he might afford his Countenance nance upon other Motives. For Inſtance; That he might prefer the taking up the preſent Differences, and allaying the Heats in the Univerſity, to the guarding againſt remoter Inconveniencies, which lay more out of Sight: Or, that he might think it proper to ſupport the Queen's Profeſſor againſt thoſe of the contrary Sentiment: That Whitaker having ſomewhat of a publick Character, and done Service to the Reformation, deſerved ſomewhat more than ordinary Conſideration. Farther, he ſuppoſes it poſſible, that Whitgift not having penetrated the Subject, nor viewed the Articles on all Sides, might be ſurpriz'd into an Approbation. But this Excuſe can do little Service. But to fortify the reſt of his Conjectures, he obſerves this Archbiſhop took Hooker's Part againſt Travers at the Council-Board, and entertain'd Dr. Harſnet in his Family, who had decry'd the Doctrine of Irreſpective Reprobation in a Sermon at St. Paul's-Croſs. Octob. 1595.

Some Time before theſe Articles were paſs'd at Lambeth, Whitgift wrote to Hutton, Archbiſhop of York, for his Opinion upon the Controverſy; acquainting him withal with the Claſhings and Animoſities at Cambridge. Hutton returns an Anſwer dated October the 1ſt. "This Prelate, in his Letter, laments the Miſunderſtandings in the Univerſity of Cambridge, and ſeems to throw the Blame on thoſe of the Anticalvinian Side. He takes Notice of his having a Copy of the Lambeth Articles: And that at firſt he thought to have offer'd ſomething upon each of them." But whether theſe Strictures were to reinforce, or qualify, or object, he does not tell us. "But upon farther Conſideration he laid this Method aſide, and choſe rather to deliver his Opinion briefly upon the Points of Election and Reprobation, which ſeem'd to have given Riſe to the Diſpute. This Way he thought the moſt adviſeable: For by treating the particular Articles, he was afraid ſome People, for whom he had a great Regard, might be exaſperated. And laſtly, he puts the Archbiſhop in Mind, that they two while they liv'd in Cambridge were exactly of the ſame Sentiment in Religious Matters." But what his Opinion was upon the Heads of Reprobation and Election was drawn up, I ſuppoſe, in a diſtinct Paper, for 'tis not inſerted in the Letter. (a) Upon the Whole, 'tis not clear from this Letter that Archbiſhop Hutton was wholly for the Lambeth Articles: But let this be as it will, 'tis certain the Queen was extreamly diſoblig'd at ſo publick a Reſolution; inſomuch, that had it not been for the Intereſt of ſome of Whitgift's Friends, and the particular Regard her Majeſty had for this Prelate, ſhe had order'd all theſe Lambeth Divines to be proſecuted to a Præmunire. But now being ſoftned to a gentler Reſolve, ſhe condeſcended to hear the Archbiſhop in his Defence. He excuſed himſelf by alledging, "That neither himſelf, or the other Divines, had made any Canons, Articles, or Decrees, for a ſtanding Rule or Direction to the Church; but that their Deſign was only to ſettle ſome Propoſitions to be ſent to Cambridge for quieting ſome unhappy Differences in that Univerſity." The Queen, tho' ſomewhat ſatisfied with this Apology, commanded the Archbiſhop to recal and ſuppreſs thoſe Articles with all Expedition. This Order was ſo carefully executed, that a Copy of them was not to be met with for a long Time after. (b)

Farther, That theſe Lambeth Articles were not the general Doctrine of the Engliſh Reformation appears both from the Homilies, and the Writings of ſeveral eminent Divines in the Church's Communion.

The Homilies declare againſt ſome of them.

Firſt, The Homily of the Nativity of our Bleſſed Saviour, ſpeaking of the Redemption purchas'd by him, declares, That this Deliverance or Redemption was not Partial, Intended only for a few, but General and Univerſal for all Mankind. And afterwards, in the ſame Diſcourſe, 'tis ſaid, That the Promiſe and Covenant of God made unto Abraham and his Poſterity, was to deliver Mankind from the bitter Curſe of the Law: And that the promis'd Meſſiah was to make perfect Satisfaction by his Death for the Sins of all People. And thus this Paſſage pronounces clearly againſt the Lambeth Articles upon the Point of Univerſal Redemption.

The Homily of the Reſurrection ſeems plainly to combat another Article: 'Tis with Reſpect to the falling finally from a State of Grace and Safety: For ſpeaking how dangerous a Thing 'twould be, to relapſe into Immorality after the Pardon of our Sins, theſe Expreſſions are uſed, What a Folly would it be for us to loſe the Inheritance we are now ſet in, for the Vile and Tranſitory Pleaſures of Sin? And what an Unkindneſs would it be to drive our Saviour Chriſt from us, to baniſh him violently out of our Souls; and inſtead of him, in whom is all Grace and Vertue, to receive the Ungracious Spirit of the Devil, the Founder of all Naughtineſs and Miſchief! And can the falling away from Grace, and the Forfeiture of Happineſs be inſinuated in plainer Language? And as to the Co-operation of the Will with the Aſſiſtances of Heaven, it may well be ſuppos'd as a Matter beyond all Queſtion from the publiſhing the Homilies. For to what Purpoſe are all thoſe Arguments to Virtue, and Diſſuaſives from Vice, made Uſe of by the Compilers, if Men are perfectly diſabled in their natural Faculties, and can do nothing for themſelves?

The famous Biſhop Jewel affirms, That by the Words ['tis finiſh'd] pronounc'd by our Saviour upon the Croſs, 'twas plainly ſignified, Perſolutum jam eſſe Pretium pro Peccato humani Generis, That the Ranſom for the Sin of Mankind was now fully Diſcharg'd. And does not this imply his Belief of Univerſal Redemption? And as this Prelate was a leading Member in the Upper Houſe of Convocation, ſo Noel was Prolocutor for the Lower Houſe, when the Nine and thirty Articles were debated and ſettled. Now this Divine in his Latin Catechiſm aſſigning the Reaſons why God is ſaid to be Our Father, mentions this as one of the moſt ſignificant. Quod nos divinè per Spiritum Sanctum regeneravit, & per Fidem in verum ſuum & Naturalem Filium Jeſum Chriſtum nos Elegit, ſibiq; Filios & Regni Cæleſtis Hæredes per eundem Inſtituit, i. e. Becauſe he has regenerated us by the Holy Ghoſt, and elected us by Faith in his Son Jeſus Chriſt, &c. From hence 'tis inferr'd, that if Election is the Effect of our Faith in Chriſt, and is conſequent upon this Quality, then the Supra-&-Sublapſarian Schemes are out of Doors, and can't be ſaid to be any Part of Noel's Perſwaſion.

Jewel's Defenſ. Apolog. cap. 18.

Biſhop Jewel, and Noel, Dean of Saint Paul's, write to the ſame Purpoſe.

Dr. Baroe, Margaret-Profeſſor in Cambridge, about the Year 1574, declares ſtrongly againſt the Zuinglian or Calvinian Doctrine of Predeſtination. In his Lecture upon theſe Words of Jonah, Yet forty Days, and Nineveh ſhall be overthrown, he aſſerts, that the denouncing this Judgment is not to be look'd on as if the Prophet had proclaim'd an abſolute Decree from Heaven; but this deciſive Language was uſed only to awaken the Ninevites to Repentance: For notwithſtanding the Sentence has a poſitive and decretory tory Sound, 'tis certain there was a Condition imply'd; and therefore the Threatning muſt be conſtrued to this Meaning, That the Ninevites ſhould certainly be overthrown unleſs they repented. That the Text is thus to be underſtood is evident from the Event. (c) From hence he proceeds to diſcourſe the Point of Election to Eternal Life. And from this Hiſtory of Jonah, and a reſembling Caſe in Geneſis, he makes no Scruple to affirm, "That 'tis the Will of God we ſhould have Eternal Life, if we believe and perſevere in the Faith of Chriſt; but if we don't believe, or fall ſhort in our Perſeverance, then 'tis not the Will of God we ſhould be ſaved. He illuſtrates this Point farther by the Meſſage deliver'd to Hezekiah by the Prophet Eſaiah. (d) And here notwithſtanding the Iſſue ſeems not to correſpond with the Sentence pronounc'd, he ſalves the Inconſiſtency with the Implication of a tacit Reſerve: And thus, ſays he, the Immutability of the Divine Attributes is obvious and intelligible. But of this Baroe more afterwards.

Harſnet's Sermon at St. Paul's-Croſs preach'd in the Year 1584, is more full and remarkable for this Purpoſe. His Text was theſe Words, As I live, ſaith the Lord God, I have no Pleaſure in the Death of the Wicked. From hence he takes Occaſion to break out into ſome Warmth againſt the Calvinian Doctrine of Reprobation, There is a Conceit in the World, ſays he, which ſpeaks little better of our Gracious God than this, That God ſhould deſign many Thouſand of Souls to Hell before they were, not in Eye to their Faults, but to his own abſolute Will and Power, and to get him Glory in their Damnation. This Opinion is grown high and monſtrous, and like a Goliah, and Men do ſhake and tremble at it, yet never a Man reaches to David's Sling to caſt it down. In the Name of the Lord of Hoſts we will encounter it, for it has revil'd not the Hoſt of the Living God, but the Lord of Hoſts. (d)

Ezek. 33. v. 11.

A remarkable Sermon againſt the Predeſtinarians preached at Saint Paul's-Croſs by Mr. Harſnet.

(d) Harſnet's Sermon at Paul's-Croſs. bound up at the End of Dr. Steward's Three Sermons in the Year 1658.

Firſt, That it is directly in Oppoſition to this Text of Holy Scripture, and ſo turns the Truth of God into a Lye: For whereas God in this Text doth ſay and ſwear, That he doth not delight in the Death of Man, this Opinion ſaith, That not One or Two, but Millions of Men ſhould fry in Hell; and that he made them for no other Purpoſe than to be the Children of Death and Hell; and that for no other Cauſe but his mere Pleaſure Sake: And ſo ſay, That God doth not only ſay, but will ſwear to a Lye. For the Oath ſhould have run thus, As I live, (ſaith the Lord) I do delight in the Death of Man.

Secondly, It doth (not by Conſequence, but) directly make God the Author of Sin. For if God without Eye to Sin did deſign Men to Hell, then did he ſay and ſet down that he ſhould ſin; for without Sin he cannot come to Hell: And indeed, doth not this Opinion ſay, That the Almighty God, in the Eye of his Councel, did not only ſee, but ſay, that Adam ſhould fall, and ſo order, and decree, and ſet down, his Fall, that it was no more poſſible for him not to fall, than it was poſſible for him not to eat? And of that, when God doth Order, ſet down, and decree, (I truſt) he is the Author, unleſs they will ſay, then when the Right Honourable Lord-Keeper doth ſay in open Court, We order, he means not to be the Author of that his Order.

Which ſaid, he tells us Thirdly, That it takes away from Adam (in his State of Innocency) all Freedom of Will and Liberty not to ſin: For had he had Freedom to have alter'd God's Deſignment, Adam's Liberty had been above the Deſignment of God. And here I remember a little witty Solution is made, that is, If we reſpect Adam's Will, he had Power not to ſin; but if God's Decrees, he could not but ſin. This is a ſilly Solution: And indeed it is as much as if you ſhould take a ſound ſtrong Man that hath Power to walk, and to lie ſtill, and bind him Hand and Foot, (as they do in Bedlam) and lay him down, and then bid him riſe up and walk, or elſe you will ſtir him up with a Whip, and he tell you that there be Chains, ſo that he is not able to ſtir: And you tell him again, that that is no Excuſe; for if he look upon his Health, his Strength, his Legs, he hath Power to walk, or to ſtand ſtill; but if upon his Chains, indeed in that Reſpect he is not able to walk. I truſt he that ſhould whip that Man for not walking, were well worthy to be whipped himeſlf.

Fourthly, As God doth abhor a Heart and a Heart, and his Soul deteſteth alſo a double-minded Man, ſo himſelf cannot have a Mind and a Mind; a Face like Janus, to look two Ways. Yet this Opinion maketh in God two Wills, the one flat oppoſite to the other. An Hidden Will, by which he appointed and willed that Adam ſhould Sin; and an Open Will, by which he forbad him to ſin. His Open Will ſaid to Adam in Paradiſe, Adam thou ſhalt not eat of the Tree of Good and Evil: His Hidden Will ſaid, Thou ſhalt eat; nay, now I my ſelf cannot keep thee from eating, for my Decree from Eternity is paſſed; thou ſhalt eat, that thou may drown all thy Poſterity into Sin, and that I may drench them, as I have deſigned, in the Bottomleſs Pit of Hell.

Fifthly, Among all the Abominations of Queen Jezabel, that was the greateſt (1 Kings 21) when, as hunting after the Life of innocent Naboth, ſhe ſet him up amongſt the Princes of the Land, that ſo he might have the greater Fall. God planted Man in Paradiſe, (as in a pleaſant Vineyard) and mounted him to the World as on a Stage, and honour'd him with the Sovereignty over all the Creatures: He put all Things in Subjection under his Feet, ſo that he could not paſs a Decree from all Eternity againſt him, to throw him down Head-long into Hell: For God is not a Jezabel, Tollere in altum, to lift up a Man, ut Caſu graviore ruat, that he may make the greater Noiſe with his Fall.

He goes on to a conſiderable Length upon the ſame Argument: But what has been cited is enough to ſhew his Opinion.

However, notwithſtanding what has been produc'd on this Side of the Queſtion, 'tis certain the Calvinian Syſtem prevail'd upon great Numbers, and ſeems to have been the general, or at leaſt the governing, Perſwaſion in the Univerſity of Cambridge. Though as for Harſnet, it does not appear he met with any Check or Diſcountenance for laying ſuch black Imputations upon the Predeſtinarian Doctrine; though it muſt be confeſs'd he expos'd himſelf ſufficiently by dilating ſo much upon the Subject, and declaiming ſo vigourouſly in ſo publick a Place: For commonly at St. Paul's-Croſs the Privy-Council, the Biſhops in Town, and the Judges, made Part of the Audience. But we don't find Harſnet underwent any Cenſure upon this Score, either by the High Commiſſion, or that any Complaint was made to the Queen or Council: Whereas had the Diſcourſe been judg'd inconſiſtent with the Doctrine of the Church, this might have been expected. On the other Hand, Harſnet was one of Whitgift's Chaplains, and afterwards recommended by him to King James, by whom he was firſt preferr'd to the Maſterſhip of Pembroke-Hall, and then to the See of Chicheſter, from whence he was tranſlated to Norwich, and in the next Reign promoted to the Archbiſhoprick of York.

But notwithſtanding Harſnet's Succeſs, the oppoſite Opinion ſeems to have had the Aſcendant in Cambridge, where the Heat of the Controverſy being kept up, Dr. Baroe finding himſelf overbalanc'd, was willing to relinquiſh the Chair, and quit the Univerſity. Fuller will have it, he expected being turn'd out when the Term of his Profeſſorſhip was expir'd. He takes Notice his Triennial Lecture began to draw near an End. Here Dr. Heylin, from the Records of the Univerſity, proves Fuller miſtaken in aſſigning the Length of the Time, and ſhews the Margaret-Profeſſor was never choſen for more than two Years. (e) This learned Writer obſerves elſewhere, that Baroe held his Profeſſor's Place to the End of the Term, and did not ſo much as offer himſelf for another Election. But notwithſtanding he was not ejected, 'tis probable he might retire from his Poſt upon the Score of being uneaſy: For now his Doctrine was not only cenſur'd by the Lambeth-Articles, but a Complaint againſt him, ſubſcrib'd by ſome of the Heads, had been ſent up to the Lord Burleigh. Now ſince this Letter opens the Hiſtory of this Controverſy, ſhews the Riſe of the Diſpute, and the Strength of the contending Parties, it may not be improper to lay it before the Reader.

A Copy of the Letter ſent from ſome of the Heads in Cambridge to the Lord Burleigh, Lord High Treaſurer of England, and Chancellor of the Univerſity.

A Letter to the Lord Burleigh, Chancellor of Cambridge touching the Predeſtinarian Controverſy.

Right Honourable,

“Our bounden Duty remember'd: We are right ſorry to have ſuch Occaſion to trouble your Lordſhip. But the Peace of this Univerſity and Church (which is dear unto us) being brought in Peril by the late Reviving of new Opinions, and troubleſome Controverſies, amongſt us, hath urg'd us (in Regard of the Places we here ſuſtain) not only to be careful for the Suppreſſing the ſame to our Power, but alſo to give your Lordſhip farther Information hereof as our Honourable Head and careful Chancellor.

“About a Year paſt (amongſt divers others who here attempted publickly to teach new and ſtrange Opinions in Religion) one Mr. Barret, more boldly than the reſt, did preach divers Popiſh Errors in St. Mary's to the juſt Offence of many, which he was enjoin'd to retract, but hath refus'd ſo to do in ſuch Sort as hath been preſcrib'd: With whoſe Fact and Opinions your Lordſhip was made acquainted by Dr. Some, the Deputy Vice-Chancellor. Hereby Offence and Diviſion growing as after by Dr. Baroe's Publick Lectures and Determinations in the Schools, contrary (as his Auditors have inform'd) to Dr. Whiteacres, and the ſound received Truth ever ſince her Majeſty's Reign; we ſent up to London by common Conſent in November laſt, Dr. Tyndal and Dr. Whiteacres (Men eſpecially choſen for that Purpoſe) for Conference with my Lord of Canterbury, and other principal Divines there, that the Controverſies being examin'd, and the Truth by their Conſent confirm'd, the contrary Errors and Contentions thereabouts might the rather ceaſe. By whoſe good Travel with ſound Conſent in Truth, ſuch Advice and Care was taken by certain Propoſitions (containing certain ſubſtantial Points of Religion, taught and receiv'd in this Univerſity and Church during the Time of her Majeſty's Reign, and conſented unto and publiſh'd by the beſt approv'd Divines both at home and abroad) for the maintaining of the ſame Truth and Peace of the Church, as thereby we enjoy'd here great and comfortable Quiet until Dr. Baroe, (in January laſt, in his Sermon ad Clerum in St. Mary's, contrary to Reſtraint and Commandment from the Vice-Chancellor and the Heads) by renewing again theſe Opinions, diſturbed our Peace, whereby his Adherents and Diſciples were and are too much embolden'd to maintain falſe Doctrine, to the corrupting and diſturbing the Univerſity and the Church, if it be not in Time effectually prevented. For Remedy whereof we have with joint Conſent and Care (upon Complaint of divers Batchelors of Divinity) proceeded in the Examination of the Cauſe, according to our Statutes, and uſual manner of Proceeding in ſuch Cauſes, whereby it appeareth by ſufficient Teſtimonies, that Dr. Baroe hath offended in ſuch Things as his Articles had charg'd him withal.

“There is alſo, ſince the former, another Complaint preferr'd againſt him by certain Batchelors in Divinity, that he hath not only in the Sermon, but alſo for the Space of this Fourteen or Fifteen Years taught in his Lectures, preach'd in his Sermons, determin'd in the Schools, and printed in ſeveral Books, divers Points of Doctrine not only contrary to himſelf, but alſo contrary to that which hath been taught and received ever ſince her Majeſty's Reign, and agreeable to the Errors of Popery, which we know your Lordſhip hath always diſliked and hated: So that we (who for the Space of many Years paſt have yielded him ſundry Benefits and Favours here in the Univerſity, being a Stranger, and forborn him when he hath often heretofore (buſy and curious in aliena Republica) broach'd New and Strange Queſtions in Religion. Now unleſs we ſhould be careleſs of maintaining the Truth of Religion eſtabliſh'd, and of our Duties in our Places, cannot (being reſolv'd and confirm'd in the Truth of the long profeſſed and received Doctrine) but continue to uſe all good Means, and ſeek at your Lordſhip's Hands ſome effectual Remedy hereof, leſt by permitting Paſſage to theſe Errors, the whole Body of Popery ſhould by little and little break in upon us, to the Overthrow of our Religion, and conſequently the Withdrawing of many here and elſewhere from true Obedience to her Majeſty.

“May it therefore pleaſe your Lordſhip to have an honourable Conſideration of the Premiſſes, and (for the better maintaining of Peace, and the Truth of Religion ſo long receiv'd in this Univerſity and Church) to vouchſafe your Lordſhips good Aid and Advice, both to the Comfort of us, (wholly conſenting and agreeing in Judgment) and all others of the Univerſity truly affected, and to the Suppreſſion in Time, not only of theſe Errors, but even of groſs Popery like, by ſuch Means, in Time eaſily to creep in amongſt us, (as we find by late Experience it hath dangerouſly began.) Thus craving Pardon for troubling your Lordſhip, and commending the ſame in Prayers to Almighty God, we humbly take our Leave.

Your Lordſhip's Humble, and bounden to be commanded,

The Church of England not reform'd upon the Calviniſt Scheme, either in Diſcipline or Doctrine.

By this complaining Letter the Reader may perceive the Univerſity began to make a Stand upon the Predeſtinarian Novelties, to throw off the Impoſitions of Calviniſm, and recover the old Doctrine of the Reformation. I ſay, the old Doctrine, for that the Church reform'd upon different Notions of Free Will, Perſeverance, &c. may be collected from what has been already obſerv'd in the Reigns of King Henry the Eighth, and King Edward the Sixth. And here, beſides the Inſtitution and Erudition of a Chriſtian Man drawn up by the Biſhops, we have the ſingle Authorities of Latimer and Hooper. (f) To which may be added the Homilies ſet forth in the Reign of King Edward the Sixth; ſome of which are very full to this Purpoſe. (g) I might ſubjoin more Teſtimonies from the Homilies, and other Divines in the Reign of King Edward; but what has been ſaid may ſerve to ſatisfie the Reader, that as Calvin's Church Government found no Entertainment with our firſt Reformers, ſo neither did his Doctrine paſs their Teſt, or ſettle into any publick Eſtabliſhment.

March 5. 1595.

To proceed: Richard Fletcher Biſhop of London, drew up ſome Regulations for his Dioceſe, and reforming his Spiritual Courts. How far they were executed, is uncertain; for they run in a Form of Recommendation, rather than Command. However, ſince they mention the Complaints againſt the Eccleſiaſtical Courts, point to the Remedy, ſet forth the Diſcipline, and open the Methods of Proceeding, I ſhall tranſcribe them into the Records. A General Aſſembly at Montroſs in Scotland.

And now this Year may conclude with the Mention of a General Aſſembly at Montroſs in June laſt. At this Meeting the King's Commiſſioners inſiſted upon the following Articles.

1*ſt*. That whoſoever engag'd in any treaſonable Practice againſt the King's Perſon and Government, ſhould, after legal Conviction, be excommunicated; that by this Means there might be a conſtant Harmony between the Church and State.

2*dly*. That no Excommunication ſhould be pronounced at the Diſcretion of particular Perſons, but that a ſufficient Number of the Church ſhould be firſt convened, and the Cenſure agreed by publick Conſent.

3*dly*. That none ſhould be excommunicated for Civil Cauſes, for petty Inſtances of Miſbehaviour, or particular Injuries to Miniſters, leſt by ſuch Miſmanagement this ſolemn Exerciſe of the Keys ſhould fall under Contempt.

4*thly*. That for the future none ſhould be ſummarily excommunicated, but that the legal and cuſtomary Summons of the Parties ſhould be premiſ'd.

The Aſſembly agreed to the firſt Propoſition, with the Limitation of Legitima Cognitione Eccleſiaſtica præeunte; or that the Cauſe ſhould be firſt examin'd by the Church. The ſecond Article was paſs'd without Reſerve; but they demurr'd to the third and fourth: Theſe, they ſaid, were Points of great Weight, and requir'd Time for Deliberation. And thus the ſettling thoſe two Articles was poſtpon'd to the next Aſſembly. However, to offer ſomething towards Satiſfaction in the mean Time, they forbid any ſummary Excommunication, niſi Salus Eccleſiæ periclitetur, i. e. unleſs the Church was in Danger: And when that Caſe came up, they intended, no doubt, to be Judges themſelves. This Clauſe was interpreted by the King as a Reſerve for Liberty, and a Colour for Arbitrary Proceedings. (i)

An Aſſembly at Edinburgh. Anno Dom. 1596.

The next Year affords little Church Hiſtory in England, but in Scotland a great Deal. The Aſſembly met at Edinburgh to conſult upon the Danger with which the Kingdom ſeem'd to be threaten'd: For now a Spaniſh Invaſion was the general Diſcourſe, and here the Enquiry turn'd upon two Points. Firſt, What might be the Cauſes of ſo black a Proſpect: And ſecondly, they deliberated upon the Means to reſiſt the Common Enemy. As to the Cauſes, they concluded them the Sins of the Nation, and more eſpecially of the Miniſtry: And to give the better Direction to a Remedy, they order'd a Committee to draw up the Failings of the Churchmen under ſeveral Heads, both with Reſpect to their Office and private Life. Thus within a Day or two ſeveral Articles of the Miniſters Miſbehaviour were laid before the Aſſembly. And to diſcharge their Commiſſion more effectually, they brought in a Lay-Liſt of the Diſorders in the King's Family; the Mal-adminiſtration in the Courts of Juſtice, and the Failings common to all Degrees, together with the Proper Remedies.

They appoint a publick Faſt.

This Performance being well receiv'd, and the Aſſembly acknowledging that Part of the Charge which concern'd themſelves, appointed a Day of Humiliation for making a New Covenant, as they call'd it, to awaken their Conſciences to a better Diſcharge of their Duty. This is the Covenant which the Parity-Men object was broken at the ſettling Epiſcopacy: But this, as Archbiſhop Spotſwood obſerves, is a great Miſtake: For this Humiliation-Covenant has not ſo much as a Syllable ſounding to this Senſe: Nothing that relates either to the confirming the Presbyterian Government, or renouncing the ancient Hierarchy; they only oblig'd themſelves in general to continue in the Profeſſion of the Truth, and live anſwerably: But as to any Regulations of Ceremony, or Eccleſiaſtical Polity, there's no Mention of that in the Records. As to the Expedients for oppoſing the Common Enemy, they addreſs'd the Court, That all thoſe who had abetted the Inſurrection of the Popiſh Lords, ſhould ſurrender themſelves, and be confin'd till they had given Security not to hold any Correſpondence with thoſe Noblemen, in caſe they return'd into the Country: And that the Revenues of the baniſh'd Lords Eſtates ſhould be ſeized for raiſing and paying Troops for the Defence of the Kingdom, with ſome other Suggeſtions of this Kind, not neceſſary to be mention'd. (k)

This Addreſs was by no means acceptable to the King; he conſider'd the Queen of England was far advanc'd in Years: For this Reaſon, beſides others, he deſir'd to live eaſie at home, and give general Satiſfaction to his Subjects: For that otherwiſe his Right to the Engliſh Crown might probably be diſturbed. To this purpoſe, ſome Time before this Meeting of the Kirk, he ſent for Mr. Robert Bruce, a leading Man in the Aſſembly, open'd the Deſign of recalling the Roman Catholick Lords, with the good Effect it might have upon the publick Repoſe. Bruce excepts only againſt the Earl of Huntley, whom the King ſeem'd to favour above the reſt. The King condeſcended to argue the Point, and offer'd ſeveral Reaſons to juſtifie the Motion. To this Bruce reply'd, with a ſurprizing Aſſurance; I ſee Sir, ſays he, that your Reſolution is to take Huntley into Favour; which if you do, I will oppoſe, and you ſhall chuſe whether you will loſe Huntley or me; for us both you cannot keep. (l) By the Way, notwithſtanding this Size of of Confidence, this Miniſter was reputed one of the moſt modeſt unbigotted Men of the whole Party.

There were two Conventions of the Eſtates this Summer, one at Falkland, and the other at Dunfermling; in both of which the Return of the Roman Catholick Lords, who had been baniſh'd for holding a Correſpondence with the Spaniards, was agreed. Now notwithſtanding the Conditions requir'd of theſe Noblemen were a ſufficient Guard to the Scotch Reformation, the Commiſſioners for the Kirk were much diſturbed at this Permiſſion. To alarm their Party, and fill the Country with Jealouſies and Fears, they order'd a publick Humiliation ſhould be kept on the firſt Sunday of December; that upon that Day the Miniſters ſhould enlarge upon the Danger Religion was in by the Return of the excommunicated Lords; That the Presbyteries ſhould convent thoſe who entertain'd or kept any Correſpondence with theſe Exiles; and proceed ſummarily upon one Citation with the Cenſures of the Church, quia periclitatur Salus Eccleſiæ & Reipublicæ. And laſtly, 'twas reſolv'd, that a ſelected Number of Commiſſioners pick'd out of the Country ſhould come up to Town, ſit with the Presbytery of Edinburgh, and conclude upon Meaſures proper for the Juncture.

The Commiſſioners of the Kirk take Check at what was agreed by the Convention of the Eſtates.

This new Body call'd The Council of the Church, ſat every Day, and gave out ſuch Orders as they thought proper upon every Emergency. By the Direction of this Board, the Lord Alexander Seaton Preſident of the Seſſion, was called before the Synod of Lothian, for holding Intelligence with the Earl of Huntley. This Synod referr'd him back to the Council, where after having ſolemnly purged himſelf from the Imputation, and engaged againſt any ſuch Correſpondence for the future, he had the Favour of being diſmiſs'd.

The King being apprehenſive of farther Diſturbances, and willing to keep fair with the Kirk, order'd his Council to enter upon a Conference with ſome of the moſt moderate Miniſters, and endeavour giving them Satisfaction touching the Return of the baniſh'd Lords. To this Purpoſe David Lindeſay, Patrick Galaway, James Nicholſon, and James Melvil, were ſent for to Court, and deſir'd to anſwer this Queſtion; "Whether the baniſh'd Lords, after having given the Church proper Satisfaction, (for without this Condition the King intended them no Favour) might not be pardon'd, and reſtor'd to their Eſtates?" To this the Miniſters reply'd, They came only to hear Propoſals, but could give no Anſwer to a Buſineſs of that Importance, till they had made a Report to their Brethren. Upon this the Conference was poſtpon'd till the Afternoon, when they promis'd to return with the Opinion of their Principals. They kept their Time, and reported, "That the Brethren were glad of the Reſpect his Majeſty had ſhewn the Church; but in their Judgment the Popiſh Lords having deſerv'd Death by the Law of God, and forfeited their Eſtates by the Sentence of the Higheſt Court in the Kingdom, they could not be lawfully pardon'd or reſtor'd. And if the King and Council would undertake ſo far in their Favour, they muſt anſwer it to God and the Country: But as for themſelves, they could give no Concurrence, but muſt ſolemnly proteſt againſt ſuch Proceedings.

A Conference between ſome of the Privy Council and the Miniſters, but without Effect.

After this Anſwer, made up of Paſſion and Ignorance, they were ask'd in the next Place, Whether in caſe the Roman Catholick Lords mov'd to be reconcil'd to the Reformation, they could reaſonably be rejected, it being a received Maxim, That the Arms of the Church are always open to Recollection and Repentance. To this the Miniſters reply'd, That tho' the Church could not refuſe their Satisfaction, if ſincerely offer'd, the King was oblig'd to do Juſtice. The King's Council finding no Reaſoning could reach them, or diſengage them from the Extravagance of their Demands, broke off the Conference, and gave an Account to the King of what paſs'd. His Majeſty was extremely diſpleas'd at the Miniſters Behaviour, and ſpoke out his Reſentment upon all Occaſions. Some of the more prudent foreſeeing the ill Effects which might be conſequent upon this Provocation, adviſ'd the Miniſters to ſend ſome of their Body to wait upon the King, and take off the Impreſſion. They were to offer his Majeſty Satisfaction, to repreſent their Grievances, and to manage themſelves in the Addreſs with due Submiſſion and Regard.

And here they found the King more decretory and correcting in his Anſwers than they expected: For being intreated to acquaint them with the Reaſons of his Diſpleaſure, with a Promiſe to rectifie what lay in their Power; he told them, "There could be no Agreement till the Limits of the two Juriſdictions were better diſtinguiſh'd; That in their Sermons they took the Liberty to cenſure the Proceedings of his Council, and the publick Adminiſtration; That they conven'd General Aſſemblies without his Leave, made Orders there at diſcretion, without applying for his Approbation; and in their Synods, Presbyteries, and Parochial Seſſions, took Cognizance of every Thing upon Pretence of Scandal. Beſides theſe, there were ſeveral other Diſorders which he muſt have reform'd, without which 'twas in vain to expect ſtanding fair in his Opinion.

The King expoſtulates with the Church-Commiſſioners.

Idem.

The Miniſters not willing the King ſhould declare farther upon this Subject, made a modeſt Reply to the Points objected. After this they began to lay open their Grievances. "They complain'd of the Reſolution of the Eſtates in Favour of the Popiſh Lords; of the Countenance given the Lady Huntley, and the Lady Levingſton's being entruſted with the Princeſs's Education. To this Remonſtrance the King return'd an Anſwer which might reaſonably have given Satisfaction.

While Things were thus perplex'd betwixt the King and the Church, David Blake, a Miniſter at St. Andrews, made the Breach wider. This Man in one of his Sermons had run an extravagant Length of Satyr and ill Manners againſt the King, the Queen, the Council, and Lords of the Seſſion: And that his Rudeneſs might reach the whole Iſland, he call'd the Queen of England an Atheiſt, and a Woman of no Religion. The Engliſh Ambaſſador complaining of this Inſolence to the King, Blake was order'd to appear before the Council. Andrew Melvil came along with Blake to Edinburgh, and ſolicited ſtrongly for him: He endeavour'd to perſwade the Miniſters, that the Common Cauſe was concern'd, that the Juriſdiction of the Kirk was ſtruck at in Blake's Proſecution; and that the King and Council deſign'd to make a Precedent of the Caſe. Melvil's Heat and Rhetorick prevail'd ſo far upon the Church-Commiſſioners, that they ſent ſome of their Number to addreſs the King the Proceſs might be ſtopp'd, ſuggeſting, that the Proſecuting the Miniſters upon trifling Informations, would be ill interpreted, eſpecially ſince the Enemies of the Truth were connived at. Some little tle Time before theſe Commiſſioners waited upon the King, his Majeſty had publiſh'd the Conditions upon which the Earl of Huntley and the other Popiſh Lords were to be received into his Protection. The King asked theſe Commiſſioners if they had ſeen this Paper? adding withal, That both Huntley, and the reſt in his Circumſtances, ſhould ſatisfie the Church in every Point, or be proſecuted to the utmoſt Rigour: And that no Body ſhould have Reaſon to complain of the Partiality of the Government with Reſpect to the Roman Catholicks. As for Blake, that Matter ſhould not go very near him, only he expected his Appearance, and that ſome Expedient might be thought on for ſatisfying the Engliſh Ambaſſador. But, continued the King, have a Care you don't decline the Judicature; for if you do, it will be of worſe Conſequence than any Thing that has yet happen'd.

Notwithſtanding the Conduct of the Court with the Roman Catholicks was clear and unexceptionable, yet nothing was enough to ſtop the Clamours of the People. This ill-founded Jealouſie againſt the Government was fomented by the Preachers, who were perpetually haranguing upon this Subject. The Audience were generally made to believe, that the Papiſts were careſs'd, and the Miniſters call'd in Queſtion for doing their Duty, and reproving Sin; and that the Sceptre of Chriſt's Kingdom was plainly graſp'd at. As for the Proceſs againſt Blake, 'twas only a Piece of Fineneſs in the Court to divert the Miniſters from urging the Proſecution of the Popiſh Lords; and that if Blake ſhould ſubmit his Doctrine to the Cognizance of the Council, the Liberties of the Church, and the Spiritual Government of the Houſe of God, would be wholly loſt and ſubverted. In fine, therefore, they concluded a Declinator the only Remedy, and that there was a Neceſſity of proteſting againſt the preſent Proceedings. This was a bold Expedient, and ſtrongly diſſuaded by ſome of the more ſober and diſpaſſionate: But theſe were quickly over-voted by a Majority, who cried out, 'Twas the Cauſe of God, and that they ought to ſtand the Event at the utmoſt Hazard. Purſuant to this raſh Reſolution, a Declinator was put into Blake's Hand to exhibit at his Appearance. The Inſtrument ſet forth,

His Declinator, or Plea againſt the Juriſdiction of the Temporal Courts.

“That notwithſtanding his Innocence put him in a Condition of bearing up againſt Calumny and Miſreport, and that he was ready to juſtifie his Sermon with reſpect either to the firſt Meaning, or Application; yet ſince his Majeſty and the Council had undertaken to make themſelves Judges of his Doctrine, and that his pleading to the Information might diſſerve the Liberties of the Church, and be conſtrued as an Acknowledgment of his Majeſty's Juriſdiction in Matters purely Spiritual, he was oblig'd in all Humility to demur to the Authority of the Court for the Reaſons following.

“Firſt, Becauſe the Lord Jeſus, from whom he had the Honour of a Commiſſion, had given him a Rule in the holy Scriptures for the Management of his Office: And that he could not fail in his Regards to the Civil Government, unleſs he had exceeded his Inſtructions. Now whether he had been thus unhappy or not, belong'd to the ſole Cognizance of the Prophets and Paſtors: For the Spirits of the Prophets are ſubject only to the Prophets.

1 Cor. 14.

“Secondly, In Regard the Liberties of the Church, and the Diſcipline eſtabliſh'd was confirm'd by ſeveral Acts of Parliament, and the Office-bearers peaceably poſſeſs'd of the Trial of Doctrine, he ought to be remitted to the Eccleſiaſtical Senate, as his competent Judges in the firſt Inſtance. For theſe and other weighty Conſiderations, particularly for preventing the Inconveniencies which might happen to Religion, and his Majeſty, in caſe any Alienation of his Majeſty's Mind from the Miniſtry, and the Cauſe of God, ſhould appear. To prevent theſe Inconveniencies, he both for himſelf, and in the Name of the Commiſſioners of the General Aſſembly, who had ſign'd his Declinator, humbly beſeech'd his Majeſty not to overbear the Liberties of the Church, but rather diſcover his Inclination to ſupport it.

Blake's Plea to the Information.

When the Trial came on, and he was requir'd to plead to the Information, he told the Court, That tho' 'twas in his Power to object to the Legality of the Forms, yet he ſhould wave that Advantage, apply to the cuſtomary Remedy, and deſire to be remitted to his proper Ordinary. Being ask'd his Meaning, he told them, his Ordinary was the Presbytery within whoſe Precinct the Sermon was preach'd. And whereas he had alledg'd the Charge was general, and contrary to the Proviſions of Parliament; to this when the King reply'd, the general Terms of the Information were qualify'd to a particular Reference produc'd by the Engliſh Ambaſſador. To this his Anſwer was, That ſince the Matter of the Charge was deliver'd in the Pulpit, he ought to be judg'd by the Church in the firſt Inſtance. Being farther demanded, Whether the King was not as competent a Judge of Treaſon, as the Church was of Hereſie? He reply'd, That Words ſpoken in the Pulpit, tho' alledg'd to be treaſonable, could not be judg'd by the King, till the Church took firſt Cognition thereof: But he was not come thither, he ſaid, to argue, and diſentangle Queſtions; and then exhibited his Declinator. Now the Solemnity of the Princeſs's Chriſtning drawing near, the Trial was put off to the laſt of November.

A Copy of the Declinator ſent to the Presbyteries.

The Commiſſioners in the mean Time ſent a Copy of Blake's Declinator to all the Presbyteries. They wrote to them at the ſame Time to ſign the Inſtrument, to recommend the Cauſe in their private and publick Prayers, to uſe their Intereſt with their Pariſhioners, and exert themſelves with all imaginable Vigour. The King looking upon theſe Motions as preparatory to Mutiny and Rebellion, publiſh'd a Proclamation to forbid the Church-Commiſſioners meeting together, cenſur'd their Proceedings as tending to an Inſurrection, and order'd them to return to their reſpective Pariſhes within Twenty-four Hours, under the Penalty of being proſecuted for Rebels.

The Church-Commiſſioners order'd to quit Edinburgh.

This Proclamation ſhock'd the Commiſſioners, and put them to a Stand; but they quickly recollected their Spirits, and reſolv'd to riſque the Event. However, to embarraſs themſelves as little as may be, they ſent ſome of their Members to the King to repreſent the Inconveniencies likely to follow this hard Uſage upon the Church; to entreat the Proſecution againſt Blake might be ſuperſeded, and that all other Controverſies of this Nature might be referr'd to a General Aſſembly. The King anſwer'd, Theſe Diſputes were no leſs unacceptable to him, than to themſelves; and that if they would either withdraw the Declinator, or declare 'twas no more than a perſonal Remonſtrance; that only Blake was concern'd in the Inſtrument, and that being Matter of Defamation, it belong'd to the Deciſion of the Church; provided this was done, his Majeſty was contented to wave the Proſecution.

Men of Thought and Ballaſt look'd upon this Temper as a gracious Overture, and adviſ'd the cloſing with it. “Thus they mov'd ſtrongly “for Acquieſcence: For, ſay they, if we ſtand “off from good Terms, and grapple with the “Crown, we ſhall certainly ſink in the Conteſt. “At preſent the Court has ſome reverential Regard for the Church: We had beſt therefore “compound with them while this Deference “laſts: For unleſs we relax in our Demands, “we ſhall loſe their good Opinion. And “when they are once exaſperated, and exert “their Strength upon us, our Weakneſs will “quickly be diſcover'd. Stiffneſs and Overgraſping ſeldom ſucceeds, and thoſe who are “ſo ſtrong in their Will, commonly ſuffer in “their Power.” Thus 'twas argu'd by the more thinking and moderate Diviſion: But theſe were overul'd by a raſh Majority, who inſiſted, “That “the only Way to gain their Point, was to ſtand “their Ground; That God would maintain his “own Cauſe; That they ought not to be overaw'd by ſecular Conſiderations; That the “Hearts of Princes were in the Hand of God; “And that they had an Inſtance of his turning “them to their Advantage in the preſent Buſineſs.” In ſhort, they reſolv'd to ſtand by the Declinator, unleſs the King would ſuperſede the Proceſs, remit the Cauſe to Eccleſiaſtical Judges, and make an act of Council, That no Miniſter ſhould be proſecuted for Preaching; at leaſt not before the Meeting of the General Aſſembly.

The Miniſters refuſe to come to a Temper with the Court.

The King finding himſelf ſlighted in ſo condeſcending an Offer, was very angry, and told thoſe ſent to wait on him, That he would hear no more propoſals from the Church, unleſs they recall'd the Declinator, and order'd Blake to appear, and acknowledge the Court. This being refus'd, the Commiſſioners were charg'd to depart the Town, and Blake had a new Summons for the laſt of November.

Upon this the Commiſſioners preſented a Petition to the King, and the Nobility; they entreated the King to refer the Deciſion of the Controverſie to a General Aſſembly, and not gratifie the Common Enemy by engaging in an intricate Diſpute: A Diſpute which ſeems to be preſs'd only to create a Miſunderſtanding between his Majeſty and the Miniſters. They deſir'd the Nobility to repreſent the Tendency of this Affair to his Majeſty; to give frank and Impartial Advice, not to be ſurpriz'd by thoſe who are diſaffected to Religion, or ſuffer themſelves to be drawn into a Party againſt the Church. (m) Mr. David Lindeſay, Mr. Robert Bruce, and Mr. Robert Rollock were ſent with the Addreſs, and had Orders, in caſe 'twas rejected, to proteſt againſt the Proceedings of the Council.

The Church-Commiſſioners Petition rejected.

The Charge againſt Blake.

The King having peruſ'd the Paper, laid it aſide as not deſerving an Anſwer. And now Blake being call'd into Court, the Summons or Information was read. He was charg'd with affirming in the Pulpit, That the Popiſh Lords were return'd home with his Majeſty's Knowledge and Aſſurance of Protection; and that by giving this Countenance, his Highneſs had diſcover'd the Treachery of his Heart. Secondly, The Information ſet forth, That Blake had call'd all Kings the Devil's Barns; and that the Devil was in the Court, and in thoſe who directed it. Thirdly, That in his Prayer for the Queen, he us'd this Expreſſion, We muſt pray for her for the Faſhion, but we have no Cauſe; ſhee'll never do us Good. Fourthly, That he had called the Queen of England an Atheiſt. Fifthly, That he had argued in the Pulpit againſt the Proceedings of the Lords of the Seſſion, and called them Miſcreants and Bribers. Sixthly, That ſpeaking of the Nobility, he reproached them by ſaying, They were Degenerated, Godleſs, Diſſemblers, and Enemies to the Church: And that, mentioning the Council, he had called them Holliglaſſes, Cormorants, and Men of no Religion. Laſtly, That in June 1594. he had drawn together ſeveral Noblemen, Barons, and others in the Town of St. Andrews, incited them to run to Arms, and form themſelves into Troops and Companies; and that by ſo doing, he had uſurp'd the Regal Authority, and inſulted the Government.

After the Information was read, Mr. Robert Pont made a Proteſtation for ſaving the Authority of the Church in determining Matters of Doctrine. The King anſwer'd, He had no Intention to decide any Points of Doctrine; but that himſelf and his Council would proceed to cenſure treaſonable Expreſſions in a Sermon, unleſs they could prove by clear Scripture, that Miniſters in theſe Caſes were exempted from the Juriſdiction of the Civil Magiſtracy.

Proteſtation againſt the Proceedings of the King and Council.

And now Blake being order'd to make his Defence, alledg'd, the Information was drawn upon falſe Suggeſtions. And here he produced two Teſtimonials in his behalf: The one was from the Provoſt, Bailiffs, and Common Council of St. Andrews; the other from the Rector, Dean of the Faculty, Profeſſors and Regents of the Univerſity. This Evidence he urg'd, ought to be preferr'd to any other Report whatever. Having premiſ'd this, he pleaded in the next Place, That the Lords of the Council were not proper Judges of the firſt Six Articles charg'd upon him; That theſe pretended criminal Expreſſions being deliver'd in a Pulpit, ought to be try'd by a Presbytery for the Reaſons abovemention'd; and then repeating his former Declinator, he exhibited a new one of the ſame Tenor. As to the Charge of raiſing the Nobility and Barons, he ſubmitted himſelf to the Trial of the King and Council. Being order'd to withdraw, the Queſtion was put to the Board, Whether Churchmen in all Matters, either Criminal or Civil, were not within the Juriſdiction of the King's Courts? This Queſtion was reſolv'd affirmatively. Upon this the Council broke up, and the Evidence againſt Blake was poſtpon'd to the next Day.

In the mean Time, the King being of a gentle Temper, and diſpos'd to accommodate the Matter, diſpatch'd the Prior of Blantire, Treaſurer; and Alexander Hume, Provoſt of Edinburgh, to the Miniſters. The Meſſage was to acquaint them his Majeſty had no Intention to proceed to Extremities; That if Blake came to him, and declar'd his Conſcience concerning the Articles charg'd upon him, the King would take his Word, and give him leave to return to his Pariſh. It being Night when theſe Gentlemen were ſent, moſt of the Commiſſioners were gone to their Lodgings. However, they found Four of them, Bruce, Rollock, Nicholſon, and James Melvil. Theſe being acquainted with the King's Meſſage, Bruce anſwer'd in the Name of the Reſt; “That if none but Blake had been concern'd, the Offer might be accepted; but the Liberty “of Chriſt's Kingdom had receiv'd ſuch a Wound by “the late Proclamations, and by uſurping the Spiritual Juriſdiction, that if Mr. Blake and Twenty “others had ſuffer'd Death by the Government, it “would have been a leſs Affliction to the good Brethren “than theſe injurious Proceedings: And that unleſs

Expoſtulates with the Miniſters.

Notwithſtanding this provoking Anſwer, the King's Patience held on. The next Morning he ſent for two or three of the Miniſters, argu'd with them, and had the Goodneſs to acquaint them, that he was ſo far from any Deſign of leſſening the Spiritual Juriſdiction, or laying his Hands upon any Privileges belonging to the Church, that he was rather inclin'd to make them greater upon a proper Occaſion: “But this licentious Canvaſſing Affairs of State, ſays he, in the Pulpit cannot be endur'd. I claim no more than to have the Cognizance of Criminal and Civil Cauſes, and to try my Subjects for Sedition: That People ought to be proſecuted for mutinous Expreſſions whereſoever deliver'd; for that the Pulpit ſhould be a privileg'd Place for unwarrantable Liberty, and Sermons made a Skreen for Sedition, is more I believe than any good Man will allow. If Sedition and Treaſon deſerve Puniſhment, the Pulpit ſhould be rather an Aggravation of the Fault, than a Protection for the Offender: For here nothing but Truth and Duty ſhould be deliver'd to the Audience.

To this one of the Miniſters reply'd, “They did not plead for any ſuch Privilege of the Pulpit; but ſince the Miniſters Commiſſion and Meſſage was from God Almighty, they conceiv'd it ought not to be call'd in Queſtion, or over-rul'd by any Temporal Court. I wiſh you would keep cloſe to your Meſſage, replies the King, for then there would be no Diſpute between us. But I hope 'tis no Part of your Inſtructions to ſit at the Helm, to arraign the Government, harangue the People to Sedition, and draw an Odium upon your Prince by Clamour and Invectives. If any Eccleſiaſtick exceeds his Commiſſion, and miſbehaves himſelf in this Manner, rejoins the Miniſter, he ought to be puniſh'd with the utmoſt Severity: But then whether Matter of Fact ſtands thus or not, muſt be tried by the Church: And ſhall not I, ſays the King, be allow'd the Authority to call a Miniſter into my Courts, and puniſh him for Treaſonable Diſcourſes? Or is there no Redreſs without coming to your Presbyteries, and preferring a Complaint againſt one of my own Subjects? I have had Proof already in the Buſineſs of Gibſon and Roſſe what Reparation I may expect from your Juſtice. Were the Caſe doubtful, or any Colour to excuſe the Diſcourſe, 'twould not be ſo ſurprizing to deſire the Miniſter might be convented before his own Body: But this cannot be pretended in the preſent Diſpute; for Blake has taken the Liberty to ſay, The Treachery of the King's Heart is diſcover'd; and that all Kings are the Devil's Barnes. Now what can be plainer than that the Man has over-run his Bounds, and gone off from his Meſſage? I am not ignorant, continues the King, what Convulſions France and England has ſuffer'd by the Violence of ſuch Tempers, and I have been ſufficiently exercis'd with them my ſelf; and therefore you muſt not expect I ſhould connive any longer at ſuch Licence. As for any defenſible Authority annex'd to your Character, or ſettled upon your Aſſemblies by the Scriptures and the Laws of the Realm, I have no Deſign to leſſen any Privilege of this Kind; and if you deſire it, I am willing to make a publick Declaration to that Purpoſe.

And condeſcends to publiſh a Declaration in Favour of the Church.

This Conceſſion being reported, the Church-Commiſſioners agreed to requeſt it; the Heads ſuggeſted were theſe: That the King would publiſh a Declaration, that 'twas not his Majeſty's Intention to prohibit any Church Aſſemblies, or null any Orders made there; but that ſuch Decrees ſhould ſtand in Force as formerly they had done, being warranted by the Holy Scriptures, and the Laws of the Realm: And that the late prohibiting the Barons and Gentlemen to meet with the Miniſters, was not to be ſtretch'd to any Eccleſiaſtical Synods, but only meant for a Reſtraint of their appearing in Arms: That nothing which has hitherto happen'd at Blake's Trial ſhould be urg'd to the Prejudice of himſelf, or any other Miniſter. And laſtly, That the whole Diſpute ſhould be referr'd to a General Aſſembly, where the Barriers between the Church and State might be fairly adjuſted.

The King not only agreed to this Petition, but made a farther Overture of Razing the late Proclamations out of the Council-Book; that is, by inſerting a Marginal Note, which imported a Deletion. And as for Blake, he was willing he ſhould be brought into the Preſence, that the Truth of the Articles charg'd upon him, ſhould be referr'd to his Conſcience; And that upon his ſolemn Declaration how far they held good, three Miniſters, Lindeſay, Nicholſon, and Buchanan, upon hearing his Confeſſion, ſhould pronounce what Sentence they thought fit: And now the Difficulties ſeem'd all over. For the King demanded very moderate Satiſfaction; his Majeſty only required Blake to come before the Council, and acknowledge his Miſbehaviour to the Queen. But Blake was too ſtiff for this Reparation; he would neither condemn himſelf, he ſaid, nor own the Council had any Authority to proſecute him for his Sermon. Upon his perſiſting in this Obſtinacy, the Depoſition of the Witneſſes was read, and the Articles of Information fully prov'd upon him. The Judgment given againſt him was, That he had treaſonably ſlander'd the King, ſcandalouſly maltreated his Majeſty's Conſort, the Queen of England, and the Lords of the Council and Seſſion; and that therefore till his Majeſty's Pleaſure was farther known, he ſhould be confin'd on the North-ſide of the Frith.

Blake refuſes to aſk the Queen's Pardon.

The King offers farther Terms of Accommodation.

Notwithſtanding this Sentence, the King was willing to ſuſpend the Execution, and offer gentler Terms: He condeſcended ſo far, as to propoſe the razing the offenſive Paſſages in the Council-Book, and to turn the complaining Paſſages in the Proclamation upon the Papiſts: He likewiſe agreed, that no Interlocutory Proceedings againſt Blake ſhould be made a Precedent againſt any other Miniſter; and that none ſhould be queſtion'd by the Council for Preaching, till 'twas reſolv'd by a lawful Aſſembly, that the King might take Cognizance of thoſe Preachers who had run out into Heterodoxy, and exceeded their Commiſſion. On the other ſide, he requir'd no more than a reaſonable Security for the good Behaviour of the Miniſters: That they would not fail in their Regards to the Government, nor ſpeak diſreſpectfully of his Majeſty, or his Council, and that they would keep themſelves thus in Compaſs, he expected a Promiſe under their Hands. And all the Puniſhment he asked for Blake was, either that he might be removed from St. Andrews to another Congregation, or ſuſpended ſome Time from his Function. And theſe, conſidering the Nature of the Crime, and the Stubborneſs of the Offender, were very merciful Corrections.

The Overture refuſ'd by the Commiſſioners.

However, This laſt Condition was more than the Commiſſioners would digeſt. They pretended, that to puniſh a Man without a legal Tryal, was not practicable in Juſtice: That both the Court and the Procedings againſt Blake, were exceptionable: And that the Evidence produc'd againſt him were diſaffected, and under the Cenſures of the Church. To ſilence this Cavil, the King offer'd to name Twenty unexceptionable Witneſſes: That Blake ſhould chuſe Seven or Eight out of this Number. That theſe Men of his own Chuſing ſhould be examin'd touching thoſe Paſſages deliver'd by him in the Pulpit. And which was more too, the King condeſcended to make them Judges: And that if upon their Conſciences they could acquit him, his Majeſty would proſecute no farther. But all this yielding, turn'd to no Account; the Miniſters were peremptory in their Demands, and held up their Claim as high as ever. The Commiſſioners order'd Two of the Brethren to go to the King and acquaint him, “That ſince they could have no Redreſs of Injuries done to Chriſt's Kingdom: Since none but the Enemies of Truth were countenanc'd; ſince the faithful Paſtors of the Church were proſecuted and reviled, they could not forbear oppoſing theſe Meaſures with the Spiritual Arms God had given them. After this, they indicted a Faſt with ſolemn Prayers for averting the Judgments the Mal-Adminiſtration was likely to bring down upon the Kingdom.

Decemb. 12. 1596.

The King publiſhes a Declaration againſt the Miniſters.

And now the King found it neceſſary to aſſert his Sovereignty, and ſtrike the Miſbehaviour of theſe Men. To this Purpoſe he publiſh'd a Declaration, in which his own Condeſcenſions, the unreaſonableneſs and extraordinary Freedoms of the Miniſters were ſet forth: He likewiſe gave his Subjects an Aſſurance of his Reſolution to maintain the eſtabliſh'd Religion, and the Liberties of the Church, in their legal Extent. And laſtly, All Miniſters were required to give the King an Aſſurance of their Loyalty by ſubſcribing an Inſtrument: And that till this Security was given, their Livings and Stipends ſhould be ſequeſtred.

The Breach made wider by ſome Courtiers.

About this Time, ſome Courtiers being ſecretly averſe to an Accommodation, inform'd the King that the Miniſters in Edinburgh had a ſtrong Guard about them. And that they would never be quiet, till ſome factious People who abetted them, were ſent out of Town. The King believing this Suggeſtion, order'd 24 moſt ſuſpected for their Partiality, to quit the Town within Six Hours. This they knew would be ſtrongly reſented by the Miniſters. And to alarm them farther, a forg'd Letter was ſent to bid them ſtand upon their Guard, for Huntley had been with the King late laſt Night, and put his Majeſty upon that Severity to the Burghers. This Letter directed to Bruce, was given to Balcanquel, who was to preach that Morning. And thus theſe Miniſters, who needed no imaginary Danger to raiſe their Spirits, and ſharpen their Satyr, thought it neceſſary to exert their Zeal, and awaken the People. Thus Balcanquel run out in a long and violent Invective againſt the Court, call'd the Proceedings of the Council, Treacherous Forms: And treated the Preſident, the Comptroller, and Advocate, with moſt opprobrious Language. Then applying himſelf particularly to the Noblemen and Barons, reminded them of their Anceſtors Zeal in reforming Religion, and exhorted to the ſame Reſolution, for maintaining it. And after the concluding Prayer, he deſired the Noblemen and Barons to meet the Miniſters in the Little Church, and aſſiſt them with their Advice. When they were met, Bruce began with a Remonſtrance againſt the Proceedings of the Court, and deſir'd them to ſolicit the King that the Miniſters might enjoy the Benefit of their Character, and not be diſturb'd in their Function.

Balcanquel's ſcandalous Sermon.

This Requeſt ſeeming reaſonable, the Lords Lindeſay and Forbes, with Two Lairds, and Two Miniſters, were pitch'd on to preſent the Petition.

The King then happen'd to be at the Seſſion or Court of Juſtice in Edinburgh; and here the Lords and the reſt being admitted, Bruce ſpoke the Petition, and made ſomewhat of a tragical Repreſentation of the Dangers hanging over the Church: And amongſt other Grievances, he mention'd the Lady Huntley's, a profeſs'd Papiſt, being entertain'd at Court. The King, 'tis likely, not thinking ſuch bold Complaints fit to be anſwer'd, ask'd, Who they were that durſt meet againſt his Proclamation. The Lord Lindeſay with ſome Paſſion replied, That they durſt do more than that, and that they would not ſuffer their Religion to miſcarry. And now the People crowding in rudely, and filling the Room, the King without giving any Anſwer, withdrew into the Lower Houſe, where the Judges ſit, and order'd the Doors to be ſhut. Thoſe who were ſent with the Petition, returning to their Principals, told them there was no Hopes of Redreſs, till evil Counſellors were remov'd, and that therefore 'twas their Way to reſolve upon ſome farther Expedient. To this, the Lord Lindeſay anſwer'd, there was no Courſe to be taken but one, and that was to keep together, and engage for mutual Defence, and give their Friends Notice to come and join them: For, ſays he, it ſhall be either Theirs or Ours. This Advice was ſeconded with a great Noiſe, throwing up of Hands, and other Signs of Mutiny and Miſbehaviour: At laſt they came to a Sedition in Form, cried to Arms, bring out Haman, the Sword of the Lord and of Gideon: In ſhort, the Mob were upon the Point of forcing the Seſſions Door, and breaking in upon the King, had they not been kept off by ſome of the Burghers, better diſpos'd. However, the Tumult not being over, Sir Alexander Hume, Provoſt of the Town, tho' then Sick, came into the Street, and by his Dexterity prevail'd with the People to lay down their Arms, and diſperſe.

The King inſulted.

Mutiny in Edinburgh.

Idem.

The King quits the Town and carries off the Courts of Juſtice.

To make the Story as ſhort as may be, the King perceiving the Miniſters and their Adherents extravagant in their Demands, went off with his Council to Linlithgow: And immediately after a Proclamation was publiſh'd at the Market-Croſs of Edinburgh. 'Twas to this Effect: “That the King, conſidering the late treaſonable Tumult ſtir'd up by certain factious Miniſters of Edinburgh, who after behaving themſelves ſeditiouſly in the Pulpit, had drawn ſeveral Noblemen and Barons together, and ſent ſome of their Body to his Majeſty in the Upper Houſe of Seſſion, treated Him in an unbecoming undutiful Manner, and prevail'd with a great Number of the Burghers to put themſelves in Arms, with an Intention to murder the King and his Council; for theſe Reaſons his Majeſty thought that Town an improper Place for the Seat of Juſtice, and therefore had order'd the Lords of Seſſion, the Sheriffs, and others of the Civil Liſt, to leave Edinburgh, and repair to ſuch Places as ſhould be “ appointed, commanding all Noblemen and “ Barons to retire to their reſpective Houſes,

“ and not to preſume to meet either there, or “ elſewhere, without Leave from his Majeſty.

This lively Motion of the Government, prov'd a ſerviceable Effort, and gave the Cauſe a Turn. The People now began to cool in their Ferment, and grow ſenſible they had gone too far: But the Miniſters ſcorn'd to relent, bore up with their former Reſolution, did their Utmoſt to keep the Noblemen and Barons together, and mov'd to ſend into the Country, and reinforce themſelves; to this Purpoſe an Aſſociation was drawn up, and ſign'd by ſome few. When 'twas put to the Common Council, they made a Civil Excuſe, and thus the Inſtrument did little Buſineſs. Notwithſtanding this Diſappointment, the Courage of the Miniſters was not to be baffled: Several of them at a Debate mov'd for Excommunicating the Lord Preſident of the Council, and the Lord Advocate: But 'twas at laſt reſolv'd to leave this Cenſure to the Aſſembly: That by being iſſued from thence, it might be executed with greater Force and Solemnity. In the mean Time, to amuſe the People, and keep them from recovering their Underſtandings, a Faſt was proclaim'd through the City, and Sermons appointed in all Churches.

The Miniſters endeavour to reaſſure the Faction.

Rev. 2.

Id. pag. 430.

One Welſh Preaching in the Cathedral, and taking his Text out of Part of the Letter to the Angel of the Church of Epheſus, rail'd hideouſly upon the King. He ſaid He was poſſeſs'd with a Devil: And that one Devil being put out, ſeven worſe were entred in his Room: And that the Subjects might lawfully riſe, and take the Sword out of his Hand. This wretched Aſſertion he endeavour'd to make good by the Inſtance of a Fathers falling into a Frenzy, who during his Diſtraction, might be ſeiz'd by the Children and Servants, and bound Hand and Foot: A moſt execrable Doctrine, ſays Archbiſhop Spotſwood, and directly repugnant to the Holy Scriptures: And yet, as this Prelate continues, the Parallel was well received, and the Poiſon ſwallow'd by a great Part of the Audience.

The Miniſters having diſpatch'd a Meſſenger to the Lord Hamilton to come and join them, this Nobleman at firſt ſeem'd to promiſe Compliance: But upon Recollection, he went to the Court at Linlithgow, and carried a Copy of the Miniſter's Letter with him. This Letter was treaſonable to the laſt Degree: For having ſet forth the Oppreſſion the Church lay under by the Malice of ſome Counſellors; theſe extraordinary Sentences followed; That the People animated by the Word and Motion of God's Spirit, had gone to Arms, and that the godly Barons and other Gentlemen that were in Town had convened themſelves, and taken on them the Patrociny of the Church and her Cauſe: Only they lacked a Head, and ſpecial Noblemen to Countenance the Matter; And ſince with one Conſent they had made Choice of his Lordſhip, their Deſire was, that he ſhould come to Edinburgh with all convenient Diligence, and utter his Affection to the good Cauſe, accepting the Honour which was offer'd unto him.

A treaſonable Letter ſent to the Lord Hamilton.

This Letter written by Mr. Bruce was ſign'd by him and Balcanquel. This was plain ſoliciting for a Rebellion, and an open Revolt from the Government: And therefore the King had great Reaſon to draw the Sword of Juſtice, and puniſh the Defiance. To this Purpoſe an Order was ſent to the Provoſt and Bailiffs of Edinburgh to commit the Miniſters: But they having Notice given them, made their Eſcape to Newcaſtle in England. The ſame Day the Town ſent ſome of their Body to wait upon the King. Their Buſineſs was to purge themſelves from the Imputation of the late Tumult: And to offer their Submiſſion. His Majeſty not allowing any Juſtification, told them that good Words were no ſufficient Excuſe for a Miſbehaviour of that Size: And that he would come to them e'er long, and let them know he was their King,

The Burghers of Edinburgh make their Submiſſion to the King, and are refus'd.

And now perceiving the late Diſorders would not be eaſily paſs'd over, the Provoſt, Bailiffs, and Common Council waiting on the King, preſented him with a very humble Petition, and reſign'd themſelves wholly to the Award of his Majeſty and Council; proteſting at the ſame Time, that the Mutiny was neither concerned nor countenanc'd by them. This Proteſtation having too much the Air of an Apology, might probably make their Submiſſion be refus'd. What Reſerves of Puniſhment the King might have, is Uncertain. But ſome Noblemen adviſ'd him to demoliſh the Town, and erect a Pillar to mark the Rebellion. Others ſuggeſted milder Revenge, but at preſent nothing was reſolv'd. Not long after the Queen of England ſent him a ſoftning Letter, and interceded for gentler Puniſhment. The King was glad of the Colour of ſo conſiderable an Interceſſion, to come off from Extremities, with a Saving of his Honour: For he was far from a vindictive Humour; and deſired no more than to quiet the People, and ſecure the Government. But of this more afterwards.

February 28.

The King having made the Faction begin to plie, order'd a general Aſſembly to be conven'd at Perth. For now 'twas thought the Juncture preſented fair for correcting the Diſorders in the Church, and bringing off the Miniſters from their Encroachments upon the State. And that they might be the better appriz'd of the Matter they were to go upon, the King order'd ſome Articles to be drawn up and printed: In his Preface his Majeſty appeals to God, that he had no Intention to diſturb the Church by putting intricate Queſtions, nor to ſtretch his Regale to an arbitrary and tyrannical Exceſs: His Meaning was only to have ſome Doubts and Ambiguities clear'd, which might otherwiſe prove Occaſions of Diſpute: That by a fair Diſcuſſion of Controverſies of this Nature, a laſting Harmony between himſelf and the Miniſtry might be ſettled.

The Articles were 55 in Number, and drawn up by Way of Queſtion as follows:

(n) Spotſwood's Church Hiſtory, p. 434.

The Presbyterian Miniſters were not a little embarraſs'd with theſe Queries. For moſt of them ſuppos'd Abuſes in the Diſcipline, and were plainly levelled againſt them Now to find the Church Government mooted, which had been all along pretended no leſs than Part of the Goſpel, was a ſevere Mortification. To prevent the Progreſs of this Controverſy, or any unſerviceable Impreſſions upon the People, all imaginable Precaution was us'd, and ſeveral private Conſultations held for this Purpoſe. The King on the other Side was not negligent to make an Intereſt with the Members of the Aſſembly. And being inform'd the Miniſters in the North Parts were moſt likely to be gain'd, he diſpatch'd Sir Patrick Murray, a Gentleman of his Privy Chamber, to that Quarter. Sir Patrick mov'd, their Publiſhing an Abhorrence of the late treaſonable Practices at Edinburgh. He was likewiſe, amongſt other Things, to inſiſt on their ſigning an Inſtrument, recognizing his Majeſty's ſupreme Authority for trying all Treaſons, Seditions, and other Civil and Criminal Matters: And for calling Miniſters to an Account for all Diſcourſes deliver'd in Pulpits, Schools, or elſewhere, which implied any of the aforeſaid Crimes.

The King's Meſſage to the Miniſters in the North.

The Northern Miniſters replied, That as to the Tumult at Edinburgh, they were unacquainted with what Share the Town Miniſters might have in it: And not being within their Juriſdiction, they had no Authority to Cenſure them: But in General, they made no ſcruple to ſay, that whoever was found Guilty of that Inſurrection, ought to ſuffer as Traitors: And if they were Miniſters, they deſerv'd to be doubly puniſh'd.

When the general Aſſembly met, the King's Commiſſioners laid the following Articles before them, letting them know that his Majeſty was contented to refer the Deciſion of the greateſt Part of the Queſtions, to a farther Opportunity, and would be ſatisfied with an affirmative Reſolution in the following Points.

A general Aſſembly at Perth.

The Articles inſiſted on by the King.

1. That 'tis not unlawful either for Prince or Paſtors, to propoſe Reformation in the external Government and Diſcipline of the Church; provided 'tis in Things not eſſential to Salvation, nor expreſly determin'd in Scripture.

2. That ſince the Civil Adminiſtration belongs properly to the King and Council, and is by no Means included in the Function of an Eccleſiaſtick; for this Reaſon, no Miniſters ſhould meddle with State-Matters in the Pulpit, or quarrel the Conſtitution: But if any Part of the Government ſeems to bear hard upon Religion, they ſhould make their Complaint to the King and Council.

3. That no Miniſters ſhall take the Liberty to name People in the Pulpit, or paint them out in an equivocal Deſcription, unleſs the Crimes happen to be notorious: And that the Proofs allow'd to make a Crime notorious, muſt be either the Perſons flying from Juſtice, or the Verdict of a Jury, or Excommunication.

4. That every Miniſter ſhall be oblig'd to confine his Application to the Edification of his own Pariſhioners, and not run out into Reflections in which they are no Ways concern'd.

5. That every Presbytery be commanded to examine the Doctrine of their Miniſters, and take Care they keep themſelves within their Bounds.

6. Summary Excommunications were never to be uſed, and that Three lawful Citations of Eight Days interval betwixt each of them, ſhould precede the Sentence.

7. That no Seſſion, Presbytery, or Synod, ſhould exert Cenſures upon any Perſons out of their Precinct. And that in Caſe they ſtretch'd their Juriſdiction farther, their Proceedings ſhould be of none Effect.

8. That all Summons ſhould aſſign particular Reaſons and Crimes, and not run generally ſuper Inquirendis, quod eſt merè Tyrannicum.

9. That the Miniſters ſhould hold no Meetings without his Majeſty's Knowlege and Conſent, excepting parochial Seſſions, Presbyteries, and Synods.

10. That no Miniſters ſhould be ſettled in the principal Burrows, without the Conſent of his Majeſty and the Congregation: And that this Order ſhould immediately take Place at Edinburgh.

11. That the reſt of his Majeſty's Queſtions may ſleep, and lie uncenſur'd till the next general Aſſembly: And that the Church Conſiſtories take Cognizance of no Cauſes but purely ſuch as are Eccleſiaſtical.

12. That Seven or Eight diſcreet Miniſters may be commiſſionated to argue upon the remaining maining Queſtions, when Opportunity ſhall ſerve.

Idem.

Some of theſe Articles being demurr'd to at firſt, the King requir'd the Aſſembly to attend him at the Convention of the Eſtates. And here his Majeſty making a Speech, told them, amongſt other Things, that he claim'd nothing more than what belongs to every Chriſtian King, that is to be Cuſtos & Vindex Diſciplinæ: To guard the Canons, and provide for the Execution of Diſcipline. In the Cloſe, he deſir'd to hear what Reaſons they had to urge againſt the Twelve Articles.

The Church's Proteſtation.

Upon this, Mr. Thomas Buchanan, purſuant to his Commiſſion, made his Proteſt in the Name of the Aſſembly, "That their coming thither was only in Obedience to his Majeſty, and to hear what was propounded: 'Twas not to ſubmit the Buſineſs of the Church, either with Reſpect to Doctrine or Diſcipline, to the Cognizance of the Eſtates, or to incorporate themſelves with that ſecular Body: And therefore he deſir'd they might have Leave to return to the Place of their Aſſembly; and there debate and determine upon the Points in Queſtion.

And that their Reſolutions might be govern'd by the Word of God, and a good Conſcience. This Proteſtation being admitted, Buchanan return'd his Majeſty Thanks for his Affection to the Church, and the Care he expreſs'd for redreſſing Things amiſs in ſo gentle and condeſcending a Manner. After this, offering the Aſſembly's Exceptions to the Articles propos'd, he added, they were ready to be farther inſtructed. This Compliance brought on a new Conference, which ended in the following Agreement.

Several Articles agreed.

1. That 'tis lawful for his Majeſty by himſelf or his Commiſſioners, and likewiſe to the Paſtors, to propoſe in a general Aſſembly what Queſtions they deſire ſhould be reſolv'd, or what Things they would have Reform'd in the external Government of the Church.

2. That no Miniſter ſhall be allow'd to Remonſtrate againſt his Majeſty's Laws or Adminiſtration, till by the Advice of his Presbytery, of a Synod, or general Aſſembly, he has applied to the King for Redreſs, and reported his Majeſty's Anſwer.

3. That no Man ſhould be named in the Pulpit by Way of Invective, excepting the Miſbehaviour happens to be publick and notorious. As to the Notoriety of the Fact, 'tis defin'd in the Manner above-mention'd.

4. The Anſwer to the Sixth Article above-mention'd was poſtpon'd 'till the next general Aſſembly: However, all ſummary Excommunications were to ceaſe in the mean Time.

5. The Seventh Article was likewiſe to be refer'd to the next general Aſſembly. The reſt of the Articles were agreed in the Terms propounded by the King.

This Year John Leſley, Biſhop of Roſſe, departed this Life at Bruſſels. Notwithſtanding his dying in a different Communion, Archbiſhop Spotſwood gives him an honourable Character for his Loyalty to the late Queen of Scots. He commends him likewiſe for his Hiſtory of Scotland written in Latin, and that this Performance was a Proof of his Learning and Judgment. Mr. David Lindeſay, Miniſter of Leith, was prefer'd to that Biſhoprick the Year following. And thus it appears, that notwithſtanding Presbytery was the Regnant Religion, yet the Title of Biſhop was ſtill continued upon ſome Sees.

To return to England; this Year Richard Fletcher, Biſhop of London, departed this Life. He is ſaid to have taken the See of Briſtol upon Terms of Compliance, cloſ'd with foul Propoſals, and almoſt ſeculariz'd the See, by letting Leaſes upon inconſiderable Rents reſerv'd. He likewiſe miſmanag'd in the ſame Kind upon his Tranſlation to London. (o)

John Coldwell, Dr. of Phyſick, and Biſhop of Saliſbury, died about the ſame Time. He prov'd a very unfortunate Prelate to the Biſhoprick. Sir John Harrington obſerves, that in this Reign 'twas the Method of ſome Courtiers to look out for Churchmen unfurniſh'd with Merit and Honeſty, and prefer them for Tools to their Avarice. (p) Coldwell happening to be thus qualified, Sir Walter Rawleigh made Uſe of the Opportunity, and ſnap'd Sherborn Caſtle, with the Manor, Park, &c. To make his Deſign bear, he ſolicits Queen Elizabeth to give Way to the Alienation: He knew ſhe had often been ſurpriz'd at that Quarter. Having got over this Difficulty, the remaining Part was eaſy enough; for Coldwell, either out of Cowardice or Covetouſneſs, ſeems to have reſign'd without Struggle. But notwithſtanding Sir Walter's gaining his Point, 'twas firmly believ'd a Coal ſtuck to the Fleſh ſnatch'd from the Altar. Sir John Harrington makes no Scruple to report, that the Judgments of God were manifeſt on both of them. The Biſhop, who I hope repented his Bargain, died a Beggar. And as for the Knight, 'twas thought this forbidden ſeizure overlaid his Proſperity, hung a Weight upon his Fortune, and made him ſink with his Sacrilege.

I ſhall begin the next Year at Edinburgh. The Burghers, who for the late Inſurrection, and Abetting the factious Miniſters, had been proclaim'd Rebels: But now upon their humble Submiſſion, they were receiv'd into the King's Protection. 'Twas at the Interceſſion of the Noblemen they were thus reſtor'd. However, the Pardon was not without Conditions of Reſtraint, and Articles for better Behaviour. (q)

Anno Dom. 1597.

An Aſſembly at Dundee.

Soon after, the ſeditious Miniſters were permitted to return, but not ſuffer'd to preach in their Pariſhes. At the Breaking up of the laſt general Aſſembly, the King appointed another to be held at Dundee in May following. The main Buſineſs of this Meeting was to go upon the Queſtions undecided in the laſt: And here Things were ſettled both to the Satisfaction of the King, and the Church. For the Purpoſe, the Queſtion being put touching the Convening of Paſtors with his Majeſty's Conſent, 'twas declar'd, that the Reſolution in the Affirmative was to reach all Aſſemblies, either General or Particular, authoriz'd by his Highneſs's Laws, and having Warrant in the Word of God. On the other Side, touching the furniſhing Burroughs with Miniſters, the King agreed, that when the Aſſembly ſhould think it Neceſſary to fix a Miniſter in any Town, he would either give his Conſent, or a ſufficient Reaſon for his Refuſal. Theſe Preliminaries being ſettled, the following Queſtions were thus determin'd.

The Principal remaining Queſtions ſettled between the King and the Aſſembly.

1. Whereas, before the Concluding any weighty Buſineſs, his Majeſty expects to be applied to for his Advice and Approbation, the Aſſembly are very willing his Majeſty ſhould interpoſe in all important Affairs tranſacted by the Church; with this Proviſo, that Buſineſs formerly ſettled, ſhould not be re-examin'd, and put to the Queſtion.

2. That the Form for ordaining Miniſters ſhall be uniform, and none paſs without Impoſition of Hands, and being tied to a particular Congregation. And that thoſe unordain'd ſhall not be permitted to preach in private Houſes unleſs upon urgent Neceſſity, and where regular Miniſters can't be had. And laſtly, That eſpecial Care ſhall be taken they don't ramble from their Buſineſs, and fly out into foreign Application.

3. That no Miniſter ſhall exerciſe any Juriſdiction, either in making Conſtitutions, or forming Proceſſes, without the Concurrence of his Seſſion, the Presbytery, Synod, or general Aſſembly.

4. That no Seſſion ſhall be elected without the Conſent of their own Congregations.

5. That Seſſions, Presbyteries, and Synods, ſhall keep cloſe to Forms and ſtated Regulations in their Proceedings; and that the Practice of lower Conſiſtories in this Point ſhall be tried by ſuperior Courts.

6. That in the Exerciſe of the Word or Liberty of Propheſying, for which Miniſters meet, no Application ſhall be uſed.

7. That in Matters of great Conſequence where the Queſtion is put, and the Majority riſes only to two or three Votes, nothing ſhall be concluded 'till farther debated; and here thoſe who are on the negative Side are to give a Reaſon of their Diſſent.

8. That Presbyteries ſhall not concern themſelves with any Buſineſs not unconteſtedly within Eccleſiaſtical Cognizance: That this Practice ſhall be uniform through the whole Kingdom.

9. That no Copies of Proceſſes and Acts ſhall be tranſcribed at the Inſtance of the Parties concern'd.

10. Summary Excommunication ſhall ceaſe, and in great Crimes, after publick Notice, the Offender ſhall be barr'd the Benefit of Divine Service and Sacraments, and avoided in Converſation.

11. That when his Majeſty ſhall write to any Presbytery to deſire them to ſtop their Proceſs, as being prejudicial to Civil Juriſdiction, or private Property, they ſhall deſiſt till the Crown is ſatisfied.

Commiſſioners appointed by the Aſſembly to tranſact for the Church.

That the main Queſtions being thus ſettled, 'twas thought proper to wave diſcuſſing the reſt, and give a general Commiſſion to ſome of the beſt diſtinguiſh'd Miniſters, for tranſacting all Affairs relating to the Intereſt of the Church. The Perſons pitch'd on were Mr. David Lindeſay, Mr. Thomas Nicholſon, Mr. Robert Pont, Mr. Robert Rollock, Mr. Alexander Dowglaſs, Mr. George Gladſtaves, Mr. Patrick Galoway, John Duncanſon, Mr. Patrick Sharpe, Mr. James Melvil, Mr. William Cowper, and John Clapperton. Theſe, or any Seven of them, were authoriz'd to attend his Majeſty when requir'd, for ſettling Miniſters in the Towns of Edinburgh, Dundee, and St. Andrews, in the King and Prince's Family, and in any other Churches of the Kingdom. 'Twas likewiſe Part of their Buſineſs to addreſs the King, to repreſent their Grievances, and offer their Advice to his Majeſty in every Thing that might be ſerviceable to the Church.

Upon the Receſs of the Aſſembly, theſe Commiſſioners held a Viſitation at St. Andrews. And here the Elders and Deacons of Blake's Church being ſummon'd before them, they all took their Oaths that the Articles charg'd upon him before the Privy-Council were true. The Univerſity in this Town, where Mr. Andrew Melvil had been Rector for ſeveral Years, was much out of Order: The Revenues were ill manag'd, the Exerciſes neglected, and the Divinity Lectures were turn'd into Politicks. The Queſtions commonly diſcuſs'd were, Whether Elective or Succeſſive Kingdoms were the beſt Forms of Government? What was the Extent of the Regal Authority? And whether Kings might be call'd to Account for Mal-Adminiſtration, and depos'd by the Eſtates? To prevent the Miſchiefs of ſuch licentious Diſputes, the King clap'd them under a Reſtraint, and preſcrib'd every Profeſſor the Argument he was to go upon.

A Reformation in the Univerſity of St. Andrews.

In the latter End of the Year, a Parliament was held at Edinburgh. Amongſt other Articles preſented by the Commiſſioners of the Church, one was, That the Miniſters conſidering they repreſented the Church, and the third Eſtate of the Kingdom might be admitted to ſit and vote in Parliament, purſuant to their ancient Privileges. The King thinking the Requeſt highly reaſonable, undertook the Cauſe, and procur'd the Paſſing a Bill. The Preamble of the Act declares, “That the Prelates have all along repreſented one of the Eſtates of the Realm: And that this Privilege has been preſerv'd through the Succeſſion of his Majeſty's Predeceſſors without Leſſening or Diſadvantage.” By the Body of the Statute, “All ſuch Paſtors and Miniſters as his Majeſty ſhall pleaſe to promote to the Office, Title, and Dignity, of Biſhop, Abbot, or other Prelate, ſhall at all Times to come have a Vote in Parliament with the ſame Freedom and Significancy as any other Eccleſiaſtical Prelate had at any Time formerly: And that all Biſhopricks now void, and undiſpos'd of by his Majeſty, ſhall be beſtow'd upon none but actual Preachers and Miniſters in the Church; or to ſuch other Perſons as ſhall be found qualified to exerciſe the Function of a Preacher and Miniſter: And who, upon their Promotion to the ſaid Biſhopricks, ſhall engage to perform the Office of a Paſtor.

A Statute for reſtoring Biſhops to their Right of voting in Parliament.

“And as to the ſtating and adjuſting the Office and Authority of theſe Biſhops in their Spiritual Government, the Parliament refers the Regulation of this Matter to the King and the General Aſſembly; provided nothing be done in the mean Time to the Prejudice of the Juriſdiction and Diſcipline of the Church eſtabliſh'd by Act of Parliament. (r)

By another Statute 'tis enacted, “That two Thirds of all Prelacies now void, or which ſhall happen to be void; and all Iſſues, Profits, and Emoluments, thereof ſede vacante, ſhall be veſted in his Highneſs and Succeſſors, for the Support of his Court and Government, and ſhall not be beſtow'd upon any Subject by Way of Grant, Penſion, or other Diſpoſition whatſoever. (s)

A Parliament at Weſtminſter.

To go back a little to England: In October this Winter the Parliament met at Weſtminſter, in which there were two Acts paſs'd relating to the Church. By one of them the Deprivation of the Biſhops who refus'd to comply with the Reformation is confirm'd; and all Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and Deans, promoted by the Queen to their reſpective Dignities and Stations from any Time ſince her Acceſſion to the Throne, to the 10th of November in the 4th Year of her Reign, are declared lawfully conſtituted. The Reaſon of making this Act was, as the Preamble ſets forth, becauſe the Parties deprived made ſecret Appeals, and us'd other clandeſtine Methods to ſupport their Claim and Pretenſions. (t)

The other Act, in which the Church is concern'd, was the Eſtabliſhment of the Biſhoprick of Norwich, and the Revenues belonging to it againſt a pretended concealed Title.

To let the Reader better into the Meaning of this Statute Sir Edward Coke obſerves, That certain Concealers, Templorum Helluones, as he calls them, produc'd Letters Patents of Concealment bearing Date Auguſt the 2d, in the 27th Year of this Reign: And that William Redmayn, Doctor in Divinity, and Biſhop of Norwich, cauſed one Hammond to take an Eſtate to him and his Heirs, from the ſaid Concealers, of all or the greateſt Part, of the Monaſtery of St. Bennet's de Hulmo, belonging to the Biſhoprick. Sir Edward Coke, then Attorney-General, foreſeeing the Damage the Church of Norwich might receive by this Management, diſcours'd the Biſhop, and prevail'd with him at laſt to agree to the bringing in a Bill for eſtabliſhing the Biſhoprick and the Revenues. This Bill, as may be collected from what this Learned Gentleman reports, was drawn and ſolicited by himſelf, and which I mention to do Juſtice to his Memory. (u)

An Act for the eſtabliſhing the Biſhop of Norwich, &c.

The Statute ſets forth, That in the 27th Year of the Reign of King Henry the Eighth, 'twas enacted, That ſuch Perſon as ſhould then next after be Biſhop of the See of Norwich, being then void, and his Succeſſors, Biſhops of the ſaid See, ſhould have and enjoy, united and knit to the ſaid Biſhoprick the Monaſtery of St. Bennets in the County of Norfolk, and all the Poſſeſſions of the ſame —— That certain Perſons of a covetous and greedy Deſire to enrich themſelves, have to the great Deceit of her Highneſs, to the Impeachment of the ſaid Biſhoprick, and to the unjuſt Diſturbance of the Biſhops of the ſaid See, their Tenants and Farmers obtain'd of her Majeſty (little ſuſpecting their evil Intention) a Grant in Fee-Farm by her Letters Patent of, all or moſt Part of the Poſſeſſions of the ſaid Biſhoprick under the Name of a Cottage, and of all Lands, Tenements, Tythes, and Hereditaments, with the Appurtenances within the Deanries of Flegg, Brook, Waxham, Blowfield, Repes, and Deepwade, or any of them in the County of Norfolk, belonging to the ſaid Monaſtery of St. Bennets of Hulm. After this Preamble the Statute enacts, That the Surrender of the Hoſpital of St. Giles in Norwich by William Rugge, Biſhop of Norwich, and Nicholas Shaxton, Maſter of the ſaid Hoſpital, and the Brethren of the ſame made to the late King Edward the VIth, in the Firſt Year of his Reign, Shall be taken, conſtrued, and adjudg'd, not to have convey'd to the ſaid King, his Heirs, and Succeſſors, any Manors, Lands, Tenements, or Hereditaments, whatſoever, of the ſaid late Monaſtery of St. Bennet's of Hulm, or of the ſaid Biſhoprick, or belonging thereunto, or to either of them: But the ſame, and every Part thereof, ſhall be deem'd and adjudg'd to have remain'd in the ſaid William, then Biſhop of the ſaid See, and ſhall be adjudg'd to remain in the now Biſhop of the ſaid See, and his Succeſſors, for ever, as if the ſaid Deed and Surrender had never been made. (w)

By the Way, the Method of theſe Concealers was to inform the Crown that the Subject had uſurp'd upon it, either by keeping ſome Part of an Eſtate ſurrender'd to the Crown, or by extending Grants from the Crown, to Lands not compriz'd within the Conveyance. Upon this Information, the Concealers procur'd Patents or Conveyances of ſuch pretended concealed Eſtates. To make their Patent paſs the better, they commonly had only ſome little Part of the Eſtate inſerted, with other general Words which reach'd to a great deal more. Theſe Concealers uſually quarried upon the Church, as finding a Conqueſt much more feaſible at that Quarter. And as they ſtruck at the Biſhoprick of Norwich, ſo they were very near carrying off the Eſtates belonging to the Deanery and Chapter of that Cathedral. Of this Attempt Sir Edward Coke gives a full Account in the Third Book of his Reports. I ſhall give the Reader the Subſtance of the Argument.

The Concealers endeavour to ſeize the Eſtate of the Deanery and Chapter of Norwich.

King Henry the Eighth by his Letters Patents, bearing Date the 2d of May, in the 30th Year of his Reign, turn'd the Priory and Convent of the Cathedral of Norwich into a Deanery and Chapter; and by the ſame Letters Patents diſcharg'd the Prior and Convent from wearing the Habit, and obſerving the Rule; and erected the Dean and Prebendaries into a Corporation, and convey'd the Manors, Lands, &c. to them and their Succeſſors, which formerly belong'd to the Prior: And over and above the Patent, granted them the Privilege of being a Chapter to the Biſhop of Norwich and his Succeſſors. Upon peruſing the Inſtrument of the Foundation, and ſome other ancient Deeds belonging to the Priory, a Queſtion was put, Whether the King or Herbert, firſt Biſhop of Norwich, was the Founder. And here 'twas taken for granted, that Herbert was the Founder. Afterwards the ſaid Dean and Chapter, by their Deed enrolled, ſurrender'd their Church, and all their Eſtates to King Edward the VIth, in the Second Year of his Reign. The King in the ſame Year incorporates them again per nomen Decani & Capituli Eccleſiæ Cathedralis Sanctæ & Individuæ Trinitatis Norwici ex Fundatione Regis Edwardi Sexti. Afterwards the King in the ſame Year grants them back their Church, and all their Eſtates, (except certain Manors, &c.) which were convey'd to them and their Succeſſors by the Name of Dean and Chapter of the Cathedral of Norwich, omitting theſe Words, Ex Fundatione Regis Edwardi Sexti. Now one William Downing, and ſome other indigent Perſons, endeavouring to repair their Fortunes by the Ruin of the Deanry and Chapter, pretended that the Cathedral Church, and all the above-mention'd Poſſeſſions, were conceal'd from the Queen, and that they were granted to them (though this Grant was drawn in general and obſcure Words) in Letters Patents of Concealment. And that theſe Eſtates were conceal'd from the Crown they endeavour'd to prove.

This Caſe argued by Attorney-General Coke, with the Reſolution of the Lord-Keeper and Judges.

1. Becauſe the converting the Priory and Convent into a Deanery and Chapter was void: And that the old Corporation ſubſiſted in Law, 'till all the Monks were dead. And after the Deceaſe of all the Monks, which happen'd in the 18th Year of the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, all the Eſtates belonging to the Convent were veſted in the Queen, purſuant to the Statute of the 31ſt of Henry the Eighth, Cap. 13.

2. Granting the Tranſlation, as the Report calls it, was good, yet by the Surrender made to King Edward the Sixth, the King was ſeized of all their Poſſeſſions; and that the Granting them back above-mention'd was void by the Miſnoſmer of the Corporation of the Dean and Chapter; that is, becauſe of the Omiſſion of theſe Words, Ex Fundatione Regis Edward Sexti. Now this being a Caſe of great Concern, and the Queen finding her ſelf ſurpriz'd by theſe Con- cealers, referr'd the Conſideration of this Matter to Sir Thomas Edgerton Lord-Keeper, to Popham and Anderſon Chief Juſtices, and to Periam Chief Baron. And thus at York-houſe, belonging to the Lord-Keeper, the Caſe was argued by the Concealers Council. The Subſtance of their Objections and Arguments were to this Effect:

Firſt, They granted that Herbert, formerly Biſhop of Norwich, was the Founder of the Priory. And from hence they infer, that ſince the Founder was not a Party to the Tranſlation of the Priory and Convent into a Deanry and Chapter, that Tranſlation was void. And to prove that the Founder of a Priory has ſuch an Intereſt in the Houſe as to make his Joining neceſſary, they cited ſeveral Year-Books and other Authorities, too long to mention. But as to this Point Attorney-General Coke replied, Firſt, That if the King was the Founder, as it appear'd he was by the Foundation-Charter and other Records, that then the Caſe was out of all Queſtion. But admitting the Biſhop was Founder, the Tranſlation was good notwithſtanding: For 'tis clear by old Law-Books that 'twas in the Pope's Power to diſcharge a Monk, or any other Religious Perſon, from his Profeſſion: And by Conſequence, by the 25th of H. 8. cap. 21. that King was impower'd to diſpenſe thus far, and accordingly he actually diſengag'd the Prior and Monks from their Rule and Profeſſion, and turn'd them into a Dean and Chapter: And that this Tranſlation was legal, he proves farther from Dyer's Reports, (x) and from an Act of Parliament in the Reign of King Harry the Eighth, (y) not to mention other Authorities. But granting this Tranſlation was imperfect or void upon the Score of the Objection above-mention'd, or for any other Reaſon, yet the 35th of Eliz. cap. 3. ſupplies ſuch Defects, and makes it perfectly good. And to ſhew the Statute comes full to the Caſe in Hand, and takes all Objections away, the Words run thus: All Letters Patents made, &c. for the Erection, Foundation, Incorporation, or Endowment, of any Dean and Chapter or College, were and ſhall be reputed, taken, and adjudg'd, to have been good, perfect, and effectual, in Law, for all Things therein contain'd, according to the true Intent and Meaning of the ſame: Any Thing, Matter, or Cauſe, to the contrary thereof in any wiſe notwithſtanding. And thus all thoſe who pretend Title by any Letters Patents of Concealment are for ever barr'd all Claim and Pretenſion to any Eſtate belonging to the Deanry and Chapter.

(x) 11 Eliz. Dyer. fo. 280. Corbet's Caſe.
(y) 33 H. 8. cap. 29.

Secondly, 'Twas argued by the Concealers Council, That ſuppoſing the Tranſlation was good, yet the Dean and Chapter had no Eſtate, or Right in the Eſtates, above-mention'd: For by the Surrender of their Church, and all their Manors, Lands, and Poſſeſſions, to King Edward the Sixth, that King was ſeiz'd of them in Fee 'till he reincorporated them by the Addition of the Dean and Chapter of the Cathedral Church of the holy and undivided Trinity in Norwich, founded by King Edward the Sixth; and afterwards, when that King regranted them their Poſſeſſions by the Name of Dean and Chapter, Sanctæ & Individ' Trinitat' Norwic', theſe Words, Ex Fundatione Regis Edwardi Sexti, were omitted. And here 'twas urged the Grant was void by the Miſnoſmer of the Corporation; that the Name of the Founder was material; and that the Omiſſion affected the Charter ſo far as to make it inſignificant. To this the Attorney-General pleaded, that the Dean and Chapter had an unqueſtionable Eſtate in the Lands and Poſſeſſions above-mention'd for ſeveral Reaſons.

Firſt, Granting they had made a Surrender of their Church and Eſtates, their Corporation would ſubſiſt nevertheleſs, and they would ſtill continue the Biſhop's Chapter. And to ſet this in a due Light Coke obſerves, that ſince 'twas not poſſible the Church of God ſhould always be free from Sects and Hereſies, 'twas thought neceſſary every Biſhop ſhould be provided with the Aſſiſtance of a ſtanding Council or Chapter: And that firſt for the Benefit of their Advice in Matters of Difficulty relating to Diſcipline and Controverſies in Religion. Secondly, To conſent to all Grants, &c. ſign'd by the Biſhop, ſo as to make them of Force to bind his Succeſſor. For 'twas not thought reaſonable to lay ſo great a Burthen, or to reſt ſo much Truſt and Confidence, in any one Perſon, or to put it in a ſingle Man's Power to prejudice Succeſſion. And here the Attorney-General cites ſeveral Authorities to prove that all the Eccleſiaſtical Revenues were originally veſted in the Biſhop; and that afterwards certain Proportions were aſſign'd to the Chapter: From whence it follows, the Chapter was Prior to this Aſſignment, and in Being when they had no Property. And therefore by Common Law the Biſhop is Patron of all the Prebends, becauſe the Eſtate and Revenues belonging to them were originally granted by him. Thus notwithſtanding the Dean and Chapter happen'd to convey away their Eſtates, yet they muſt of Neceſſity remain a Corporation, as well to aſſiſt the Biſhop in his Function and Government, as to give their Conſent to any Grants or Conveyances made by the Biſhop of his Temporalties.

But to clinch the Matter, and diſable all Manner of Objections, the Attorney-General argued, that granting the Corporation newly erected by King Edward the Sixth was good in Law, and that their ancient Corporation was ſurrender'd. Granting farther, that the Omiſſion of the Words Ex Fundatione Regis Edwardi Sexti were material, and not merely Words of Ornament: Suppoſing all this, the King's Grant to them was good notwithſtanding this Miſnoſmer, as appears plainly by the Statute of Confirmations. (z) The Preamble of this Act ſetting forth, That whereas King Edward the Sixth had made divers Grants, as well to Bodies Politick and Corporate, as to divers and ſundry of his Loving and Obedient Subjects, &c. In avoiding of which ſundry and many Ambiguities have or might be moved for lack of true naming the ſame Bodies Politick or Corporate. 'Tis enacted, That all ſuch Grants already made, or hereafter to be made, during the King's Life, ſhall be good and effectual, notwithſtanding any of the Cauſes or Defects above-mention'd. After this Argument of the Attorney-General, the Lord-keeper and the Juſtices abovemention'd conſulting together, came to this unanimous Reſolution: That in Caſe there was any Imperfection in the Tranſlation of King Henry the Eighth, the 35th of Eliz. cap. 3. has given a full Relief and Remedy to all ſuch Defects. Secondly, Suppoſing the Corporation of the Dean and Chapter made by King Henry the Eighth was gone and deſtroy'd by the Surrender to King Edward the Sixth; and that the Miſnoſmer was material, and no ornamental Addition: Granting all this, 'twas unanimouſly agreed that that the above-mention'd Act of Confirmation (a) made the King's Grant good, notwithſtanding ſuch Miſnoſmer. And Thirdly, 'twas reſolv'd by the Lord Keeper and Juſtices, That the ancient Corporation of the Dean and Chapter continued in Being notwithſtanding their Surrender of the Church, and all the Eſtates belonging to it. And here, as the Learned Attorney-General obſerves, though the Cathedral of Norwich was principally concern'd in theſe Reſolutions, yet by Parity of Reaſon, and Force of Conſequence, they may very well ſerve for ſecuring the Titles both in other Cathedrals, and ſeveral Colleges in Cambridge and Oxford. (b) And for this Reaſon, as well as for the Learning of the Argument, I have given it the Reader.

An Aſſembly at Dundee.

In March the next Year a General Aſſembly was held at Dundee in Scotland. The King being preſent, told them, He had anticipated the Time of Meeting, to know their Opinion concerning their Sitting in Parliament; and that they might come to a Reſolution upon all the Circumſtances. His Majeſty deſir'd them to debate this Matter through the whole Extent.

The Queſtion was accordingly conſider'd, firſt by a Committee for that Purpoſe; and afterwards 'twas reſolv'd in the Aſſembly, That 'twas lawful for Miniſters to vote in Parliament, and other publick Meetings of the Eſtates; and that 'twas expedient to have always ſome of their Body at ſuch Conventions, to repreſent the Church.

Secondly, Another Queſtion being put for adjuſting the Number of thoſe that were to vote for the Miniſtry, 'twas agreed that the Church Repreſentatives ſhould come up to the Number made uſe of in ancient Times; that is, One and fifty Members, or thereabouts.

Thirdly, Touching the Election of thoſe who were to ſerve in Parliament, 'twas reſolv'd the Chuſing theſe Members belong'd partly to the King, and partly to the Church. And becauſe the Time would not ſerve for diſcuſſing the remaining Points, a Commiſſion was given to ſome Members of the Presbyteries and Doctors of the Univerſities, to attend his Majeſty when and where they were appointed. This Committee were impower'd to treat all the Heads of this Queſtion. And in caſe they could not come to an Agreement, the Matter was to be referr'd to the next General Aſſembly.

An. Dom. 1598.

Farther, 'Twas found ſome Synods ſent overproportion'd Numbers to the General Aſſembly. To bar this Encroachment, and bring Things to a Balance, 'twas decreed, That for the Time to come no Presbytery ſhould ſend above two or three Repreſentative Miniſters, at moſt, to the General Aſſembly: To theſe with one Baron of the Bounds, and one Commiſſioner from every Burrough, was only to be added, Edinburgh excepted, which in all publick Meetings was allow'd two.

The Right, &c. of Miniſters Voting in Parliament ſettled.

About three Months forward the Doctors of the Univerſity, and the Commiſſioners of the Church, waited on the King at Falkland; where after a long Debate, the Buſineſs of the Miniſters Voting in Parliament was unanimouſly agreed. The Circumſtances adjuſted were rang'd under Ten Articles. I ſhall mention ſome of them:

1. With Reference to the Election, 'twas agreed, That for each Prelacy that was void the Church ſhould name ſix of their Body, out of which the King ſhould chuſe one to ſerve in Parliament; or if his Majeſty like none of this Number, the Church was to recommend ſix others, of which Number his Majeſty oblig'd himſelf to accept one.

2. That the General Aſſemblies ſhould nominate the Perſon with the Advice of the Synods and Presbyteries.

The Conditions the Miniſters that ſat in Parliament were oblig'd to ſign.

3. For ſettling a Revenue to ſupport his Character, 'twas agreed, that when the Churches of the Precinct or Dioceſe were ſufficiently provided for, the Remainder of the Eſtate belonging to the Prelacy or Biſhoprick ſhould be aſſign'd him.

4. For Fear his Title, Revenues, and repreſenting Diſtinction ſhould tempt him to affect Dominion, and break through the eſtabliſh'd Parity, there were ſeveral Reſtraints thrown in to check him from acting like a Biſhop. As,

Firſt, He was not to propoſe any Thing by way of Repreſentation at the Council-Board, Convention or Parliament, without expreſs Inſtructions from the Church; neither was he to be paſſive and ſilent when any Motion was made prejudicial to the Intereſt of his Body; and in caſe of Miſmanagement in this Article, he was to be depriv'd.

Secondly, He was tied to give an Account of the Diſcharging his Truſt to every General Aſſembly, and to procure their Approbation of his Proceedings: And here he was to ſubmit to their Award without making any Appeal, under the Penalty of Infamy and Excommunication.

3. He was to acquieſce in ſuch Proportions of Revenue as ſhould be aſſign'd him, without encroaching upon the Livings of the Miniſters within his Precinct.

4. He was not to commit any Waſte, or dilapidate his Benefice, nor make any Leaſes without the Conſent of his Majeſty and the General Aſſembly.

5. He was oblig'd to diſcharge every Part of the Paſtoral Office in the Congregation where he was fix'd: And to prevent his riſing to any Epiſcopal Privilege, his Behaviour was to lie under the Cognizance of his own Presbytery, or Provincial Aſſembly: And to their Cenſure he was oblig'd to reſign himſelf no leſs than any other Miniſter that carried no Commiſſion.

6. In the Adminiſtration of Diſcipline, Collation of Benefices, Viſitations, and other Branches of Eccleſiaſtical Government, he was not to pretend to any more Juriſdiction than the reſt of his Brethren. No Claim of this Nature was to be made without a particular Commiſſion, under the Penalty of Deprivation. And in caſe any Uſurpation of this Kind ſhould happen in Oppoſition to the Presbytery, Synod, or General Aſſembly, whatever was done, ſhould be void and ſignifie nothing.

7. At his Admiſſion to his repreſenting Office he was to ſwear and ſign theſe Articles, and any other that ſhould be thought neceſſary.

8. In caſe he ſhould happen to be depos'd from the Miniſtry by the Presbytery, Synod, or General Aſſembly, he was to loſe his Benefice, and ſit no longer in Parliament.

9. That the Name of his Office might be inoffenſive, and put him in Mind of his Dependence, he was to be call'd a Commiſſioner of ſuch a Place or Precinct, provided the Parliament and his Majeſty were willing to paſs that Title; if not, the General Aſſembly would give him ſome other Diſtinction. They would likewiſe determine, whether he was to hold his Office during Life, in caſe of unexceptionable Management; or that he was only to continue for a ſhorter Term at the Pleaſure of the Church.

Notwithſtanding the Singularity of theſe Conditions, the King gave Way to them at preſent, foreſeeing that Time would probably bring ſome Remedy, knock off the Chains, and give a freer Motion. (d)

Attorney General Coke proſecuted in the Archbiſhop's Court for marrying without Bans or Licence.

To return to England: This Year Edward Coke Eſq; afterwards Sir Edward, and the Lady Hatton, Relict of Sir William Hatton, marrying without Bans or Licence, Henry Bothwell Prieſt, Rector of Oakeover, who marry'd them, and ſeveral Perſons of Condition, preſent at the Wedding, were proſecuted in the Archbiſhop's Court; and upon their Submiſſion by their Proxies, abſolv'd from the Cenſures incurr'd. The Inſtrument ſets forth, That their over-looking the Authority of the Church, they had all of them fall'n under the greater Excommunications, and the conſequent Penalties. (e)

There's another Abſolution in the ſame Form granted to Sir Thomas Edgerton Lord Keeper, and Alice Counteſs Dowager of Derby; and another to the Earl of Hertford, not to mention the Reſt in the ſame Regiſter. The Regiſters of the ſucceeding Archbiſhops have likewiſe Inſtances of the ſame Kind.

Squire tried for High-Treaſon.

About this Time Edward Squire was tried for Treaſon: To ſay ſomething of him in a Word or two. He was bred an Attorney's Clerk, afterwards turning Soldier, he went to Sea in Drake's laſt Expedition, was taken by the Enemy, and carried Priſoner into Spain. Here one Walpole an Engliſh Jeſuit got him proſecuted for Hereſie in the Inquiſition. After a great Deal of harſh Uſage and farther Menacing, he reconcil'd himſelf to the Church of Rome. And now Walpole, as Squire confeſs'd, puſh'd him upon a deſperate Enterprize, told him, That the killing of the Earl of Eſſex and the Queen would be of great Service to Religion; That this might be compaſs'd without Danger, only by dropping a little Poiſon on the Pummel of the Queen's Saddle where ſhe reſted her Hand. Squire conſented to this villainous Motion, and bound himſelf under the moſt ſolemn Engagements to Secrecy and Buſineſs. Walpole, as Squire confeſs'd, put the Poiſon in his Hands, and to prevent Suſpicion, procur'd him and another a Commiſſion to be ſent into England for the ranſoming ſome Spaniſh Priſoners. Soon after his Arrival he practiſed the Directions given him both upon the Queen's Saddle and the Earl of Eſſex's Chair; but by the Providence of God the Barbarity miſcarry'd. Walpole, as Squire's Narrative goes on, ſuſpecting his Convert had broke his Promiſe, is ſuppos'd to have contriv'd a Revenge. In ſhort, a Perſon was privately diſpatch'd into England to charge Squire with High Treaſon. Being cloſely examin'd, and fancying his Confeſſor had betray'd him, he confeſs'd Walpole's Suggeſtion, that he conſented to the Villainy, and made Uſe of the Poiſon purſuant to the Directions above-mention'd. However, both at his Trial, and at the Place of Execution, he proteſted, though he had been inſtigated by Walpole and others to commit the Fact, yet he could never maſter his Conſcience ſo far as to do it. Soon after Walpole printed a Vindication of himſelf, in which he denied with all imaginable Abhorrence, every Part of Squire's Confeſſion. (f)

Octob. 1598. Dr. Stapleton*'s Death and Character.*

This Year Thomas Stapleton Doctor in Divinity, departed this Life. He was deſcended of a Gentleman's Family in Suſſex, bred in New College in Oxford, and was afterwards Divinity Profeſſor at Doway. Pitz is very large in his Commendation, deſcribes him a Man of great Penetration and Judgment, and a Maſter almoſt in all Sorts of Learning. At the King of Spain's Invitation he remov'd from Doway to Lovain, where he had the Divinity Chair, and ſeveral other conſiderable Preferments. He was a famous Controverſialiſt, and wrote againſt Horn Biſhop of Wincheſter, and Jewel Biſhop of Saliſbury, beſides ſeveral other Tracts. (g)

Dr. Coſins*'s Death, &c.*

Richard Coſins no leſs eminent in the Reformation, died this Year. He was bred at Cambridge, commenc'd Doctor of Law, was made Dean of the Arches, and wrote a learned and ſignificant Tract, entitled, An Apology for Proceedings in Courts Eccleſiaſtical. In this Book he defends the Juriſdiction and Proceſs of the Biſhops Courts, and the High Commiſſion, againſt the Exceptions of Eraſtians and Puritans.

King James publiſhes his Doron Baſilicon, and upon what Occaſion.

The next Year the King of Scots publiſh'd his Doron Baſilicon upon the following Occaſion. Sir James Semple, a Gentleman belonging to the Court, tranſcrib'd this Treatiſe by the King's Order. Having the Copy thus in his Cuſtody, he gave his old Friend Mr. Andrew Melvil a Sight of it. Melvil finding the Miſbehaviour of the Miniſters expos'd, and the Diſcipline deſcrib'd to Diſadvantage, took ſeveral Tranſcripts and diſpers'd them. Upon this a Libel or Charge was drawn up againſt the Book, and laid before the Synod of St. Andrews; where after a Recital of the exceptionable Paſſages, a Queſtion was put, What Cenſure ſhould paſs upon the Perſon that had given ſuch Inſtructions to the Prince? For by the Way the Treatiſe is addreſs'd to Prince Henry. 'Twas farther ask'd in the Libel, Whether he could be thought well affected to Religion that had ſuggeſted ſuch Rules for Government? Sir Patrick Murray and Mr. James Nicholſon, the King's Commiſſioners, finding his Majeſty ſtruck at in the Libel, made Enquiry by whom 'twas exhibited? The whole Synod pretending Ignorance, the Commiſſioners order'd the Doors to be ſhut, and the Miniſters Names to be called over, who being all put to their Oaths, ſwore they knew nothing of the Matter However, the next Day 'twas found, that one Dykes a Miniſter at Anſtruthar, laid it on the Table. This Miniſter being ſummon'd to appear before the Council, and abſconding, was proclaim'd Rebel. The King thus miſreported as diſaffected to Religion, and leaving ſome unſerviceable Directions to the Prince his Son, publiſh'd the Book; which, without Queſtion, was the beſt Way to confute the Calumny. By this Performance 'twas plain he had made very uſeful Obſervations both upon Books and Men. The Tract is written with a Compaſs of Thought and Learning, and every where diſtinguiſh'd with a Predominancy of Honeſty and Conſcience. The Royal Author receiv'd the Juſtice of being admir'd for his Vertue and Capacity; particularly this Book recommended his Majeſty ſtrongly to the Eſteem of the Engliſh; inſomuch that all the Diſcourſes then publiſh'd for maintaining his Right to ſucceed Queen Elizabeth, did not do him ſo much Service as this Product of his own Pen. (b)

This Year the famous Hooker, Maſter of the Temple, and who wrote the Eccleſiaſtical Polity, departed this Life. His Character as to his Learning and Judgment, has been touch'd already, I ſhall only add, that the Regularity of his Life, the Benevolence of his Temper, his unaffected Modeſty, his being free from the leaſt Tincture of Pride, was no leſs commendable than the Strength of his Genius, and the Improvements of his Underſtanding. As for his Books of Eccleſiaſtical Polity, nothing can be more ſolidly manag'd. He has recited the principal Objections of the Puritans againſt the Worſhip and Government of the Church of England, gone through the whole Argument, and return'd a full Anſwer to every Exception. In ſhort, he has baffl'd the Presbyterian Cauſe ſo effectually, that they have never ſince been able to appear in the Controverſie to any Purpoſe. This Celebrated Divine was born in Devonſhire, and died at his Pariſh of Biſhopsburn in Kent.

The General Aſſembly at Montroſs confirms the Agreement at Falkland. Anno Dom. 1600.

In Scotland there was a publick Order for a new Computation in the Kalendar; and the Year which formerly began on the 25th of March, was to be reckon'd henceforward from the Firſt of January. On the 28th of March a General Aſſembly was held at Montroſs, where the King was preſent: And here, after a long Debate, the late Agreement at Falkland was confirm'd; 'twas at laſt unanimouſly reſolv'd, That a Churchman might lawfully vote in Parliament and State-Conventions; and that there was no Inconſiſtency between the Functions of a Paſtor and a Secular Judge: Tho' it muſt be ſaid ſome few Members being apprehenſive their Diſcipline might ſuffer, were of a different Opinion. However, none of them could ſay the King over-aw'd their Votes, or menac'd them out of their Freedom. On the contrary, they had all imaginable Liberty for propoſing their own Objections, and anſwering thoſe of the other Party: There was nothing forc'd or hurried, but the Cauſe was argued at length on all Sides, and every Thing was done in an orderly incompulſive Manner. (x) To be ſomewhat particular, the Perſon elected for this Purpoſe, was every Year to give an Account of the Management of his Commiſſion to the General Aſſembly: And if his Majeſty and the Aſſembly thought fit to employ another, he was to acquieſce. There were two other Articles added, That thoſe Churchmen who ſate in Parliament ſhould have no Vote in the General Aſſembly, unleſs they had a Commiſſion for that Purpoſe from their own Presbytery. Secondly, That Crimen Ambitus, or undue ſoliciting for Election, ſhould diſable a Man for this Employment.

The ill Condition of the Sees in Scotland.

And now nothing remain'd but to fill the vacant Biſhopricks; and here the Condition of Things was very lamentable. 'Tis true, the Sees of Aberdeen and Argyle were full, and furniſh'd two Prelates that preach'd, but the Biſhopricks were in a manner ſeculariz'd: The Patrimony of St. Andrews and Glaſcow was ſeiſed by the Duke of Lenox; Murray was ſwallow'd by the Lord Spiney, and Orkney by the Earl of Orkney; Dunkeld, Brichen and Dunblain had their Titulars: But theſe, as Spotſwood ſpeaks, were not ordinary Preachers; by which Deſcription I ſuppoſe he means they were Roman Catholicks. As for Galoway and the Iſles, they were ſo harraſs'd in their Revenues, that there was ſcarcely the Face of a Biſhoprick remaining. Roſs and Cathneſs were the only two Sees where ſome Part of the Lands were left unreform'd. And to theſe Prelacies Mr. David Lindeſay, and Mr. George Gladſtaves, were preferr'd by the Churches Conſent: The firſt was made Biſhop of Roſs, and the other of Cathneſs.

Idem.

The Gowrey Conſpiracy.

In Auguſt this Year the Conſpiracy of Gowrey happen'd: 'Twas concerted only between the Earl and Mr. Alexander his Brother. That which puſh'd them upon this deſperate Attempt, was their Reſentment for the Loſs of their Father, who was tried and executed in the Year 1584. But the King being then in his Minority, his Inclination was plainly over-rul'd in this Matter; for his preſerving and cheriſhing the late Earl's Family, was a ſufficient Proof of his Diſlike of the Proceedings againſt him. For the Purpoſe, he reſtor'd the eldeſt Son to his Father's Honour and Eſtate: His Brother Alexander was made one of the Gentlemen of his Bedchamber, and their Siſter was Maid of Honour to the Queen: And over and above, the King intended to prefer the Earl to ſome Principal Poſt in the Adminiſtration. But no careſſing, or kind Uſage had Force enough to make any Impreſſion upon the two Brothers, or prevail with them to drop their Revenge. Their Plot was to draw the King to the Earl's Houſe at Perth, and murder him there. His Majeſty being then at Falkland, and going out one Morning to hunt in the Park, Alexander Ruthen came to him and told him his Brother had ſeiz'd a Perſon with a great deal of Gold about him, whom he ſuppos'd to be a Jeſuit; That he had ſecur'd the Man in his Houſe at Perth; That he deſir'd the King would pleaſe to come thither with all ſpeed, not queſtioning but that his Majeſty would receive ſuch Information as would make him amends for his Trouble. The King being ſtrongly importun'd, promis'd to be with the Earl before Dinner, and came at the Time appointed. After Dinner he was carried into a private Room, under Pretence of a better Opportunity for examining the Jeſuit. And now Alexander locking the Door to keep out the King's Attendants, told his Majeſty, He muſt be call'd to an Account for his Father's Death. To be ſhort, he attempted to tie the King's Hands: Upon this they grappled; and the King dragging him to a Window next the Street, ſpied the Earl of Marr, and cried, Help. Upon this the Lords and Gentlemen ran to the King's Reſcue, but found the Doors lock'd and barricadoed: However, Sir Thomas Areskin, Hugh Herriff Doctor of Phyſick, John Ramſey a Page, and Wilſon a Footman, made their Way by a back Paſſage. Alexander Ruthen was run through by Sir Thomas Areskin for not giving a ſatisfactory Anſwer concerning the King. After this the Earl of Gowrey, with two or three Servants, entred the Room where the King was, and with a Sword in each Hand made a deſperate Charge upon the ſmall Guard: But being upbraided with the Murther of his Sovereign, he was check'd with a ſudden Remorſe; he ſeem'd as it were aſtoniſh'd; made a Pauſe, and ſet the Points of his Swords on the Ground, as if he intended to go no farther. Ramſey the Page taking the Opportunity, drove his Rapier through his Heart, and kill'd him outright. The Earl's Servants ſeeing their Maſter fall, made their Eſcape. Sir Thomas Areskin and Doctor Herriff received each of them a ſlight Wound. By this Time the Lords and their Retinue had forc'd the Doors; when they underſtood what had happen'd, they fell upon their Knees with the King to give God Thanks for the Deliverance.

Aug. 5th.

But the Danger was not yet over; for the Burghers running to Arms, ſurrounded the Houſe, and cried out, That unleſs they would give them their Provoſt, meaning the Earl Gowrey, they would blow them all up with Gun-powder. 'Twas with great Difficulty that the Mob was prevail'd with from doing all the Miſchief in their Power: At laſt the Bailiffs, and ſome other Townſmen, being admitted to the King, and inform'd of the Truth of what had paſs'd, ſatisfied the People, and brought them to Temper. And now the Mutiny being huſh'd, the King took Horſe and return'd to Falkland.

The Edinburgh Miniſters refuſe to give Thanks for the King's Deliverance.

The News of this Conſpiracy being ſent the next Day to Edinburgh, the Privy Council deſir'd the Miniſters of the Town to call their Pariſhioners to Church, and return God Thanks for his Majeſty's Deliverance. They endeavour'd to excuſe themſelves as not being acquainted with the Particulars of what had happen'd. To take off this Pretence, 'twas anſwer'd, an exact Information of every Circumſtance was not neceſſary; their Buſineſs was only to ſignifie the King had eſcaped a great Danger, and exhort the People to thank God for ſo merciful a Providence. They made a ſhuffling Reply, That nothing ought to be deliver'd in the Pulpit without preciſe Certainty of the Truth; and that every Thing mention'd in that Place, ſhould be ſpoken in Faith. In ſhort, when no Arguments could bring them to their Duty, the Council made a Cavalcade to the Market-Croſs, where the Biſhop of Roſs gave a Narrative of the Conſpiracy, and cloſ'd his Diſcourſe with a Thankſgiving. The next Week when the King came to Edinburgh, there was a Sermon upon the Occaſion preach'd by Mr. Patrick Galoway: And in November following, when the Parliament met at Edinburgh, an Act was made for keeping the 5th of Auguſt Holy-day, as an Anniverſary Thankſgiving. Some of them recollect themſelves, and give Satiſfaction.

As to the Miniſters of Edinburgh, thoſe who refuſ'd to concern themſelves in the publick Solemnity for the King's Preſervation, were order'd to depart the Town within Eight and forty Hours, and not to preach under Pain of Death, in any of his Majeſty's Dominions. Three of this Number, Balcanquel, Watſon and Hall, recollecting themſelves, declar'd they were fully convinc'd of the Truth of Gowrey's Conſpiracy, and willing to make Reparation for their former Miſbehaviour: They were pardon'd upon the Conditions following. Before they return'd to Edinburgh, they were publickly in the Churches aſſign'd them to declare their Belief of the treaſonable Attempt at Perth, and aſk God and the King's Pardon for queſtioning the Matter of Fact. The next Day Mr. James Balfour, another Miniſter of Edinburgh, was pardon'd upon the ſame Terms: But Mr. Robert Bruce refuſing to give this Satiſfaction, was baniſh'd, and travell'd into France. At the Receſs of the Parliament the King went to Dunfermlin, where the Queen was deliver'd of a Son, who was chriſtned Charles. This Prince, though unlikely to live at firſt, ſurviv'd his eldeſt Brother Henry, and ſucceeded his Father in the Kingdom of Great Britain.

Clement the Eighth's Briefs.

About this Time Pope Clement the VIIIth knowing Queen Elizabeth far advanc'd in Life, ſent two Briefs into England to ſecure the next Reign, and recover the Intereſt of his See. One of theſe was ſent to the Clergy, and the other to the Laity. The Subſtance of them imported a Charge "not to admit any Perſon (how near ſoever upon the Line) for King, after the Queen's Death, unleſs ſuch a one as would not only tolerate the Catholick Religion, but promote it to the utmoſt of his Power, and engage himſelf by Oath, according to the Cuſtom of his Anceſtors, for that Purpoſe. Theſe Inſtructions were deliver'd with great Secrecy, and communicated only to a few: But 'tis thought the horrible Powder Plot was afterwards projected upon this Encouragement.*

Anno Dom. 1600.

In the Beginning of this Year the Kingdom of Ireland was miſerably harraſs'd and embroil'd: The capital Rebel Tir-Owen had rang'd the length of the Iſland from Ulſter to Munſter without Reſiſtance. At this Time there ſeems to have been a general Concert of the Iriſh Nobility to recover their ancient Liberty; they having for ſome Time made loud Complaints of the Hardſhips they ſuffer'd from the Engliſh. They were encouraged to this Rebellious Enterprize by an Indulgence ſent them in Form by Pope Clement the VIIIth: The Bull is directed to the Biſhops, the Temporal Nobility, and Commons of that Kingdom. The Pope puts them in Mind, "How honourably they had formerly engag'd with James Fitz-gerrald, Earl of Deſmond, and lately with Hugh Earl of Tir-Owen, in Defence of their Country againſt Hereticks: And being inform'd they were ſtill diſpos'd to venture themſelves in the ſame Service, he ſends them his Apoſtolical Benediction, and gives them the ſame Plenary Indulgence uſually granted by his Predeceſſors to thoſe who undertook a Cruſade for recovering the Holy Land from the Saracens and the Turks. To proceed: The Miſunderſtandings between the Seculars and Jeſuits ſtill continuing in England, Bancroft Biſhop of London, entertain'd ſome of the former, and furniſh'd them with Conveniencies to write againſt their Adverſaries. This probably was done partly out of a Deſign to keep up the Diviſion, and partly to encourage the honeſter Side. For that the Seculars, notwithſtanding their Difference in Religion, were Men of Loyal Principles, appears by a Paper ſign'd by ſeveral of them about this Time. I ſhall give it the Reader in their own Words.

Anno Dom. 1601.

The Secular Prieſts loyal Proteſtation.

"Whereas it hath pleaſed our Dread Sovereign to take Notice of the Faith and Loyalty of us her natural-born Subjects, Secular Prieſts, and of her Princely Clemency hath given a ſufficient Earneſt of ſome merciful Favour towards us, being all ſubject by the Laws of the Realm to Death, by our Return into our Country after our taking the Order of Prieſthood, ſince the firſt Year of her Majeſty's Reign; and only demandeth of us for this intended Favour, an Aſſurance of the ſaid Fidelity unto her Majeſty's Perſon, Crown, Eſtate and Dignity. We whoſe Names are under-written in moſt humble-wiſe proſtrate at her Majeſty's Feet, do acknowledge our ſelves infinitely bound unto her Majeſty therefore; and are moſt willing to give ſuch Aſſurance and Satiſfaction in this Point as any Catholick Prieſts can give unto their Sovereign.

"Firſt, Therefore we acknowledge and confeſs the Queen's Majeſty to have as full Authority, Power and Sovereignty over us, and over all the Subjects of the Realm, as any of her Highneſs Predeceſſors ever had. And farther, we proteſt that we are moſt willing and ready to obey her in all Caſes and Reſpects, ſpects, as far forth as ever Chriſtian Prieſts within this Realm, or in any other Chriſtian Country, were bound by the Law of God, and Chriſtian Religion, to obey their Temporal Princes.

Whitgift (John) Archbiſhop of Cant.

“Secondly, Whereas for theſe many Years paſt, divers Conſpiracies againſt her Majeſty's Perſon and Eſtate, and ſome forcible Attempts for invading and conquering her Dominions, have been made under we know not what Pretences and Intendments of reſtoring Catholick Religion by the Sword; (a Courſe moſt ſtrange in the World, and undertaken peculiarly and ſolely againſt her Majeſty and her Kingdoms, among other Princes departed from the Religion and Obedience of the See Apoſtolick no leſs than ſhe) by Reaſon of which violent Enterprizes her Majeſty (otherwiſe of ſingular Clemency towards her Subjects) hath been greatly moved to ordain and execute ſeverer Laws againſt Catholicks (which by Reaſon of their Communion with the See Apoſtolick in Faith and Religion, were eaſily ſuppos'd to favour theſe Conſpiracies and Invaſions) than perhaps had ever been enacted or thought upon, if ſuch Hoſtilities and Wars had never been undertaken. We, to aſſure her Majeſty of our Faithful Loyalty alſo in this particular Caſe, ſincerely proteſt, and by this our publick Fact make known to all the Chriſtian World, that in theſe Caſes of Conſpiracies and Invaſions which hereafter may be made by any Foreign Prince or Potentate for the Diſturbance and Subverſion of her Majeſty's State and Dominions, under the aforeſaid Pretences and Intendments; we will according to the Rules of Chriſtian Religion, defend our Prince and Country from all theſe violent Aſſaults and Injuries. And moreover, we will not only our ſelves reſiſt 'em as inconvenient Means to introduce Catholick Religion into our Country, but alſo earneſtly perſwade Lay-Catholicks to do the ſame.

“Thirdly, If upon any ſuch Invaſions the Pope ſhould excommunicate every one that would not forſake the foreſaid Defence of her Majeſty and the Realm, and take Part with ſuch Conſpirators and Invaders; in this Caſe we do think our ſelves and the Lay-Catholicks not bound in Conſcience to obey this Cenſure, but will defend our Prince and Country.

“And becauſe nothing is more certain than that whilſt we endeavour to aſſure her Majeſty of our dutiful Affection and Allegiance by this our Chriſtian and ſincere Proteſtation; there will not want thoſe who will condemn and miſconſtrue our lawful Fact: Yea, and by many ſiniſter Suggeſtions and Calumnies diſcredit our Doings with the Chriſtian World, but chiefly with the Pope's Holineſs, to the greateſt Prejudice and Harm of our good Names and Perſons that may be, unleſs we maturely prevent their Malice herein. We moſt humbly beſeech her Majeſty, that in this our Recognizing, and yielding Cæſar's Due unto her, we may alſo by her gracious Leave be permitted, for avoiding Obloquy and Calumnies, to make known by like publick Act, that by yielding her Right unto her, we depart from no Bond of that Chriſtian Duty which we owe to our Supreme Spiritual Paſtor.

Elizabeth Q.

“And therefore we acknowledge and confeſs the Biſhop of Rome to be the Succeſſor of St. Peter in that See; and to have as ample, and no more Authority or Juriſdiction over us and other Chriſtians, than had that Apoſtle by the Gift and Commiſſion of Chriſt our Saviour. And that we will obey him ſo far forth as we are bound by the Laws of God to do, and may ſtand with Performance of our Duty to our Temporal Prince, in ſuch Sort as we have before profeſs'd: For as we are moſt ready to ſpend our Blood in Defence of her Majeſty and our Country, ſo will we rather loſe our Lives than infringe the Authority of Chriſt's Catholick Church. A Parliament at Weſtminſter.

A Bill againſt Plurality of Benefices.

On the 27th of October this Year the Parliament met at Weſtminſter: At this Seſſion a Bill againſt Plurality of Benefices was brought into the Lower Houſe, and read the ſecond Time. The paſſing this Bill was oppos'd by ſeveral Members: To mention ſome of them, Doctor Crompton wiſh'd the Laity would lead the Way in this pretended Reformation; and that Secular Men might be reſtrained from Plurality of Offices in the firſt Place; that formerly Impropriations belong'd to the Spiritualty; That in thoſe Times Clergymen being bound to Cœlibacy, might ſubſiſt upon leſs Expence: But that now ſince Impropriations are taken from them, and Marriage allow'd, their Revenues are leſſen'd, and their Charge encreas'd; and therefore a ſingle Benefice of ſlender Value muſt be an incompetent Maintenance. Serjeant Harris ſeconded this Doctor, and ſuggeſted, That this Bill could not paſs without breaking in upon a Cuſtom of the Houſe, which they had conſtantly obſerv'd; and that was, not to meddle with any Matter which touches her Majeſty's Prerogative: And that ſuppoſing the Act ſhould paſs, her Majeſty might grant a Diſpenſation with a Non Obſtante. To ſhew the Extent of the Prerogative, Sir George Moor a Member of the Houſe of Commons, in his Speech to the Bill againſt Monopolies, has theſe Words: “We know the Power of her Majeſty cannot be reſtrain'd by any Act: Admit we ſhould make the Statute with a Non Obſtante, yet the Queen may grant a Patent with a Non Obſtante, to croſs this Non Obſtante. (b) Theſe Aſſertions were neither cenſured, nor contradicted by the Houſe: And that there was no great Singularity in this Doctrine rightly underſtood, appears by the Reſolution of all the Judges of England about two Years forwards; where after mature Deliberation upon a Caſe propos'd, they deliver'd it as their Opinion, “That the King has Power (upon Conſiderations moving him, with Reſpect to Time, Place, or Perſon, &c.) to grant a Non Obſtante for diſpenſing with any particular Perſon to cover him from incurring the Penalty of a Statute.” And for this they vouch'd the Authority of their Law-Books. (c)

A Defence of Pluralities.

As to the Bill againſt Pluralities, it miſcarry'd, and therefore I ſhall look after it no farther. But for Fear it might have gone through both Houſes, Archbiſhop Whitgift (as 'tis moſt probable) drew up ſome Reaſons to diſſuade the Queen from giving her Royal Aſſent; I ſhall tranſcribe them from the Lambeth Manuſcript.

The Title ſtands thus:

“Reaſons againſt the Bill now exhibited in the Lower Houſe of Parliament, againſt Plurality of Benefices.

A Defence of Pluralities.

“It is to be conſider'd, That by the Laws now in Force, none may have Two Benefices with Cure, above Eight Pounds (meaning the King's Books) but Men of eſpecial Note and Degree; Firſt, Such as be of her Majeſty's Privy Council, the Sons and Brethren of Noblemen and Knights, Chaplains to her Majeſty, to Noblemen and Biſhops, Batchelors, and Doctors of Divinity, and other Perſons of publick Calling in the Realm; neither may any be Non-reſident (but upon ſpecial Reſpects of great Moment) as for the Service of her Majeſty in Embaſſages, and ſuch like: And for Attendance in her Highneſs's Houſe, or in the Houſes of Biſhops and great Men, or for executing ſome publick Office in the Common-Wealth, or for Reading publick Lectures, or for Government in the Univerſities, &c. All which have been permitted as neceſſary for this Church and State, ever ſince the firſt Light of the Goſpel, and confirm'd by divers Parliaments ſince that Time, in all the Days of the Princes, that have favour'd the Goſpel: Yet for the Satisfying of the Wayward (if that might be) this Liberty is of late reſtrain'd, ſo far as our State can well bear, and it is not poſſible to have the ſame alter'd without great Inconveniencies, as hereafter follows:

“Inconveniencies to the State of the Church.

“1. Firſt ſeeing the Tenth Part of the Benefices are not ſeverally Competent for the State of a mean Perſon, nor the Twentieth Part eſteem'd to be worth Thirty Pounds de Claro, (as will be proved) this Reſtraint will deprive the far greateſt Part of learned Miniſters of ſufficient Maintenance, which hath always been allowed, both by the Laws of God and Man, not only for Neceſſity, but alſo for plentiful Hoſpitality.

“2. Inequality of Gifts, requireth Inequality of Rewards, which cannot be in our State (the Number of competent Livings being ſo ſmall) unleſs Pluralities be in ſome Sort admitted.

“3. Yea the worthieſt Men ſhall (for the moſt Part) be worſt provided, for the beſt Livings being few, do ſeldom fall void. And that will make Miniſters of the meaneſt Gifts, equal with the beſt.

“4. Thoſe that are meet to be employ'd upon Preaching before her Majeſty, or in other ſolemn Places, or to attend upon Synods, or other her Majeſty's Services, and publick Affairs, ſhall not be able to defray their Charges.

“5. It will overthrow the Maintenance of learned Men, and Hoſpitality in Cathedral Churches, where not only many Poor are greatly reliev'd, but divers Ambaſſadors, and great Perſons, to the Honour of the Prince and Realm, are often entertain'd. For ſeeing the Livings in ſuch Churches are not able of themſelves to ſuſtain that Burthen, it is requiſite that they have other Benefices, and that they may be ſometimes abſent from them; elſe both Preaching and Hoſpitality there, muſt needs decay. And in the old Churches it is gravely provided that none be Reſidentiaries, but ſuch as are of ſufficient Ability beſide their Prebend, to the End the State of their Place might be better maintain'd.

“6. The Biſhops of ſmall Biſhopricks ſhall not be able to maintain any tolerable Countenance agreeable to their Eſtate, who are chiefly reliev'd by Benefices granted to them in Commendam.

“7. It is abſurd, that this Bill doth not reſtrain a Layman to have divers Benefices impropriated, and to ſerve them by ſilly Curates, and yet doth deny the like Liberty to learned Divines, who are bound by Law and Conſcience to diſcharge their Duties upon their Livings in Perſon, and to place ſufficient Subſtitutes in their Abſence.

“Hindrance of Learning and the Univerſities.

“1. Honos alit Artes: Therefore when the Means of Preferment is taken from Learning, Learning it ſelf muſt needs in ſhort Time decay: For rich Men will not ſet their Children to School, and poor Men cannot, by reaſon the Clergy ſhall not be able for Want of Maintenance, to help them therein, as before they have done. The beſt Wits will divert their Studies from Divinity; Divines will be leſs painful, and not labour to excel; and ſo in ſhort Time all will be brought to ignorance and barbariſm.

“2. If thoſe that have Benefices cannot be in ſome reſpect Non-reſident, the publick Readers in the Univerſities, and the Maſters of Colleges, &c. ſhall want Maintenance, unleſs they obtain Livings ſine Cura; (which are few, and hard to come by,) ſo that will drive all ancient Men from the Univerſities, which would be very prejudicial, and dangerous to the ſame.

“3. By the Local Statutes of divers Colleges, 'tis wiſely provided, that the Maſters thereof having very ſmall Stipends of the Houſe allowed them, ſhould be ſuch as are otherwiſe furniſh'd with a Living for the better Maintenance of their Countenance and Calling; which cannot be in Caſe they cannot have Benefices, and be abſent from them.

“Hindrance of Religion.

“1. It will bring the Miniſtry into Contempt, conſequently Religion. When the beſt Part of the Miniſters in our State ſhall not be able to maintain themſelves competently.

“2. The Want of ſuch competent Maintenance will be an Occaſion for the Miniſters to preach Placentia, and to feed the Humours of thoſe from whom they are driven to ſeek Relief.

“3. The greateſt Number of Pariſhes ſhall either have no Miniſters for Want of competent Living, or thoſe that are very baſe, contrary to the Pretences of the Bill. And it were better one ſufficient Man had the Charge of Two, than Two inſufficient, of One.

“4. If it be hurtful for the Common-Wealth not to commit divers Offices to one, where there are not divers meet, rather than have the Offices unlook'd unto; why holdeth not the like Reaſon in Offices of the Church and Reli-

Whitgift (John) Archbiſhop of Cant.

“Religion, ſeeing there are not ſufficient learned Men for the ſeveral Livings?

“5. In Caſe the Miniſters may not be abſent, her Majeſty's Houſhold, and the Houſhold of great Perſons ſhall be deſtitute of learned Divines for the Service of God, and depriv'd of the Uſe of Chaplains for the moſt Part, unleſs they maintain them at their own Charge: The Want whereof may breed in Time irreligiouſneſs in ſuch Places.

“6. The Biſhops ſhall not have convenient Aſſiſtance about them of learned Men in their Houſes for deciding Matters of Religion, which daily do ariſe and come unto them. Many Men of ſingular Gifts, that may profit the Church publickly, ſhall be tied within the Compaſs of a Pariſh, where there are not ſometimes Twenty Perſons.

“It is prejudicial to her Majeſty's Authority and State.

“1. It abridges her Majeſty's Authority in Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes, whereof Diſpenſations in theſe Caſes is one Branch.

“2. It diminiſhes the Revenues of the Crown, which are augmented by the Fees of the Court of Faculties.

“3. It abridgeth her Majeſty of the free Employment of any benefic'd Man in Embaſſage, in any Council, in Wars, or other neceſſary Attendance, unleſs he leave his Benefice.

“4. Her Majeſty ſhall be debar'd of many Means to recompence, and prefer ſuch Divines as ſhe ſhall employ in Service.

“5. It will greatly diminiſh the Contributions and Proviſion for Horſe and Armour, which the inferior Clergy hath heretofore yielded to her Majeſty in Time of Neceſſity. For that hath been almoſt altogether born by ſuch as have Pluralities; neither could her Majeſty have had the like in Caſe they had enjoyed but one Benefice apiece.

“6. It abridgeth her Majeſty's Authority, whereas ſhe may now reſtrain or enlarge the Liberty at her Pleaſure.

“It is prejudicial to the Nobility and Gentry.

“1. The Privileges granted by the Statute to the Sons and Brethren of Noblemen and Knights (in Caſe they ſhould be Miniſters) will be taken away.

“2. The Queen's Council (if happily any be Clergymen) ſhall loſe the like Privilege.

“3. Noblemen can qualify no Chaplains for their Honour, nor have any in their Houſe for their Aſſiſtance, but upon their great Charges. (d)

A Bill for puniſhing Abſentees from Church.

The next Thing I ſhall mention relating to the Church this Parliament, was a Bill brought into the Houſe of Commons againſt voluntary Abſence from Church on Sundays. The Forfeiture was to be Twelve-pence each Sunday, which was to be levied by Diſtreſs upon a Warrant from a Juſtice of Peace. Mr. Owen, a Member of the Houſe, diſlik'd this Bill upon Two Accounts Firſt, Upon the Score of the Penalty; he obſerv'd that there was a ſevere Law already for this Purpoſe; and that the pooreſt Recuſant in England was liable to the Forfeiture of Twenty Pounds per Month, and therefore the drawing a double Puniſhment upon the ſame Fault, was againſt Equity. 2dly, He objected the penal Statutes were too numerous, without any farther Addition. And that if this Bill ſhould paſs, a Juſtice of Peace's Houſe would, like a Quarter-Seſſions, be crowded with a Multitude of Complainants. 'Twas likewiſe in his Opinion, a Breach upon Magna Charta, for that Law gives a Tryal per Pares; But by this Two Witneſſes before a Juſtice of Peace, were ſufficient. This Bill was engroſs'd with ſome Amendments. At the 3d Reading, Mr. Bond made a Speech againſt it. He urg'd, That if the Bill paſs'd, Two Imputations of ill Conſequence would be drawn upon the State. Firſt, The inferior Clergy would lie under Diſcredit and Reproach: And the Adverſaries would ſay, they had Reform'd away their Pariſh, and preach'd their Audience out of the Church. Secondly, The Bill would imply a ſtrong Reflection upon the Biſhops, and other Eccleſiaſtical Governors: It would either ſuppoſe them Remiſs in their Management, or elſe, that their Authority was in a Manner inſignificant, and could not come up to the Force of a Twelvepenny Fine. He urged farther, the real Grievances which might be conſequent upon the Execution: For, put the Caſe a Perſon abſent from the Church-Service, comes to be examin'd at the Quarter-Seſſions, he may ſometimes have a reaſonable Excuſe, which notwithſtanding might be very prejudicial to diſcover. And laſtly, he obſerv'd, that Miſunderſtandings and Breach of Charity would neceſſarily follow upon this Bill: For ſuppoſing the Church-Wardens preſent ſome, and either connive at, or forget others, what Complaints would there be of Partiality and Diſaffection? So that in ſhort, the Home-Proſecution would be extremely troubleſome and embarraſs'd, and all Manner of Favour or Neglect, be productive of Complaints and Quarrels. The Bill notwithſtanding went on, and being put to the Queſtion, the Noes carried it but by a ſingle Vote, upon which the Yeas ſaid the Speaker was with them, which would make the Number even. Upon this, the next Queſtion was, whether the Speaker had a Voice, which being decided in the Negative, the Bill was loſt. And here the Speaker himſelf own'd he was foreclos'd from giving his Voice by taking the Chair; and that by being elected to this Poſt, he was to be indifferent to both Parties, and therefore to vote on neither Side. Sir Walter Rawleigh, and Secretary Cecil delivered themſelves to the ſame Opinion, and the Houſe acquieſced in it. (e) This Parliament being the laſt of this Reign, was diſſolv'd on the 19th of December.

It is oppos'd and miſcarries.

The Convocation.

The Convocation met on the 18th of October: The Archbiſhop preſiding, exhorts the Biſhops to manage with Vigilance and Vigour, and be careful to obſerve the Canons paſt in the laſt Convocation. And particularly he gives them the following Cautions. Firſt, Not to proceed in Court upon Apparitors Suggeſtions, without Church-Wardens Preſentment, or other juſt Inquiſition. 2. That Eccleſiaſtical Judges hold no more than one Court within the Compaſs of Five Weeks 3. That Chancellors and Officials do not call Men to ſeveral Courts for the ſame Cauſe. 4. To have Bills of Preſentment but once a Quarter. 5. That the Curates of Non-Reſidents be able Perſons, and have good Allowances. 6. That none but Chancellors grant Licenſes for Marriage. There was nothing more material done this Convocation, excepting the Granting of Four Subſidies payable in Four Years,

Years, which Grant, according to Cuſtom, was confirm'd in Parliament. (f)

The next Year one Watſon, a Secular Prieſt, publiſh'd a Book againſt the Jeſuits: 'Tis written in a ſcholaſtick Way. 'Tis made up of Ten Quodlibets, as he calls them, with the ſame Number of Articles in each Subdiviſion. He draws up a ſevere Charge againſt the Jeſuits for their Latitude in Equivocation and mental Reſervation, flies out into ſtrong Reproaches, and treats the Society with the laſt Extremity of Language. The Paper-War between the Seculars and Jeſuits run now as high as ever. The Secular Prieſts were much diſguſted that Blackwell was put over them for their Arch-Prieſt. For this Blackwell, it ſeems, they look'd on as a Perſon at the Diſpoſal of Garnet the Jeſuits Provincial. Blackwell's Commiſſion being thus conteſted, he firſt diſabled them in their Character, and afterwards got them cenſur'd for Schiſmaticks and Hereticks, in a Brief from Rome. But the Univerſity of Paris declaring for them, this Blemiſh would not ſtick. In their Prints againſt their Adverſaries, they ſpoke very honourably of the Queen's Clemency, and that every Thing conſider'd, ſhe had all along dealt gently with the Papiſts. For the Purpoſe: They prov'd that in the firſt Eleven Years of her Reign, not one Roman Catholick was capitally proſecuted for his Religion. And that Ten Years after Pius Quintus's excommunicating Bull, and the Rebellion under the Earls of Weſtmorland and Northumberland, there were not above Twelve Prieſts executed, and even ſome of theſe were convicted of Practices againſt the State. And thus Matters ſtood till the Year 1580, when the Jeſuits made their firſt Miſſion into England. That theſe Religious, by their Diſloyalty and Treaſon, embroil'd Buſineſs to the laſt Degree, diſſerv'd the Catholick Religion, and provok'd the Legiſlature to ſeverities againſt that Communion. That notwithſtanding this Misbehaviour, there were not in the Ten next Years above Fifty Prieſts executed, and Fifty five baniſh'd, who had forfeited their Lives by Law. That afterwards, at the Inſtance of the Jeſuit Parſons, there were Engliſh Seminaries founded in Spain: And from hence, every Year, ſeveral turbulent Prieſts were diſpatch'd into England. That this Parſons prompted the Spaniard to a Second Invaſion of England and Ireland: That in a printed Tract he maintain'd the Infanta's Title to the Crown of England: And requir'd an Oath of the Students of the Seminaries, to declare for her. That Holt of the ſame Society did his Utmoſt to puſh Hesket to a Rebellion, and tamper'd with Cullin, York, and Williams, to kill the Queen. And that Walpole, a Jeſuit, perſuaded Squire to the ſame Villany. And thus the Queen, whoſe Opinion it was, that Conſcience ought not to be overborn with Rigour and Compulſion, was forced in her own Defence upon Methods of Severity: For that without ſuch rugged Expedients, the preſerving herſelf, and her Kingdoms was thought impracticable. As for Parſons, they deſcribe him as a rank Incendiary, and one remarkably Defective in common Honeſty. The Libels publiſh'd by the Jeſuits againſt the Queen, theſe Seculars charg'd with downright Falſhood, and that the Authors are no better than Traitors againſt God and her Majeſty. And here they argue very commendably: That Religion is not to be propagated by Inſurrections, by Fire and Sword: But that Proſelytes are to be gain'd by Perſuaſion, Meekneſs, and inoffenſive Behaviour. And laſtly, they caution'd the Engliſh Papiſts againſt ſending their Children for Education to the Jeſuits Seminaries: For that theſe Men would make a dangerous Impreſſion upon their Youth, form them to Treaſon and Rebellion, and Poiſon them in their Principles. (g)

And charge them with diſloyalty.

Notwithſtanding theſe Profeſſions of Loyalty, the Queen and Council ſuſpected ſome latent Reſerves. A Proclamation therefore was publiſh'd, commanding the Jeſuits, and thoſe Secular Prieſts who join'd them, to quit the Kingdom immediately: And that the reſt who appear'd more moderate and better diſpoſed, ſhould be gone within Two Months, unleſs they would give a ſatisfactory Declaration of their Allegiance: And that neither Jeſuits nor Seculars ſhould return under the Penalty of ſuffering the Law.

This Year Alexander Nowel, Dr. of Divinity, and Dean of St. Paul's, London, departed this Life. He was educated in Brazen-Noſe College in Oxford; which Houſe he endowed with Two hundred Pounds per Annum, for the Maintenance of Thirteen Students. He was a Perſon of Learning and exemplary Life. Dr. John Overal, Divinity Profeſſor in Cambridge, ſucceeded him in his Deanery.

To go back a little for Scotland: In November laſt a general Aſſembly met at Holyrood Houſe, where amongſt other Things, 'twas agreed, That in Memory of his Majeſty's Deliverance there ſhould be Sermons in all the Burroughs every Tueſday, and the 5th of Auguſt ſolemnly kept, purſuant to the late Act of Parliament. By the Way, the Parliament not only provided for this Anniverſary; but enacted the Name of Ruthen ſhould be extinguiſh'd, the Bodies of the Earl and his Brother brought to Edinburgh, there hang'd and quarter'd, and their Heads fix'd upon the Top of the Common Priſon: This was all executed accordingly, excepting the Clauſe relating to the Name of Ruthen, which the King diſpens'd with in Favour of thoſe unconcern'd in the Plot.

A general Aſſembly at Holyrood-Houſe.

The King having a near Proſpect of being Monarch of the whole Iſland, and reſolving to bring the Churches of England and Scotland towards an Uniformity, prevail'd with the Aſſembly to paſs an Order that Marriages might be ſolemniz'd without Diſtinction of Days; whereas by the Rules of the Diſcipline it ſtood prohibited on Sundays. Farther, before this Time the initiating Sacrament was not adminiſtred, unleſs at the Times of Preaching. Some are of Opinion this Practice proceeded from an Opinion of the Indifferency, or at leaſt the Non-Neceſſity of Baptiſm. But now the Aſſembly ordain'd, "That in Caſe this Sacrament was "requir'd by the Parents, or others in their "Names, it ſhould neither be refus'd to Infants, "or delay'd upon any Pretence whatſoever:" And thus the Scotch Miniſters made ſomewhat of an Advance towards the Church of England. About this Time Pope Clement the VIIIth. perceiving the Diſputes between the Engliſh Seculars and Jeſuits was like to diſſerve his Intereſt, wrote to the Arch-Prieſt Blackwell to ſtop the Progreſs of the Conteſt: To call in all Defamatory Books, and not to ſuffer either Party to to mal-treat the other; and that they ſhould print nothing upon the Controverſy without a Licence from the Cardinal Protector. The Pope takes Notice that ſome Engliſh Prieſts had appeal'd, and prefer'd a Complaint againſt Blackwell: He therefore cautions him to manage his Commiſſion with Temper: As for his Inſtructions at Length, I ſhall refer the Reader to the Records. Queen Elizabeth's Death and Character.

The Queen, who had hitherto been all along happy in her Health, began now to decline very ſenſibly. On the laſt of January ſhe remov'd from Weſtminſter to Richmond for Retirement, and the Benefit of the Air. She was ſeiz'd ſome Time before her Death with a deep Melancholy. Whether this Diſtemper proceeded from Conſcience or Conſtitution: Whether her Mind affected her Health, or ill Habit of Body clouded her Imagination, is ſomewhat uncertain: 'Tis poſſible her extraordinary Uſage of the Queen of Scots, embroiling the neighbouring Kingdoms, and harraſſing the Patrimony of the Church, might not altogether pleaſe in the Retroſpection. The Earl of Eſſex's Friends pretended her giving Way to the Execution of that Nobleman, ſate hard upon her Spirits. Some thought ſhe ſuſpected the Inclinations of her Subjects began to remove, that they grew weary of her Government, and look'd towards the King of Scots. (l) But without pronouncing upon the Cauſe, 'tis certain the laſt Scene was dark and diſconſolate. However, her Silence and ſolitary Appearance, her refuſing Converſation, unleſs with Archbiſhop Whitgift, might proceed from a religious Diſpoſition. She was willing, we may charitably ſuppoſe, to keep herſelf in a Poſture of Recollection, and reſerve her Time for Eternity. When the Symptoms grew mortal, the Lord-Keeper and Secretary Cecil waited on her by the Direction of the Privy-Council: Their Buſineſs was to ask her Pleaſure concerning her Succeſſor: She told them her Throne was a Throne of Kings, and that ſhe would not have any mean Perſon ſucceed her. And the Secretary deſiring her Majeſty to explain herſelf farther, ſhe anſwered, That the King of Scots, her neareſt Relation, ſhould ſucceed her. After this, the Archbiſhop put her in Mind to turn her Thoughts to the other World, and think upon God: That I do, ſays ſhe, nor does my Mind at all wander from him. And when her Speech fail'd her, her Geſtures were devout and ſignificant. She died on the 24th of March, in the 70th Year of her Age, and the 45th of her Reign.

Idem.

To ſay ſomething of this Princeſs by Way of Deſcription: She ſeems form'd by Nature and Education for the Greatneſs ſhe was born to. It muſt be ſaid her Qualities were many of them correſpondent to her Station. To be ſomewhat particular; ſhe was furniſh'd with Learning, Senſe, and Courage, to an unuſual Degree. She ſpoke Latin, French, and Italian, with Eaſe and Propriety, and underſtood Greek and Spaniſh. She tranſlated Salluſt de bello Jugurthino, the greateſt Part of Horace de Arte Poeticâ, and Plutarch de Curioſitate. She had a good Ear for Muſick, and played upon ſeveral Inſtruments: Her Mien and Behaviour was graceful and majeſtick. And being prepar'd to anſwer Ambaſſadors Speeches in the Language they were deliver'd, and diſcourſe upon Government, and the State of foreign Kingdoms, ſhe appear'd with great Advantage at her giving Audience, and upon other publick Occaſions. Thus the Duke of Anjou, and other Strangers of Quality, are ſaid to have admir'd her extremely. She was generally awake for the Functions of Government: Her Meaſures for Precaution were well taken, her Conduct reſted upon Art, and her Politicks were carried to the fartheſt Improvement. And when the Proſpect was black, and the Criſis grew dangerous, nothing was more brave than this Princeſs. For Inſtance, when the Spaniſh Armada was ready to deſcend upon the Kingdom, ſhe appear'd at Tilbury with an Air of Reſolution: Rode about the Army, harangued her Troops, and encourag'd them like an Heroine.

Neither was ſhe leſs remarkable in her Adminiſtration at Home; ſhe knew how to govern her Dominions, as well as guard them. She always took Care to keep a due Diſtance between the Subject and Sovereign; and never ſuffer'd her People, either without Doors, or within, to grow upon the Prerogative. And notwithſtanding theſe Reſerves of Majeſty, this holding the Reins ſtreight, and keeping the Spirit of Government always ſtirring, ſhe avoided the Imputation of a rigid Prince, and gain'd the Affections of the Generality. She had the Secret of engaging the People, without leſſening her Authority; was condeſcenſive and popular in her Geſtures and Diſcourſe, and knew how to ſtoop without ſhrinking her Stature. And to make her Management more acceptable, ſhe never burthen'd the Country with unneceſſary Taxes. And that which was given, was conſtantly applied to the publick Benefit: To which I may add the Recovery of the Mint to a juſt Standard of Fineneſs. In ſhort, had the Intereſt of her Subjects lain wholly in this World, few Princes would have left their Memory better recommended.

But as to the Service of Religion, I am ſorry I cannot ſay her Conduct was altogether ſo happy. She reſtor'd the Reformation, 'tis true, but in many Places left little Proviſion to maintain it. She drew back the Patrimony of the Church, reſtor'd by her Siſter Queen Mary, and reach'd ſomewhat unkindly into the Remainder. To give an Inſtance or Two farther of the Depredations during this Reign: The Biſhoprick of Ely, after Cox's Death, was kept Vacant near Twenty Years, and the People almoſt left like Sheep without a Shepherd. 'Tis ſaid, the ejected King of Portugal was ſubſiſted with the Rents: And when the See was fill'd, the next Succeſſor Heaton found moſt of the Manors wreſted from it. (m) Sir John Harrington confeſſes this Kind of Management was reckn'd one of the Blemiſhes of her Reign. The taking away the Biſhop's Lands, and returning the lamentable Exchange of Impropriations was a great Blow to the Church. For not to mention theſe Impropriations were Part of the conſecrated Revenues; not to mention the Exchange, was far ſhort of an Equivalent; not to mention this, the Forcing the Biſhops to ſubſiſt on theſe parochial Endowments, put them out of Capacity of relieving the poor Vicars, which in many Places are very deſpicably provided for. To give ſome modern Proof of this Matter: When White, Biſhop of Peterborough, viſited the Dioceſe of Lincoln in the Reign of King James the IId. Part of this Prelate's Report to his Majeſty was this; That for about Thirty Miles together beyond Lincoln, many of the Livings were worth but Five Pounds per Annum, and none more than Ten. * And to ſet this Matter in a fuller Light, I ſhall give

(m) Harrington's brief View.

* This Account I receiv'd from a Reverend Clergyman, who had it from the Biſhop himſelf.

give the Reader a Computation of the Livings in England, and ſubjoin an Authentick Account of the ſlender Value of moſt of them. (n)

To return; If 'tis ſaid Queen Elizabeth had an Act of Parliament to juſtify her taking away the Biſhops Lands, I grant ſhe had ſo: But then it muſt be conſider'd her Majeſty had ſolemnly ſworn † to maintain the Clergy in their Rights and Privileges: The Difficulty therefore will be to reconcile her paſſing this Bill, with the Coronation-Oath. However, the Knot was cut, and the Scruple maſter'd: And which is more, the Act was driven Home in the Execution. Inſomuch, that Wickham, Biſhop of Wincheſter, had the bold Honeſty to tell the Queen in a Sermon, that if the Temporalties of the Biſhops ſhould ſuffer the next Thirty Years, as much as they had done for Thirty Years laſt paſt, * there would ſcarcely be enough remaining on any See to keep the Cathedral in Repair. (o)

Theſe Things conſider'd, if this Queen's Uſage of the Clergy was compar'd with what they met with in the Reign of Henry the VIIIth. 'tis to be fear'd it might be ſaid, her little Finger was thicker than her Fathers Loins: And that he diſciplin'd them with Whips, but ſhe chaſtis'd them with Scorpions. (p) And as to the Parallel between this Princeſs and her Siſter Queen Mary; may it not be affirm'd, That the one made Martyrs in the Church, and the other Beggars? The one executed the Men, and the other the Eſtates? And therefore, reſerving the Honour of the Reformation to Queen Elizabeth, the Queſtion will be, whether the Reſuming the firſt Fruits and Tenths, putting many of the Vicaridges in this deplorable Condition, and ſettling a Perpetuity of Poverty upon the Church, was not much more prejudicial than Fire and Faggot? Whether deſtroying Biſhopricks is not a much greater Hardſhip than deſtroying Biſhops? Becauſe this Severity affects Succeſſion, and reaches down to future Ages. And laſtly, Whether as the World goes, 'tis not more eaſy to recruit Biſhops, than the Revenues to ſupport them? But this only by Way of Query; And ſo much for Queen Elizabeth's Reign.

AN Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory
OF
CHIEFLY OF ENGLAND.

PART II. BOOK VIII.

Whitgift (John) Archbiſhop of Cant.

April, An. Dom. 1603.

King James I. proclaimed, and comes into England.

James I. K.

UPON the Death of Queen Elizabeth, King James the Sixth of Scotland was proclaim'd in London. And now Sir Charles Piercy, Brother to the Earl of Northumberland, and Thomas Somerſet, Brother to the Earl of Worceſter, were diſpatch'd by the Privy-Council to acquaint his Majeſty with the Queen's Deceaſe, and with what had paſs'd for recognizing his Right. Upon this News the King prepares for his Journey into England, and made a Speech to the People at Edinburgh, who parted with him not without Regret. “He told them, they ſhould find the “Effects of his Government no leſs beneficial “at a Diſtance than when he continued with “them: And ſince his Power was encreas'd, “his Affections ſhould not go leſs.” When he came to Berwick, Toby Mathews, Biſhop of Durham, congratulated his Acceſſion to the Throne in a Sermon. At Burleigh-Houſe, near Stamford, his Majeſty was acquainted with the Death of James Beaton, Archbiſhop of Glaſcow. This Prelate was deſcended of the Houſe of Balfour in Fife, and conſecrated in the Year 1552. When the Scotch Reformation began, he quitted the Country, and carried away all the Manuſcripts and Records of his See, together with the Plate and Ornaments of the Cathedral. He ſettled at Paris. Amongſt other Things of Value, convey'd beyond-Sea by this Archbiſhop, there was a Figure of our Saviour in Gold, and the Twelve Apoſtles in Silver. When the late Queen Mary return'd from France into Scotland, ſhe gave him a publick Character, and order'd him to reſide at the French Court. Under the Regencies he was proclaim'd Rebel, his Eſtate ſeiz'd, and his See diſpos'd of to ſeveral Perſons ſucceſſively. The King, when a Major, reſtor'd him to his Honour and Fortune, and gave him his former Poſt of Ambaſſador in France. Spotſwood gives him the Commendation of a worthy Perſon: That he continued Loyal to the Queen as long as ſhe lived, and was afterwards no leſs true to the King her Son: And that he all along ſerv'd his Country to the Utmoſt of his Power. He left Ten thouſand Crowns for breeding poor Scotchmen to Learning. The Records, Plate, and other Things of Value, carried along with him, he lodg'd in the Hands of the Carthuſians at Paris, with a Clauſe in his Will for reſtoring them when Glaſcow turn'd Catholick. The Puritans omit the Ceremonies of the Church.

In England, thoſe who were Puritanically inclin'd preſuming either upon the King's Favour, or Connivance, began to maim the Church-Service, to forbear the Uſe of the Surplice, and omit the Ceremonies. Theſe Omiſſions they hoped might be acceptable to the King, conſidering his Education, and the Practice of the Scotch

A Proclamation againſt Innovation.

Scotch Kirk: But theſe Men were wide in their Conjectures, and miſcalculated upon his Majeſty's Inclination: For ſoon after his Coming into England a Proclamation was iſſued out, forbidding all Manner of Innovation either in Doctrine or Diſcipline.

But all thoſe affected to Preſbyterianiſm were not thus exceptionably forward. Some diſlik'd theſe Sallies of Zeal, and reſolv'd to manage by a more regular Motion. To this Purpoſe they addreſs'd the King in the Name of certain Miniſters of the Church of England, deſiring Reformation of ſundry Ceremonies and Abuſes. This Addreſs was ſaid to be ſign'd by a Thouſand, and therefore call'd the Millenary Petition, though there wanted ſome Hundreds to compleat the Number. The Petition runs thus:

To the Moſt Chriſtian and Excellent Prince, our Gracious and Dread Sovereign James, by the Grace of God, &c. We the Miniſters of the Church of England that deſire Reformation, wiſh a long, proſperous, and happy Reign over us in this Life, and in the next Everlaſting Salvation.

Moſt Gracious and Dread Sovereign,

The Millenary Petition.

“Seeing it hath pleaſed the Divine Majeſty, to the great Comfort of all good Chriſtians, to advance your Highneſs, according to your juſt Title, to the peaceable Government of this Church and Commonwealth of England: We the Miniſters of the Goſpel in this Land, neither as Factious Men, affecting a popular Parity in the Church, nor as Schiſmaticks, aiming at the Diſſolution of the State Eccleſiaſtical; but as the faithful Servants of Chriſt, and loyal Subjects to your Majeſty, deſiring and longing for the Redreſs of divers Abuſes of the Church, could do no leſs, in our Obedience to God, Service to your Majeſty, Love to his Church than acquaint your Princely Majeſty with our particular Griefs: For, as your Princely Pen writeth, The King, as a good Phyſician, muſt firſt know what Peccant Humours his Patient naturally is moſt ſubject unto, before he can begin his Cure. And although divers of us that ſue for Reformation have formerly, in reſpect of the Times, ſubſcrib'd to the Book, ſome upon Proteſtation, ſome upon Expoſition given them, ſome with Condition, rather than the Church ſhould have been depriv'd of their Labour and Miniſtry: Yet now we, to the Number of more than a Thouſand of your Majeſty's Subjects and Miniſters, all groaning, as under a common Burthen of human Rites and Ceremonies, do, with one joint Conſent, humble our ſelves at your Majeſty's Feet, to be eas'd and reliev'd in this Behalf. Our Humble Suit then unto your Majeſty is, That theſe Offences following, ſome may be remov'd, ſome amended, ſome qualified:

“I. In the Church Service: That the Croſs in Baptiſm, Interrogatories miniſter'd to Infants, Confirmations, as ſuperfluous, may be taken away. Baptiſm not to be miniſter'd by Women, and ſo explain'd The Cap and Surplice not urg'd. That Examination may go before the Communion. That it be miniſter'd with a Sermon. That divers Terms of Prieſts, and Abſolution, and ſome other uſed, with the Ring in Marriage, and other ſuch like in the Book, may be corrected. The Longſomeneſs of Service abridg'd. Church-Songs and Muſick moderated to better Edification. That the Lord's-Day be not prophan'd. The Reſt upon Holidays not ſo ſtrictly urg'd. That there may be an Uniformity of Doctrine preſcrib'd. No Popiſh Opinion to be any more taught, or defended. No Miniſters charg'd to teach their People to bow at the Name of Jeſus. That the Canonical Scriptures only be read in the Church.

“II. Concerning Church Miniſters: That none hereafter be admitted into the Miniſtry, but able and ſufficient Men, and thoſe to preach diligently, and eſpecially upon the Lord's-Day. That ſuch as be already enter'd, and cannot preach, may either be removed, and ſome charitable Courſe taken with them for their Relief; or elſe to be forc'd, according to the Value of their Livings, to maintain Preachers. That Nonreſidency be not permitted. That King Edward's Statute for the Lawfulneſs of Miniſters Marriage be revived. That Miniſters be not urg'd to ſubſcribe, but, according to the Law, to the Articles of Religion, and the King's Supremacy only.

“III. For Church Living and Maintenance: That Biſhops leave their Commendams; ſome holding Prebends, ſome Parſonages, ſome Vicarages, with their Biſhopricks. That double benefic'd Men be not ſuffer'd to hold, ſome two, ſome three Benefices with Cure, and ſome two, three, or four Dignities beſides. That Impropriations annex'd to Biſhopricks and Colleges be demiſ'd only to the Preachers Incumbents for the old Rent. That the Impropriations of Lay-Mens Fees may be charg'd with a ſixth or ſeventh Part of the Worth, to the Maintenance of the Preaching Miniſter.

“IV. For Church Diſcipline: That the Diſcipline and Excommunication may be adminiſter'd according to Chriſt's own Inſtitution; or at leaſt, that Enormities may be redreſs'd: As namely, That Excommunication come not forth under the Name of Lay-Perſons, Chancellors, Officials, &c. That Men be not excommunicated for Trifles and Twelve-penny Matters, that none be excommunicated without Conſent of his Paſtor. That the Officers be not ſuffer'd to extort unreaſonable Fees. That none, having Juriſdiction or Regiſters Places, put out the ſame to Farm. That divers Popiſh Canons (as for Reſtraint of Marriage at certain Times) be revers'd. That the Longſomeneſs of Suits in Eccleſiaſtical Courts (which hang ſome Times two, three, four, five, ſix, or ſeven Years) may be reſtrain'd. That the Oath Ex Officio, whereby Men are forc'd to accuſe themſelves, be more ſparingly uſed. That Licenſes for Marriage, without Banes asked, be more cautiouſly granted.

“Theſe, with ſuch other Abuſes, yet remaining, and practiſ'd in the Church of England, we are able to ſhew not to be agreeable to the Scriptures, if it ſhall pleaſe your Highneſs farther to hear us, or more at large by Writing to be inform'd, or by Conference among the Learned to be reſolv'd. And yet we doubt not, but that, without any farther Proceſs, your Majeſty (of whoſe Chriſtian Judgment we have receiv'd ſo good a Taſte already) is able of your ſelf to judge of the Equity of this Cauſe.

“God, we truſt, hath appointed your Highneſs our Phyſician to heal theſe Diſeaſes. And we ſay with Mordecai to Heſter, Who knoweth whether you are come to the Kingdom for ſuch a Time? Thus your Majeſty ſhall do that which we are perſwaded ſhall be acceptable to God, Honourable to your Majeſty in all ſucceeding Ages, profitable to his Church, which ſhall be thereby encreaſed, comfortable to your Miniſters, which ſhall be no more ſuſpended, ſilenced, diſgraced, impriſon'd, for Mens Traditions; and prejudicial to none but thoſe that ſeek their own Credit, Quiet, and Profit, in the World. Thus, with all dutiful Submiſſion, referring our ſelves to your Majeſty's Pleaſure for your Gracious Anſwer, as God ſhall direct you; We moſt humbly recommend your Highneſs to the Divine Majeſty, whom we beſeech for Chriſt's Sake to diſpoſe your Royal Heart to do herein what ſhall be to his Glory, the Good of his Church, and your endleſs Comfort. (b)

Your Majeſty's moſt Humble Subjects,

The Miniſters of the Goſpel, that deſire not a diſorderly Innovation, but a due and godly Reformation.

(b) Fuller.

And here it may be obſerv'd, that notwithſtanding this Petition makes no expreſs Remonſtrance againſt Epiſcopacy, or ſtated Forms of Prayer, yet the Deſign ſeems laid againſt both: For when ſo many of the Outworks were taken, 'tis not likely the Place could have held out long: When the Branches of a Tree are thus lopp'd, the Body muſt make an odd Figure, and ſuffer of Courſe. To come out of the Allegory, the two Univerſities thought it neceſſary to appear in Defence of the Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitution. To this Purpoſe, an Order paſſed at a Congregation in Cambridge, that whoever oppoſed the Doctrine or Diſcipline of the Church of England, either by Word or Writing, ſhould be ſuſpended from all Degrees already taken, and diſabled from taking any new ones. 'Twas likewiſe reſolv'd to return an Anſwer to the Millenary Petition: But being inform'd the Undertaking was conſiderably advanc'd at Oxford, they reſted the Controverſy with that Univerſity. However, a Letter of Thanks was ſent to Oxford for their Forwardneſs in the Cauſe. This Civility was no more than what was deſerv'd; for ſoon after the Petition was effectually anſwer'd. The King was fully appriz'd of theſe Proceedings, but intended to draw the Cognizance of the Matter to himſelf. The Method he thought fit to pitch upon was a publick Conference. This Way of deciding the Diſpute was propos'd by the Puritan Party in the late Reign: But Queen Elizabeth could not be prevail'd with to grant the Requeſt. She conceived the expoſing Things ſettled to Queſtion and Diſpute would breed Diſorder, and weaken the Force of Government. But King James, either out of a Deſire to ſatiſfy himſelf, or to ſhew his Talent in Arguing and Elocution, was of a different Sentiment, and gave Order for a Conference. And now certain Delegates of each Party receiv'd a Summons to attend his Majeſty at Hampton-Court. Here the Petition was to be diſcuſs'd, and the King's Pleaſure farther known in the Controverſy.

A Conference at Hampton-Court.

The Commiſſioners for the Church were the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, * the Biſhops of London, Durham, Wincheſter, Worceſter, St. David's, Chicheſter, Carliſle, and Peterborough, the Dean of the Chapel, the Deans of Weſtminſter, Chriſtchurch, St. Paul's, Worceſter, Salisbury, Cheſter, and Windſor; to theſe muſt be added Dr. King, Archdeacon of Nottingham, and Dr. Field, afterwards Dean of Glouceſter. All theſe were dreſs'd in the Habits of their reſpective Diſtinctions.

* The Biſhops Names, who aſſiſted for the Church, were, as they ſtand in the Liſt, Whitgift, Bancroft, Mathew, Bilſon, Babington, Rudd, Watſon, Robinſon, Dove. The Deans of Weſtminſter, St. Paul's, Cheſter, and Salisbury, were Andrews, Overall, Barlow, and Bridges. All the Lords of the Privy Council were preſent at the Conference.

On the other Side, the Millenary Petitioners ſent Dr. John Reynolds and Dr. Thomas Sparke of Oxford, Mr. Chadderton and Mr. Knewſtubbs of Cambridge. Theſe Delegates had nothing of the Canonical Habit, but appear'd in Gowns of the Shape of thoſe then commonly worn by Turkey Merchants.

The King open'd the Conference with a Speech to this Effect:

† The King's Speech.

“† He told them 'twas a cuſtomary Practice amongſt all Chriſtian Princes to lead the Way in Religious Affairs, and provide for the Settlement of the Church both with Reference to Belief and Government: Of this he gave Inſtances in the Reigns of King Henry the Eighth, King Edward the Sixth, Queen Mary, and Queen Elizabeth. And in this Reſpect he conceiv'd he was more happy than thoſe Princes; becauſe they thought themſelves oblig'd to alter the Eſtabliſhment: But as for himſelf, he could yet diſcover no Ground for making any Change: That by the Bleſſing of Providence he was brought into the promis'd Land, where Religion was profeſs'd in its Purity; where he ſat amongſt Grave, Learned, and Reverend Men: And that now he was not, as formerly, a King without State and Honour; nor in a Place where Order was baniſh'd, and beardleſs Boys would brave him to his Face. (c)

(c) The Sum and Subſtance of the Conference at Hampton-Court by William Barlow, Doctor in Divinity, and Dean of Cheſter, printed An. Dom. 1604.

“His Majeſty aſſur'd them he did not convene this Aſſembly out of any Deſire of Innovation. He owns the preſent Eccleſiaſtical Government to have been plainly countenanced by Heaven; and that the propagating of Truth and the Publick Repoſe have been conſequent upon it. But ſince the beſt Proviſions are capable of Improvement, and Decay and Corruptions are commonly the Effect of Time; and becauſe ſince his coming into this Kingdom he had received Complaints of many Diſorders, of Diſobedience to the Laws, and falling off to Popery, his Majeſty deſign'd to examine the Complaints, and in caſe they were ſcandalous, to remove the Occaſion; and though they were but trifling, to take Notice of them, and give Cerberus a Sop to keep him quiet.” His Meaning was, That Factious People might have no Pretences to continue their Clamour. And here by the Way we are to obſerve, that at this firſt Day's Conference, none but the Biſhops and Deans abovemention'd, and the Lords of the Council, were admitted into the Preſence. “And now the King acquainted the Biſhops and the reſt, That the Reaſon of his conſulting them by themſelves, was to receive Satiſfaction concerning ſeveral Uſages in the Worſhip and Diſcipline of the Church. Theſe his Majeſty rang'd under three general Heads: The Firſt related to the Book of Common-Prayer. The Second was touching Excommunication in the Eccleſiaſtical Courts. The Third was The firſt Day's Conference.

“ to ſuggeſt a Proviſion of well qualified Miniſters for Ireland.

“ I. As to the Book of Common-Prayer, he required Satisfaction in three Things:

“ Firſt, About Confirmation. 1. He ſcrupled the Term; for if it imported a Confirming of Baptiſm, as if this Sacrament was inſignificant without it, then there was Blaſphemy in the Name. For though the ancient Cuſtom was defenſible, that Infants anſwering by their Godfathers ſhould be examin'd when they came to Years of Diſcretion; that after having own'd the Engagement made for them at the Font, they ſhould be confirm'd with the Biſhop's Bleſſing and Impoſition of Hands; yet his Majeſty abhorr'd the Abuſe of raiſing this Uſage to a Sacrament, and attributing its giving any Force to Baptiſm.

“ The Second Thing he deſir'd to be clear'd was concerning Abſolution. His Majeſty had been inform'd, that this Uſage in the Church of England had ſome Reſemblance with the Pope's Pardons: But in his Opinion, God had given a Commiſſion to abſolve only in two Caſes: The one was General, the other Particular. For the Firſt, All Prayer and Preaching his Majeſty conceiv'd imported an Abſolution. As to the Second, It was to be applied to thoſe who had repented of ſcandalous Crimes; otherwiſe, where the Perſon is neither excommunicated, nor under Penance, there was no Neceſſity of his being abſolv'd.

“ His Majeſty's Third Objection was Private Baptiſm. And here he made a Diſtinction: If it was private with Reference to the Place, he thought it conſiſtent with the Practice of the Primitive Church: But if it related to the Perſon, he diſliked it to the laſt Degree. And upon this Occaſion he expreſſed himſelf with ſome Warmth againſt Women and Laicks adminiſtring this Sacrament.

“ II. The Second general Head was Excommunication. And here his Majeſty propoſed two Things: Firſt, The Matter. Secondly, The Perſon. Firſt, He deſir'd to be ſatisfied as to Matter of Fact, Whether this Cenſure was executed upon light Occaſions, as the Complainants pretend? Secondly, Whether 'twas not too frequently exerted? As to the Perſons, he expected to be reſolv'd, Why Lay-Chancellors and Commiſſaries ſhould exerciſe this ſolemn Part of Eccleſiaſtical Authority? Secondly, Why the Biſhops themſelves did not take in the Aſſiſtance of the Dean and Chapter, or ſome other Clergymen of Character? That the Dignity and Weight of the Cenſure would be better underſtood this Way; and that ſuch an Aſſiſtance in lower Cenſures, and giving of Orders, would be likewiſe ſerviceable.

“ III. The Proviſion for Ireland the King poſtpon'd to a Conſultation after the Conference was ended.

When the King had ended this Introductive Diſcourſe, the Archbiſhop kneeling ſuggeſted to the Audience how bountiful the Providence of God had been to this Kingdom in ſetting ſo Learned and Judicious a Prince at the Helm. After this Prefatory Reſpect, he addreſs'd himſelf to give his Majeſty Satisfaction in the Order propos'd.

Firſt, As to Confirmation, he ſhew'd the Antiquity of it at large; and that it had been all along practis'd in the Church from the Apoſtles Times: That this had been the conſtant Uſage of Chriſtendom, 'till ſome particular Churches had unadviſedly thrown it off of late; and that 'twas a very untrue Suggeſtion, that the Church of England held Baptiſm imperfect without Confirmation. And this he made good by the Rubrick before this Office.

The Biſhop of London * ſeconding the Archbiſhop, affirming that Confirmation had not only the Practice of the Primitive Church, and the Teſtimony of the Fathers for its Defence, (d) but that 'twas over and above an Apoſtolical Inſtitution, and a Part of the Catechiſm expreſly mention'd in the New-Teſtament: (e) That Calvin expounded the Text in the Epiſtle to the Hebrews to this Senſe; and earneſtly wiſh'd the Cuſtom might be reviv'd in thoſe Reform'd Churches which had ſuppreſs'd it. The Biſhop of Carliſle † reinforc'd this Reaſoning, and urg'd the Text with great Learning and Pertinency. The Biſhop of Durham * likewiſe cited St. Matthew to juſtify the Impoſition of Hands upon Children. The Reſult was, That for the clearer Explanation that the Church of England makes Confirmation neither a Sacrament, nor a Corroboration of Baptiſm, it ſhould be referr'd to their Lordſhips whether the Office ſtanding as it did might not be called an Examination with a Confirmation.

The Point of Abſolution came up next. And here the Archbiſhop clear'd the Practice of the Church of England from all Abuſe and Superſtition: For this he appeal'd to the Confeſſion and Abſolution in the Beginning of the Communion-Book. The King peruſing the Book found the Allegation true, and acquieſced. But the Biſhop of London, ſtepping forward, told his Majeſty, That in the Communion-Book there was another particular and perſonal Form of Abſolution preſcrib'd in the Viſitation of the Sick; adding withal, that not only the Confeſſions of Augsburgh, Bohemia, and Saxony, retain'd it, but that Calvin approved ſuch a general Confeſſion and Abſolution as is uſed in the Church of England. The Form being read, the King liked it extreamly, and call'd it an Apoſtolical Ordinance. The Concluſion was, That the Biſhops ſhould conſult whether the Remiſſion of Sins might not be added to the Abſolution-Rubrick for Explanation Sake.

Farther, The Archbiſhop went on to ſpeak concerning Private Baptiſm. He endeavour'd to ſatisfy his Majeſty that the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm by Women and Lay-Perſons was not allow'd by the Church of England; that the Biſhops in their Viſitations cenſur'd this Practice; and that the Words in the Office don't infer any ſuch Latitude. To this the King excepting, cited the Office, and argued that the Words could not be conſtrued to leſs than a Permiſſion for Women and Lay-Perſons to baptize. Here the Biſhop of Worceſter * ſtruck in, and confeſs'd that the Words were ſomewhat ambiguous, and might be ſtrein'd to that Meaning: But by the counter Practice of the Church, by Womens being cenſur'd upon this Score, it ſeems reaſonable to ſuppoſe the Compilers of the Office did not deſign to be ſo underſtood: And yet notwithſtanding couch'd the Form in ambiguous Expreſſions, becauſe otherwiſe perhaps the Book might not have paſs'd in Parliament. (f) The Biſhop of London not ſatisfy'd with this Diſcourſe, replied, That thoſe Learned and Reverend Perſons who drew up the Common-Prayer, had had no Intention to miſlead the People by perplex'd and double-meaning Expreſſions, but really deſign'd a Permiſſion to private Perſons for baptizing in Caſe of Neceſſity: And for this he appeal'd to their Letters, ſome Paſſages of which were then read. This Biſhop proceeded to prove this Permiſſion was agreeable to the Practice of the Primitive Church. To this Purpoſe he urged the Text in the Second of the Acts, where Three thouſand are ſaid to have been baptiz'd in one Day; that it was impoſſible, or at leaſt improbable, that the Apoſtles could adminiſter the Sacrament to ſuch Numbers in ſo ſmall a Time; and that in thoſe early Days of Chriſtianity there were no Biſhops or Prieſts excepting the Apoſtles. He likewiſe cited the Authorities of Tertullian and St. Ambroſe. (g) And here he laid open the Abſurdity and Impiety of the Opinion which ſuppoſes no Neceſſity of Baptiſm.

(g) Tertull. de Baptiſm. Ambroſ. in 4 Cap. Ephes.

To this the King replied, That the Inſtance in the Acts was an extraordinary Caſe; and that to argue from the Practice of a Church in its Beginning, and before 'twas perfectly form'd, to a Church ſettled, and in a flouriſhing Condition, was no good Reaſoning. He went on to maintain the Neceſſity of Baptiſm, and argued that the Text in St. John, Except a Man be born of Water, &c. (h) was meant of the Sacrament of Baptiſm: And that he had defended this Senſe of the Text againſt ſome Miniſters in Scotland. It may ſeem ſtrange to you my Lords, continues the King, That I think you in England give too much to Baptiſm, ſince Fourteen Months ago I argued with my Divines in Scotland for aſcribing too little to that Sacrament; inſomuch that a pert Miniſter ask'd me, If I thought Baptiſm ſo neceſſary, that if it were omitted the Child ſhould be damn'd? I anſwer'd him, No; but if you being called to baptize the Child, though privately, ſhould refuſe to come, I think you ſhall be damn'd. And here the King declar'd ſo far for the Neceſſity of Baptiſm, that when it could be adminiſter'd by the Clergy it ought never to be omitted; but the Laity he conceiv'd ought not to preſume on that Office in any Caſe. And yet, which was ſomewhat particular, he diſapprov'd all Rebaptization, though that Sacrament had been adminiſter'd by private unauthorized Perſons.

(h) John. 3. v. 5.

The Biſhop of Wincheſter * diſcourſing learnedly upon this Subject, affirm'd, That to bar private Perſons baptizing in Caſes of Neceſſity, was to croſs upon all Antiquity: That 'twas a Maxim in Divinity, that the Miniſter was not of the Eſſence of the Sacrament. To this the King anſwer'd, that though the Miniſter was not of the Eſſence of the Sacrament, he was notwithſtanding of the Eſſence of the Right and Lawful Miniſtry of the Sacrament. His Ground was the Words in the Apoſtles Commiſſion, Go ye therefore, and teach all Nations, baptizing them, &c. Upon the whole, 'twas reſolv'd the Biſhops ſhould debate afterwards, whether the Words Curate or Lawful Miniſters might not be inſerted in the Rubrick for Private Baptiſm.

* Bilſon.

The King proceeding to the Point of Excommunication in Inſtances of leſſer Miſbehaviour; demanded Firſt if the Name might not be chang'd, and yet the ſame Cenſure continued: Or Secondly, Whether an equivalent Correction might not be ſubſtituted in lieu of it. The Affirmative of this Motion was unanimouſly aſſented to. An Alteration of this Kind had been often deſir'd in the late Reign; but the Queen was reſolv'd to unſettle nothing, but abide by the firſt Eſtabliſhment. And thus the Reader has the Subſtance Of the firſt Day's Conference.

Jan. 16.

The ſecond Day's Conference.

On the Monday following the four Complainants, Reynolds, Sparkes, Knewſtubbes, and Chadderton, were call'd into the Privy-Chamber, Patrick Galoway, Miniſter of Perth, being likewiſe admitted. For the Church the Biſhops of London and Wincheſter appear'd, together with the Deans and Doctors above-mentioned. The King entring the Room with * Prince Henry, made a ſhort Speech to the ſame Effect with the former: Only in the Cloſe he directed his Diſcourſe to the four Nonconformiſts, commending them for their Modeſty and Learning, and letting them know he was ready to hear what they had to object. Upon this Dr. Reynolds reduc'd his Remonſtrance to four Heads:

“ I. That the Doctrine of the Church might be preſerv'd in its Purity according to God's Word.

“ II. That good Paſtors might be planted in all Churches to preach the ſame.

“ III. That the Church Government might be ſincerely miniſter'd according to God's Word.

“ IV. That the Book of Common-Prayer might be fitted to more Encreaſe of Piety.

1. He requeſted his Majeſty that the Articles of Religion paſs'd in Convocation in the Year 1562, might be explain'd in ſome obſcure Paſſages, and enlarg'd in others. For Inſtance, in the 16th Article 'tis ſaid, After we have received the Holy Ghoſt we may depart from Grace: He deſir'd this Expreſſion might be explain'd to an evident Conſiſtency with the Doctrine of Predeſtination in the Seventeenth Article; and that this, or a reſembling Addition, might be inſerted, Yet neither totally, nor finally. He likewiſe deſir'd that the Nine Orthodoxal Aſſertions, as he call'd them, concluded at Lambeth, might be thrown into the Book of Articles.

Secondly, Whereas 'tis ſaid in the Twenty third Article, “ That 'tis not lawful for any one to take upon him the Office of Preaching or Adminiſtring the Sacraments in the Congregation before he is lawfully called.” Dr. Reynolds excepted to theſe Words [in the Congregation,] as if they implied a Liberty for any Man to perform theſe Functions out of the Congregation, though without the Warrant of a Regular Calling.

3*dly*, He objected an Inconſiſtency between the Twenty fifth Article and the Collects of Confirmation. That the firſt confeſs'd Confirmation, a miſtaken Imitation of the Apoſtles; whereas the ſecond grounded the Practice upon their Example. (i) As if the Biſhop in confirming Children, and laying his Hand on them, could convey the Force of the Apoſtolical Benediction, and confer the viſible Graces of the Holy Ghoſt. He therefore deſir'd the Inconſiſtency might be conſider'd, and the Ground for Confirmation examined.

(i) Acts 8. v. 9.

Here Reynolds was interrupted by the Biſhop of London. This Prelate was ſomewhat diſturb'd to find theſe Men fly off from their friendly Declaration: For it ſeems ſome of them both the Evening before, and the Morning of the Conference, profeſs'd themſelves ready to concur with the Biſhops; and that their Intention was nothing but Unity.

But now he perceiv'd their Buſineſs was to batter the Conſtitution, and diſmantle the Church: And therefore kneeling to the King, he humbly deſired the ancient Canon might be remembred, that Schiſmatici contra Epiſcopos non ſunt audiendi. Secondly, That if any of theſe Four Agents for the Nonconformiſts had ſubſcrib'd the Communion-Book, and yet exhibited a Remonſtrance againſt it, he deſir'd they might be ſet aſide, purſuant to an ancient Council, in which 'tis decreed, That no Man ſhall be allowed to plead againſt his own Act and Subſcription.

Thirdly, He put Reynolds and his Partners in Mind, how much they were oblig'd to his Majeſty's Clemency: That they were indulg'd, a Non obſtante to the Statute of the Firſt of Elizabeth; and ſuffer'd to ſpeak ſo freely againſt the Liturgy and Diſcipline eſtabliſh'd. And laſtly, Since he perceiv'd their Buſineſs was to break the Conſtitution of the Church, he deſired to know what they drove at, and whether they were of Cartwright's Opinion, and that in Ceremonies and Diſcipline we ought to conform to the Turks, rather than the Papiſts: And he was afraid they had ſomething of this Tincture by the Singularity of their Habit. *

The King perceiving the Biſhop of London diſcours'd with ſome Heat, told him that notwithſtanding ſomething offer'd by him might be excus'd, yet he could not help diſliking the reſt: His Majeſty thought the Millenary-Agents Reproaching the Conſtitution of the Church, croſſing upon what they pretended, and defeating the Deſign of the Meeting, might juſtify the Biſhop's Reſentment. But then his Majeſty diſlik'd the giving Dr. Reynolds ſo quick an Interruption, who ought to have had the Liberty of his Method, and gone on his own Length: And that if each Party were ſuffer'd to chop in upon the other, and break their Argument, the Cauſe could never be fairly examin'd, nor the Fort and the Foible diſcover'd. His Majeſty order'd therefore, that either the Dr. ſhould proceed, or that the Biſhop ſhould Anſwer what had been already objected. And that the Memory might not be overburthen'd with Objections, and the Anſwers grow perplex'd and Foreign, 'twas thought fit to reply in the firſt Place to Reynolds's Exceptions.

As to what had been offer'd concerning falling from Grace, the Biſhop of London ſuggeſted that many People grew Libertines by relying too much upon Predeſtination. This Propoſition, If I ſhall be ſaved, I ſhall be ſaved, he called a deſperate Doctrine: That 'twas a Contradiction to orthodox Belief: That in the Points of Predeſtination we ſhould infer rather Aſcendendo, than Deſcendendo: That is, we ſhould conclude our Election from the Regularity of our Lives, rather than reſt our Happineſs upon any abſolute irreſpective Decree: And that if God has ordain'd us to Happineſs, no Habits or Degrees of Wickedneſs can make us miſcarry. From hence the Biſhop went on to acquaint his Majeſty with the Doctrine of the Church of England touching Predeſtination. And here he cited the 17th Article, Part of which runs thus: We muſt receive God's Promiſes in ſuch Wiſe, as they be generally ſet forth to us in Holy Scripture: And in our Doings, the Will of God is to be follow'd, which we have expreſly declar'd unto us in the Word of God. This Part of the Article the King approv'd: And after having diſcours'd upon the Text of St. Paul, Work out your Salvation with Fear and Trembling, he left it to be conſider'd, whether 'twas proper to throw in a ſupplemental Expreſſion for ſatisfying the Doctor's Scruple, by putting in the Word Often, or the like: As thus, We may often depart from Grace. Upon the Whole, his Majeſty wiſh'd the Doctrine of Predeſtination might be handled with great Caution and Reſerve: That unleſs the Matter was diſcreetly manag'd, one of theſe Two bad Conſequences would follow: Either the Omnipotency of God might be queſtion'd, by Impeaching the Doctrine of his eternal Predeſtination, or a deſperate Preſumption encourag'd by Inferring the neceſſary Certainty of ſtanding and perſiſting in Grace.

'Twas anſwer'd, Reynolds's Second Objection was trifling and inſignificant: For by the Doctrine and Practice of the Church of England, none but a licenſed Miniſter was allow'd to preach or adminiſter the Holy Euchariſt: And as for private Baptiſm, the King told the Complainants he had taken Order for that with the Biſhops already.

When they came to the Point of Confirmation, the Article and the Collect being read, the King pronounc'd Reynolds's Pretence of a Contradiction no better than a Cavil.

And the Ground for Confirmation having been demanded, the Biſhop of London, after repeating what had been delivered in the firſt Days Conference added, That the Thing which vexed Reynolds and his Party was, that they had not the Management of this Uſage in their own Hands; And that if every Paſtor was allow'd to confirm his own Pariſh, they would reckon it an apoſtolical Inſtitution: And here he deſired Doctor Reynolds to ſpeak his Mind. The Dr. ſeem'd to aſſent, but in Defence of his Opinion added, that ſince there are Six hundred Pariſhes in ſome Dioceſes, he thought it very Inconvenient to reſerve Confirmation to the Biſhop alone: And that 'twas impracticable for the Dioceſan to examine all thoſe who came to be confirm'd. As to the Matter of Fact, Bancroft anſwer'd, that 'twas the Cuſtom of the Biſhops in their Viſitations to appoint either their Chaplains, or ſome other Miniſters, to examine thoſe who came to be confirm'd: And that they ſeldom confirm'd any, unleſs their Qualifications were certified by their own Parſons or Curates. To the Opinion, his Anſwer was, that none of the Fathers ever admitted any to Confirm, under the Order of Biſhops. And that even St. Jerome (tho' otherwiſe no Friend to the Epiſcopal Superiority) confeſſes the executing this Function was ſolely lodg'd with the Biſhops; tho' with this qualifying Expreſſion, ad Honorem potius Sacerdotii, quam ad legis Neceſſitatem. However, this Father owns the Biſhops ought to have a Power Paramount to the reſt of the Clergy: And that without this Prerogative, the Unity, and well being of the Church, could not ſubſiſt. (k) And here the Biſhop of Wincheſter challeng'd Reynolds to ſhew from Antiquity, that ever any, excepting Biſhops, confirm'd: To this he ſubjoin'd, That this Uſage was partly practis'd to examine Children, and give them the Biſhop's Bleſſing, with Impoſition of Hands; and partly to enquire whether they had been baptiz'd in an Orthodox Form, or not: For ſome of the ancient Hereticks threw their Miſbelief into their Baptiſm. For Inſtance, the Arians baptiz'd in nomine Patris majoris, & Filii minoris. * Some adminiſtred this Sacrament in nomine Patris per per Filium in Spiritu ſancto. † And others omitting the Trinity, baptiz'd in the Death of Chriſt, &c. For theſe Reaſons, the Catholick Biſhops found themſelves oblig'd to examine thoſe who were baptiz'd in diſtant Places. And if they were right in the Article of Baptiſm, they confirm'd them, if not, there was an Opportunity for Inſtruction.

The King concluding this Point, reflected on St. Jerom for affirming Biſhops were not of divine Inſtitution, and cloſed the Remark with this Maxim, No Biſhop, No King. And as for Confirmation, he conceived the permitting it to every Pariſh Prieſt, was neither decent, nor ſuitable to the Solemnity of that Function. However, whether the Word Examination might be added to the Rubrick, was refer'd to the Biſhops, purſuant to what was reſolv'd the Day before. And now his Majeſty order'd Dr. Reynolds to proceed.

This Divine deſiring not to be taken for a Schiſmatick, and proteſting he had no Intention of making any Perſon uneaſy, objected a Defect in penning the Thirty ſeventh Article; where 'tis ſaid, the Biſhop of Rome has no Authority in this Land. This he thought inſufficient without the Addition, nor ought to have any: This odd Scruple made the King and the Lords of the Council laugh: However, That the Dr. might not pretend any Thing overlook'd, the King anſwer'd, Habemus Jure quod habemus: And therefore by ſaying, the Pope had no Authority here, 'tis ſuppos'd he has no Right to any.

This, and other ſlender Exceptions, occaſion'd ſome rallying Diſcourſe: And particularly one of the Council mention'd Butler of Cambridge's Deſcription of a Puritan; a Puritan, ſays this Gentleman, is a Proteſtant frighted out of his Wits. And here the Biſhop of London reminded the King what Monſieur Rognie, the French Ambaſſador had lately declar'd upon the View of our ſolemn Service and Ceremonies; "If the "reform'd Churches in France, ſays this Am"baſſador, had kept on the ſame Advantage of "Order and Decency, I'm confident there "would have been many Thouſand Proteſtants "in that Country, more than there is;" and yet the Engliſh Nonconformiſts ſtumbled at a Grain of Sand, and ſtrein'd at a Gnat, to the Diſgrace and Diſturbance of the whole Church.

After this, Reynolds mov'd, That this Propoſition, the Intention of the Miniſter, is not of the Eſſence of the Sacrament, might be added to the Book of Articles: His Reaſon was, becauſe, as he affirm'd, ſome in England had preach'd this Intention neceſſary. And here he repeated his Requeſt concerning the Lambeth Articles. The King wholly diſapprov'd the firſt Part of the Motion: He thought it very improper to charge the Articles all along with negative Propoſitions. That this Method would ſwell the Book to an unſerviceable Bulk, and confound the Reader. And by Way of Inſtance, took Notice of the Diſadvantage of this Expedient in one Craig, a Scotch Miniſter, who with his diſclaiming Forms of, I renounce and abhor his Deteſtations (meaning the Pope) and Abrenunciations, did ſo amaze and overſet the Underſtandings of the Vulgar, that they deſpair'd of reaching his Inſtructions; and ſo either relaps'd into Popery, or continued in their former Ignorance: Now, ſays the King, if I had been oblig'd to run the Length of this Miniſters Form, I muſt have carried my Faith in my Pocket-Book, for my Head would never have held it. But becauſe you lay ſome Streſs upon Intention, continues his Majeſty, I'll apply it thus, If you come hither with a fair Intention to be farther inform'd, and ſatisfied with reaſonable Anſwers, the Conference will have a good Iſſue; but if your Intention is to ſtand out againſt Argument, and go off with the ſame Sentiments you brought hither, this is a Demonſtration that the Quality of the Intention is very material and eſſential to the preſent Buſineſs.

As to the Lambeth Articles, the King declin'd making any Anſwer, as not being inform'd of the Meaning of them. To acquaint his Majeſty with this Matter, the Biſhop of London, as 'tis probable, ſuggeſted the Occaſion: And that upon the Score of ſome Controverſies in Cambridge, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury ſent for ſeveral Divines of Character, who couch'd their Opinions in Nine Aſſertions: And that theſe were ſent down to Cambridge for ſilencing the Diſpute. To this the King returned, that when ſuch Queſtions happen'd amongſt Scholars, the beſt Method was to determine them in the Univerſities, and not ſtuff the Articles with Theological Concluſions. And farther, That the Puniſhing thoſe who began the Error, and ſtarted falſe Doctrine, was the moſt eligible Expedient. For were the Articles never ſo much multiplied, and guarded, there was no preventing contrary Opinions: For which Way can miſtakes be ſuppreſs'd before they are diſcover'd?

Here the Dean of St. Paul's * kneeling, humbly deſir'd Leave to ſpeak, acquainting his Majeſty that he was particularly concerned in this Matter: That a Controverſy had lately happen'd between himſelf and ſome others in Cambridge, upon an Aſſertion maintain'd by him there. The Propoſition was, That whoever (tho' before juſtified) committed Murther, Adultery, Treaſon, or any other great Crime, was ipſo Facto, obnoxious to the Wrath of God, and in a State of Damnation: That is, they were in this ſad Condition, quoad præſentem Statum, till they recover'd by Repentance. But to this the Dean added, That thoſe who were juſtified according to the Purpoſe of God's Election, tho' they might (and ſometimes actually did) fall into grievous Sins, and by Conſequence, into a preſent State of Wrath and Damnation; yet they never fell totally from Grace, nor finally from Juſtification: But were in Time recover'd by God's Spirit to a lively Faith and Repentance. This Doctrine, the Dean obſerv'd, was oppos'd by ſome People, who held that all Perſons, once truly juſtified, tho' they fell off into the groſſeſt Immorality, continued in a State of Juſtification, even before they repented their Miſcarriage. Nay, tho' Forgetfulneſs or ſudden Death carried them into the other World without Recollection or Reforming, they ſhould nevertheleſs be juſtified and ſaved.

His Majeſty declar'd ſtrongly againſt this Doctrine, and dilating upon the Subject of Predeſtination, affirmed a neceſſary Connexion between true Faith, and good Practice; concluding that Faith without Works, was no better than Hypocriſy: For notwithſtanding Election did not depend on humane Virtue, which is mutable and uncertain, but on God's eternal Decree; yet the Neceſſity of Repentance for known Sins is ſuch, that without this Condition, Remiſſion cannot be expected.

* Overall.

After this, Dr. Reynolds complain'd the Catechiſm in the Common-Prayer was too ſhort: And the Supplemental one drawn up by Nowell, late Dean of St. Paul's, too long for Children to get by Heart: He deſired therefore an uniform Catechiſm might be made for general Uſe.

The King approv'd the Dr.'s Motion, tho' not without Limitation. His Majeſty would have a Catechiſm drawn in the Plaineſt and moſt Comprehenſive affirmative Terms that might be. And here he found Fault with a great Number of ignorant Catechiſms made Uſe of in Scotland. And thus what was fundamental Doctrine in one Congregation, would hardly paſs for Truth in another. He therefore ſuggeſted the obſerving Two Rules: Firſt, That perplex'd and curious Queſtions might be avoided in the rudimental Principles of Chriſtianity. Secondly, That our Agreement with the Papiſts in ſome Points, ſhould not be cenſured as a Mark of Heterodoxy.

Dr. Reynolds going on with his Remonſtrance, took Notice of the Profanation of the Sabbath, and the Contempt of his Majeſty's Proclamation for Reforming that Abuſe: He deſired therefore ſome ſtronger Remedy might be applied: This Motion was unanimouſly agreed to.

The King diſlikes marginal Notes in the Tranſlation of the Bible, and why?

His next Requeſt was for a new Tranſlation of the Bible: For that the Verſions now Extant did not come up to the Meaning and Force of the Original. And of this he gave Three Inſtances; Firſt, Galat. 4. v. 25. the Greek Word συϛοιχεῖ is turn'd bordereth, and that this Tranſlation is wide of the Apoſtle's Senſe: Secondly, Pſalm the Hundred and fifth, v. 28. the Verſion runs, they were not Obedient; whereas the Original ſpeaks a counter Senſe, and ſays, they were not diſobedient: Thirdly, Pſalm the Hundred and ſixth, v. 30. the tranſlated Text ſtands, then ſtood up Phineas and prayed; whereas the Hebrew has it, Phineas executed Judgment: But theſe being old Objections, and already anſwer'd in Print, little Notice was taken of them. Only the Biſhop of London obſerved, That if every Man's Humour was to be pleas'd, there would be no End of Tranſlating. Upon this, the King declaring he never ſaw a good Engliſh Tranſlation of the Bible, tho' he thought that done at Geneva the Worſt; wiſhed that Undertaking might be reſumed: The Method ſuggeſted by his Majeſty was this: He would have the Verſion made by the moſt Eminent in the Univerſities: After this to paſs the Teſt of the Biſhops, and other learned Eccleſiaſticks. Upon this Review it ſhould be laid before the Privy Council, and in the laſt Place ratified by his Majeſty's Authority: And then the whole national Church be oblig'd to make Uſe of this Verſion, and no other. His Majeſty likewiſe threw in a Caution againſt Marginal Notes: His Reaſon for barring this Expoſition, was becauſe the Comment on the Geneva Tranſlation was untrue, ſeditious, and treaſonable. For Inſtance, the marginal Note upon the firſt Chapter of Exodus * allows Diſobedience to Kings: And the Annotation in the ſecond Book of Chronicles † Cenſures Aſab for ſtopping ſhort at the Depoſing his own Mother, and not executing her. To theſe Exceptions againſt the Geneva Verſion, I ſhall add Two more: The Firſt is, their Comment upon the 12th Verſe of the 2d of St. Mathew: Here they tell us, That Promiſe ought not to be kept where God's Honour, and Preaching of his Truth is hindred, or elſe it ought not to be broken. Now what looſe Caſuiſtry is this? What a deſperate Expedient is this to juſtify the Breach of Promiſes and Oaths, of Contracts between Man and Man? How precariouſly muſt private Juſtice and publick Duty ſtand upon this Bottom? What Rebel ever inſulted his Sovereign without this Colour upon the Revolt? What Inſurrections and Confuſions have been rais'd in England, Scotland, and Ireland; in France, the Netherlands, and Germany upon this Pretence!

The Plea for theſe ſcandalous Commotions is commonly this, That God's Honour, and the Preaching of the Truth would be hindred, by good Faith, and paſſive Behaviour. The Geneva Tranſlators next extraordinary Comment, is on the 9th of the Revelations, ver. 3. where the Locuſts that come out of the Smoke, are ſaid to be falſe Teachers, Hereticks, and worldly ſubtle Prelates, with Monks, Fryars, Cardinals, Patriarchs, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Doctors, Batchelors, and Maſters. This is downright Lollardiſm, and looks like a ſtrong Compoſition of Ignorance and Ill-Will. What broad Innuendo's are here upon the Engliſh Clergy, upon the Archbiſhops and Biſhops, upon all thoſe diſtinguiſh'd with Degrees in the Univerſities? Theſe, it ſeems, according to the Skill and Charity of the Genevian Annotators, are Part of the Locuſts that came ſmoaking out of the Bottomleſs Pitt.

To return; the King concluded this Point with this Advice, That Errors in Matter of Faith (ſuppoſing there were any ſuch) ſhould be rectified: But as for Things of Indifferency, the Way would be to explain them to an inoffenſive Senſe. For as Bartolus de regno obſerves, a King with ſome Defects is more Eligible than a Change of Government; ſo the Bearing with ſome Blemiſhes in a Church, is preferable to Innovation. And if theſe are your greateſt Grievances, continues the King, you might have applied to ſome more private Method for Satiſfaction, and not have given me the Trouble of ſuch importunate Complaints.

Seditious Books complain'd of.

Dr. Reynolds went on, and deſired his Majeſty, that ſeditious Books might be ſuppreſs'd, or at leaſt the Reading them reſtrain'd, and permitted only to a few: That the Liberty of publiſhing ſuch Books unſettled young People in the Univerſities, debauch'd their Principles, and ſpread the Infection thro' the Kingdom. And here he inſtanc'd in a Tract, De jure Magiſtratus in Subditos, written by Ficlerus, a Papiſt, and applied againſt the late Queen, in Favour of the Pope, who is ſuppos'd her Superior. The Biſhop of London apprehending an Innuendo againſt himſelf, anſwer'd, there was no ſuch unreſtrain'd Diſperſing of theſe Books, as was complain'd of. And that the Government allowed none to buy them, excepting ſuch as Dr. Reynolds, who was ſuppos'd to read them in Order to Confutation. And beſides, the private Importation of ſuch Books could not always be diſcover'd. And laſtly, he obſerv'd the Author of this Book De jure Magiſtratus, was a great Diſciplinarian: From whence it appear'd what Advantage thoſe People gave the Papiſts, who Mutatis Perſonis, could apply their own Arguments againſt Princes of their Religion.

Here the Lord Secretary Cecil interpos'd, and took Notice that the Liberty of diſperſing Popiſh and ſeditious Pamphlets, had done a great Deal of Miſchief: And eſpecially a Tract called Speculum Tragicum. That, ſays the King, and the Lord H. Howard, is a dangerous Book, both for Matter and Intention. The Lord Chancellor

† 2 Chron. v. 16.

Edgerton diſtinguiſh'd theſe Pamphlets into Latin and Engliſh, and concluded the laſt did moſt Harm. To this the Lord Secretary anſwer'd, That the Biſhop of London, and no Body elſe, had done his utmoſt to ſuppreſs them. Upon this Occaſion the King told Dr. Reynolds, he was a better Collegeman than a Stateſman; for if his Intention was to reflect upon the Biſhop of London, for permitting thoſe Books a free Paſs lately publiſh'd upon the Controverſie between the Secular Prieſts and Jeſuits, he deſir'd him to acquaint his Party, That the Biſhop had been miſreported and injur'd; That his Conduct in this Affair was altogether defenſible; That he did nothing without Warrant from the Privy-Council; and that by this Management a Conteſt was kept up between thoſe Roman Catholicks, and his Majeſty's Title diſcuſs'd to Advantage. The Lord Cecil added, That the publiſhing theſe Books was tolerated, becauſe they confuted the Pretenſions of Spain to this Crown. The Lord Treaſurer obſerv'd, that Dr. Reynolds might have diſcover'd a farther Serviceableneſs in thoſe Books: For that now by the Teſtimony of the Roman Catholick Prieſts themſelves the late Queen and the Government are clear'd of the Imputation of Executing Papiſts purely upon the Score of their Religion; for in theſe Books 'tis plainly confeſs'd by themſelves they were executed for Treaſon.

The Nonconformiſts Agents move for a ſufficient Miniſtry in every Pariſh.

And now Reynolds having gone over his firſt Point relating to Doctrine, went on to the ſecond, and deſir'd every Pariſh might be furniſh'd with Learned Miniſters. The King reply'd, He had already conſulted the Biſhops in this Buſineſs, and found them ready to engage: But that as ſudden Evacuations were dangerous in the Body natural, ſo ſudden Changes were no leſs in the Body Politick; That this Affair could not be preſently adjuſted; That the Univerſities could not furniſh a ſufficient Incumbent for every Pariſh; That his Majeſty was convinc'd there was more Learning than Maintenance in this Kingdom; And that therefore a Fund for Encouragement ought to be provided in the firſt Place. In the mean Time ignorant Miniſters, if young, and no hopes of their Improvement, ought to be removed; if old, their Death ſhould be waited for; And that Jeruſalem could not be built in a Day.

The Biſhop of Wincheſter acquainted the King, That this Inſufficiency of the Clergy was not chargeable upon the Miſconduct of the Biſhops, but partly upon Lay-Patrons who preſented mean Clerks; and partly upon the Indulgence of the Law, which allows very ſlender Qualifications: And if the Biſhop refuſes to admit them upon the Terms of the Conſtitution, a Quare Impedit is preſently iſſued out againſt him.

Here the Biſhop of London addreſs'd his Majeſty kneeling, and humbly deſir'd, That ſince it 'twas a Time for moving Petitions, he might have Leave to put up two or three. Firſt, He requeſted Care might be taken for a Praying Clergy: For notwithſtanding there are many ſerviceable Branches in the Sacerdotal Function, ſuch as abſolving Penitents, praying for the People, pronouncing the Bleſſing, and adminiſtring the Sacraments, 'tis now come to that paſs, that ſome Men conceive the Duty of a Pariſh Prieſt is wholly confin'd to the Pulpit; where, God knows, they ſometimes manage with a very ſlender Share either of Learning or Diſcretion; that Preaching has ſuch an Aſcendant in their Fancy, that the Celebrating Divine Service is ſcandalouſly neglected; That ſome Miniſters choſe rather to walk in the Church-yard till Sermon-time, than join in Publick Prayer. He confeſs'd, that for Miſſionaries in unconverted Countries where a Church was planting, Preaching was moſt neceſſary; but where Chriſtianity had been a long Time ſettled, he thought Pulpit-Harangues were not the only Buſineſs of a Paſtor; and that this Exerciſe ought not to be preſs'd to the Neglect of other Parts of his Office.

This Motion was much approv'd by his Majeſty, who very ſmartly took Notice of the Hypocriſie of the Times, who lodg'd all their Religion in their Ears; that Lazineſs led the People to this Miſtake, and that Hearing being the eaſier Part, they were not willing to undergo the Labour and Preparations requir'd in Devotion.

The Biſhop of London's ſecond Requeſt was, That till Men of Learning and Sufficiency might be procur'd for every Congregation, Godly Homilies might be read, and their Number increas'd; And that thoſe Men who had decryed theſe Inſtructions would retract their Cenſures, and endeavour to bring them into Credit. The Biſhop's Reaſon for recommending the Homilies was, becauſe every Clergyman that could pronounce well, had not a Talent for Compoſing. Both the King and the Millenary Agents thought the Requeſt reaſonable.

The Lord Chancellor objected, That Livings rather wanted Learned Men, than Learned Men Livings: And therefore arguing againſt Pluralities, he wiſh'd ſome might have ſingle Coats, before others had Doublets; and that himſelf had manag'd in this Manner, in beſtowing the Benefices in the King's Gift. To this the Biſhop of London reply'd, I commend your Honourable Care that Way, but a Doublet is neceſſary in cold Weather.

The Biſhop of London's laſt Motion was, That Pulpits might not be turned into Batteries, and every Mal-content allow'd to play his Spleen upon his Superiors from thence. The King receiv'd this Complaint very graciouſly, ſhew'd his Reſentment of that lewd Cuſtom, and threaten'd to make an Example of thoſe that ſhould miſbehave themſelves in that Manner. He concluded with an Admonition to the Plaintiffs, That every Man ſhould ſolicit for Peace; and if any Thing happen'd amiſs in the Church-Officers, not to let fly perſonal Reflections in the Pulpit, but appeal in the firſt Place to the Ordinary, then to the Archbiſhop, from thence to the Lords of the Council; and if all theſe Applications fell ſhort of a Remedy, then to bring the Grievance before his Majeſty himſelf. The King chalk'd out the Method, and threw in theſe Degrees; upon the Biſhop of London's ſuggeſting, that in Caſe he left himſelf open to receive all Complaints at the firſt Inſtance, neither his Majeſty would be quiet, nor his Under-Officers regarded: For the Criminal when preſs'd with Diſcipline, would immediately threaten the carrying his Complaint to the King.

The Objections againſt the Common Prayer and Subſcription.

Dr. Reynolds came now to his Fourth General Head relating to the Common Prayer; though here he leap'd over the third, and broke through his own Order: And here he complains of the preſſing Subſcription, That this Impoſition was a great Hinderance to a Learned Miniſtry, and therefore deſires it may not be requir'd as formerly; That this Rigour had kept a great many good Men out of Buſineſs, who notwithſtanding were not unwilling to ſubſcribe the Articles of Religion, and the King's Supremacy, purſuant to the Statutes. But the Reaſon of their Backwardneſs againſt ſubſcribing without Exceptions was, becauſe the Common Prayer injoins the Reading the Apocrypha in the Church; notwithſtanding ſome Chapters in thoſe Books deliver apparent Errors, and Contradictions to Canonical Scripture. For Inſtance, Eccleſ. 48. v. 10. Elias in Perſon is ſaid to come before Chriſt; whereas in the New Teſtament this Fore-runner of our Saviour was only to be Elias in Repreſentation, or Reſemblance of Character, that is, John the Baptiſt. (l)

To this the Anſwer was, firſt, That this Cenſure of the Apocryphal Books, were old Exceptions of the Jews reviv'd by St. Jerome, who was the firſt that called them Apocrypha; and that upon Ruffinus's Challenge, he in ſome Meaſure renounc'd his Opinion.

And here the Biſhop of Wincheſter ſuggeſted St Jerome's Diſtinction, That theſe Books were Canonici ad informandos Mores, non ad confirmandam Fidem. This Diſtinction he ſaid muſt be maintain'd, unleſs we would drop ſeveral Councils. The King, to cut the Controverſy even between both Parties, declar'd his Diſlike of reading all the Apocryphal Books in the Church, or any Chapter containing erroneous Doctrine; and then order'd Dr. Reynolds to mark the offenſive Paſſages, and bring them to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury againſt the next Wedneſday. *

The King retiring into an inward Chamber, and finding at his Return the Lords of the Council and others canvaſſing the Text of Eccleſiaſticus, and inſiſting ſtrongly upon the Objection, called for the Book, made a ſhort Comment upon the Chapter, and proved the Author's Senſe miſtaken by Dr. Reynolds.

Theſe Nonconformiſts next Scruple againſt Subſcription was, becauſe 'tis twice inſerted in the Common Prayer Book, * Jeſus ſaid to his Diſciples; whereas 'tis plain by the Original he ſpoke to the Phariſees. The King's Determination was, That the Word Diſciples ſhould be omitted, and Jeſus ſaid, be printed in a different Letter, that theſe Words might appear to be no Part of the Text.

The third Objection againſt Subſcription were the Interrogatories in Baptiſm: And here Mr. Knewſtubbs urged from St. Auſtin, That Baptizare was Credere: But his Diſcourſe was ſo perplex'd, that the Audience could not collect his Meaning. However, the Biſhop of Wincheſter gueſſing what he drove at, clear'd St. Auſtin's Citation, and wreſted the Advantage of it from Knewſtubbs. This was done by quoting an Explanatory Paſſage of St. Auſtin's Aſſertion: The Words are theſe; Qui peccavit in altero, credat in altero. The King ſeconded the Biſhop of Wincheſter in the Defence of the Interrogatories, and argued firſt, That the Queſtion ought to be put to the Party principally concern'd in the Sacrament. Secondly, He brought a reſembling Precedent at his Coronation in Scotland, where notwithſtanding his Infancy, Interrogatories were uſed in the Solemnity.

Mr. Knewſtubbs next Exceptions were at the Croſs in Baptiſm. Firſt. The weak Brethren he alledg'd, were offended at this Uſage; and that giving ſuch Offence ought to be avoided by the Apoſtles Doctrine. (m)

To this the King began his Anſwer with that General Rule of the Fathers; Diſtingue tempora, & concordabunt Scripturæ: That there was a great Difference between the preſent State of the Church, and that in St. Paul's Time; That then Chriſtianity was newly emerg'd out of Paganiſm, and not thoroughly ſettled, and therefore requir'd a different Conduct. Secondly, He ask'd them, How long they intended to be weak? And whether Five and forty Years was not long enough for them to get Strength in? Thirdly, He deſir'd to know who they were that pretended this Weakneſs? For, ſays he, we don't require Subſcriptions from Laicks and Idiots: This Teſt is only put to the Clergy; and theſe, I hope, are not to be dieted with Milk, but in a Condition to feed others. Fourthly, 'Twas to be fear'd, continues the King, that ſome of them were ſtrong enough, if not Headſtrong; and how much ſoever they might plead their Weakneſs upon this Occaſion, yet ſeveral of thoſe now repreſented, thought themſelves able to inſtruct him, and all the Biſhops in the Kingdom.

Mr. Knewſtubbs next Objection againſt the Croſs was put into Three Queſtions. 1. He deſir'd to know whether the Church had a Power to inſtitute an external ſignificant Sign? To this was anſwer'd, Firſt, That he miſtook the Uſe of the Croſs; and that the Church of England us'd it in Baptiſm no otherwiſe than a Ceremony.

Secondly, The Nonconformiſts Precedent was urg'd to diſable their Queſtion: For in Ordaining their Paſtors, they uſe Impoſition of Hands, and that upon the Score of its being a ſignificant Sign.

Thirdly, The Biſhop of Wincheſter argued, That Kneeling, lifting up the Hands, and ſtriking the Breaſt, in Prayer, are all warrantable, and yet ſignificant Geſtures.

Laſtly, The Dean of the Chappel * urg'd, That the Jews, as the Rabbins write, had added both Signs and Words to the Inſtitution of the Paſſover: For Inſtance; When they eat the ſour Herbs preſcrib'd by Moſes, they did it with this Expreſſion, Take, and eat theſe in Remembrance, &c. And when they drank the Wine, 'twas with this Form of their own Invention, Drink this in Remembrance, &c. And upon theſe Supplemental Ceremonies our Saviour inſtituted the Holy Euchariſt: And by his Approbation of this Practice in the Jews, it follows, the inſtituting a ſignificant Sign is within the Power of the Church. With theſe Anſwers the King was fully ſatisfied.

And here his Majeſty deſir'd to be inform'd concerning the Antiquity of the Uſe of the Croſs. Dr. Reynolds confeſs'd this Cuſtom would reach to the Apoſtles Times; but the Difficulty was to prove it ſo anciently us'd in Baptiſm: This Scruple was thrown in by the Dean of Sarum: * But the Matter was ſufficiently clear'd by the Dean of Weſtminſter *, who proved from Tertullian, Origen, St. Cyprian, and others, That the Croſs was uſed in immortali Lavacro. And here the Biſhop of Wincheſter, as the Publiſher of the Controverſie ſuppoſeth, argued, That the Croſs was us'd in Baptiſm in the Reign of Conſtantine the Great. “And is it come to that paſs, ſays “the King, that we muſt charge Conſtantine “with Superſtition and Popery? If it was us'd “ſo early, I ſee no Reaſon why it may not be “continued.

Mr. Knewſtubbs ſecond Queſtion was, That granting the Church's Authority reach'd to the Impoſing ſignificant Signs, Whether this Power might be us'd where our Saviour had ordain'd one already? In this Caſe all Additionals are no leſs Derogatory to our Saviour's Inſtitution than if a Subject ſhould preſume to fix his own Seal to an Inſtrument ſign'd by the Broad Seal of England.

land. To this the King anſwer'd, There was a Diſparity in the Caſe: For the Sacrament of Baptiſm was altogether compleated before they came to the Ceremony of the Croſs.

'Twas objected in the laſt Place, That ſuppoſing the Power above-mention'd lodg'd in the Church, the Difficulty was, how far this Power might bind the Conſcience without Encroachment upon Chriſtian Liberty? The King ſomewhat diſturb'd at this Queſtion, told Knewſtubbs, Le Roy ſ'aviſera: That he thought the Scruple had a ſtrong Tincture of Anabaptiſm; That 'twas like one Black's Reaſoning, a young Scotch Miniſter, who at a late publick Conference told the King, That he would conform to his Majeſty's Settlement in Points of Doctrine; but as for Matters of Ceremony, they were to be left to every Man's Liberty. But, continues the King, I'll have none of that; I'll have one Doctrine, one Diſcipline, one Religion both in Subſtance and Ceremony; and therefore I charge you never ſpeak more to that Point, how far you are to obey the Orders of the Church.

Dr. Reynolds objected the Inſtance of the Brazen Serpent beaten to Powder by Hezekiah, becauſe it had been abus'd to Idolatry. By Parity of Reaſoning he conceiv'd the Uſe of the Croſs ſhould be ſuppreſs'd, becauſe it had been carry'd to a ſuperſtitious Exceſs in Times of Popery. The Subſtance of the King's Anſwer was, "That the Objection they reſted upon, made againſt them: For the ſuperſtitious Abuſe of it in Times of Popery, ſuppoſing it true, is an Argument 'twas commendably uſed in the Ages prior to Popery. I have lived, continues the King, amongſt theſe Men ever ſince I was Ten Years old, and nothing has given me a ſtronger Averſion for their Syſtem, than their peremptory diſapproving every Thing us'd by the Papiſts: This Way of Reaſoning I deteſt. For my Part, continues the King, I I know no Way of avoiding the Charge of Novelty objected by the Papiſts, but by anſwering, that we retain the Primitive Uſe of Things, and only ſtand off from the Innovations brought in by themſelves: But Dr. Reynolds's Argument would bring us to renounce the Trinity, and many other Fundamental Points of Belief, becauſe they are common to us and the Papiſts. Dr. Reynolds, ſays the King, with an Air of Pleaſantry, they us'd to wear Shoes and Stockings in Times of Popery, have you therefore a Mind to go Bare-foot? Secondly, The King deſir'd to know what Reſemblance there was between the Brazen Serpent a material viſible Thing, and the Sign of the Croſs made in the Air? Thirdly, He was inform'd by the Biſhops, and found their Account true, That the Papiſts themſelves never attributed any Spiritual Grace to the Sign of the Croſs in Baptiſm. And laſtly, That material Croſſes worſhipped by the People in Times of Popery, were already demoliſh'd.

The next Scruple was the wearing of the Surplice: This, as 'twas pretended, was a Habit worn by the Prieſts of Iſis. This Objection the King ſaid, was ſomewhat new, becauſe 'twas uſually called a Rag of Popery. But granting the Suppoſition, we do not live now amongſt Heathen Neighbours, and therefore there was no Danger of reviving Paganiſm. Farther, Since 'twas evident from Antiquity, that the Clergy officiated in a different Habit, and particularly in White Linen, he ſaw no Reaſon why it might not be ſtill continued in this Church; laying down this admirable Rule, That no Society of Chriſtians ought to ſeparate farther from the Church of Rome, either in Doctrine or Ceremonies, than ſhe had departed from her ſelf, and her own Primitive Condition.

Dr. Reynolds excepted at thoſe Words in the Office of Matrimony; With my Body I thee Worſhip. The King peruſing the Place, ſaid, He was made to believe this Phraſe imported no leſs than Divine Worſhip; but upon Enquiry he found the Words ſink to a much lower and inoffenſive Senſe: A Gentleman of Worſhip being a cuſtomary Expreſſion with the Engliſh; and thus it agrees with the Apoſtles Precept of giving Honour to the Wife, &c.

The Dean of Sarum took Notice the Ring in Marriage was ſcrupled by ſome People, but this was approv'd by Reynolds; and the King thought they could ſcarcely be well married without it.

Dr. Reynolds objected againſt the Churching Women by the Name of Purification; but this Scruple was over-ruled by his Majeſty, and eaſily drop'd, as far as it appears.

Under the Fourth General Head touching Diſcipline, Dr. Reynolds objected againſt lodging Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures in the Hands of Lay-Chancellors; That this Cuſtom had been condemn'd by the Biſhops themſelves. For by the Canons made in the Year 1571. 'tis decreed, That Lay-Chancellors ſhould not excommunicate in Matters of Correction. And in the Years 1584, and 1589. they are barr'd the Exerciſe of this Diſcipline in Matters of Inſtance: And that ſuch Cenſures are only to be exerted by thoſe who have the Power of the Keys. To this the King anſwer'd, He had already diſcours'd this Matter with the Biſhops, and that convenient Orders ſhould be taken about it. And now Reynolds being commanded to proceed to ſomething New, deſir'd, that according to certain Provincial Conſtitutions, the Clergy might have Meetings once in three Weeks.

Firſt, In Rural Deanries to have the Liberty of Propheſying, purſuant to Archbiſhop Grindal, and other Biſhops Requeſts, to her late Majeſty.

Secondly, That thoſe Things which could not be reſolv'd there, might be referr'd to the Arch-Deacon's Viſitation.

And, thirdly, from thence to the Dioceſan-Synod, where the Biſhop with his Presbytery, ſhould determine ſuch Points as prov'd too difficult for the other Meetings.

The King miſtaking the Drift of this Diſcourſe, appear'd ſomewhat concern'd; he thought they aim'd at a Scotch Presbytery, which, ſays he, agrees as well with Monarchy as God and the Devil. Then Jack, and Tom, and Will, and Dick ſhall meet, and at their Pleaſures cenſure me and my Council, and all our Proceedings: Then Will ſhall ſtand up and ſay, It muſt be thus: Then Dick ſhall reply, and ſay, Nay marry, but we will have it thus. And therefore here I muſt once reiterate my former Speech, Le Roy ſ'aviſera: Stay, I pray you, for one Seven Years before you demand that of me; and if then you find me purſy and fat, and my Wind-Pipes ſtuff'd, I will perhaps hearken to you: For let that Government be once up, I am ſure I ſhall be kept in Breath; then ſhall we all of us have Work enough, both our Hands full. But, Dr. Reynolds, till you find that I grow lazy, let that alone.

After this the King reminded Dr. Reynolds, that he had ſeveral Times argu'd for his Supre- macy, which his Majeſty lik'd well, and then put this Queſtion to him, Whether he knew any Perſons at the Conference or elſewhere, who approving the preſent Eccleſiaſtical Government, diſlik'd the Regale? Dr. Reynolds anſwer'd, No. Why then, ſays the King, I'll tell you a Story: When the Reformation in England was overturn'd by Queen Mary, we found the Effect of it in Scotland; for then Knox, in a Letter to the Queen Regent, (a virtuous and moderate Lady) told her, She was Supreme Head of the Church, and charg'd her as ſhe would anſwer it before God's Tribunal, to take Care of Chriſt's Evangel, and of ſuppreſſing the Popiſh Prelates who withſtood the ſame. “But how long, think you, continues the King, “did he hold this Opinion? Why, till by her “Authority the Popiſh Biſhops were diſabled, “till himſelf and his Adherents were ſettled “and grown ſtrong enough to work by themſelves: For when they found themſelves “in the Seat, and big enough to manage the “Conteſt, they deſerted from her Supremacy, “undertook the Buſineſs without her; and pretending new Degrees of Illumination, reform'd “farther at Diſcretion. How they us'd that “poor Lady, my Mother is well known, and “lies uneaſie in my Memory. This Princeſs “only deſir'd a private Chapel for her ſelf and “a few of her Family, to ſerve God in the Way “of her Education: But her Supremacy, it ſeems, “was not conſiderable enough to procure this “Liberty. And how they treated me in my “Minority, you all know. Then putting his Hand to his Hat; My Lords the Biſhops, ſays his Majeſty, I may thank you that theſe Men plead thus ſtrongly for my Supremacy: They think they can't make their Party good againſt you, but by appealing to the Regale; as if you, or ſome of your Friends were diſaffected to it. But if once you are out, and they in Place, I know what would become of my Supremacy: For No Biſhop, No King, as I ſaid before. And after having asked them, whether they had any Thing more to object, and Dr. Reynolds anſwering, No; the King appointed the next Wedneſday following for the Conference: And riſing from his Chair, ſays he, If this be all they have to ſay, I'll make them conform, or I'll Harry them out of this Land, or elſe do worſe. And this is the Sum of the ſecond Day's Conference. The King was extremely admir'd by the Lords for the Quickneſs of his Apprehenſion, his Skill in Controverſie, and his Dexterity in Diſintangling Difficulties. One of them ſaid, His Majeſty ſpoke by the Inſtinct of the Spirit of God. The Lord Chancellor, as he went out, told the Dean of Cheſter, He had often heard, that Rex eſt mixta Perſona cum Sacerdote, That a King is Part of a Parſon; but that he never ſaw an Inſtance of the Truth of that Aſſertion till now.

The third Days Conference.

Upon Wedneſday all the Biſhops and Deans abovemention'd attending at the Court, were called into the Privy-Chamber: And ſince the High Commiſſion was to be the Subject of this Day's Debate, the Civilians following were admitted, viz. Sir Daniel Dunne, Sir Thomas Crumpton, Sir Richard Swale, Sir John Bennet, and Dr. Drury.

James I. K.

As to the High Commiſſion, the King took Notice of his being inform'd, that the Perſons authoriz'd were too many and too mean: That the Matters they took Cognizance of, were of too ſlender a Conſideration, and ſuch as the Ordinaries might manage in their own Courts: And that the Branches of this Authority granted out to Dioceſans were too large. To all theſe Objections the Archbiſhop of Canterbury return'd a ſatisfactory Anſwer; which in Regard the High Commiſſion'd Court is put down, I ſhall forbear to mention. One of the Lords of the Council complain'd on Behalf of the Nonconformiſts, That Men were preſs'd to ſubſcribe more than the Law requir'd; and that by the Oath ex Officio they were forc'd to accuſe themſelves.

As to the three Articles formerly mention'd, which the Clergy were oblig'd to ſubſcribe, the King having read them, dilated upon the Subject, and ſhew'd how neceſſary this Expedient was for preſerving Peace: That ſince the Biſhop was to anſwer for every Clerk in his Dioceſe, 'twas reaſonable he ſhould know the Sentiments of thoſe he admits. Now the beſt Way to underſtand the Inclinations of his Clergy, and prevent Faction, was to offer them the Teſt of Subſcribing at their firſt Entrance. And laſtly, That the Temper of People, whether they were like to prove peaceable or turbulent, might be diſcover'd by this Trial.

As to the Exception of the Oath ex Officio, the Archbiſhop reply'd, The Proceedings were not ſo rigorous as were pretended: For if any Article touch'd Life, Liberty, or Scandal, the Party was not bound to anſwer to ſuch Interrogatories, neither was it the Cuſtom to preſs him to ſuch a Diſcovery. The Lord Chancellor and the Lord Treaſurer ſeconded the Archbiſhop in Defence of the Oath ex Officio, and pleaded both the Uſe and Neceſſity of it in ſeveral Courts and Caſes. After this the King undertaking the Argument, obſerv'd, That whereas Temporal Courts took Notice only of Matters of Fact, but in Courts Eccleſiaſtical 'twas requiſite to make Uſe of Methods of Prevention, and look into Fame and Scandal. And here the King went through all the Circumſtances of the Subject, gave a Deſcription of the Oath ex Officio, laid down the Ground upon which it ſtood, and juſtify'd the Wiſdom of the Conſtitution. After this he diſcours'd upon the Manner of Proceeding, and the ſerviceable Conſequences of ſuch a Proviſion; and all with ſo much Method, Brevity, and Strength, that the Lords, and all the Audience were exceedingly ſurpriz'd; inſomuch that the Civilians declar'd, that they could not with many Hours Preparation have handled the Argument ſo much to Advantage.

After this the King, the Biſhops, and the Temporal Lords held ſome Diſcourſe touching the Quality of Perſons, and Cauſes in the High Commiſſion, taking off the Charge of the Writ De Excommunicato capiendo, puniſhing Recuſants, furniſhing Ireland, Wales, and the Northern Borders with Preachers. And laſtly, the providing a ſufficient Maintenance for the Clergy, and ſettling a Learned Incumbent in every Pariſh, was farther debated. And to make theſe Things practicable and eaſie, the King order'd a Committee of the Biſhops and Privy-Council to conſult upon Ways and Means.

After this the King order'd Dr. Reynolds, and the other three Agents to be call'd in: And now the few Alterations, or rather Explanations of the Common Prayer agreed by the King and the Biſhops, were read to them. Thoſe mention'd by the Dean of Cheſter, who publiſh'd the Conference, are as follow. 1ſt. In the Rubrick of Abſolution, Remiſſion of Sins is added. 2dly. Whereas 'twas ſaid in the Rubrick for Private Baptiſm, Firſt, Let them that be preſent, &c. 'Tis now alter'd thus, Firſt, Let the lawful Miniſter, and them that be preſent, &c. 3dly. Examination is added, as Doctor Barlow obſerves, to the Title of Confirmation. This Difference in the two Books ſtands thus: That printed in Queen Elizabeth's Time has only theſe Words; Confirmation; wherein is contain'd a Catechiſm for Children. The other of King James's Reign is ſomewhat larger, the Rubrick begins thus; The Order of Confirmation, or Laying on of Hands upon Children baptized, and able to render an Account of their Faith, according to the Catechiſm following. Fourthly, Jeſus ſaid to them, to be put twice in the Dominical Goſpel, inſtead of, Jeſus ſaid to his Diſciples. Farther, the King turning to the Office of Private Baptiſm, ſuggeſted, that where the Words ſtood, *They baptiz'd not Children, it ſhould be read, They cauſ'd not Children to be baptiz'd. And in the ſame Paragraph of the Rubrick, inſtead of, Then they miniſtred, ſhould be put, The Curate, or lawful Miniſter preſent ſhall do it on this Faſhion. To theſe Explanations Reynolds and the other Agents for the Nonconformiſts aſſented, ſeem'd ſatisfy'd with the Reſult of the Conference, and promis'd to regard the Biſhops as their Spiritual Fathers, and perform all Duty to them.

The Agents for the Nonconformiſts acquieſce, and promiſe Obedience.

Beſides the few Alterations already related by Dr. Barlow, there is Mention of ſome others in the Paper-Office, which I ſhall give the Reader in the Records. But notwithſtanding this Review is ſaid to be made by the King, the Biſhops, and the Lords of the Council, 'tis plain all theſe Heads were either not carried to the laſt Digeſtion, or elſe recall'd afterwards; for every Thing ſet down there was not put in Practice. (n) But then there were ſome Thankſgivings added at the End of the Litany, and ſome Queſtions and Anſwers in the Cloſe of the Catechiſm.

Some Alterations, or rather Explanations made in the Rubrick, &c.

(n) See Records Num. C.

The Thankſgivings added, are for Rain, for Fair Weather, for Plenty, for Peace and Victory, and for Deliverance from the Plague. The Additions in the Catechiſm take in all the Queſtions and Anſwers touching the *Sacraments.

* Idem.

But here it muſt not be forgotten, Mr. Chadderton requeſted the wearing the Surplice, and the Croſs in Baptiſm might not be urg'd on ſome godly Miniſters in Lancaſhire; and particularly he begg'd this Indulgence for the Vicar of Ratſdale. The Archbiſhop of Canterbury reply'd, he could not have moved for a more unluckly Man; for not many Years ſince a Complaint was made good againſt him, that by his irreverent Adminiſtration of the Holy Euchariſt, he gave the People an Averſion to Receiving, and coming to Church.* And for the Truth of this the Archbiſhop appealed to the Lord Chancellor then preſent, who atteſted it.

* This Vicar put the conſecrated Bread in a Basket, handed it to all the Communicants, who every one took out a Piece for themſelves.

To Chadderton's Requeſt the King anſwer'd, That 'twas neither his Intention nor the Biſhops to come to any ſudden Rigors, or preſs Conformity in theſe Points, till Admonitions and Argument had been try'd upon them. And therefore his Majeſty conſented the Biſhop of the Dioceſe ſhould aſſign them a Time within which Conformity would be expected. Mr. Knewſtubbs deſir'd the ſame Favour of Forbearance for ſome honeſt Miniſters in Suffolk: His Reaſon was, That their Reputation would ſuffer in the Country, if the Surplice and Croſs in Baptiſm was forc'd upon them. Here the Archbiſhop of Canterbury beginning to anſwer, the King ſtop'd him, and undertook Knewſtubbs: He told this Agent he had ſhewn himſelf an uncharitable Perſon. "We have taken Pains here, ſays the King, and "at laſt concluded in a Reſolution for Uniformity, and you, forſooth, muſt prefer the "Credit of a few private Men to the Peace of "the Church. This is juſt the Scotch Argument. "For when any Thing was there ſettled which "croſs'd upon ſome Peoples Fancies, the only "Reaſon why they refus'd Submiſſion was, becauſe it would not conſiſt with their Credit "to change their Opinion. I'll have none of this "arguing; and therefore let them either conform, "and that quickly too, or they ſhall hear of it." In ſhort, the Millenary Agents promis'd to acquieſce and obey. And now the King clos'd the Conference with a very affecting Diſcourſe.

Notwithſtanding the Nonconformiſts came off with this Diſadvantage, they gave out the News of their having gain'd an abſolute Victory: For the Purpoſe, that the King gratify'd Dr. Reynolds in every Thing deſir'd: That theſe Conceſſions were but the Beginnings of Reformation, and that greater Things were expected: That the Biſhop of Wincheſter was ſilent upon the Matter: That the Biſhop of London call'd Dr. Reynolds Schiſmatick, but ſaid little to the Purpoſe: That the King treated the Biſhops ruggedly, but was kind and careſſing to Doctor Reynolds: That the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and Biſhop of London kneeling to the King, entreated his Majeſty to take their Cauſe into his own Hands, and put ſuch an End to it as might not diſoblige their Reputation.

The Conference miſrelated by the Nonconformiſts.

This, and a great deal more of Miſrepreſentation they diſpers'd in Pamphlets to keep up the Spirit of their Party. Two of theſe Libels coming to the Hands of Dr. Barlow, were publiſh'd by him at the End of the Conference. (o)

(o) Phœnix, p. 178.

Some conſiderable Time after the Doctor's Death, he was charg'd in Print by ſome Puritans with miſreporting Matter of Fact: But that this is no better than downright Calumny may appear from the King's Proclamation iſſued out in the Beginning of March this Year. His Majeſty ſets forth, "That ſome of thoſe who miſliked "the State of Religion here eſtabliſh'd, tranſported with Humour, began ſuch Proceedings, "as did rather raiſe a Scandal in the Church, than "take Offence away: That they both uſed Forms "of publick ſerving God not here allow'd, "held Aſſemblies without Authority, and did "other Things carrying a very apparent Shew "of Sedition more than of Zeal:—That the Succeſs of the Conference was ſuch, which happens "to many other Things which give great Expectation before they are cloſely examin'd: "That he found ſtrong Remonſtrances ſupported with ſuch ſlender Proofs, that both "himſelf and his Council perceiv'd there was no "Ground for any Change in thoſe Things "which were moſt loudly clamour'd againſt: "That the Book of Common Prayer, and the "Doctrine of the eſtabliſh'd Church were both "unexceptionable. And as to the Rights and "Ceremonies, they had the Practice of the "Primitive Church to plead in their Defence. And laſtly, That notwithſtanding "with the Conſent of the Biſhops and other Learned Men, ſome Paſſages were rather explain'd than alter'd, yet with a reaſonable Conſtruction every Thing might very "well have ſtood in its former Condition. And this may ſerve to do Juſtice to Dr. Barlow's Memory, who was never challeng'd with Miſrecital till after his Death.

The King's Proclamation relating to the Conference.

To go on with the Proclamation: "The "King proceeds to acquaint the Subject with "the Methods he had taken for explaining and "printing the Common Prayer, not doubting but "all his Subjects, both Clergy and Laity, would “ receive it with due Regard and Conformity. That notwithſtanding this favourable Opinion his Majeſty conceiv'd it neceſſary to publiſh his Authorizing the Book. And by this his Proclamation requires and enjoins all Men as well Eccleſiaſtical as Temporal, to conform to it, as being the only publick Form of ſerving God eſtabliſh'd and allow'd in this Realm.” And here his Majeſty takes Notice, “ That all the Learned Men preſent at the Conference, as well the Biſhops as others, promis'd their Conformity, only requeſting that ſome few might be born with for a Time.” * Then follows, “ A ſtrict Command to all Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and all other publick Miniſters, as well Eccleſiaſtical as Civil, to ſee the Proclamation executed, and to puniſh all Offenders purſuant to the Laws of the Realm. And laſtly, He admoniſhes all his Subjects, of what Rank ſoever, not to expect any Alteration in the Publick Service; and that he would give no Perſons any Occaſion to preſume his Reſolution, ſo maturely ſettled, could be remov'd by any frivolous Suggeſtions; neither was he ignorant how much a Government muſt ſuffer by admitting Innovation, and going off from Things ſettled upon a thorough Debate. And yet ſuch is the Deſultory Levity of ſome People, that they are always languiſhing after Change and Novelty; inſomuch that were they humour'd in their Inconſtancy, they would expoſe the publick Management, and make the Adminiſtration ridiculous.

Archbiſhop Whitgift's Death and Character.

On the 19th of March the Parliament met at Weſtminſter. Some Time before the Seſſion Archbiſhop Whitgift appointed a Meeting at the Biſhop of London's Houſe at Fulham. The Buſineſs was to diſcourſe ſome of the Biſhops and Judges of his Court, what was proper to be mov'd in either of the Houſes with Reference to the Church. The Archbiſhop going by Water got a great Cold: This Accident occaſion'd a dead Palſy. The King hearing of his Sickneſs, made him a Viſit at Lambeth, and expreſs'd his Eſteem in a very remarkable Manner. He died the laſt of February this Year. This Prelate was deſcended of an ancient Family ſeated at Whitgift in Yorkſhire. His Grandfather was John Whitgift, Gentleman. His Father, Henry Whitgift, was bred a Merchant at Great-Grimsby in Lincolnſhire. Here the Archbiſhop was born in the Year 1530. He was firſt inſtructed by his Uncle Robert Whitgift, Abbot of Wellow in Lincolnſhire. From hence he remov'd to London, and from thence to Pembroke-Hall in Cambridge, where he was Fellow. He commenc'd Doctor in Divinity in the Year 1569. He was afterwards Maſter of Pembroke-Hall, and Margaret, and Queen's Profeſſor: And being a Celebrated Preacher, he was ſent for up to Court, made the Queen's Chaplain, and preferr'd to the Maſterſhip of Trinity College in Cambridge. His next Promotion was to the Deanery of Lincoln, and from thence to the Biſhoprick of Worceſter, where he was likewiſe made Vice-preſident of the Marches of Wales: And here both with Reſpect to his Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Station, he had the Reputation of a good Governour, and was much valued for his Conduct, Integrity, and good Temper. He treated the Recuſants of both Denominations with Mildneſs and Moderation, and brought off a great many Roman Catholicks to the Church of England. He had a general Capacity: His Performances in Controverſie have been already related: Neither was his Talent confin'd to this Sort of Learning, and the Exerciſes of the Pulpit, though he diſtinguiſh'd himſelf in both. He was no leſs form'd for a Governour than a Scholar, and manag'd at the Council-Board and Conſiſtory, in the High Commiſſion and Star-Chamber, to great Commendation. His publick Character having been touch'd already, I ſhall add a Word or two concerning the Oeconomy of his Family; and here his Judgment, Generoſity, and publick Spirit, were not a little remarkable. His Houſe was a Sort of Academy, where young Gentlemen were inſtructed in Languages, Mathematicks, and other creditable Sciences. He entertain'd a great many indigent Scholars in his Family, exhibited to ſeveral in the Univerſities, and encourag'd them in Proportion to their Merit and Neceſſities.

And living in Times of publick Diſturbance, the Kingdom having been ruffled with Inſurrections, threaten'd with Invaſions, he did his Part in providing for the Defence of his Country. For this Purpoſe he train'd his Domeſticks to Military Exerciſe, was well furniſh'd with Arms, and kept a Stable of manag'd Horſes; and thus he was in a Condition to furniſh an Hundred Foot, and Fifty Horſe upon any ſudden Occaſion. For Inſtance; When the Earl of Eſſex endeavour'd to raiſe the City upon the Government, the Archbiſhop immediately ſent threeſcore of his Servants well armed, to reinforce the Court, and had Forty Horſe ready to march upon the firſt Order. His Foot were the firſt that forc'd the Gates of Eſſex-Houſe, and maintain'd their Poſt till the Earl ſurrendred. He was no leſs conſiderable for his Hoſpitality, where every Thing was manag'd with great Decency, and Largeneſs of Mind.

And being ſenſible that Appearance was neceſſary to make his Character better underſtood, he was not forgetful to apply to this Expedient. And therefore, beſides the conſtant Figure in his Family, he uſually travell'd with a great Retinue. For Inſtance; In the Year 1589. he came into Canterbury with a Train of Five hundred Horſe, of which an Hundred were his own Servants, the reſt conſiſting of the Clergy and Lay-Gentry of the Country. At this Time a Perſon of ſome Character diſpatch'd from Rome for Intelligence, happen'd to be there: This Gentleman was much ſurpriz'd to ſee the Archbiſhop thus pompouſly attended; but coming the next Day to the Cathedral, and entertain'd with the Solemnity of the Choir and Habits, the Exquiſiteneſs of Vocal and Inſtrumental Muſick, he was almoſt overſet with Admiration. He told an Engliſhman of Condition, * “ That this Nation had been very much miſreported at Rome; That the People were made to believe, that there was neither Archbiſhop, Biſhop, Cathedral, or any Face of Eccleſiaſtical Government in England: That the Churches were razed, and the People met to hear their Miniſters in Woods and Fields: But this he found was a great Miſtake; for excepting in the Pope's Chapel, he never ſaw a more ſolemn Service, or heard more Seraphick Harmony.

To proceed: The Archbiſhop, beſides the Hoſpitality of his Table, and his common Charities, was no leſs remarkable for his publick Benefactions; witneſs the Hoſpital founded by him at Croyden: 'Tis built in the Form of a College, and affords a ſettled Maintenance for Eight and twenty Brothers and Siſters: Near this Hoſpital is built a fair Free School, and endow'd with Lands of Twenty Pounds per Annum for the Maſter. In ſhort, no Part of his Character was without its proper Commendation: He had Learning, Courage, and Temper ſuitable to his Station: His publick Motions were eaſy, but not without Vigour. And 'twas his Cuſtom to do a great Deal of Buſineſs without much Appearance of Effort and Struggle. He was honourably interr'd at Croyden. The Earl of Worceſter, and the Lord Zouch grac'd the Funeral, and carried his Banners, and Babington, Biſhop of Worceſter, preach'd the Sermon. (q)

(q) Sir George Paul's Life of Archbiſhop Whitgift.

Before I take leave of this worthy Archbiſhop, 'twill be but Juſtice to mention the frank Remonſtrance he made againſt the ſacrilegious Invaſions in Queen Elizabeth's Reign. When this Prelate was Biſhop of Worceſter, * the Earl of Leiceſter had importun'd the Queen to paſs ſome Grant to him, very prejudicial to the Church. Whitgift being appriz'd of this Matter, counter-ſolicited, and put a Stop to the Earl's Buſineſs. Upon this they happen'd to claſh a little before her Majeſty, and quitted the Room with no friendly Appearance. The Biſhop being apprehenſive the Earl might weary the Queen to a Compliance, return'd immediately into the Preſence, and addreſs'd her with the following Diſcourſe. †

* The Year is not reported, which is the Reaſon I mention it here.

Whitgift's Diſcourſe to Queen Eliz. againſt Sacrilege.

I beſeech your Majeſty to hear me with Patience, and believe that Yours and the Church's Safety are dearer to me than my Life: But my Conſcience dearer than Both: And therefore give me leave to do my Duty, and tell you, That Princes are deputed Nurſing-Fathers of the Church, and owe it a Protection; and therefore God forbid that you ſhou'd be ſo much as Paſſive in her Ruins, when you may prevent it; or that I ſhould behold it without Horror and Deteſtation, or ſhould forbear to tell your Majeſty of the Sin and Danger of Sacrilege: And though you and my ſelf were born in an Age of Frailties, when the Primitive Piety and Care of the Churches Lands and Immunities are much decayed; yet (Madam) let me beg that you wou'd firſt conſider, that there are ſuch Sins as Prophaneneſs and Sacrilege; and that if there were not, they could not have Names in holy Writ, and particularly in the New-Teſtament. And I beſeech you to conſider, that though our Saviour ſaid, He judged no Man; and to teſtify it, would not judge nor divide the Inheritance betwixt the Two Brethren; nor would judge the Woman taken in Adultery: Yet in this Point of the Churches Rights, he was ſo zealous, that he made himſelf both the Accuſer and the Judge, and the Executioner too, to puniſh theſe Sins; witneſſed, in that he himſelf made the Whip to drive the Prophaners out of the Temple, overthrew the Tables of the Money-Changers, and drove them out of it. And I beſeech you to conſider, that it was St. Paul that ſaid to thoſe Chriſtians of his Time that were offended with Idolatry, and yet committed Sacrilege; Thou that abhorreſt Idols, doſt thou commit Sacrilege? And to incline you to prevent the Curſe that will follow it, I beſeech you alſo to conſider, that Conſtantine the firſt Chriſtian Emperor, and Helena his Mother; that King Edgar and Edward the Confeſſor, and indeed many others of your Predeceſſors, and many private Chriſtians, have alſo given to God, and to his Church, much Land, and many Immunities, which they might have given to thoſe of their Families, and did not: But gave them for ever as an abſolute Right and Sacrifice to God: And with theſe Immunities and Lands they have entail'd a Curſe upon the Alienators of them; God prevent your Majeſty and your Succeſſors from being liable to that Curſe, which will Cleave unto Church Lands, as the Leproſy to the Jews.

And to make you that are truſted with their Preſervation, the better to underſtand the Danger of it, I beſeech you forget not, that to prevent theſe Curſes, the Churches Land and Power have been alſo endeavoured to be preſerved (as far as humane Reaſon, and the Law of this Nation, have been able to preſerve them,) by an immediate and moſt ſacred Obligation on the Conſciences of the Princes of this Realm. For, they that conſult Magna Charta, ſhall find, that as all your Predeceſſors were at their Coronation, ſo you alſo were ſworn before all the Nobility and Biſhops then preſent, and in the Preſence of God, and in his ſtead to him that anointed you, To maintain the Church-Lands, and the Rights belonging to it; and this you your ſelf have teſtified openly to God at the Holy Altar, by laying your Hands on the Bible, then lying upon it: And, not only Magna Charta, but many modern Statutes have denounced a Curſe upon thoſe that break Magna Charta: A Curſe like the Leproſy, that was intail'd on the Jews; for as that, ſo theſe Curſes have and will cleave to the very Stones of thoſe Buildings that have been conſecrated to God; and, the Father's Sin of Sacrilege, hath and will prove to be intail'd on his Son and Family. And now Madam, what Account can be given for the Breach of this Oath, at the laſt great Day, either by your Majeſty, or by me, if it be willfully, or but negligently violated, I know not?

And therefore, good Madam, let not the late Lords Exceptions againſt the Failings of ſome few Clergymen, prevail with you to puniſh Poſterity, for the Errors of this preſent Age; let particular Men ſuffer for their particular Errors; but, let God and his Church have their Inheritance: And though, I pretend not to propheſy, yet I beg Poſterity to take Notice of what is already become viſible in many Families; That Church Land added to an ancient and juſt Inheritance, hath proved like a Moth fretting a Garment, and ſecretly conſumed Both: Or, like an Eagle that Stole a Coal from the Altar, and thereby ſet her Neſt on Fire, which conſumed both her young Eagles, and her ſelf that ſtole it. And, though I ſhall forbear to ſpeak reproachfully of your Father, yet I beg you to take Notice, that a Part of the Churches Rights, added to the vaſt Treaſure left him by his Father, hath been conceived to bring an unavoidable Conſumption upon both, notwithſtanding all his Diligence to preſerve them. And conſider, that after the Violation of thoſe Laws, to which he hath ſworn in Magna Charta, God did ſo far deny him his Reſtraining Grace, that as King Saul, after he was forſaken of God, fell from one Sin to another; ſo he, 'till at laſt he fell into greater Sins than I am willing to mention. Madam, Religion is the Foundation and Cement of humane Societies: And when they that ſerve at God's Altar, ſhall be expoſed to Poverty, then Religion it ſelf will be expoſed to ſcorn, and become contemptible, as you may already obſerve it to be in too many poor Vicarages in this Nation. And therefore, as you are by a late Act or Acts of Parliament entruſted with a great Power to preſerve or waſte the Churches Lands, yet diſpoſe of them for Jeſus ſake, as you have promiſed to Men, and vowed to God, that is, as the Donors intended; Let neither falſhood nor Flattery beguile you to do otherwiſe: But put a Stop to God's and the Levites Portion, (I beſeech you) and to the approaching Ruins of his Church, as you expect Comfort at the laſt great Day; for, Kings muſt be judged; pardon this affectionate Plainneſs, my moſt dear Sovereign; and let me beg to be ſtill continued in your Favour, and the Lord ſtill continue you in his.

The Parliament meets at Weſtminſter.

Upon the 19th of March the Parliament met at Weſtminſter. The King entertain'd the Lords and Commons with a long Speech. I ſhall only mention ſome Part of that which relates to Religion. Upon this Head he acquaints the Houſes, “ That at his coming into England he found three different Ways of worſhipping God profeſs'd. The Firſt was the Religion eſtabliſh'd by Law, and now profeſs'd by himſelf. The Second was that of the Roman Catholicks. The Third was that of the Puritans: And theſe Novelliſts he took rather for a Sect than a Society of Chriſtians: That theſe laſt, notwithſtanding their differing from us in ſubſtantial Points was not great, yet their Schemes of Polity were very untoward: They were ſo fond of Parity and Levelling, ſo perpetually remonſtrating againſt all Kind of Superiority, that they were always uneaſy, and diſaffected to the publick Eſtabliſhment: For which Reaſon they were ſcarcely to be endur'd in a well regulated Commonwealth. But as to his Intention of dealing with them, he refers the Houſes to his Proclamations upon that Subject.

Part of the the King's Speech.

Then ſpeaking of the Papiſts, he declares, “ That notwithſtanding his being bred to the Reformation, and afterward giving it a Preference upon Thought and Enquiry, yet he never carried his Belief to any Exceſſes of Bigottry, or unreaſonable Diſtance. He owns the Roman Communion for his Mother Church, though under the Diſadvantage of ſome Blemiſhes and Corruptions. And as he is no Enemy to the Life of a Patient becauſe he adviſes the purging off ill Humours; for the ſame Reaſon he ought not to be reckon'd unfriendly to their Church becauſe he ſuggeſts the reforming their Errors, and bringing Things up to the Primitive Standard. He is by no Means for throwing down the Temple, but only wiſhes every Thing offenſive might be remov'd, and the Appearance ſuited to the ſolemn Service for which 'twas deſign'd. No Man, continues the King, can be more unwilling than my ſelf to ſtretch to any unwarrantable Latitude in my own Practice; but then on the other Hand, I ſhould be ſorry to make my private Conſcience the Meaſure of Belief to all my Subjects. I was never of a perſecuting Temper, nor for tying up other People to my own Opinion: And of this I hope I have given ſufficient Proof ſince my coming into this Kingdom. But if the Judges have formerly preſs'd the Puniſhment of Recuſancy farther than the Laws intended, I deſire the preſent Parliament would think of a better Remedy for this Grievance.

“ As to my Roman Catholick Subjects, I muſt range them under two Diviſions, Church-Men and Lay-Men. Of theſe I think the Laity the moſt excuſable, in regard of the profound Submiſſion and implicit Belief requir'd in their Church. Again, the Laity muſt be farther ſubdivided into two Sorts: The firſt are Men of peaceable Tempers, who having been educated in that Church, take Things upon Truſt, chuſe rather to continue in that Communion than run the Cenſure of being over-curious, and affecting a Change. The other Sort are commonly young People, who have fallen under unhappy Inſtruction, and been poiſon'd with ill Principles. As to the firſt Sort, I ſhould be ſorry their Perſons ſhould ſuffer for their Miſtakes: But for the reſt of the Laity, who either out of Affectation, Paſſion, or Perverſeneſs, have alter'd their Perſuaſion, who have revolted from our Communion only to embroil the Commonwealth, and play their Sedition to more Advantage: Theſe People muſt be better look'd after, and their Obſtinacy corrected.

“ And to ſpeak to the Clergy; There are two Things inſufferable in many of them. The one relates more immediately to Belief, and the other to Practice. The Error in Doctrine, is their carrying the Pope's Supremacy to an extravagant and ſcandalous Exceſs; their giving him not only the Spiritual Government of Chriſtendom, but a Temporal Authority over Princes; as if the Diſpoſal of Crowns and Scepters, the Dethroning of Kings and Emperors, was Part of his Privilege. The other Point, which runs into common Practice, is the embroiling of Civil Government, and the Murder of Kings, as if all Hoſtile Attempts againſt their Sovereign were Inſtances of Merit: Againſt their Sovereign, I ſay, when he is once excommunicated, his Subjects diſcharg'd of their Allegiance, and his Kingdoms given away by that Three-crown'd Monarch, or rather Monſter of a Head, the Pope. But upon this I ſhall inſiſt no farther at preſent; only I heartily wiſh that God would make me inſtrumental to a general Union in Chriſtendom; and that all Prejudice and Obſtinacy being quitted on both Sides, we might meet in the Middle; and this I take to be the true Centre for Reſt and Advantage. If the Papiſts would retire from the Ground they can't maintain, give up their Innovations, and make the old Belief and Practice the Meaſures for an Accommodation, I would be contented to meet them half Way, and conſent to the removal of Novelties on either Side: For as my Faith, founded on the Scriptures, is truly Catholick and Apoſtolick; ſo I ſhall ever be ready to give all imaginable Deference to Antiquity in Points of Diſcipline and Government. And by this Means, by the Grace of God, I hope always to preſerve my ſelf from Hereſy and Schiſm.

“ After this the King gives the Engliſh Roman Catholicks a Caution not to miſapprehend him, or preſume too far upon his Lenity, nor ever entertain any viſionary Hopes of bringing their Perſuaſion to a publick Eſtabliſhment. He bids them aſſure themſelves, that as he is a Friend to their Perſons on Condition of their dutiful Behaviour, ſo ſhall he always continue a mortal Enemy to their Errors. And as he ſhould be ſorry their mutinous and diſorderly Carriage ſhould force him to withdraw his Protection, ſo he ſhall always make it his Buſineſs to proſecute and cruſh their Miſtakes: For that he ſhould either countenance or connive at the Spreading their Religion, as it now ſtands, can never be expected upon three Accounts: Firſt, Such an Indulgence cannot be granted without going counter to his own Conſcience. Secondly, The Liberties of the Iſland muſt ſuffer by relaxing to ſuch an Exceſs. And Thirdly, The Crown would be convey'd to his Poſterity in a worſe Condition than he found it. (r)

There was an Act made this Parliament for diſabling the Crown from receiving any Conveyances of Archbiſhops and Biſhops Eſtates. (s)

An Act for diſabling the King and his Succeſſors from having any Archbiſhop or Biſhop's Lands convey'd to them.

Thus thoſe of the Clergy who wanted either Honeſty or Courage were diſabled from impoveriſhing the Church. Thus the King ſtop'd the Iſſue of Sacrilege, and deliver'd himſelf from the Importunity of the Courtiers.

There was likewiſe a Bill paſs'd for the better executing the Laws againſt all Manner of Recuſants. (t) Farther, an Act paſs'd for repealing a Statute in the Reign of Queen Mary; and thus the Statute of King Edward the Sixth, touching the Lawfulneſs of Marriage in the Clergy, was reviv'd. (u) And laſtly, 1 Mar. 2. which repeals 1 Ed. 6. cap. 2. concerning the Election of Biſhops, is repeal'd: The paſſing this Act gave the Biſhops ſome Trouble in their Juriſdiction; but the Queſtion was clear'd, and the Difficulty got over in the 4th Year of this Reign, as has been already related. This Parliament ſat 'till the 7th of July, and was then prorogu'd till the 7th of February following.

The Convocation meets.

To ſay ſomething of the Convocation, which met the next Day after the Parliament. The See of Canterbury being now vacant, the Dean and Chapter of that Church gave a Commiſſion to Bancroft, Biſhop of London, to preſide in the Synod. In the Eleventh Seſſion the Preſident deliver'd the Prolocutor a Book of Canons, which paſs'd both Houſes, and were afterwards ratified by the King's Letters Patents. Theſe Canons, being a Hundred and forty one, were collected by Biſhop Bancroft out of the Articles, Injunctions, and Synodical Acts paſs'd and publiſh'd in the Reigns of King Edward the Sixth and Queen Elizabeth.

To proceed; A Petition for reforming the Book of Common-Prayer was brought into the Houſe by Edgerton, Fleetwood, and Wotton, Clerks, together with ſome others. This Motion 'tis likely was coldly receiv'd: That it miſcarried is certain: All that appears upon Record is, that the Preſident, and the reſt of the Biſhops, admoniſh'd the Petitioners and their Adherents to acquieſce and conform. (w) The Convocation was on the 9th of July prorogu'd by the King's Writ to the 8th of February next following, and afterwards to the 6th of November, 1605.

The Collegiate Church at Rippon founded by the King.

This Summer the Corporation of Rippon in Yorkſhire petition'd Queen Anne for a better Maintenance for the Incumbent of that Pariſh. There had formerly been founded a fair Collegiate Church, but at the Diſſolution of the Abbeys the Lands were ſeiz'd by the Crown, and no tolerable Remainder left for the Pariſh Prieſt. There was little Need of the Queen's Intereſt in ſoliciting on the Petitioners Behalf: For the King was always diſpos'd for the Benefit of Learning and Religion. In ſhort, his Bounty was conſiderably large upon this Occaſion: For he founded a Dean and Chapter of ſeven Prebendaries, and ſettled Two hundred and forty ſeven Pounds per Annum of Crown Lands for their Maintenance.

The Family of Loves Addreſs to the King.

This Year the Family of Love preſented a Petition to the King. The Deſign of their Addreſs is to clear themſeves of ſome Imputations, which, as they pretend, lay unjuſtly on their Perſuaſion. They complain of their being miſrepreſented in his Majeſty's Βασιλικὸν Δῶρον. They diſclaim the Puritans, ſuch as Brown, Penry, &c. and all erroneous Sects of the Anabaptiſts, and make fair Pretenſions of Obedience to Church and State. They take the Diſtinction of their Belief from one Henry Nicholas, confeſs ſome dark Paſſages in that Author's Works, and offer to explain them. As for Learning they declar'd themſelves unfurniſh'd: They take Notice of their lying under the Reproach of licentious Doctrine, but diſown the Charge. And laſtly, They ſolicit for Indulgence and common Protection, and deſire their Principles may be interpreted by their Practice. (x) What Effect this Petition had, does not appear: 'Tis poſſible the Inconſiderableneſs of the Number and Condition of theſe Sectaries might make them over-look'd.

(x) Fuller's Church Hiſt. Book 10.

Dec. 4. 1604. Bancroft tranſlated from London to Canterbury.

After a Vacancy of about Nine Months in the See of Canterbury, Bancroft, Biſhop of London, was tranſlated thither. This Prelate govern'd with great Vigour, and preſs'd a ſtrict Conformity to the Rubrick and Canons, without the leaſt Allowance for Latitude and different Perſuaſion. This Management was interpreted to Rigour by thoſe who favour'd the Nonconformiſts. The Author of the Altar of Damaſcus reports that Three hundred Preaching Miniſters were either ſilenc'd or depriv'd for refuſing to paſs this Teſt. But this Narrative ſwells the Proſecution to a Romantick Bulk: For by the Rolls deliver'd in by Bancroft not long before his Death, 'tis evident there were but Forty nine depriv'd upon any Account whatever. Now this in a Kingdom of about Nine thouſand Pariſhes was no very tragical Number. However, by animadverting upon ſome few of the Principals, he ſtruck a Terror into the reſt, and made their Scruples give Way.

In ſhort, Bancroft's unrelenting Strictneſs gave a new Face to Religion: The Liturgy was more ſolemnly officiated: The Faſts and Feſtivals were better obſerv'd: The Uſe of Copes was reviv'd, the Surplice generally worn, and all Things in a Manner recover'd to the firſt Settlement under Queen Elizabeth. Some who had formerly ſubſcrib'd in a looſe reſerved Senſe, were now called upon to ſign their Conformity in more cloſe unevaſive Terms. For now the 36th Canon oblig'd them to declare that they did willingly & ex animo ſubſcribe the three Articles, and all Things contain'd in the ſame: So that now there was no Room left for Scruples and different Perſuaſion. And thus ſome Miniſters of Conſideration loſt their Livings to preſerve their Conſcience: I ſay, to preſerve their Conſcience; for 'tis a hard Matter to bring every Body's Underſtanding to the common Standard, and make all honeſt Men of the ſame Mind.

Amongſt the more eminent Nonconformiſts who were laid aſide upon this Score, we may reckon Dr. Burgeſs, benefic'd in Lincoln Dioceſe. This Divine for ſome exceptionable Paſſages in a Sermon of his preach'd before the King this Summer, was firſt committed; and afterwards being preſs'd to ſubſcribe the three Articles, reſign'd his Benefice. He wrote the Reaſons of his Conduct to Chatterton his Dioceſan. He likewiſe endeavour'd to purge himſelf from ſiniſter Conſtruction to the King, and addreſs'd his Majeſty for Favour and his former Poſt. The King pleas'd with the Manner of his Application did him the Honour of a Perſonal Conference. And here the Matters in Queſtion being diſcuſs'd, Burgeſs was gain'd to an entire Conformity, and return'd to his Station. After this he ſignaliz'd himſelf againſt the Diſſenters, and became a Champion for the Government and Ceremonies of the eſtabliſh'd Church.

But the Loſs of this Divine did not diſhearten his former Brethren: For ſoon after a warm Pamphlet, entituled the Abridgment was publiſhed by the Lincolnſhire Miniſters. The Book rallied all the former Objections, and reinforc'd them with new ones: And in fine, made an Attack upon the Doctrine, Ceremonies, and Government of the Church. Dr. Burgeſs in his Anſwer (y) complains the State of the Queſtions was much alter'd: That Cartwright and the old Nonconformiſts drew up a gentler Charge againſt the Ceremonies, and quarrell'd them only upon the Score of their being inconvenient: That in Conſequence of this Opinion they adviſ'd the Miniſters to conform, rather than quit their Flocks: And exhorted the People to receive the Communion kneeling, rather than loſe the Benefit of that Sacrament. But the Authors of the Abridgement, and other Pamphlets in this Reign, carried their Exceptions much farther, pronounced the Ceremonies altogether unlawful, and look'd on it as a diſtinguiſhing Mark of Piety to lay the Surplice aſide. And thus by widening the Breach, enlarging the Heads of their Remonſtrance, and puſhing their Diſaffection farther than formerly, they loſt the good Opinion of the Biſhops, who otherwiſe probably would have manag'd with more Lenity, and not drawn the Canons ſo cloſe upon them.

(y) Anſwer rejoin'd to the applauded Pamphlet, &c.

The Nonconformiſts multiply their Exceptions againſt the Church of England.

In Scotland a General Aſſembly was to have met at Aberdeen in July the laſt Year: But the King being wholly taken up with the Project of the Union, the Church Meeting was adjourn'd for a Twelve-month. The Court being now ſettled in England, the Preſbyterian Miniſters relying upon the Juncture, form'd a Deſign to break the King's Meaſures, and recover the Ground they had loſt. The King appriz'd of their Motions commanded the Aſſembly ſhould be put off 'till farther Order. His Majeſty was generally obey'd, for of the Fifty Preſbyteries only Nine ſent their Commiſſioners to Aberdeen. And thus, when the Day came, their Meeting conſiſted at the moſt but of One and twenty. However, theſe Members were all Men of Reſolution, and prepar'd to ſtand the Shock. Sir Alexander Straiton, Laird Lowreſton, Commiſſioner for his Majeſty in Church Affairs, commanded them to retire, and break up that unlawful Aſſembly. They told him their Meeting was allow'd by the Laws of the Realm: And that they ought not to betray the Liberties of the Church by giving Way to ſo illegal a Diſcharge. The Commiſſioner argued againſt their Plea, aſſerted the King's Prerogative in calling, and diſſolving Church Aſſemblies. But being requeſted to withdraw, and give them ſome little Time for farther Deliberation, he complied with the Motion. Being thus left to themſelves, they immediately choſe one Forbes for their Moderator, and adjourn'd the Aſſembly to the laſt of September following. (z)

Some of the Scotch Preſbyterians refuſe to diſcontinue their Aſſembly at the King's Order.

(z) Spotſwood's Ch. Hiſt.

Lowreſton finding himſelf ill uſed, complain'd to the Council, and proclaim'd them Rebels. Forbes and Welſh, two of the principal Malcontents, are ſummon'd to appear before the Board, and perſiſting in their Stiffneſs, ſent Priſoners to the Caſtle of Blackneſs. On the 3d of October the reſt were order'd to appear before the Lords of the Council. And now Thirteen of their Number own'd their Miſbehaviour, and intreated their Lordſhips would intercede with the King for their Pardon. The reſt, which were but Eight, juſtifying their Braving the Government, were committed to ſeveral Priſons. As for the Thirteen, who confeſs'd their Fault, they were diſmiſs'd, and had the Liberty of returning to their reſpective Charges.

Theſe Proceedings of the Council were cenſur'd in the Pulpit by ſeveral Preachers: And to draw a greater Odium upon the Adminiſtration, 'twas given out that the ſuppreſſing Aſſemblies, and the eſtabliſh'd Diſcipline was the bottom Deſign; and that the Ceremonies of the Church of England were to be forc'd upon them. The King publiſh'd a Declaration to ſatiſfy the People, and diſable theſe falſe Reports; intimating withal that another Aſſembly ſhould meet at Dundee in July following.

Sept. 26. 1605.

This Declaration making no Impreſſion upon the diſaffected Miniſters, they were ſummon'd to appear at the Council-Table to be farther puniſh'd for their Miſbehaviour. When they came, they exhibited an Inſtrument ſubſcrib'd by Fourteen of them. The Subſtance of this Paper, call'd a Declinator, was, "That the Meeting or Diſcharge of a General Aſſembly was a Matter of Spiritual Cognizance, and belong'd to the Deciſion of the Church: That therefore they muſt be forc'd to plead in Bar to their Lordſhip's Juriſdiction, and ſubmit themſelves to the Trial of a General Aſſembly, who are the only competent Judges of the Cauſe.

October 24.

They ſubſcribe a Declinator of the Temporal Courts, and appeal to a general Aſſembly.

The King receiving Advice of the Declinator, order'd their Proſecution: Accordingly ſix of them were indicted upon the Statute made in the Year 1584, found guilty of Treaſon, and return'd to their Priſons 'till his Majeſty's Pleaſure was farther known.

Idem.

They are proſecuted, and found guilty of Treaſon.

To go back to England: In Michaelmas Term this Year Archbiſhop Bancroft exhibited Articles to the Lords of the Privy-Council in the Name of the whole Clergy againſt the Judges. They are call'd Certain Articles of Abuſes which are deſir'd to be reform'd in granting Prohibitions. To this Remonſtrance in Eaſter Term following all the Judges of England gave in their Anſwers ſign'd to the Council-Board. This unanimous Reſolution Sir Edward Coke calls the *Higheſt Authority in Law. But this Caſe being a Complaint of Encroachment, and a Conteſt for Juriſdiction between the Temporal and Eccleſiaſtical Judges, by the Principles of Equity the Controverſy ought to be determin'd by neither Side. That this learned Gentleman was clearly of this Opinion when Competition and Conqueſt was not in his View, appears from his Report of Dr. Bonham's Caſe.* The Cenſors of the College of Phyſicians had impriſon'd this Dr. Bonham for practiſing in London without their Licence. Bonham brings an Action of falſe Impriſonment againſt the College. In reporting this Coke cites the Judgment of Warberton Chief Juſtice, and Daniel another of the Juſtices, that the Cenſors of the College of Phyſicians could not be Judges and Parties, Quia aliquis non debet eſſe Judex in propria Cauſa; and that no Body can be Judge and Attorney for any Party.* This in the Opinion of theſe reverend Judges is ſo fundamental a Maxim of Reaſon and Common Law, that even an Act of Parliament ſhall be over-rul'd by it. Thus for the Purpoſe: If a Statute impowers any Perſon to have Cognizance of all Manner of Pleas, ariſing within his Manor; notwithſtanding ſuch an Act, he ſhall hold no Plea of any Matter where himſelf is a Party: The Reaſon aſſign'd is, iniquum eſt aliquem ſuæ Rei eſſe Judicem.

* Dyer 3. Ed. 6. Fol. 65. 38 Ed. 3. 15. 8 H. 6. 19, 20, 21. Ed. 4. 47. &c.

In the Cloſe of the Argument, Coke then Chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas, where the Cauſe was tried, declares the College no Judge in the preſent Diſpute: And in ſhort, Judgment was given for the Plaintiff. By this Report 'tis plain the Judges Reſolution upon Bancroft's Articles are ſo far from being the Higheſt Authorities in Law, that they are no Authority at all: What they deliver is in Favour of their own Juriſdiction and Intereſt: And thus by being deeply Parties, they are by this Report diſabled from pronouncing in the Cauſe. Sir Edward Coke having mention'd theſe Articles againſt undue Prohibitions in his Expoſition of the Statute call'd Articuli Cleri, I have tranſcrib'd them with ſome Remarks under the Reign of King Edward the Second. *

The Gunpower-Plot diſcover'd by a Letter to the Lord Mounteagle.

About this Time the horrible Gunpowder Plot was diſcover'd. The Deſign was to have blown up the King and the two Houſes of Parliament, to have rais'd the Country in the Confuſion, laid the Plot upon the Puritans, proclaim'd the Lady Elizabeth, and by Degrees brought Popery back upon the Kingdom. The Hiſtory of this Conſpiracy being ſo well known, I ſhall be ſhort in the Narrative.

About Ten Days before the Parliament was to meet, a Letter was deliver'd to a Footman of the Lord Mounteagle's for his Maſter. The Letter runs thus:

My Lord,

" Out of the Love I bear to ſome of your " Friends, I have a Care of your Preſervation. " Therefore I would adviſe you, as you tender " your Life, to deviſe ſome Excuſe to ſhift off " your Attendance at this Parliament: For God " and Man have concurr'd to puniſh the Wickedneſs of this Time. And think not ſlightly of " this Advertiſement, but retire your ſelf into " your Country, where you may expect the " Event in Safety. For though there be no Appearance of any Stir, yet, I ſay, they ſhall " receive a terrible Blow this Parliament, and " yet they ſhall not ſee who hurts them. This " Counſel is not to be contemn'd, becauſe it " may do you Good, and can do you no Harm, " for the Danger is paſt ſo ſoon as you have " burnt the Letter. And I hope God will give " you the Grace to make good Uſe of it: To " whoſe holy Protection I commend you. (a)

(a) King James's Works.

This Letter brought by the Lord Mounteagle to the Earl of Salisbury, principal Secretary of State, and being read by ſeveral of the Council was carried to the King. His Majeſty interprets the Darkneſs of the Contents to ſome Treaſon to be effected by Gunpowder. Upon this, the Cellar under the Parliament-Houſe being ſearch'd, a great Quantity of Wood and Coals was found in the Vault. The Cellar was hired by Piercy; and Faux, who under another Name pretended to be his Man, was met with there.

The King's Apprehenſion of Miſchief encreaſing, a ſecond and more particular Search was order'd. 'Twas made by Sir Thomas Knevett, who diſcover'd the Barrels of Gunpowder, and ſeiz'd Faux. This Conſpirator was apprehended on the 5th of November, the Morning on which the Parliament were to begin their Seſſion. He behav'd himſelf with great Reſolution before the Council, and nothing could be drawn from him. But afterwards being ſent to the Tower, and the Rack brought out, he made a Confeſſion to ſeveral of the Privy-Council, That himſelf, Thomas Winter, Robert Katesby, Thomas Piercy, John and Chriſtopher Wright, concerted a Plot againſt his Majeſty for the Relief of the Catholick Cauſe; and that Katesby propos'd the Scheme of Gunpowder. This Motion being approv'd, they fix'd upon the Place, Time, and Manner, above-mention'd.

Idem.

Afterwards the Conſpiracy was communicated to Sir Everard Digby, Ambroſe Rookewood, Francis Treſham, John Grant, and Robert Keyes.

Soon after Thomas Winter being apprehended, made the ſame Confeſſion in Subſtance with what had been own'd by Faux.

The Plot being thus diſcover'd, the reſt of the Conſpirators quit London, and endeavour to raiſe the Country, and ſeize the Lady Elizabeth, but miſcarried in their Deſign: Their Party when moſt numerous, including their Servants, was not more than Eighty. To cover their Practice, they pretended a Hunting-Match, but being at laſt more open in their Treaſon, they were purſued by Sir Richard Walſh and Sir Richard Verney, Sheriffs of Worceſterſhire and Warwickſhire. At laſt they were moſt of them ſeiz'd as Holbech in Staffordſhire at one Stephen Littleton's. This Houſe being beſet by the Sheriffs Forces, ſeveral of the Conſpirators were hurt by the caſual Blowing up of a Bag of Gunpowder, which they had laid to dry by the Fire. Thus being unprovided for Defence, the Accident awaken'd their Conſciences, and ſurpriz'd them into Remorſe. In the firſt Place they fell upon their Knees, and ask'd God Pardon for the Villainy they intended: Then they reſolv'd to open the Gate, and break through, or die fighting. Katesby and Piercy were kill'd with one Shot, and Winter was wounded and made Priſoner.

Part of the King's Speech in Parliament.

Nov. 9.

On the 9th of November the King went to the Parliament-Houſe, and acquainted the Lords and Commons with the Circumſtances and Barbarity of the Plot. In his Speech he acquits all foreign Princes and their Miniſters from having any Knowlege or Share in this horrible Conſpiracy: Neither does his Majeſty charge the Plot upon the whole Body of the Engliſh Papiſts, but believes many of them, notwithſtanding their Superſtition, may be good Subjects. And here he declaims againſt the Rigour of the Puritans Opinion, and thinks their Cruelty worthy of Fire, who will admit no Salvation to any Papiſt.

The Conſpirators tried, and condemn'd, and moſt of them penitent at their Execution.

The two Houſes adjourn'd to the 21ſt of January: And on the 27th the principal Conſpirators were tried at Weſtminſter. Their Names with their Additions are as follow; Thomas Winter, late of Hoddington in Warwickſhire, Gentleman; Guido Faux, late of London, Gentleman; Robert Keyes, late of London, Gentleman; Thomas Bates, late of London, Yeoman. Theſe Four were arraign'd for plotting to blow up the Parliament-Houſe with Gunpowder; for taking an Oath and the Sacrament to bind themſelves to Secreſy; for hiring a Houſe near the Parliament, digging a Mine, and afterwards hiring the Cellar; for bringing Powder, Match, and Touchwood, to execute their Treaſon. Robert Winter, late of Hoddington, Eſq; elder Brother to the above-mention'd Thomas; John Grant, late of Yorthbrooks in Warwickſhire, Eſq; Ambroſe Rookwood, late of Stammingfield in the County of Suffolk, Eſq; and Sir Everard Digby of Gothurſt in Buckinghamſhire, Knight; were indicted for being acquainted with the Treaſon after 'twas concerted by thoſe above-mention'd, for conſenting to it, and taking an Oath and the Sacrament to aſſure their Secreſy. Sir Everard Digby confeſs'd the Indictment, and the reſt ſtood on their Defence, but were brought in guilty. Sir Everard Digby, Robert Winter, Grant, and Bates, were executed at the Weſt End of St. Paul's, where all of them, excepting Grant, died very penitently. The next Day Thomas Winter, Rookwood, Keys, and Faux, ſuffer'd in the Palace-yard at Weſtminſter.

Faux declar'd his Repentance more remarkably than the reſt, and exhorted all Roman Catholicks never to engage in any ſuch Bloody Enterprize, it being a Method never allow'd nor proſper'd by God Almighty. (b) As to the Conſpirators, 'twas purely a bigotted Frenzy for their Religion which puſh'd them upon the Attempt; the Government had given them no Manner of Provocation: For before this Conſpiracy, no Papiſt had been puniſh'd in this Reign either in Perſon or Fortune. (c)

(c) Preface to King James's Works.

The latter End of this Year Matthew Hutton Archbiſhop of York, departed this Life. He was deſcended from an ancient Family ſeated at Huttton Hall in Lancaſhire, as Fuller ſuppoſes. He was bred in Trinity-College in Cambridge. In this Univerſity he was Maſter of Pembroke-Hall, and Margaret-Profeſſor. His next Preferments were the Deanery of York, and the See of Durham, from whence he was tranſlated to the Archbiſhoprick in that Province. He was a Prelate of Learning, and exemplary Life. As to his Benefactions he left an Hundred Marks for inlarging the Buildings in Trinity-College, founded an Hoſpital in the North, and endow'd it with Lands of the Value of 35 Pound *per Annum.

Garnet's Excuſe for not diſcovering his Knowlege of the Conſpiracy.

Henry Garnet, Provincial of the Engliſh Jeſuits, was apprehended, impriſon'd in the Tower, and charg'd with concealing the Plot. He endeavour'd to excuſe himſelf by alledging 'twas diſcover'd to him under the Seal of Confeſſion. Overall, Dean of St. Paul's, told him that Confeſſion related to Things paſt, and not to Intentions of doing ſomething for the future. He urg'd farther, That the old Schoolmen, and their beſt Caſuiſts, oblig'd the Prieſt to diſcover a Deſign, though never ſo ſecretly communicated, where the Concealment is likely to prove dangerous to the State. And Garnet confeſs'd at laſt that the Party reveal'd it to him as they were walking, and not at the Time of Confeſſion. However, 'twas lodg'd with him under the Ties of the ſtricteſt Secreſy by which he conceiv'd the Party might mean the Seal of Confeſſion. Beſides, he thought it had a Relation to Confeſſion, in Regard he was Confeſſor to the Perſon, had lately taken his Confeſſion, and was to aſſiſt him in that Office ſome few Days after. But then to diſable even this lamentable Excuſe, he own'd that two Perſons diſcours'd him concerning the Treaſon; and that Katesby entertain'd him upon this horrible Subject in the Preſence and Hearing of another. Now, as the King infers, what Sort of Confeſſion muſt this be which was made in the Hearing of a third Perſon? This Garnet was tried at Guild-Hall for concealing the Powder-Treaſon, found guilty, and executed at the Weſt End of St. Paul's. He frankly acknowledg'd the Crime, declar'd himſelf heartily ſorry for it, and ask'd Pardon of God and the King. He pray'd for his Majeſty and all the Royal Iſſue, and admoniſh'd all Catholicks never to attempt any Inſurrection or violent Practice againſt the King and Government: For all Engagements of this Nature were wholly inconſiſtent with the Catholick Religion. About ten or twelve Gentlemen and Yeomen were indicted in the Country for Miſpriſion of Treaſon, for entertaining ſome of the Conſpirators after they were mark'd as ſuch in the King's Proclamation. They were found guilty by the Jury, and executed near their reſpective Dwellings. (d)

Tortus's ſcandalous Doctrine.

As to Garnet's Concern, the Author of Tortus, who was either Bellarmin's Chaplain, or more probably the Cardinal himſelf, has the Aſſurance to maintain as a principal Point of Catholick Doctrine, That the Secret of Sacramental Confeſſion ought not to be reveal'd; no, not for the eſchewing of whatſoever Evil. (e) He likewiſe gives Garnet a great Character, reports him a Man of incomparable Learning and Holineſs of Life; and that he was put to Death becauſe he would not reveal that which he could not do with a ſafe Conſcience.

This horrible Conſpiracy awaken'd the Government, put the Legiſlature upon a farther Guard, and brought new Preſſures upon the Roman Catholick Party. The Reader may ſee the Particulars in the Statute intituled, An Act for the diſcovering and repreſſing Popiſh Recuſants. (f) By this Act the Bill which miſcarried in the latter End of the laſt Reign was taken in; it being now enacted that every one who did not repair to Church every Sunday, ſhould forfeit Twelve-pence, unleſs the Parties abſenting themſelves could make ſuch an Excuſe as appear'd Satisfactory to a Juſtice of Peace. This Parliament ſat till the 27th of May, and was then prorogued to the 18th of November next following.

Blackwell the Arch-Prieſt had the Honeſty to declare his Abhorrence of the Powder-Plot, and wrote Two Letters to diſſuade the Roman Catholicks from all violent Practices againſt the King and Government. His firſt Letter is as follows:

The Annexation Act repeal'd at the Parliament of Perth.

At a Parliament held at Perth, the 9th of July this Year, an Act paſs'd touching the King's Prerogative: In this Statute his Majeſty's Sovereign Authority, Royal Prerogative and Privilege is acknowledg'd over all Eſtates, Perſons, and Cauſes whatever, within that Kingdom. By another Statute, the Biſhops are reſtor'd to their Temporalties, and the Act of Annexation is repeal'd. And thus thoſe Biſhops Eſtates which were lately veſted in the Crown, were recover'd to their reſpective Sees: But then the Act is clog'd with Exceptions, and confirms the Grants of ſeveral Caſtles and other Eſtates granted by the Crown to the Nobility and Gentry. There's likewiſe an Act paſs'd, entitled, Anent ſalvo Jure cujuſlibet; which ſeems to be made on Purpoſe to ſecure the late Alienation of Church Lands to the Laity. (h)

(h) Ja. 6. Parl. 18. cap. 1,2 &20.

Several of the Scotch Biſhops, and Presbyterian Miniſters ſent for to Hampton-Court.

Soon after the Diſſolution of this Parliament ſeveral of the Scotch Clergy were order'd to attend the King at Hampton-Court. The Buſineſs was to give the King Satisfaction concerning the late Aſſembly at Aberdeen. His Majeſty ſent for ſeveral of both Parties. The Archbiſhops of St. Andrews, and Glaſgow, the Biſhops of Orkney, Galloway, and Mr. James Nicholſon deſign'd for the See of Dunkeld, made one Part of the Diviſion. Thoſe on the other Side, were Mr. Andrew, and Mr. James Melvil, Mr. James Balfour, Mr. William Watſon, Mr. William Scot, Mr. John Carmichel, and Mr. Adam Colt.

The King order'd ſome of the Engliſh Biſhops to attend him at the ſame Time, and preach by Turns upon the Subjects given them. Barlow, Biſhop of Lincoln, began the Exerciſe; his Text was, Acts the 20th, ver. 28. Take heed therefore unto your ſelves, and to all the Flock over which the Holy Ghoſt has made you Overſeers, &c. From theſe Words he took Occaſion to prove the Superiority of Biſhops over Presbyters, both from the Scriptures and the Teſtimony of the Ancients. He likewiſe inſiſted upon the Inconvenience of Parity in the Church, and the Confuſions conſequent upon that Scheme.

Buckeridge, Biſhop of Rocheſter, came next, and preach'd upon Romans 13. ver. 1. Let every Soul be ſubject to the higher Powers. From this Text, which ſeems ſomewhat ſurprizing, he endeavour'd to eſtabliſh the Regale. However, he is ſaid to have maintain'd the King's Supremacy in Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes to the Satisfaction of the Audience. But the Scotch Miniſters were ſomewhat gall'd to hear a Parallel drawn between the Pope, and the Presbyterians, in their Encroachment upon Princes.

Andrews, then Biſhop of Chicheſter, follow'd Buckeridge, and took ſome of the firſt Verſes of the 10th of Numbers for his Text, Make thee Two Trumpets of Silver, &c. From theſe Words his Buſineſs was to prove the Authority of Secular Princes for convening Synods and Councils. King, Biſhop of London, came up laſt. His Text was Verſe 11, of the Eighth Chapter of the Canticles. The Diſcourſe, tho' ſomewhat remote from the Words, was ſuitable to the Occaſion: For the Sermon was principally ſpent in proving that Lay-Elders were Church Officers, unknown to the ancient Church. And that the modern Scheme had no Warrant either from Precept or Example, no Countenance in Scripture or primitive Practice. (i) The King order'd theſe Sermons as a preliminary Expedient: He hoped the Controverſy between the Kirk and the Hierarchy being thus learnedly manag'd, might bring the Scotch out of their Miſtakes, or at leaſt make them more tractable.

(i) Spotſwood's Church Hiſtory.

At their Firſt appearing in the Preſence, the King acquainted them, “That the Reaſon of his ſending for them, was to know their Opinions touching the Meeting at Aberdeen; where a few Miniſters in Contempt of his Authority, had conven'd themſelves: And notwithſtanding they fail'd both in Numbers and cuſtomary Method, they had the Preſumption to keep together, and call their Junto a general Aſſembly, and that ſome of them had ſince maintain'd their Miſbehaviour, and de-

“ clin'd the Juriſdiction of his Council. His Majeſty therefore deſir'd to hear their Thoughts upon this Conduct, becauſe he was inform'd ſeveral Miniſters juſtified that Meeting, and recommended the principal Criminals to the Prayers of their Congregations.” Now this, as the King obſerves, was in effect to proclaim him a Tyrant, and a Perſecutor.

To this Mr. James Melvil anſwer'd, That the Miniſters had no ſuch peremptory Command to break up the Aſſembly, as was reported, and turning to Sir Alexander Straiton, then preſent, conjur'd him to declare his Knowledge of that Matter. In ſhort, Melvil endeavour'd to defend the Legality of the Aſſembly, notwithſtanding the Defects objected in Numbers and Form.

The Presbyterian Miniſters refuſe to condemn the Aberdeen Aſſembly.

The King finding them diſpos'd to maintain their Ground, demanded their Anſwer to theſe Three Queſtions. Firſt, Whether 'tis lawful to pray publickly for Criminals convicted by a legal Court, as Perſons afflicted and in Diſtreſs? 2. Whether I may not, continues the King, as a Chriſtian Prince, by Virtue of my Authority Royal, convene, adjourn, and diſſolve any Aſſemblies within my Dominions for neceſſary Reaſons beſt known to my ſelf? 3. Whether I am not impower'd by my Regal Authority, to ſummon any Perſons whatſoever, either Civil or Eccleſiaſtical, before me and my Council, to anſwer for Miſdemeanors by them committed in any Place of my Dominions? And whether 'tis not lawful for me to try the Offence, and proceed to Judgment? And farther, Whether all my Subjects being ſummon'd before me and my Council, are not oblig'd to make their Appearance, and own me, or my Council, competent Judges?

Idem.

Mr. James Melvil deſiring ſome Time to deliberate upon ſuch weighty Queſtions; the King was contented to ſtay for their Reſolution till the next Day. When they came, the Scotch Biſhops being firſt ask'd their Opinion, unanimouſly condemn'd the Aberdeen Aſſembly as illegal, turbulent, and factious. But the Two Melvils, Balfour, and Scot, made ſhuffling and evaſive Anſwers; upon which theſe Miniſters, and the reſt of the Brethren that came along with them, were order'd not to return into Scotland without the King's Licenſe, and forbidden to appear at the Queen and Prince's Court.

They Anſwer evaſively to the King's Queſtions. October 20.

Idem. The Miniſters convicted of Treaſon Baniſh'd.

The King being thus diſappointed by the Obſtinacy and Singularities of theſe Men, ſent an Order into Scotland for baniſhing the Miniſters convicted of Treaſon.

About this Time Pope Paul the Vth publiſh'd a Brief directed to the Engliſh Roman Catholicks.

The Pope's Brief, forbidding the Engliſh Papiſts to come to Church, or take the Oath of Allegiance.

The Pope, after having lamented the Suffering of thoſe of his Communion in England, acquaints them of his being inform'd, “That the Government had lately oblig'd them under ſevere Penalties, to go to the Hereticks Churches, to make Part of their Congregation, and hear their Sermons: That he hopes thoſe who have behav'd themſelves with ſuch remarkable Conſtancy, will never yield to ſo criminal a Compliance: However, out of his paſtoral Care, and paternal Affection, he charges them, never to indulge themſelves any ſuch Latitude, or take ſuch dangerous Steps: That they can't join with Hereticks in religious Worſhip, without incurring God Almighty's Diſpleaſure, and hazarding their own Salvation. From hence he proceeds to caution them againſt taking the Oath of Allegiance.” The reſt may be ſeen in the Records. (k) And how ſlenderly the Pope was founded in his Exceptions to the Oath of Allegiance, will be obſerv'd by and by.

A Tranſlation of the Bible undertaken.

The Reader may remember a new Tranſlation of the Bible was reſolv'd at the late Hampton-Court Conference. To encourage this Work, the King had already made ſome preparatory Advances, as appears by his Letter to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury. It ſtands thus:

The King's Letter for encouraging and advancing the Work.

“Right Truſty and well beloved, we greet you well. Whereas we have appointed certain learned Men, to the Number of Four and fifty, for the Tranſlation of the Bible, and that in this Number divers of them have either no Eccleſiaſtical Preferment at all, or elſe ſo very ſmall, that the ſame is far unmeet for Men of their Deſerts. And yet we of our ſelf in any convenient Time cannot well Remedy it. Therefore we do hereby require you, That preſently you write in our Name, as well to the Archbiſhop of York, as to the reſt of the Biſhops of the Province of Canterbury, ſignifying unto them, that we do well and ſtreightly charge every one of them, as alſo the other Biſhops of the Province of York, as they tender our good Favour towards them, that (all Excuſes ſet apart) when any Prebend or Parſonage being rated in our Book of Taxations, the Prebend to Twenty Pound at the leaſt, and the Parſonage to the like Sum and upwards, ſhall next upon any Occaſion happen to be void, and to be either of their Patronage and Gift, or the like Parſonages ſo void, to be of the Patronage and Gift of any Perſon whatſoever, they do make ſtay thereof, and admit none unto it, until certifying us of the Avoidance of it, and of the Name of the Patron (if it be not of their own Gift) that we may commend for the ſame ſome ſuch of the learned Men, as we ſhall think fit to be prefer'd to it; not doubting of the Biſhops Readineſs to ſatisfy us herein, or that any of the Laity, when we ſhall in Time move them to ſo good and religious an Act, will be unwilling to give us the like due Contentment and Satisfaction: We our ſelf having taken the ſame Order for ſuch Prebends and Benefices as ſhall be void in our Gift, what we write to you of others, you muſt apply to your ſelves, as alſo not forget to move the ſaid Archbiſhop, and all the Biſhops, with their Deans and Chapters of both Provinces, as touching the other Point to be imparted by you unto them. Furthermore, we require you to move all our Biſhops to inform themſelves of all ſuch learned Men within their ſeveral Dioceſes, as having eſpecial Skill in the Hebrew and Greek Tongues, have taken Pains in their private Studies of the Scriptures, for the Clearing of any Obſcurities either in the Hebrew or in the Greek, or touching any Difficulties, or Miſtakings in the former Engliſh Tranſlation, which we have now commanded to be thoroughly view'd and amended, and thereupon to write unto them, earneſtly charging them, and ſignifying our Pleaſure therein, that they ſend ſuch their Obſervations, either to Mr. Livelie, our Hebrew Reader in Cambridge, or to Dr. Harding our Hebrew Reader in Oxford, or to Dr. Andrews, Dean of Weſtminſter, to be imparted to the reſt of their ſeveral Companies, that ſo our ſaid intended Tranſlation may have the Help and Furtherance of all our principal learned Men within this our

And that they might proceed to the beſt Advantage in their Method and Management, the King ſuggeſted the Inſtructions following.

Directions recommended to the Tranſlators by the King.

Alterations as might be: And was to paſs thro'-out, unleſs the Originals call'd plainly for an Amendment.

2. The Names of the Prophets and the inſpired Writers, with the other Names in the Text, to be kept as near as may be, as they ſtand recommended at preſent by cuſtomary Uſe.

3. The old Eccleſiaſtical Words to be retain'd. For Inſtance, the Word Church not to be tranſlated Congregation, &c.

4. When any Word has ſeveral Significations, that which has been commonly uſed by the moſt celebrated Fathers, ſhould be prefer'd; provided 'tis agreeable to the Context, and the Analogy of Faith.

5. As to the Chapters, they were to continue in their preſent Diviſion, and not to be alter'd without apparent Neceſſity.

6. The Margin not to be charg'd with any Notes, excepting for the Explanation of the Hebrew or Greek Words, which can't be turn'd without ſome Circumlocution, and therefore not ſo proper to be inſerted in the Text.

7. The Margin to be furniſh'd with ſuch Citations as ſerve for a Reference of one Place of Scripture to another.

8. Every Member of each Diviſion to take the Chapters aſſign'd for the whole Company; and after having gone thro' the Verſion or Corrections, all the Diviſion was to meet, examine their reſpective Performances, and come to a Reſolution, which Parts of them ſhould ſtand.

9. When any Diviſion had finiſh'd a Book in this Manner, they were to tranſmit it to the reſt to be farther conſider'd.

10. If any of the reſpective Diviſions ſhall doubt or diſſent upon the Review of the Book tranſmitted, they were to mark the Places, and ſend back the Reaſons of their Diſagreement: If they happen to differ about the Amendments, the Diſpute was to be refer'd to a general Committee, conſiſting of the beſt diſtinguiſh'd Perſons drawn out of each Diviſion. However, this Deciſion was not to be made till they had gone thro' the Work.

11. When any Place is found remarkably obſcure, Letters were to be directed by Authority to the moſt learned Perſons in the Univerſities, or Country for their Judgment upon the Text.

12. The Directors in each Company were to be the Deans of Weſtminſter and Cheſter, and the King's Profeſſors in Hebrew and Greek in each Univerſity.

13. The Tranſlations of Tindal, Mathews, Coverdale, Whitchurch, and Geneva, to be us'd when they came cloſer to the Original, than the Biſhop's Bible.

Laſtly, Three or Four of the moſt eminent Divines in each of the Univerſities, tho' not of the Number of the Tranſlators, were to be aſſign'd by the Vice-Chancellor, to conſult with other Heads of Houſes for reviewing the whole Tranſlation. This undertaking being manag'd with great Care and Deliberation, 'twas about Three Years before 'twas finiſh'd.

May 21. 1607. Dr. Reynold's Death, &c.

Dr. John Reynolds died ſoon after his engaging in this Work. He was born at Pinhoe in Devonſhire, bred in Oxford, where he was King's Profeſſor: His Brother William and himſelf happen'd to divide in their Perſuaſion: John was a zealous Papiſt, and William as heartily engag'd in the Reformation. Afterwards the Two Brothers entring into a cloſe Diſpute, argued with that Strength, that they turn'd each other. This ſurprizing Event gave Occaſion to a handſome Copy of Verſes.

This Dr. Reynolds, notwithſtanding his Appearing for the Diſſenters at the Hampton Court Conference, conform'd himſelf to the Church Ceremonies. For Inſtance, he conſtantly wore the Hood and Surplice, and receiv'd the Holy Euchariſt kneeling. And on his Death-Bed, he earneſtly deſired Abſolution in the Form preſcrib'd by the Rubrick: And having receiv'd it with Impoſition of Hands by Dr. Holland, expreſs'd his Satisfaction in a particular Manner. He had the Reputation of a great Scholar, and was unuſually happy in his Memory. (n)

The Pope's 2d Brief againſt the Oath of Allegiance.

The next conſiderable Occurrent, is Pope Paul the Vth's Second Brief to the Engliſh Roman Catholicks. The Deſign of it is to diſſuade their taking the Oath of Allegiance. The Pope had been inform'd the Authority of his firſt Brief had been queſtion'd: That the Directions in it were not the Reſult of his Holineſs's Judgment, but that he was over-rul'd into it by the Importunities of others: And that for this Reaſon the Practice of the Engliſh Roman Catholicks ought not to be govern'd by this Inſtrument. To remove this Miſtake, he aſſures them the Declaration againſt the Oath of Allegiance in the Brief above-mention'd was drawn by his ſpecial Direction, after he had thoroughly debated the Matter: And that therefore they are bound to practice by the plain and obvious Conſtruction of the Brief, rejecting all ſtrein'd Interpretations for Indulgence. This Second Admonition is dated from Rome, Auguſt the 22d. Anno Dom. 1607.

This Brief was ſeconded by a Letter of Cardinal Bellarmine to Blackwell: This Arch-Prieſt had lately been committed to Priſon, and enlarg'd himſelf by taking the Oath of Allegiance. To prevent being cenſur'd for this Compliance, he juſtifies his Conduct in a Letter to the Engliſh Clergy of his Communion: I ſhall give the Reader the Letter in his own Words.

" My very Reverend Aſſiſtants, and Dear Brethren.

" You know how many Years I have paſs'd over amongſt you in much Tribulation, and how often under God his holy Protection I have eſcaped Dangers, albeit they were ſtill imminent, and hanging over my Head. But now of late it hath pleas'd our gracious Lord to ſuffer me to fall into the Mouth of one who long hath gaped after me; for the Safety of whoſe Soul, if I be as careful as he hath been forward upon the Apprehenſion of my Body, I ſhall but perform the Duty of a good Chriſtian. I thank God, that in all my Afflictions of Twelve Days cloſe Impriſonment, and of Eight Examinations at Lambeth, I have given no Occaſion to any Perſon to ſpeak evil of me, neither (as I truſt) ſhall I run upon their hard Cenſures for any Thing I have done, I muſt confeſs, but not without much Grief, that in the Courſe of mine Examinations, I eſpied great Defects of ſincere Dealing among our ſelves; for the Lord Archbiſhop made an heavy preſent unto me of his Holineſs's Briefs, and of the Copies of my Letters about the Publication of the ſame,

“ with ſuch other preſſing Evidences of all my Proceedings that I could not avoid, without a reproachful Note, and much diſcredit, the Force of Truth in the Points objected againſt me: But the urging ſuper-eminent Point was to know, whether I had alter'd, or retain'd ſtill the Continuance of my former Opinion about the Lawfulneſs of taking the Oath of Allegiance: For Anſwer, finding what Hatred and Jealouſies we have incurr'd in the Opinion of his Majeſty and the State, for the Refuſal of the Oath, and thereupon making a Review of the Reaſons drawing me into the former publick Approbation thereof, and relying upon very moving Conſiderations deliver'd by his Majeſty 19 Martii, Anno 1603. which are now in Print. And farther, being inform'd how the Parliament did purpoſely avoid to call into Queſtion the Authority of the Pope to excommunicate, but did only intend to prevent the Dangers which might enſue, by the ſuppos'd Doctrine of ſuch Inference, as thereupon hath been made, and are mention'd in that Oath: Upon theſe Reſpects, and others, I granted and made known the Admittance of my former Opinion, and did accept of the Oath of Allegiance, and have taken the ſame, Word for Word, as it is ſet down in the Statute —— Afterwards falling into Speech of Excommunication, I deliver'd my Mind; Firſt, That I thought his Holineſs would not at any Time excommunicate his Majeſty: Secondly, That no lawful Excommunication can or ought to enforce ſuch grievous Effects, as have been made, and are mention'd in that Oath. Thirdly, That if any ſuch Excommunication ſhould come from his Holineſs, that by Virtue thereof it ſhould be thought that his Majeſty's Subjects were diſcharg'd of their Oaths, and Duties of Allegiance, or that they were bound to bear Arms againſt him, or to offer Violence unto his Royal Perſon, or to commit any Treachery or Treaſon againſt any of his Dominions; I would hold my ſelf nevertheleſs for my Part and Eſtate, bound by the Law of God to continue his Majeſty's moſt loyal and faithful Subject: And my Judgment farther is, that all good Catholicks ought to concur with me herein, and to do the like, for this is my Conſcience and Reſolution, that no lawful Excommunication can be juſtly denounc'd and publiſh'd by the Pope againſt his Majeſty, which can or ought (as I have ſaid) to inculcate, command or work, and bring forth any ſuch Effects: And that all his Majeſty's Subjects, the ſame notwithſtanding (if any ſuch ſhould ever happen) do ſtill continue as firmly oblig'd to his Majeſty, to all Intents and Purpoſes, as they were ever oblig'd at any Time before, or as if ſuch an Excommunication had never been thought of, framed, denounced, or publiſhed. And therefore not knowing whether ever I ſhall have Opportunity again to write unto you, I have thus at large diſcharg'd my Conſcience in this Matter, perſuading my ſelf, that you my Aſſiſtants and Dear Brethren will take the Oath as I have done, when it ſhall be offer'd unto you; and that you will inſtruct the Lay Catholicks that they may ſo do when it is tender'd unto them, ſo ſhall we ſhake off the falſe and grievous Imputations of Treaſons and Treacheries; ſo ſhall Lay Catholicks not overthrow their Eſtates, ſo ſhall we Effect that which his Holineſs deſireth, That is, to exhibit our Duties to God and our Prince, ſurely this will bring us gain and encreaſe of many Comforts, and ſo to conclude in the Apoſtle his Words. Charitas mea cum Omnibus vobis in Chriſto Jeſu. Amen. Georgius Blackwellus Archipresbyter, &
Protonotarius Apoſtolicus.

Bellarmine's diſſuaſive, &c. to Blackwell.

Bellarmine not pleas'd with Blackwell's Management, writes to him in an expoſtulatory Strain: And tells him, “That notwithſtanding the Modifications, Pretenſions of Civil Homage, and all the ſpecious Colours put upon the Oath of Allegiance, 'twas levell'd againſt the Pope's Supremacy; and that the Tendency of it was to transfer the Government of the Church from St. Peter's Succeſſor, to the Succeſſor of King Henry the VIIIth. That 'twas no better than a Snare laid to ſurprize the Catholicks: That the Impoſing this Oath might be compar'd to the Art made Uſe of by the Emperor Julian: That this Prince, to bring the Chriſtians under a Dilemma, and Diſtreſs them either in Fortune or Conſcience, planted the Figures of his pretended Deities about his Own: And thus if the Chriſtians paid a Reſpect to the Emperor's Statue, they lay under the Imputation of Idolatry: And if they refus'd this cuſtomary Regard, they were charg'd with Diſaffection, and puniſh'd as Mal-contents. For a farther diſſuaſive, the Cardinal reminds Blackwell of the Fortitude of Eleazer the Jewiſh High-Prieſt, who reſign'd himſelf to the Extremity of Torture, rather than eat Swine's Fleſh. * That the great St. Baſil deſpis'd the Menaces of the Emperor Valence, and choſe rather to run the utmoſt Hazzards, than give up the leaſt Syllable of the Conſubſtantial Belief. He likewiſe mentions the Conſtancy of Biſhop Fiſher, and Sir Thomas Moore, who loſt their Lives for their Adherence to the See of Rome. (p)

* Macc. id.

(p) See Records N° CII.

But here, not to mention the Inconcluſiveneſs of the Cardinal's Reaſoning, not to mention this, I ſay, he goes upon a wrong Ground, and quite miſtakes the Queſtion. He takes it for granted, the Pope's Spiritual Authority was ſtruck at, argues upon that Suppoſition, and brings his Inſtances in Defence of that Privilege. In ſhort, he miſtakes, as the King obſerves, (r) this Oath, for that of Supremacy. For the Oath of Allegiance touches nothing of this Nature, nor makes any Deciſion between the Pontificate and Regale. 'Tis deſign'd for no more than a Teſt of Loyalty: 'Twas contrived only to diſtinguiſh thoſe who believe the Pope a Temporal Monarch over all Chriſtendom, and ſuppoſe the King had forfeited his Dominions by his Revolt, as they call it, from the See of Rome; 'twas to diſtinguiſh, I ſay, ſuch intolerable Bigots from other Roman Catholicks of ſounder Principles: From ſuch who are ready to ſtand by their Prince, tho' under never ſo great a Miſperſuaſion: Who readily grant that neither Schiſm nor Hereſy can affect a Title to the Crown, or diſable the Prince's Government. That this is the Meaning of the Oath of Allegiance, will appear from the Recital. It ſtands thus:

The Cardinal Miſtakes the Oath of Allegiance, for that of Supremacy.

(r) Apology for the Oath of Allegiance. King James's Works, p. 263.

The Oath of Allegiance.

I A. B. do truly and ſincerely acknowledge, profeſs, teſtifie, and declare in my Conſcience before God and the

the World, that our Sovereign Lord King James is lawful and rightful King of this Realm, and of all other his Majeſty's Dominions and Countries: And that the Pope, neither of himſelf, nor by any Authority of the Church or See of Rome, or by any other Means with any other, hath any Power or Authority to depoſe the King, or to diſpoſe of any of his Majeſty's Kingdoms or Dominions, or to authorize any foreign Prince to invade or annoy him, or his Countries, or to diſcharge any of his Subjects of their Allegiance and Obedience to his Majeſty, or to give Licence or Leave to any of them to bear Arms, raiſe Tumult, or to offer any Violence or Hurt to his Majeſty's Royal Perſon, State or Government, or to any of his Majeſty's Subjects, within his Majeſty's Dominions.

Alſo I do ſwear from my Heart, that notwithſtanding any Declaration or Sentence of Excommunication, or Deprivation made or granted, or to be made or granted by the Pope or his Succeſſors, or by any Authority deriv'd, or pretended to be deriv'd from him or his See, againſt the ſaid King, his Heirs and Succeſſors, or any Abſolution of the ſaid Subjects from their Obedience: I will bear Faith and true Allegiance to his Majeſty, his Heirs, and Succeſſors, and him and them will defend to the uttermoſt of my Power, againſt all Conſpiracies and Attempts whatſoever, which ſhall be made againſt his or their Perſons, their Crown and Dignity, by Reaſon or Colour of any ſuch Sentence or Declaration, or otherwiſe, and will do my beſt endeavour to diſcloſe, and make known unto his Majeſty, his Heirs and Succeſſors, all Treaſons and traiterous Conſpiracies, which I ſhall know or hear of to be againſt him or any of them.

And I do further ſwear, that I do from my Heart abhor, deteſt, and abjure, as impious and heretical, this damnable Doctrine and Poſition, That Princes which be excommunicated or deprived by the Pope, may be depos'd or murther'd by their Subjects, or any other whatſoever.

And I do believe, and in Conſcience am reſolved, that neither the Pope, nor any Perſon whatſoever, hath Power to abſolve me of this Oath, or any Part thereof, which I acknowledge by good and full Authority to be lawfully miniſtred unto me, and do renounce all Pardons and Diſpenſations to the Contrary. And all theſe Things I do plainly and ſincerely acknowledge and ſwear, according to theſe expreſs Words by me ſpoken and according to the plain and common Senſe and underſtanding of the ſame Words, without any Equivocation or mental Evaſion, or ſecret Reſervation whatſoever. And I do make this Recognition and Acknowledgment, heartily, willingly, and truly, upon the true Faith of a Chriſtian. So help me God. (s)

(s) 1 Jac. 1. cap. 4.

And that this Oath was no modern Impoſition, no Preſſure upon the Conſcience of the Subject, the King proves in his Apology (t) from unexceptionable Authorities. To this Purpoſe he cites the Decrees of the 4th, 5th, 6th, and 10th Councils of Toledo. To begin.

(t) King James's Works, pag. 265.

The Decree of the 4th Council runs thus:

The King cites ſeveral Councils for the Oath of Allegiance.

Whoſoever either of us, or any of the Spaniſh Nation, ſhall by Conſpiracy or diſloyal Practice, break his Oath of Fidelity which he has taken for the Preſervation of his Country, and the Life of his Prince; or ſhall engage in any violent Attempt upon the King's Perſon, or endeavour to deprive him of his Regal Power; or ſhall preſume to graſp at the Sovereignty by Uſurpation; let him be accurs'd in the Sight of God, the Father, and his Holy Angels, and thrown out of the Communion of the Catholick Church, which he has profan'd by his Perjury: Let him be declar'd an Alien to the Society of all Chriſtian People: And let all the Abettors of his Wickedneſs ſtand in the ſame foreign Condition; for thoſe who join in the Crime, ought not to be parted in the Puniſhment. (u)

(u) Concil. Tolet. 4. Can. 47. Anno Dom. 633.

This Sentence is thrice repeated in the ſame Canon, and almoſt in the ſame Words.

After this, the Synod mov'd it might be confirm'd by the Approbation of all preſent. To this all the Clergy and People anſwer'd: Whoſoever ſhall have the Confidence to violate this Decree of yours, let them be Anathema Maran-atha: That is, let them utterly periſh at the Lord's coming, and let them and their Accomplices have their Portion with Judas Iſcariot. Amen.

And in the 5th Council of Toledo (w) 'tis farther decreed, That this Canon touching the Oath of Allegiance, ſhall be repeated in every Spaniſh Council. The Words are theſe: Conſidering Men are prone to Miſchief and Forgetfulneſs of Duty, the holy Synod has ordain'd, that in every Council of the Spaniſh Biſhops, the Decree of the general Council (x) made for the Security of our Princes, ſhall be pronounc'd with an audible Voice at the End of the Synod: That thus being frequently proclaim'd in the Ears of the People, their Memories may be refreſh'd, and their Conſciences frightned from the Practice of Rebellion.

(w) Concil. Tolet. 5. Can. 7. An. Dom. 636.

(x) Synod. Tolet. 4. Univerſalis & Synodus magna dicta. Synod. Tolet. 5. cap. 2.

The 6th Council ſpeaks thus; We declare before God and all the heavenly Hierarchy, in the Preſence of the Prophets and Apoſtles, and the glorious Company of Martyrs, and before all the Catholick Church, That no Man ſhall preſume to attempt the Deſtruction of the King: No Man ſhall touch the Life of the Prince: No Man ſhall deprive him of the Kingdom: No Man ſhall traiterouſly or tyrannically preſume to uſurp the Sovereignty of the Realm: No Man ſhall diſtreſs the Prince in his Adverſity, by joining Traitors and Rebels againſt him: And if any of us ſhall venture upon any of theſe Inſtances of Diſloyalty and Prevarication, let the Curſes of God be diſcharg'd at him; and let him be look'd on as a Perſon irrecoverably condemn'd to eternal Vengeance.

And in the 10th Council held at the ſame Place 'tis ordain'd, (y) That if any of the Clergy or Religious from the higheſt to the loweſt Order, ſhall be found guilty of breaking the Oaths made for the Preſervation of the King's Perſon, let him be forthwith degraded from all Dignity and creditable Diſtinction, and barr'd all Poſts of Honour and Truſt.

(y) Conc. Tolet. 10, Can. 2. Anno Dom. 694.

The Occaſion of making theſe Canons was to meet with the Diſloyalty of the Subject; for it ſeems many of them were ſuſpected for Inſincerity; and that they either took the Oath with Equivocating Reſerves, or elſe made no Conſcience to fly off from the ſolemn Engagement. (z)

The Council of Aix la Chapelle deliver themſelves to the ſame Purpoſe. (a) If any Biſhop or other Churchman of inferior Degree ſhall hereafter through Fear or Covetouſneſs, or any other Motive, revolt from our Lord the Emperor Lewis, or violate the Oath of Allegiance ſworn to him, or ſhall adhere to his Enemies, let him by Vertue of this Synodical Sentence be depriv'd of all his Preferments.

(a) Concil. Aquiſgran. ſub Ludovic Pio & Greg. 4. Can. 12. Anno Dom. 836.

Bellarmine, in the Letter before us, to Blackwell, endeavours to clear the Pope from giving Countenance to Violence againſt Princes. Was it ever heard, ſays the Cardinal, from the Beginning of Chriſtianity to the preſent Time, that any Pope ever commanded or allow'd the Killing of any Prince, though an Heretick, an Heathen, or a Perſecutor? But here the King takes Notice, in the firſt Place, that Bellarmine makes an artificial Omiſſion; he forgets taking off the Imputation of the Pope's abetting Inſurrections, and depoſing of Princes; and that the Cardinal had elſewhere plainly aſſerted the Pope's Authority for diſpoſing of Crowns. But,

King James's Works, p. 266, 267.

But, ſecondly, That ſome Popes have directly allow'd the Killing of Princes his Majeſty endeavours to prove from the ſeveral Rebellions they have raiſed in the Empire; particularly Gregory the 7th inciting Henry the 5th to make War upon the Emperor his Father Henry the 4th. But the King waving theſe more ancient Relations, comes cloſer to a modern Inſtance, and cites Sixtus Quintus's Oration in Commendation of James Clement, who murder'd King Henry the Third of France.

Id. pag. 270.

As to the Oath of Allegiance, Pope Paul the Vth was ſo far from allowing it upon any Conſideration, that he remov'd Blackwell from his Poſt of Arch-Prieſt for his Compliance above-mention'd; and afterwards directed a third Brief to one Birchett, whom his Holineſs had put in Blackwell's Place. The Brief was to admoniſh this Birchett, that if any Engliſh Prieſt had either taken the Oath, or aſſerted it might be lawfully taken, he was to declare ſuch a Complier had incurr'd the Forfeiture of all Rights and Privileges granted him by the Church, or the Apoſtolick See.

But the Learned Monſieur Du Pin takes Notice theſe Briefs of Pope Paul are little to be regarded in this Matter: For as this Gentleman obſerves, moſt of the Engliſh Roman Catholicks took the Oath of Allegiance without the leaſt Imputation of Heterodoxy; and not only Blackwell, but Widdrington, and ſeveral other Papiſts wrote in Defence of it. And afterwards when the Sorbon Divines were conſulted upon the Caſe, Whether this Oath might be ſworn to King Charles the Firſt? The Faculty made no Scruple to reſolve the Queſtion in the Affirmative. (b)

This Year in July Martin Heton Biſhop of Ely departed this Life. He was Son to George Heton Eſq; of Heton Hall in the County of Lancaſter, who was deſcended in a direct Line from Sir Alan de Heton living in the Reign of King Richard the Second. The reſt of this Prelate's Character and Preferment may be ſeen in my Supplement to Morery's Dictionary.

The Death of Thomas Ravis, firſt Dean of Chriſt-Church, and afterwards ſucceſſively Biſhop of Glouceſter and London, happen'd about this Time. He was born at Malden in Surrey, and extracted from a conſiderable Family, as appears by the Inſcription on the Tomb: He was a very graceful Perſon, and ſupported his Character to Advantage.

Chelſea College founded by the King at the Inſtance of Dr. Sutcliffe.

To proceed: The Parliament met at Weſtminſter February the 19th, 1609. ſate till July the 23d, 1610, and was then prorogued again till the 10th of October following. There was nothing done excepting the making an Act to enable the Fellows and Provoſt of Chelſea College to dig a Trench out of the River Lee, to erect Engines, Water-Works, &c. to convey and carry Water in cloſe Pipes under Ground unto the City of London, and the Suburbs thereof, for the perpetual Maintenance and Suſtentation of the ſaid Provoſt and Fellows, and their Succeſſors by the Rent to be made of the ſaid Water ſo conveyed. (c)

(c) 7 Jac. 1. cap. 9.

The Preamble of the Statute ſets forth the Deſign, That his Majeſty for Defence of true Religion now eſtabliſhed within this Realm of England, and for the refuting of Errors and Hereſies repugnant unto the ſame, hath been graciouſly pleas'd by his Letters-Patents under the Great Seal of England, to found a College at Chelſea near London, and therein to place certain Learned Divines, and to incorporate the ſame by the Name of the Provoſt and Fellows of the College of King James, in Chelſea near London, of the Foundation of the ſame James King of England, and hath of his moſt Gracious Bounty and Goodneſs, not only endowed the ſame with certain Lands, Privileges, and Immunities, but hath alſo for their further Maintenance and Suſtentation, given unto them a Capacity and Ability to receive and take from his Majeſty, or any of his Loving Subjects, any Lands, Tenements, Hereditaments, Gifts, Benefits and Profits whatſoever, not exceeding in the whole, the yearly Value of Three thouſand Pounds, as in and by the ſaid Letters-Patents doth more at large appear.

From hence the Reader may perceive 'twas founded for a Defence of the eſtabliſh'd Church: 'Twas to afford Divines Leiſure and other Conveniences to ſpend their Time wholly in Controverſy, and maintain the Reformation againſt Papiſts and Diſſenters.

The Names of the Provoſt and Fellows ſettled by the King are as follow.

There was likewiſe a Proviſion made for two Hiſtorians, who were to tranſmit the Affairs of Church and State to Poſterity: Thoſe appointed by the King, were

Next to the King, Dr. Sutcliffe the Provoſt, went fartheſt in the Foundation, having convey'd Farms to the Value of Three hundred Pounds per Annum upon this College. This Foundation, though ſtrongly countenanc'd at firſt, miſcarry'd afterward, and came to nothing. The Conjectures upon the Cauſes of this Miſfortune are too long to mention.

Archbiſhop Bancroft's Scheme for furniſhing a better Maintenance for the Clergy.

Archbiſhop Bancroft offer'd a ſignificant Project to the Parliament for furniſhing the Clergy with a competent Maintenance. The Heads of the Scheme are as follow. (e)

"1. That all Predial Tythes of Benefices with
"Cure may be paid in Kind hereafter, &c.
"2. That Perſonal Tythes may be urg'd upon Oath, being confeſs'd to be due by Law.

(e) Paper-Office.

“ 3. That as Oblations are due by Law to Parſons and Vicars that have Cure of Souls, they may accordingly be paid unto them, as heretofore hath been accuſtom'd, viz. at Marriages, Burials, and upon ſolemn Feaſt-Days, as Chriſtmas-day, Eaſter-day, Whitſunday, Allhallows-day, and at the Times of receiving the Holy Communion, &c.

“ 4. That all Abby-Lands now exempted, may pay Tythes in Kind to the Parſons and Vicars in whoſe Pariſhes they lie.

“ 5. That all Lands alter'd within theſe Sixty Years paſt from Tillage, may pay Tythes according to the Value they formerly paid.

“ 6. That all Parks and Warrens made within theſe Sixty Years laſt paſt, may pay Tythes, either according to their former Value when they were in Tillage, or according to ſome reaſonable Rate by the Acre.

“ 7. That Parks diſpark'd within theſe Sixty Years, may pay Tythes in Kind.

“ 8. That the Occupiers of Lands of ſuch Pariſhes that have been within theſe Sixty Years paſt utterly depopulated, and do now pay no Tythes at all, may hereafter pay all their Tythes in Kind to the next poor Parſons adjoining.

“ 9. That ſmall Benefices near adjoining may be ſo united, as they may be holden by one Man.

“ 10. That Parſons and Vicars may have Right and Freedom of Common with the reſt of the Pariſhioners.

“ 11. That the ancient Eccleſiaſtical Conſtition in England for paying of Tythe-Lambs, and Wool, may be renewed and eſtabliſh'd. Lindewood de Decimis. §. Quoniam.

“ 12. That all Penſions may hereafter be diſcharg'd, which are not paid to Eccleſiaſtical Perſons.

“ 13. That Miniſters in Cities and Towns incorporate, and other great Towns, may have their Tythes according to the Rents of Houſes after the Rate of London.

“ 14. That the Landlords of ſuch Houſes in every City incorporate, and great Towns, may be chargeable with ſuch Payments to their Miniſters, and not their Under-Tenants.

“ 15. That Parſons and Vicars may have Tythe-Wood duly paid unto them according to the Conſtitution of John Stratford Archbiſhop of Canterbury. Lindewood de Verborum Significatione.

“ 16. That an Order may be taken for the ſettling of Glebe-Lands, which are by ſtrong Hand detain'd from divers Parſons and Vicars, by ſome Commiſſions for Survey upon Oaths: And that it may be provided, that no Patron or Lord of any Manor in any Pariſh may hereafter have the Glebe in Farm.

“ 17. That in Chapels of Eaſe the Cure may be maintain'd hereafter by them that have Eaſe thereby, without diminiſhing the Parſons or Vicars Tythes.

“ 18. That it may be lawful hereafter for any well-diſpoſed Man or Woman to give, purchaſe, or lay Tenements, Rents, Lands or Annuities in Fee, unto the Glebe of the Church notwithſtanding the Statute of Mortmain.

“ 19. That all Lay-Patrons, when they preſent any Miniſter to an Eccleſiaſtical Living, may take the like Oath againſt Simony that Miniſters do; or elſe that they may forfeit their Patronage for ever to the King, when it ſhall be proved that they have committed Simony upon any ſuch Preſentation.

“ 20. That it may be held Simony to ſell Advowſons as well as Preſentations; or that all Advowſons to be made hereafter may be utterly void.

“ 21. That the Tythes of Oade, Hops, Roots, Coals, and other Minerals, and likewiſe of Lime-kilns and Brick-kilns, may be truly paid to the Parſon or Vicar that hath Cure of Souls.

“ 22. That it may be lawful for Spiritual Perſons to purchaſe and take Leaſes for Lives or Years, as other of his Majeſty's Subjects may do, notwithſtanding any Statutes made to the contrary.

“ 23. That all Lands that have been either won from the Sea, or otherwiſe drained and recovered from ſurrounding, may be laid to ſome Pariſhes adjoining; and that the Owners or Occupiers, and all others that have any Benefit of ſuch Lands, may pay their Tythes in Kind to the Parſons or Vicars of thoſe Pariſhes whereunto the ſaid Lands are laid.

“ 24. That a Subſidy may be granted for the redeeming of Impropriations, and that the ſame redeem'd may be of the Biſhop's Patronage in whoſe Dioceſe they lie.

“ 25. That if the laſt Motion may not now be entertain'd, then there may be a free Paſſage given to the Law yet in Force (as it is ſuppos'd) that all Impropriations may be declar'd void, and become Preſentatives, which have no Endowment for Vicars.

“ 26. That where there are Vicaridges endow'd, which do belong to Impropriations, but yet are no competent Living for a ſufficient Miniſter, Biſhops may have Authority in their Dioceſe where ſuch Vicaridges are, to allot ſome farther Portions for their better Maintenance out of the ſaid Impropriations.

“ 27. That ſome Order may be ſet down for the repairing of Chancels of Churches impropriate, which are every where in wonderful Decay.

“ 28. That Mortuaries may be reſtor'd.

Paper-Office. Ibidem.

Whether Bancroft's Project ended here or not, I am uncertain; but the Subject is continued upon a Break with theſe Initial Letters,

The L. S.

Further Ways and Means ſuggeſted for this Purpoſe.

“ A ſecond Means for raiſing ſufficient Maintenance, may be done by ſevering unto divers Churches ſuch Vicaridges or Parſonages as are united into one: As for Example: At Bampton in the County of Oxford, there are three perpetual Vicars canonically inſtituted and inducted to ſerve the Cure in that Parochial Church, every one of the ſaid Vicars having Maintenance ſufficient according to one of the Values aforeſaid. At Watſdon in the County of Buckingham, there be two, if not three Parſons canonically inſtituted and inducted to ſerve the Cure of that one Pariſh-Church, every of them alſo having ſufficient Maintenance as aforeſaid. At—in the County of Devon, as I have been credibly inform'd, is the like; and it may be that there are in many other Places the like.

“ Now then it ſeemeth there be Eight or Nine Miniſters, every of them enjoying Competency of Maintenance appointed to ſerve theſe three Cures, that ſix of thoſe Livings, as they ſhall happen to fall void, might ſerve ſix other Parochial Churches near adjoining and wanting Maintenance.

“That out of the Glebe or Demeſn Lands belonging to any Church appropried, all Manner of Tythes be paid to the Vicar of the ſame Church appropried, by the Owner, Proprietary, or Farmer of the ſame Appropriation. That the Tenth of the Tenth of all Corn, Hay, Wood, Wool, Lamb, &c. ariſing within the Places tythable of any Church appropried, be likewiſe paid in their proper Kind to the Vicar of the ſame Church appropried.

“That it may be lawful for any Lord of a Manor, leaving ſufficient Commons belonging to the ſaid Manor (the Vicaridge of the Pariſh-Church wherein the ſame Manor lieth, having no Glebe-Land, or not having Glebe-Land to the Number of twenty Acres) to endow the ſame Vicaridge or Parſonage with twenty Acres of Waſte, or with ſo many Acres as ſhall make up the Acres already belonging to the Vicaridge to the Number of twenty Acres, and no more.

“That all Novalia ariſing within any Pariſh wherein there is a perpetual Vicar endowed, whether the ſame Novalia be of Hops, Oade, Iron, Mine, Coals, Turff, Peat, &c. ſhall from thenceforth only be payable to the Vicars of the ſame Parochial Church, and not to any Owner, Farmer, or Proprietor of the Impropriation.

“Whereas unto the Parſons whoſe Churches are not appropried, and unto Vicars, whoſe Churches are appropried, for Gardens, heretofore hath been paid only a Penny, which Penny at the firſt was alſo paid only in Reſpect of Flowers, Pot-Herbs, and ſuch-like ſmall Trifles; that from henceforth out of all Gardens, and Garden-Plots be paid unto the ſaid Parſons and Vicars, not only the ſaid Penny, but alſo the Tenth of all Hops, Beans, Peaſe, Wheat, Rye, Barly, Roots, Roſes, Apples, Cherries, Strawberries, Artichokes, and ſuch-like.

“Where in ſome Place certain Money called Mead-Silver, by Cuſtom hath been paid in Lieu of Tythe-Hay, that in thoſe Places the Tenth be paid from henceforth in Specie: And if the Church whereunto the Mead-Silver heretofore hath been paid, be a Church appropried, that then the Tythe-Hay be paid unto the Vicar only; and that the Vicar pay to the Improprietary ſuch Mead-Silver, as uſually hath been receiv'd.

“Where it is pretended in many Places, that by Cuſtom there is not any Tythe-Milk to be paid by him who hath not ſeven Calves at the leaſt, by which Means ſome that may keep Seven or Eight Kine, will never keep above Six; that from henceforth this, as an unreaſonable Cuſtom, be annull'd; and that the Tythe-Milk of all Kine be paid in Specie as by the Eccleſiaſtical Law it is due, and that always either to the Parſon of the Church not appropried, or to the Vicar of the ſaid Church appropried.

“Whereas much Fraud is daily uſed among the meaner Sort of People about the Payment of their Tythes, Wool, Lambs, Calves, White of Kine, &c. by Reaſon of taking Grounds, and keeping Cattle in divers Pariſhes, and by removing them out of one Pariſh into another, at or immediately before the Sale and ſhearing their Sheep, whereupon much Trouble and Wrangling for ſmall Matter oftentimes enſueth: I leave it to be conſider'd, whether it were not meet that their Tythe of Wool, Lamb, Calf, and White of Kine, ſhould entirely be paid to the Miniſter of that Parochial Church wherein the ſame Sheep and Cattle for the greateſt Part of the Year be feeding and couchant. And if they happen to be feeding and couchant within two Pariſhes alike, that then the ſaid Tythes to be paid yearly to that Miniſter only, within whoſe Pariſh the Owner ſhall inhabit, provided that the Miniſter to whom ſuch entire Tythes ſhall be paid, or to whom the ſaid ought to be paid, be anſwerable to the Miniſter of the other Church, for ſuch Part of thoſe Tythes, as for the feeding and couching of the ſame Sheep and Cattle within his Pariſh proportionably ſhall be due.

“Whereas the King's moſt Excellent Majeſty is poſſeſs'd of divers Parks out of which Tythes, and other Eccleſiaſtical Commodities are due, and out of which alſo Tythes in Time paſt have been paid; that his Highneſs in Regard of ſome Maintenance to be allow'd out of his Imperial Grounds, unto the Miniſters within whoſe Pariſhes the ſame Parks are ſituate, would graciouſly be pleas'd to take Order that the ſame Miniſters from henceforth might enjoy a competent Allowance of ſome Paſtorage within the ſaid Parks, for the keeping of a certain Number of Kine, or other Cattle, towards the Proviſion of their Houſes, and keeping Hoſpitality.

“And whereas divers Vicaridges valued in the King's Books at 10, 16, 20 Pounds, or above, have no other kind of yearly Maintenance but theſe Values paid unto them only in Money; out of which alſo, according to their Rates, the Vicars pay Firſt-Fruits, Tenths and Subſidies, by Means whereof that which is left becometh very ſmall; That his Majeſty would graciouſly be pleaſed either to remit the whole Firſt-Fruits, &c. due out of theſe Vicaridges, or at leaſtwiſe abate ſomewhat of their uſual Payments.

“That it may be lawful for any learned, able preaching Miniſter, plac'd in any Parochial Church, to take to Farm the Impropriation of the ſame Church, or any Part thereof, the ſame Farm no longer to continue than only during the Time of his Reſidency and Miniſtry in the ſame Church.

“That it may not be lawful for any Miniſter inſtituted to any Benefice with Cure, to demiſe the Manſion-houſe, Glebe-Land, or any Part of the Tythes thereof directly or indirectly, mediately or immediately to the Patron, or to his Uſe.

“That no Leaſe hereafter to be made by any Incumbent of any Benefice with Cure, ſhall be confirm'd by the Biſhop and the Patron: And that all Leaſes heretofore made of any Benefice with Cure, and confirm'd by the Biſhop and Patron for more Years than one and twenty, may utterly be void, as being at the firſt made upon corrupt Conſideration.

“That it may be lawful for any Perſon holding any Impropriation or Tythes of the King in Capite, or Knights-Service, to give the ſame Impropriation and Tythes, or any Part thereof to the Uſe of a learned and able preaching Miniſter, to be plac'd within the ſame Pariſh.

By this Scheme the Archbiſhop's Care for the Intereſt of Religion, and his Capacity in ſuggeſting Meaſures, are ſufficiently diſcover'd. However, the Attempt fail'd of Succeſs; for the Parliament, it ſeems, was not diſpos'd for going in to the Propoſal.

During this Seſſion King Henry the 4th of France, was ſtab'd in his Coach by Ravilliac. This execrable Murther gave another Alarm to the Engliſh: For now the King publiſh'd a Proclamation ſtrictly commanding all Jeſuits and Roman Catholick Prieſts to depart the Kingdom; and all Recuſants of the Laity were forbidden coming within Ten Miles of the Court. There was likewiſe a Statute enacted for all Perſons of Office, Character, or publick Conſideration, to take the Oath of Allegiance. (f)

An Act obliging the moſt conſiderable Part of the Subjects to take the Oath of Allegiance.

(f) 7 Jac. 1. cap. 6. Febr. 10. 160$\frac{9}{10}$.

The Convocation met ſome few Days before the Parliament; but all the Buſineſs they did, was the granting a Subſidy. Upon the King's Writ the Archbiſhop prorogu'd the two Houſes to the 17th of October following. (g)

(g) Extract of Convoc.

A Parliament at Edinburgh reſtores the Temporal Juriſdiction of the Church. June 24. Anno Dom. 1609.

To ſay ſomething of Scotland: The laſt Year at a Parliament held at Edinburgh, the Acts paſs'd in the preceding Convention were confirm'd; “ particularly the Juriſdiction of Commiſſaries “ were reſtor'd to the Church. The Preamble ſets “ forth, That in all well-govern'd Republicks, the “ Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Juriſdictions are ſeparate “ and diſtinct; and that the Temporal Juriſdiction “ of the Kirk flows only from his Majeſty; which is an implied Conceſſion, that the Spiritual does not. By the Act, the Cognizance of ſeveral “ Cauſes anciently belonging to the Biſhops “ Courts, but lately ſettled in the College of Juſtice, are now return'd to the Ordinaries and the “ Lords of the Seſſion, by Way of Compenſation, “ are allow'd Ten thouſand Pounds Scotch, to “ be yearly paid out of the Cuſtoms of that “ Kingdom. (h)

(h) Jac. 6. Parl. 20. cap. 6, & 11. Id. cap. 2.

By another Statute, “ Thoſe who are already, “ or ſhall hereafter be excommunicated for not “ Conforming to the Eſtabliſh'd Religion, incur the Forfeiture of their Eſtates, which are “ to be ſeiz'd for his Majeſty's Uſe.

Id. cap. 8.

By this Parliament the Habits of the Judges and Magiſtracy, of Churchmen and Lawyers, was referr'd to the King's appointment.

To proceed: His Majeſty wrote earneſtly to the Scotch Biſhops to extend their Adminiſtration and manage to the Length of their Character: But theſe Prelates were apprehenſive the venturing upon ſuch a Change without the Conſent of the Miniſters, might be ill receiv'd. To make the Affair therefore more practicable, a General Aſſembly was held at Glaſgow, the Earl of Dunbar and the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews were the King's Commiſſioners. The Earl open'd the Meeting by acquainting them, that his Majeſty's Intention was to ſettle the Church in a commendable Condition of Diſcipline; and to give more particular Directions, and diſpoſe them to a through Compliance, his Majeſty's Letter was read. 'Tis ſuperſcrib'd thus:

July 8. Anno Dom. 1610.

The Biſhops Authority recovered in a great Meaſure by the Aſſembly at Glaſgow.

> To the Right Reverend Fathers in God, our Right Truſty, and Well-beloved Couſins and Counſellors, and others our Truſty and Well-beloved the Prelates, Noblemen, and others our Loving Subjects, as well Miniſtry as Laity, preſently met and convened in this Aſſembly.

The King's Letter to the Aſſembly.

“ The Letter ſets forth, That nothing has ſo “ much diſſerv'd the Glory of God, and the “ Repoſe of the Church, as the Want of Order “ and Government, without which no Society, “ either Eccleſiaſtical or Civil, can poſſibly ſubſiſt. And notwithſtanding the Singularity, “ the Obſtinacy, or Ignorance of ſome People “ kept up a Sort of Headleſs Government for a “ while; yet the Inconvenience and Impotence “ of this Adminiſtration was quickly diſcover'd. “ The King therefore, to put a Stop to this Evil which had otherwiſe proved an incurable Cancer, had aſſiſted in Perſon at ſeveral Aſſemblies, “ had provided a Maintenance for Eccleſiaſticks, and recover'd their Juriſdiction from “ the Encroachments of the Laity. Theſe “ Things conſider'd, his Majeſty hoped that “ the Church being ſenſible of their Errors in “ ſuffering the late Anarchy in their Body, would “ have made their Application to him for eſtabliſhing the Eccleſiaſtical Government upon “ the Primitive Model; That a proper Remedy might be found out to cloſe the Diviſions, “ and put an End to the preſent Diſtractions. “ But whether this Negligence and Miſconduct “ was chargeable upon the Unwillingneſs or Unworthineſs of the Fathers of the Church, or “ that the Factious Singularity of thoſe of lower “ Condition, was the Occaſion of continuing “ this Confuſion, his Majeſty is uncertain. “ However, conceiving himſelf bound not to “ ſuffer ſuch dilatory Proceedings in ſo important a Matter, he has thought fit to convene “ the preſent Aſſembly; not ſo much upon the “ Score of Neceſſity, as if the Conſent of the “ Members was abſolutely requiſite to the Things “ propoſed: But to ſhew his Majeſty's Zeal for “ the Glory of God, and the Inexcuſableneſs of “ thoſe who refuſe to concur with him for the “ Intereſt of the Church. However, hoping “ their preſent Management will give him a “ better Opinion of them for the future, he refers them to the Earl of Dunbar and the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews, who have Inſtructions “ to acquaint them farther with his Majeſty's “ Pleaſure.” The Letter is dated from Thetford, May the 8th, 1610. (k)

(k) MS. Acts of the Aſſembly, penes Archibald. Campbell Armig.

After the reading his Majeſty's Letter, the Aſſembly appointed a Committee to draw up ſuch Heads of Diſcipline as they thought neceſſary for the Government of the Church, and giving the King Satisfaction.

After ſome Days ſpent in forming a Draught, and debating the Matter, the following Articles were all ratify'd and approv'd by the whole Aſſembly.

The Articles ſettled.

“ 1. 'Twas declar'd, That the late Aſſembly “ at Aberdeen was null, principally becauſe it “ had not his Majeſty's Allowance; and that “ the appointing Aſſemblies is Part of the Prerogative Royal: 'Tis likewiſe agreed, “ a General Aſſembly ſhall be held once a “ Year.

“ 2. 'Tis declar'd expedient, that the Biſhops “ ſhould be Moderators in every Dioceſan Synod; “ That theſe Synods ſhould be held twice a “ Year; And that where the Dioceſes are large, “ there may be two or three Synods conven'd “ at a proper Diſtance for the Eaſe of the “ Miniſtry.

“ 3. That no Sentence of Excommunication “ or Abſolution be pronounced againſt, or in “ Favour of any Perſon, without the Knowledge and Approbation of the Biſhop of the “ Dioceſe, who muſt be anſwerable to his Majeſty for the Regularity of his Proceedings.

“ And when the Proceſs is fairly and legally finiſh'd, Sentence is to be pronounc'd at the Biſhop's Direction, by the Miniſter of the Pariſh where the Offender dwells. And in caſe the Biſhop ſhall delay pronouncing the Sentence againſt any Perſon that deſerves it, and where the Proceſs has been carry'd on to a juſt Length; in caſe the Biſhop ſhall be convicted of ſuch Misbehaviour by a General Aſſembly, his Majeſty ſhall be acquainted with what is paſs'd in order to furniſh the See with another Prelate.

“ 4. That for the future all Preſentations ſhall be directed to the Biſhop of the Dioceſe, and that a Teſtimonial of the Life and Abilities of the Perſon preſented ſhould be ſent to the Biſhop by the neighbouring Miniſtry: And the Biſhop finding him qualify'd upon his own Examination, is to take in the Aſſiſtance of ſome of the Miniſters of the Bounds where the Perſon is to officiate: And then, as the Manuſcript ſpeaks, to perfect the whole Act of Ordination.

“ 5. That in Order to the depriving of Miniſters, the Biſhop, with the Aſſiſtance of ſome Miniſters of the Neighbourhood where the Delinquent officiates, ſhall proceed to try the Cauſe, and pronounce Sentence.

“ 6. That every Miniſter at his Admiſſion, ſhall ſwear Obedience to his Majeſty and his Ordinary, purſuant to the Form ſet down in the Conference held in the Year of our Lord 1571. in the following Tenor.

The Oath taken by Miniſters at their Admiſſion to a Benefice.

I A. B. now nominated and admitted to the Church of D. utterly teſtifie and declare in my Conſcience, That the Right Excellent; Right High and Mighty Prince James the 6th, by the Grace of God, King of Scots, is the only lawful Supreme Governor of this Realm, as well in Things Temporal, as in Conſervation and Purgation of Religion: And that no foreign Prince, Prelate, State or Potentate, has or ought to have any Juriſdiction, Power, Superiority, Preeminence, or Authority Eccleſiaſtical or Spiritual within this Realm. And therefore I utterly renounce and forſake all foreign Juriſdictions, Powers, Superiorities and Authorities, and promiſe that from this Time forth I ſhall and will bear Faith, and true Allegiance to his Highneſs, his Heirs and lawful Succeſſors: And to my Power ſhall aſſiſt and defend all Juriſdictions, Privileges, Preeminences and Authorities, granted and belonging to his Highneſs, his Heirs, and lawful Succeſſors, or united and annexed to his Royal Crown. And farther, I acknowledge and confeſs to have and hold the ſame Church and Poſſeſſions of the ſame (under God only) of his Majeſty and Crown Royal of this Realm. And for the ſaid Poſſeſſions I do Homage preſently unto his Highneſs in your Preſence; And to his Majeſty, his Heirs, and lawful Succeſſors ſhall be faithful and true. So help me God.

“ 7. The Dioceſan Viſitations are to be made by the Biſhop in Perſon, unleſs the Bounds are too large for him to go over: In which Caſe he is to make Choice of ſome worthy Miniſter of the Dioceſe to viſit for him. And whatever Miniſter ſhall, without lawful Excuſe, refuſe to appear at the Viſitation, or Dioceſan Aſſembly, ſhall be ſuſpended from his Office and Benefice, and unleſs Amendment follows, depriv'd.

“ 8. That the Exerciſe of Doctrine be continued weekly among the Miniſters at the Time of their cuſtomary Meetings; And that the Biſhop either moderates himſelf, or appoints ſome Perſon to repreſent him.

“ 9. That the Biſhops ſhall be ſubject to the Cenſure of the General Aſſembly in all Things relating to private and publick Conduct; or as the Aſſembly ſpeaks touching Life, Converſation, Office and Benefice. And the Biſhops being convicted of Misbehaviour by the Aſſembly, are, with his Majeſty's Advice and Conſent, to be depriv'd.

“ 10. That no Biſhop be elected under Forty Years old, and who has not for ſome Years been a Teaching Miniſter.

“ Laſtly, 'Twas unanimouſly decreed, that no Miniſter either in Pulpit, or Publick Exerciſe, ſhould argue againſt, or diſobey the Acts of this preſent Aſſembly, under the Penalty of Deprivation; And particularly, that the Queſtion of Equality or Inequality in the Church ſhould not be diſcours'd in the Pulpit under the ſame Forfeiture.

Ibid. & Spotſwood Refutat. Libel &c. Et Church Hiſt. pag. 512.

The Reſolutions of this Synod were unanimous almoſt to an Univerſality, there being but three Diſſenting Members amongſt about 140. *

* Spotſwood Refutat. Libel. de Regim. Eccleſ. Scotic. p. 83.

Soon after the breaking up of the Aſſembly, the Archbiſhop of Glaſgow was ſent for to attend the King, and order'd to bring two other Churchmen of his own chuſing along with him. He pitch'd upon the Biſhops of Brichen and Galloway, and came to Court about the Middle of September.

The Conſecration of three Scotch Biſhops at London.

The King opening the Buſineſs for which they were order'd hither, acquainted them, That at a great Expence he had recover'd the Biſhopricks out of Foreign Hands, and beſtow'd them upon ſuch as he hop'd would acquit themſelves well in that Station: But ſince he could not make them Biſhops, neither could they aſſume that Honour to themſelves; and that in Scotland there was not enough of that Order to manage a Canonical Conſecration, for theſe Reaſons he had called them into England, that being Conſecrated themſelves, they might propagate the Character, and ordain at Home. That by this Expedient the Adverſaries might be effectually ſilenc'd, who gave out, that he took upon him to make Biſhops, and beſtow Spiritual Offices: But this Report was altogether Aſperſion, for that he had not done any Thing of this kind, nor would he ever preſume to go thus far: And that he acknowledg'd ſuch an Authority belong'd to none but our Bleſſed Saviour, and thoſe commiſſionated by him. (l)

The Archbiſhop ſpeaking for the reſt, profeſs'd their Willingneſs to obey his Majeſty, only they were apprehenſive of being miſunderſtood by their Brethren at Home; and that in Regard of the ancient Encroachments of the Engliſh Hierarchy upon the Scots, their complying with this Expedient might be interpreted a Kind of Subjection to the Church of England. The King reply'd, He had guarded ſufficiently againſt that Inconvenience; and that to prevent Cavil, and Miſconſtruction, he had order'd, that neither the Archbiſhop of Canterbury or York, who were the only Pretenders, ſhould have any Share in the Solemnity, but that the Conſecration ſhould be perform'd by the Biſhops of London, Ely, and Bath and Wells. The propoſing this Temper ſet the Scotch Biſhops at Eaſe, who returning his Majeſty Thanks for his Care of their Church, declar'd themſelves willing to obey his Pleaſure.

Things being thus far adjuſted, his Majeſty iſſued a Commiſſion under the Great Seal of England, to the Biſhops of London, Ely, Bath and Wells, and Rocheſter, requiring them to proceed to the Conſecration of the three Biſhops abovemention'd, mention'd purſuant to the Form of the Engliſh Ordinall. This Commiſſion was accordingly executed in the Chapel of London-houſe upon the 21ſt of October.

But between the Commiſſion and the Solemnity, a Difficulty was offer'd by Andrews, Biſhop of Ely, with Reference to the Conſecration of the Scotch Biſhops. This Prelate affirm'd, "They "ought firſt to be made Prieſts upon the Score "of their having not been ordain'd by a "Biſhop. Archbiſhop Bancroft, as Spotſwood "reports, maintain'd there was no Neceſſity of "proceeding in this Manner: That where Biſhops could not be had, Orders given by Preſbyters muſt be reckon'd lawful: That unleſs "this was granted, the Calling and Character "of the Miniſtry in moſt of the Reformed Churches might be Queſtion'd." But with due Regard to Bancroft's Memory, his Argument ſeems to ſtand upon a ſlender Bottom: For without Doubt neither Luther, nor Calvin, Beza, or Zuinglius, are the Standards of Diſcipline and Government: 'Tis the Primitive Plan we ought to proceed by in theſe Matters. And therefore, if any modern Chriſtians happen to refine upon Catholick Meaſures, and deſert from the Government of the Church ſettled for 1500 Years together: If any Chriſtians, I ſay, pretend to reform in this unfortunate Manner, though they may call for our Pity and our Prayers, they ought never to command our Imitation. And therefore, with Submiſſion, it ſeems moſt adviſable to leave them to farther Recollection, and not make our ſelves a Party to their Singularities by ſtraining Courteſy, and interpoſing in their Defence.

But after all, as the Learned Heylin repreſents the Matter, Bancroft went upon a much more defenſible Principle: He argued, there was no Neceſſity the Scotch Biſhops ſhould paſs through the intermediate Orders of Deacon and Prieſt; for that the Epiſcopal Character might be fully convey'd at a ſingle Conſecration: And for this he cited ſome conſiderable Precedents in the ancient Church. (m)

(m) Heylin's Hiſt. Presbyt. Pag. 387.

The Biſhops ſometimes conſecrated in the ancient Church without paſſing thro' the inferior Orders.

'Tis true, the general Cuſtom of the Church was to proceed by gradual Advances, and not to mount the higheſt Station at a Step. The Reaſon was, that ſome proper Intervals might be allow'd by Way of Probation: That the Conduct and Abilities of the Perſon might be recommended in a lower Office before the Truſt was enlarg'd, and the Promotion rais'd. (n) However, in Caſe of Neceſſity, or extraordinary Merit, the cuſtomary Methods were diſpens'd with, and the Epiſcopal Character convey'd at once, without going through the inferior Orders. Thus St. Ambroſe and Nectarius, two Lay-Men, were conſecrated Biſhops, the firſt of Milan, and the other of Conſtantinople. (o) Thus Eucherius, a Monk, which is no more than a Lay-Man, was ordain'd Biſhop of Lyons without paſſing through the preparatory Stages of Subdeacon, Deacon, or Prieſt. (p) Thus when by the unexpected Concurrence of the People, or by ſome other unuſual Accident, Providence ſeem'd to point at a particular Perſon, the Apoſtles Canons gave Leave to relax, and go off from the common Rule. (g) The Diſtinctions or Additions of theſe three Scotch Biſhops, before Conſecration ſtand thus in the Regiſter; Mr. John Spotſwood (Miniſter and Concionator, as the King's Mandate ſpeaks) was conſecrated Archbiſhop of Glaſcow, Mr. Gawen Hamilton, Miniſter and Concionator, was conſecrated Biſhop of Galloway, and Mr. Andrew Lamb, Miniſter and Concionator, was conſecrated Biſhop of Brichen. They were conſecrated by George Biſhop of London, Lancelot Biſhop of Ely, Richard Biſhop of Rocheſter, and Henry Biſhop of Worceſter. (r)

About this Time the King ſet up a High Commiſſion in Scotland for the managing of Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes. To give this Court and the Clergy Meaſures, the King diſpatch'd the Inſtructions following:

The King's Directions to the High Commiſſion and Clergy in Scotland.

1. That no Application ſhould be made to the High Commiſſion for any Thing brought before that Court, unleſs in Caſes either of Appeal, or Complaint by ſome Biſhop; that the Grievance could not be redreſs'd by the Diogeſan, or that the Cauſe had ſuffer'd very much in the Ordinary's Court by the Remiſſneſs of the Biſhop.

2. That every Archbiſhop and Biſhop ſhould reſide at his Cathedral, and repair it as far as he was able.

3. That all Archbiſhops and Biſhops ſhould be careful in managing their Viſitation, and every third Year, at leaſt, inſpect the Conduct of the Miniſters and Readers.

4. That every Archbiſhop ſhould viſit his Province every Seven Years at leaſt.

5. Whereas in ſeveral Dioceſes ſome Pariſhes belonging to other Biſhops lie intermix'd, Care ſhould be taken to exchange the Churches, that the whole Dioceſe, if the Expedient is practicable, may lie together: And in Regard ſome Dioceſes are too large, and ſome too little, a Method ſhould be projected to bring them to a better Proportion.

6. That the Meeting of Miniſters for the Exerciſe of Doctrine ſhould not exceed the Number of Twelve, at moſt: That Moderators ſhould be aſſign'd them by their reſpective Biſhops: That theſe Moderators ſhould be impower'd to bring all ſcandalous Perſons within the Precinct before them, and to cenſure Offenders purſuant to the Canons of the Church. However, they are not to proceed to Excommunication or Suſpenſion without the Direction of the Ordinary. And in caſe theſe Miniſters go beyond the Liberty allow'd them, either in Teaching or Behaviour, that then the Biſhops ſhall diſcharge the Meeting, and cenſure the Parties.

7. Conſidering Lay Elders have neither any Warrant in the Scripture, nor Precedent in the Primitive Church, and yet notwithſtanding 'tis convenient for the Miniſter to have ſome Aſſiſtants for repairing the Church, providing Bread and Wine for the Holy Euchariſt, and collecting Contributions for the Poor, the Miniſter is authoriz'd to make Choice of ſome of the moſt Diſcreet of his Pariſhioners for this Purpoſe, and certify their Names to the Ordinary for his Approbation.

8. That the Pariſh Miniſters may be impower'd to convene before themſelves and their Aſſiſtants above-mention'd, all notorious Offenders; and put them under Penance purſuant to the Canons of the Church: And in caſe of Contumacy and Incorrigibleneſs, delate their Names to the Biſhop for farther Correction.

9. That no Miniſter may be admitted to any Cure without a preceding Examination, and Impoſition of Hands by the Biſhop, and two or three Miniſters at the Ordination: And for ſettling an Uniformity in the Admiſſion of Miniſters, a Form is order'd to be printed, and practis'd without Deviation, by every Biſhop.

10. That for the future the Election of Biſhops ſhall be govern'd by the Rules ſet down at the Conference held in the Year 1571. And during the Vacancy of the Biſhoprick, the Dean ſhall be Vicarius in Omnibus ad Epiſcopatum pertinentibus, and have the Cuſtody of the Temporalties 'till the See is fill'd.

11. That the Dean ſhall ſummon a Chapter at leaſt once a Year, and take Care that nothing may paſs unleſs they are Capitulariter Congregati. And that every Thing done by the Archbiſhop or Biſhop with Reference to the Revenues of the See may be enter'd upon the Regiſter, and kept in the Chapter-houſe.

12. That when a General Aſſembly ſhall be thought neceſſary, Application may be made to his Majeſty for Leave to meet: And that the Aſſembly ſhall conſiſt of Biſhops, Deans, Archdeacons, and ſuch others of the Miniſtry as ſhall be elected by their own Body.

13. And becauſe young People in Scotland, having gone through a Courſe of Philoſophy, frequently preſs into the Pulpit before they have got either Orders or Diſcretion: To prevent this Abuſe, ſtrict Care muſt be taken for putting a Reſtraint upon ſuch Perſons; and that none unordain'd may be allow'd to preach ordinarily, or in publick. These Directions, deliver'd to the Biſhops and ſome of the principal Clergy conven'd at Edinburgh, were generally approv'd. The High Commiſſion being likewiſe publiſh'd at the ſame Time, diſguſted thoſe in the Adminiſtration. It ſeems they conceiv'd their Juriſdiction leſſen'd, and were unpleas'd with the Church's recovering her Authority.

The Death of Babbington.

This Year Gervaſe Babbington, Biſhop of Worceſter, departed this Life. He was deſcended from an ancient and conſiderable Family in Nottinghamſhire. He was bred in Trinity-College in Cambridge, firſt promoted to the See of Landaff, thence tranſlated to Exeter, and from thence to Worceſter. He was reckon'd an eminent Preacher, and particularly happy in touching the Paſſions. He wrote a Comment upon the Five Books of Moſes, upon the Lord's-Prayer, the Creed, and the Ten Commandments.

The next Thing I ſhall mention is the Conſecrating of St. Olaves Silver-ſtreet in London by Abbot, Biſhop of London: The Reader may ſee the Inſtrument in the Records. (t)

(t) See Records, Num. 103.

Nov. 2. Archbiſhop Bancroft's Death.

I ſhall conclude the Year with the Death of Archbiſhop Bancroft. The Character of this Prelate may be collected from the foregoing Hiſtory; and therefore I ſhall take Leave of his Memory in a Word or two. This Prelate was extracted from a Gentleman's Family in Lancaſhire, and bred in Cambridge. He was a learned Controverſialiſt, and an excellent Preacher; a great Stateſman, a vigilant Governor, and fill'd his See to great Commendation.

The See of Canterbury being vacant, ſeveral of the Biſhops in Town met to conſult about Bancroft's Succeſſor, And here the great Learning and Piety of Andrews, Biſhop of Ely, gave him the Preference to that Station. The Biſhops thus agreeing in his Merit, recommended him to the King. And believing his Majeſty diſpoſed to a Concurrence, and that there was no Occaſion for ſoliciting any farther, they either retir'd to the Country, or gave over their Application. And thus by deſiſting too ſoon, the Deſign miſcarried; for the Earl of Dunbar taking Advantage of this Overſight, put in ſtrongly for Abbot, Biſhop of London, and got him tranſlated to Canterbury. The King's pitching upon Abbot inſtead of Andrews was no Advantage to the Church. But of this the Reader will ſee more in the Courſe of the Hiſtory.

The next Year the Tranſlation of the Bible was printed. In this Work the Originals were not only carefully conſulted, but the Spaniſh, Italian, French, and Dutch Verſions inſpected and compar'd.

The King's Declaration againſt Vorſtius.

About this Time the King ſolicited the States of the United Provinces againſt entertaining Vorſtius in their Dominions. His Majeſty happen'd to read two of this Divine's Books in his Progreſs. One was intituled Tractatus Theologicus de Deo, dedicated to the Landgrave of Heſſe; and the other Exegeſis Apologetica, dedicated to the States. Theſe Tracts were ſtuffed with very dangerous Aſſertions, ſome of which, remark'd by the King, are as follow:

Some of this Divines Heterodoxies.

'Tis no Miſperſuaſion to affirm God has a Body, provided we take the Notion of a Body in a laxer Signification.

We do not find it any where written, that the Subſtance of the Deity is abſolutely immenſe, or without Limits: On the other Hand, there are many Places in Scripture which ſeem to imply a contrary Meaning. No Magnitude is actually infinite, and by Conſequence neither can an Attribute of this Kind belong to God.

If all Events were ſettled from Eternity, there would be no Occaſion for continual Providence.

God has more Cauſes of Certainty in the View of Things preſent and paſt, than in Events which are future and contingent.

All Things preciſely decreed by the Deity are afterwards fully comprehended at a ſingle Act of Knowlege: But this cannot be affirm'd of all other Things ſeparately conſider'd; becauſe they exiſt not only ſucceſſively in Time, but contingently, being oftentimes ſuſpended upon Conditions.

Farther, in his Apology, he aſſerts, The Father has a peculiar, and as it were, a certain limited and reſtrained Being:

From whence 'tis not difficult to infer, that there are certain internal Accidents in God.

And elſewhere in this Book he diſagrees ſcandalouſly from the receiv'd Doctrine of the Divine Ubiquity: Neither does he make any Scruple to attribute Magnitude and Quantity to God Almighty. (u)

(u) King James's Works, Pag. 359.

Upon his Majeſty's Peruſal of theſe Books he wrote to his Ambaſſador, Sir Ralph Winwood, to advertiſe the States of the Danger from theſe Heterodoxies.

An. Dom. 1611.

The States Anſwer to the King's Admonition.

Their Lordſhips return'd the Ambaſſador a cold Anſwer, and enlarg'd in the Commendations of Vorſtius. They acquaint him, “That “the Curators of the Univerſity of Leyden had “according to ancient Cuſtom made a diligent “Enquiry for ſome Perſon to fill the Divinity-“Chair: That after a long Conſultation they “were inform'd, that at Steinford, in the Territories of the Counts of Tecklenbourg and Bentem, there was one Dr. Conradus Vorſtius, a Miniſter, who had reſided there with great Reputation about Fifteen Years: That upon the “Score of his Parts and Learning he was much “eſteem'd by Prince Maurice, Landgrave of “Heſs, who deſign'd to make him Divinity-Profeſſor in ſome of his Univerſities: That this “Vorſtius had ſignaliz'd himſelf in Controverſy “againſt the famous Cardinal Bellarmine: That “being thus rais'd in his Character, he was in“vited into Holland by the Curators abovemention'd: That in Auguſt laſt his Election was, notwithſtanding conteſted by ſome over-buſy People, who had nothing to do in that Affair. And being charg'd with unſound Doctrine, he went to the Hague for a publick Juſtification, where no Body appear'd againſt him: That afterwards the Charge of falſe Doctrine being reviv'd upon him, he was brought before a full Aſſembly of the States of Holland and Weſt-Friezland: The Cauſe was manag'd againſt him by Six Divines; the Curators and Six other Miniſters being preſent. After the Matter had been fully argued on both Sides, the States were of Opinion Vorſtius had made a ſatisfactory Defence, and that they could ſee no Reaſon for his being refuſ'd the Chair at Leiden. Afterwards new Articles of Impeachment being publiſh'd againſt Vorſtius, the States reſolv'd to allow him the Equity of another Hearing. They add, 'twas never their Intention to permit any other than the Reform'd Religion in Leiden: And that if Vorſtius held any Thing repugnant to the Holy Scriptures, he ſhould not be admitted Profeſſor: That if his Majeſty of Great Britain was fully inform'd of all the Circumſtances, they believ'd he would entertain a favourable Opinion of them: And that they ſhould proceed in the whole Courſe of this Affair with all due Regard to his Majeſty's Admonition.

Id. Declaration againſt Vorſtius, Page 352.

Before the King receiv'd this Anſwer, ſome of Vorſtius's Books were brought over, and diſpers'd here. About the ſame Time Bertius, a Diſciple of Arminius, lately dead, had the Impudence, as the King ſpeaks, to ſend a Letter to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, with a Book de Apoſtaſia Sanctorum. The Title of this Book was not only ſhocking to his Majeſty, but he was highly diſpleas'd with the Confidence of the Man for affirming in his Letter, that the Contents of the Book was agreeable to the Doctrine of the Church of England. Upon this the King order'd Vorſtius's Books to be publickly burnt in St. Paul's Church-yard, and both the Univerſities; and then renew'd his Requeſt to the States for the Baniſhment of this Divine. His ſecond Letter was deliver'd by the Ambaſſador Winwood to the States at the Hague. 'Tis written in a Strain of Zeal and Expoſtulation, and deſcribes Vorſtius's Hereſy in Tragical Language. He complains of the States, “For giving Vorſtius Leave to print his Apology, and addreſs it to their Lordſhips: That the Heterodoxies in it are frightfully rank and ſcandalous: And that he does not charge theſe Imputations upon Report, but his own Knowlege.” And here it may be obſerv'd, that his Majeſty both in this, and his firſt Letter, falls hard upon the Memory of Arminius, “Calls him the Enemy of God, taxes him with downright Hereſy, and puts the States in Mind that the Diſputes rais'd by him had embroil'd their Country, and broke them into Factions. Farther, that unleſs they give a ſpeedy Check to theſe Beginnings of Hereſy and Schiſm, they can expect no better Iſſue than the Curſe of God, than Infamy among the Reform'd Churches, and a laſting Diſtraction at Home.

The King's ſecond Letter to the States.

The Engliſh Ambaſſador proteſts againſt their Proceedings.

Notwithſtanding this Warm Expoſtulation, Vorſtius and his Family were encourag'd to come into the States Territories, receiv'd at Leiden with Protection and Reſpect, and treated in the Quality of a publick Profeſſor. The Engliſh Ambaſſador proteſts againſt this Careſſing Vorſtius, tells the States, “They had ſuffer'd in their Reputation, and tarniſh'd the Honour of the Reformation by theſe Proceedings: That the Alliance between the King of Great Britain and their Lordſhips was founded on the Maintenance of the Reform'd Religion: That this publick Correſpondence was injur'd by countenancing ſo notorious a Heretick: And that 'twas ſurprizing their Lorſhips ſhould prefer the Friendſhip of Vorſtius to that of his Maſter.

To this Proteſtation the States, after ſome Deliberation, return'd this Anſwer, “That notwithſtanding his Majeſty of Great-Britain had not yet receiv'd the Satisfaction he might expect in the Buſineſs of Vorſtius, they did not queſtion but that the next Aſſembly of the States of Holland would content his Majeſty.

And that People might not be at a Loſs about the King's Reaſons in importuning the States, and engaging ſo far in this Matter, his Majeſty aſſigns the Motives in his Declaration.

The King's Reaſons for appearing in this Matter.

The Firſt was his Zeal for God's Glory. Upon this Head he declares, That had Vorſtius's Miſperſuaſions been grounded upon Queſtions of no greater Importance than thoſe between us and the Papiſts, his Majeſty, though ſorry for ſuch Deviations from Primitive Belief, ſhould not have appear'd with ſo much Earneſtneſs: But Vorſtius's Hereſies are of a much greater Bulk, and of the blackeſt Complexion: He has inſulted the Attributes of God, attack'd the Creed, over-turn'd as much as in him lies the Baſis of Religion, and ſtruck at the Vitals of Chriſtianity.

His laſt Book, intituled, A Chriſtian and Modeſt Anſwer, is at the beſt Sophiſtical and Evaſive, and in many Places the Heterodoxy is boldly expreſs'd, and lies a-top on the Letter: For the King does not charge him upon Inference and remote Reaſoning, but open Senſe, and direct Aſſertion. To give ſome of thoſe many Inſtances extracted by his Majeſty:

Vorſtius's Apology ſhort and evaſive.

To this Queſtion, Has God a Body? Vorſtius's Anſwer is, If we ſpeak properly the Deity muſt be ſaid to be incorporeal; however, in a looſer Way of Expreſſion, 'tis no Abſurdity to attribute a Body to God.

Is God equally immutable in his Will as he is in his Eſſence? He anſwers in the Negative.

Is God ſubject to Accidents? His Anſwer is, Not to any real ones: However, God by his voluntary Motion receives Accidents, largely taken, into himſelf.

Does God conjecture upon future Events by Ratiocination or Diſcourſe? He anſwers, God does ſometimes in ſome Manner proceed by Way of Principle and Inference, and, as it were, gueſſes upon Things uncertain. But this muſt be metaphorically underſtood, and without any Notion of Imperfection. And in ſhort, the Manner of his Conjectures are different from human Reaſoning, and wholly Divine.

Id. Pag. 373, &c.

And whereas he had before categorically aſſerted that the Arguments us'd by the Fathers for the Eternal Generation of our Saviour, are inconcluſive and trifling, he now endeavours to ſcreen the Slander, and take Shelter in a qualified Expreſſion, and pretends to defend himſelf by ſaying, that ſome of the Proofs fall ſhort of Satiſfaction.

The

Abbot (George) Archbiſhop of Cant.

The King's Second Reaſon for giving the States this Warning againſt Vorſtius, was out of the Affection his Majeſty had for his Neighbours and Allies, and the Common Charity one Chriſtian owes another.

And Thirdly, He was apprehenſive theſe Heterodoxies might croſs the Seas, and reach his Majeſty's Dominions: That the Fame of the Univerſity of Leyden drew a great many of the young People of his Subjects thither: That Miſbelief was apt to catch upon unwary Minds, and ſpread from one Country to another: That ſo fatal a Contagion ought to be prevented with all the Precaution imaginable: That Hereſy was more dangerous than the Plague: And that People had much better be poiſon'd in their Veins, than in their Principles. In the Cloſe, his Majeſty ſolemnly declares, That the Motives which carried him thus far, were only a Regard to the Honour of God, the Intereſt of Truth, and the Happineſs of Mankind: And that he had not the leaſt Intention to dictate to the States, or ſet Rules to their Government.

Id. Pag. 380.

About this Time Archbiſhop Abbot being inform'd that ſome depriv'd Miniſters in the Dioceſe of Peterborough exercis'd their Function, wrote to the Biſhop of Peterborough to reſtrain this Liberty. 'Tis true, the Archbiſhop was commanded to advertiſe this Dioceſan of his Remiſſneſs: However, 'tis an Argument that Abbot was not ſo embaraſs'd with Scruples as to refuſe the following ſuch ſtrict Directions for Conformity, though 'tis poſſible he would not have led in them.

The Condition of Religion in the Iſlands of Jerſey and Guernſey ſince the Reformation.

I ſhall now give the Reader ſome Account of the State of Religion in the Iſles of Jerſey and Guernſey. And to give a more entire View of the Matter, I ſhall diſpenſe a little with the Regards of Time. To begin; The Reformation of Religion in the Reign of King Edward the Sixth was ſettled in this Iſland; the Engliſh Liturgy being tranſlated into French, and ſent thither. But when Queen Mary came to the Crown, the Communion of the Church of Rome recover'd. This Way of Worſhip being diſcharg'd again in the Beginning of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, theſe Iſlands fell into the other Extream: Great Numbers of the French Proteſtants, now harraſs'd in their own Country, retir'd hither for Shelter. Theſe French Refugees, forming their Churches by the Model of Geneva, brought a great many of the Inhabitants of Jerſey to a Diſlike of the Engliſh Reformation. Theſe Singularities were too much encourag'd by the Governors, who either out of Miſtake, Popularity, or mercenary Views, countenanc'd that Party. Theſe Hugonots poſſeſs'd themſelves of the Pariſh-Church of St. Helier, where the Sieur de la Ripaudiere preach'd, and adminiſter'd the Sacrament, in the Manner of Geneva, and ſoon after a ſolemn Addreſs was made to the Queen to bring all the other Churches to Calvin's Plan.

This Application miſcarried at Court. 'Tis granted the Queen allow'd them the Church they had already; but in all other Pariſhes of the Iſland the Engliſh Service was ſtrictly injoin'd, as appears by a Letter of the Privy-Council to the Bailiff and Jurats, bearing Date Auguſt the 5th, 1565. However, all the other Churches of this Iſland ſoon follow'd the Example of that of St. Helier, and the Engliſh Liturgy was generally laid aſide. This gave great Encouragement to the Puritans in England, who to improve the Opportunity diſpatch'd Cartwright and Snape into theſe Iſlands. Theſe leading Nonconformiſts procur'd a Synod of the Miniſters and Elders of Jerſey, Guernſey, Sark, and Alderney. 'Twas held at the Town of St. Peter's-Port in Guernſey, June the 28th, 1576. And here the Governors of Jerſey and Guernſey being preſent, a Form of Claſſical Diſcipline digeſted in Twenty Chapters, and each Chapter into ſeveral Articles, was agreed to be us'd in the Four Iſlands. This Diſcipline afterwards was confirm'd by another Synod held in Guernſey October — 1597. And which is ſomewhat remarkable, the Governors took the Liberty to countenance this illegal Aſſembly, and throw the Liturgy out of thoſe Churches where the Uſe of it was expreſly injoin'd by the Queen. However, theſe Politicians found their Account in the Matter; for by thus reforming the Reformation, they ſeculariz'd the Church Lands, and ſwept the Revenues of both the Deaneries into their Coffers.

At King James's Acceſſion to the Throne, the Puritanical Party addreſs him with a falſe Suggeſtion that the Diſcipline had been allow'd by Queen Elizabeth. Upon this Miſrepreſentation they procur'd a Letter from his Majeſty under the Privy-Seal in Confirmation of the pretended Permiſſion in the late Reign. The Letter runs thus:

James, by the Grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, &c. unto all thoſe whom theſe Preſents ſhall concern, greeting. Whereas we our ſelves, and the Lords of our Council, have been given to underſtand, that it pleas'd God to put into the Heart of the late Queen, our moſt dear Siſter, to permit and allow unto the Iſles of Jerſey and Guernſey, Parcel of the Dutchy of Normandy, the Uſe of the Government of the Reformed Churches of the ſaid Dutchy, whereof they have ſtood poſſeſs'd until our coming to the Crown. For this Cauſe We, deſiring to follow the Pious Example of our ſaid Siſter in this Behalf, as well for the Advancement of the Glory of Almighty God, as for the Edification of his Church, do will and ordain, that our ſaid Iſles ſhall quietly enjoy their ſaid Liberty in the Uſe of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, there now eſtabliſh'd: Forbidding any one to give them any Trouble or Impeachment, ſo long as they contain themſelves in our Obedience, and attempt not any Thing againſt the Power, and ſacred Word of God. Given at our Palace at Hampton-Court the 8th of Auguſt, in the firſt Year of our Reign of England, 1603.

This Letter was read in a Synod of both Iſlands, held in Guernſey in the Year 1605. But the Indulgence was but of ſhort Continuance. For Sir John Peyton, who ſucceeded Sir Walter Rawleigh, was no Friend to the Geneva Platform. And over and above, he might poſſibly have ſome ſecret Inſtructions for recovering the Uſe of the Engliſh Liturgy. For this Purpoſe, an Opportunity offer'd upon the following Occaſion. The Curate of St. John's being lately dead the Colloquy, or Eccleſiaſtical Meeting of the Iſland, purſuant to their late Method, appointed one Brevin to ſucceed him. The Governor, the King's Attorney, and other Officers of the Crown, proteſted publickly againſt theſe Proceedings, alledging the Prerogative was injur'd, and the Royal Revenues leſſen'd by this pretended Privilege. However, their Remonſtrance was overrul'd, and the Colloquy carried their Point. But the Proteſtors refuſing to acquieſce, exhibited a Bill of Articles to the Lords of the Council againſt the Jerſey Miniſters. The Complaint ſet forth, That theſe Miniſters had uſurp'd the Patronage of all the Benefices in the Iſland: That they admitted Men to Livings without any Form or Preſentation: That by this Means his Majeſty loſt the Profits of Vacancies and Firſt-Fruits: That by the Connivance, to ſpeak ſoftly, of the former Governors, they exercis'd a Kind of Arbitrary Juriſdiction, making and nulling Laws at their own Diſcretion. To prevent theſe Inconveniencies, they humbly pray his Majeſty to ſettle ſuch a Diſcipline as may be moſt ſuitable to the Iſland, and leſs prejudicial to the Prerogative Royal.

This being look'd on as a reaſonable Complaint, Commiſſioners were ſent into the Iſland to rectify Diſorders, and recover the Church to a better Eſtabliſhment. To theſe Commiſſioners the Jerſey Miniſters gave in their Anſwer under two Heads: Firſt, That their Exerciſe of Juriſdiction, and aſſigning Incumbents to void Pariſhes, were principal Branches of Church-Diſcipline, and confirm'd to them as ſuch by his Majeſty. Secondly, That the Payment of Firſt-Fruits and Tenths had never been demanded ſince they were diſengag'd from the See of Conſtance.

But this Anſwer not giving Satisfaction to the Council of England, and the Conteſt remaining undecided, the Hugonotick Church loſt Ground a-pace, and was much embarraſs'd. For whereas formerly thoſe who enter'd upon any publick Office, either Eccleſiaſtical or Civil, uſed to ſwear the Maintenance of the Diſcipline; now that Security was refus'd, and the Oath cenſur'd as dangerous and unwarrantable. 'Twas likewiſe their Cuſtom to require Subſcription to the Geneva Regulation of all ſuch as receiv'd the Holy Euchariſt. But now the King's Attorney, and others in that Intereſt, choſe rather to abſtain from that Sacrament than communicate upon thoſe Terms. Their Elders likewiſe, who thought themſelves impregnable againſt Proſecution, were dragg'd into the Temporal Courts, and ſtripp'd of their pretended Privilege. Nor had they much better Quarter in their ſacred Conſiſtory. For the Jurats in their Cohu or Town-Hall took the Freedom to reverſe their Sentence, and ſuperſede their Eccleſiaſtical Proceſs. And which is common in a Turn of Diſadvantage, their Affairs went farther backwards: For the People finding the Miniſters ſink in their Credit, refus'd to pay their Tythes, and forc'd them to a Remedy at Law. And to finiſh their Misfortune, a Bill was preferr'd againſt them in the Common Cohu. And here they were charg'd with Hypocriſy in Converſation, Tyrannick Exerciſe of Juriſdiction, and ſecret Practice againſt the Governor.

An. Dom. 1612. To weather this Storm, and reſtore their Affairs, they addreſs the Earl of Salisbury, then Lord Treaſurer of England. This Nobleman ſeeming well pleas'd with their Application, advis'd them to ſolicit their Brethren of Guernſey to join with them in a Petition to the King. This Advice, though carrying an Air of Regard, had ſomething of Art and further Meaning at the Bottom: For the King by this Means would not only gain Time, but by engaging thoſe at Guernſey in the ſame Addreſs, they muſt of Conſequence come under the ſame Settlement. But the Death of the Treaſurer happening ſoon after, the Project fell with him.

And now their Singularities drew another Misfortune upon them. The Pariſh of St. Peter's falling void by the Death of the Incumbent, the Governor preſents one Aaron Meſſering. This Miniſter, a Native of Jerſey, had ſtudied in Oxford, and receiv'd Prieſt's Orders from Bridges, Biſhop of that Dioceſe. An. Dom. 1615. This Approach to the Church of England was highly reſented by the Colloquy. They were poſitively reſolv'd againſt his Admiſſion to the Cure. And here his taking a Preſentation from the Governor was reckon'd a much leſſer Crime than his Orders from a Biſhop. The forcing a Man of ſuch a Latitude upon them, was ſtrongly clamour'd againſt. They fancied Popery was breaking in, and reſolv'd upon the utmoſt Oppoſition. Upon this a new Information was preferr'd againſt them to the Lords of the Council. The Bill amongſt other Things ſuggeſted the Inhabitants were diſſatisfied with the preſent Diſcipline, and that moſt of them might eaſily be prevail'd with to comply with the Engliſh Form.

An. Dom. 1618. This Complaint brought the Governor and the Miniſters to Court. The latter kept cloſe to the common Cauſe: But before the Matter was determin'd, De la Place, one of the ſoliciting Miniſters, deſerted from his Brethren. Some of the Governor's Party it ſeems had tempted the Ambition of this Divine, and gain'd him. He was made to believe that if the Church Government was alter'd, and the Deanery reſtor'd, he would certainly be the Perſon for that Preferment. Upon this View he betray'd the Secrets of his Party, and furniſh'd thoſe in the Governor's Intereſt with Intelligence. And now the Miniſters not being unanimous in their Requeſt, and receiving an immediate Anſwer to their Objections, the Strength of their Defence being diſcover'd before-hand by De la Place. Things ſtanding thus unreſolv'd and broken, Archbiſhop Abbot at the Council-Table acquainted them with the King's Pleaſure to this Effect, That for the ſpeedy Redreſs of Diſorders, 'twas thought moſt convenient to revive the Office and Authority of the Dean; that the Book of Common-Prayer ſhould be reprinted in French, and us'd in their Churches; but that the Miniſters ſhould not be tied to it in every Particular. That Meſſering ſhould be admitted to his Living; and that upon theſe Conditions they might return to their reſpective Cures.

This Award meeting with no quick Compliance, the Council order'd the Miniſters to make Choice of three Perſons of Character out of their own Body; and that the Names of theſe being return'd to the Board, his Majeſty would nominate one of them for the Deanery.

1620. But this Expedient not being reliſh'd by the Miniſters, Mr. David Bandinell, an Italian, then Miniſter of St. Mary's, was ſent off for England with the Governor's Recommendation. And the Archbiſhop finding him anſwerable to Report, he was made Dean by his Majeſty's Letters Patents, and the Profits and Juriſdiction of that Office veſted in him. And to direct the Management ſome Articles, call'd the Interim were drawn and ſign'd by the King. Theſe were to continue in Force 'till a Body of Canons ſhould be form'd for that Purpoſe. By this Interim the Miniſters were at Liberty not to bid the Holidays, to forbear the Uſe of the Croſs in Baptiſm, the Wearing the Surplice, and to give the Holy Euchariſt to thoſe who ſcrupled receiving it kneeling. The Book of Canons, afterwards drawn up by the Dean and Miniſters, was examin'd and corrected by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, by Williams, Biſhop of Lincoln and Lord-Keeper, and by Andrews Biſhop of Wincheſter, in whoſe Dioceſe the Iſlands of Jerſey and Guernſey lay. For which Reaſon 'twas order'd in the King's Letters Patents which confirm'd theſe Canons, that the Biſhop of Wincheſter ſhould by his Commiſſion under the Epiſcopal Seal as Ordinary of the Place authorize the Dean to exerciſe Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, purſuant to the Tenor of the Canons. And thus the Iſland was recover'd to an entire Conformity with the Church of England.

The ſame Regulations had taken Place in Guernſey, had not the Rupture with Spain diverted the King to other Affairs. This Reign and the next growing embarraſs'd, ſome of the Miniſters made uſe of the Juncture to return to their Nonconformity, particularly De la Place above-mention'd, reſenting his miſſing the Deanery, retir'd into Guernſey, and made a bold Oppoſition againſt the Engliſh Liturgy. (w)

As to Jerſey, 'twas firſt Parcel of the Dioceſe of Dol in Bretagne, and ſo continued from the Time of St. Sampſon 'till the coming of the Normans into Neuſtria. Theſe Strangers happening to conteſt with the Britons about their Frontiers, withdrew theſe Iſlands of Jerſey, Guernſey, &c. from the Obedience of their Prelate, and annexed them to a See of their own, to Coûtance in Normandy.

Legat and Wightman burnt for Hereſy.

And now to come back to the Order of Time. One Bartholomew Legget was convented for Arrianiſm before King, Biſhop of London. At his appearing he denied the Authority of the Court, and perſiſting in his Obſtinacy, was pronounc'd an incorrigible Heretick, and deliver'd over to the Secular Magiſtrate. Upon which a Writ De Heretico Comburendo being directed to the Sheriffs in London, he was burnt in Smithfield.

April 11.

About a Month forward, Edward Wightman, of Burton upon Trent, convicted of Hereſy before Neile, Biſhop of Coventry and Litchfield, was burnt at Litchfield. This unhappy Perſon was charg'd with the Hereſies of Simon Magus, Ebion and Cerinthus, of Valentinian, Arius and Macedonius, of Manes, Photinus, and the Anabaptiſts. (x)

The next Year, at a Parliament held at Edinburgh, the Concluſions agreed in the late general Aſſembly at Glaſgow were confirm'd, with ſome Explanations. To mention ſomething of this latter Kind. In caſe the Dioceſan ſhould refuſe to admit a qualified Miniſter preſented by the Patron, 'tis lawful for the Patron to enter upon the Profits of the Living, and keep them in his Hand. And here, either the Patron, or the Pariſh unprovided with a Paſtor, may complain to the Archbiſhop, and in caſe the Archbiſhop refuſes to give due Satisfaction, the Lords of the Privy Council, upon the Party's Complaint, are impower'd to direct Letters of Horning againſt the Ordinary. But here 'tis provided, that if any Archbiſhop or Biſhop ſhall perceive the Perſon preſented guilty of Simony with the Patron, in not reſerving a ſufficient Maintenance for him and his Succeſſors; if this can be prov'd either by the Party's Oath, or other Evidence, in ſuch Caſes the Ordinary may lawfully refuſe the Perſon preſented: 'Tis likewiſe enacted, That when any Controverſy of this Nature ſhall happen, it ſhall be decided by the Lords of Council and Seſſion. And to conclude, by this Statute the Act made in the Year 1592, and all other reſembling Acts in Favour of Preſbytery, and derogatory to the Articles of the general Aſſembly at Glaſgow, are repeal'd. (y)

The Death of Prince Henry, which happen'd in November this Year, was extremely regretted. He died in the 19th Year of his Age, and was a very promiſing Prince. By this Calamity at Court, the Marriage of the Lady Elizabeth, with the Elector Palatine of the Rhine, was poſtpon'd till February following.

James I. King.

The Divorce between the Earl of Eſſex and the Lady Francis Howard occurs next. A Commiſſion of Delegacy to Six Biſhops, to Two Privy Councellors learned in the Law, and Four Civilians, was iſſued to try the Cauſe. I ſhall wave relating the Grounds for the Divorce, or the Circumſtances of the Evidence. The Reader, if he pleaſes, may ſee the whole Detail in the Annals of King James. (z) The Judges who concurr'd in the Sentence, were Bilſon, Biſhop of Winchester; Andrews, Biſhop of Ely; Neile, Biſhop of Coventry and Litchfield; and Buckeridge, Biſhop of Rochester; Sir Julius Cæſar, Sir Thomas Parry, and Sir Daniel Dun. Now, tho' the Men were unexceptionable, and the Proceſs regular, and manag'd in the Forms of Law, the Judgment did not eſcape uncenſured. Two of the Delegates, Archbiſhop Abbot, and King, Biſhop of London, were againſt the Divorce. The Firſt wrote the Reaſons of his Diſſent, which were anſwer'd by his Majeſty.

Some few Years ſince the famous Iſaac Caſaubon, was invited into England by the King, and made Prebendary of Canterbury. He was born at Bourdeaux, a ſmall Town in Dauphiny. Joſeph Scaliger commends him for the beſt Græcian of his Time. He wrote ſeveral Things. His laſt Work was a Critick upon Baronius's Annals. Theſe Exercitations, as he calls them, were anſwer'd by Roſweidus a Jeſuit, and defended by Capellus, Divinity Profeſſor at Sedan.

The Death of Iſaac Caſaubon.

Anno Dom. 1614.

This Year the King made a Progreſs to Cambridge, where the Comedy call'd Ignoramus, was acted to entertain him. In this Play, the barbarous Latin us'd by the common Lawyers, is expos'd with Advantage enough. This Satyrical Diverſion was reſented by the long Robe, and as 'tis ſaid, occaſion'd Selden's Writing his Hiſtory of Tythes, by Way of Revenge: But of this more afterwards.

The King's treating Arminius with hard Language in his Declaration againſt Vorſtius, was ſomewhat miſconſtrued by the Puritans. They thought his Majeſty much farther in their Sentiments, than he really was. Upon this Miſperſuaſion they held up their Tenents, and puſh'd the Points of Calviniſm with more freedom than formerly. For the Purpoſe, Calvin had publiſh'd a hideous Notion concerning our Saviour's Paſſion; and maintain'd, That he ſuffer'd the Torments of Hell, even to the Horrors of Deſpair: This ſcandalous Opinion happening to be animadverted on by one Corbet in a Good-Friday Sermon at Oxford, the Preacher was ſmartly reprimanded by the Repetitioner, for taking this Freedom. To give another Inſtance, Dr. John Houſon, Canon of Chriſt Church, a worthy Perſon and formerly Vice-Chancellour, was order'd a Recantation, for ſpeaking to the Diſadvantage of the Geneva Annotations; which was ſomewhat ſtrange, conſidering theſe Annotations had been cenſured for ſeditious Doctrine by his Majeſty at the Hampton-Court Conference: And laſtly, Dr. William Laud, then Preſident of St. John's College, for declaring himſelf againſt Calviniſm, was charg'd with Popery in a publick Sermon preach'd upon Eaſter-Day, by Dr. Robert Abbot, then Vice Chancellor and Divinity Profeſſor. This over enterprizing Temper in the Puritanical Party, 'tis thought, occaſion'd his Majeſty's publiſhing ſome Directions for the Univerſities; in which, among other Things 'tis enjoin'd, That young Students in Divinity ſhould be directed to ſtudy ſuch Books as were moſt agreeable in Doctrine and Diſcipline to the Church of England; and be excited to beſtow their Time in the Fathers and Councils; Schoolmen, Hiſtories, and Controverſies, and not to inſiſt too long upon Compendiums and Abbreviators, making them the Grounds of thoſe ſacred Studies. This was the firſt remarkable Check given to Calviniſm in this Reign.

Abbot (George) Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

The King's Directions to the Univerſity, with Reference to the Study of Divinity.

The Progreſs of Calviniſm in the Kingdom of Ireland.

And now to take a ſhort View of the Condition of Religion in Ireland. The Puritan Perſuaſion had for ſome Time gotten great Footing in this Kingdom, the late Reign proved but Unfortunate to that Church. Here the Lay-managers to enrich themſelves, ſtruck in with the Nonconformiſts againſt the Hierarchy. The Revenues of the Prelates and Cathedrals were ſet to Sale; and the Ravage was carried on to ſo great a Calamity, that ſome Sees had nothing towards a Competency left to maintain a Biſhop. For which Reaſons ſeveral Dioceſes were thrown together to make a tolerable Subſiſtence. Thus the Biſhopricks of Ardagh and Kilmore, Oſſory and Kilkenny, Down and Connor, Waterford and Liſmore, Cork and Roſs, &c. were united.

This Poverty reach'd the inferior Orders. For the Pariſh Tythes being moſtly appropriated to religious Houſes, fell to the Crown at the Diſſolution; afterwards King Henry the VIIIth, and his Succeſſors convey'd them to their Favourites: And thus they were now alienated from the Church, and turn'd to Lay-Fees. The Vicaridges were generally ſunk to a lamentable Proviſion: Inſomuch, that in the Province of Connaught, the common Allowance to the Vicar amounted but to Forty Shillings per Annum, and ſometimes but to Sixteen. Thus the Church Revenues being ſeiz'd, the Authority of the Biſhops and Clergy went off of Courſe, and the People follow'd their own Fancy in the Choice of Religion: And in this deſpicable Condition, the Church of Ireland was left at the Death of Queen Elizabeth.

At the Hampton-Court Conference the King propos'd the ſending Preachers into Ireland, complaining he was but half a Monarch in that Kingdom: That nothing but their Bodies were Subject to his Authority; for their Conſciences were under the Pope's Command. However, it does not appear any Expedient was tried to bring the Iriſh farther into the Reformation till after the Year 1607: About which Time the Earl of Ter-Owen, Ter-Connel, Sir John Odbagharty, and other Noblemen of the North, quitted the Iſland with their Families, and left their Eſtates to the King's Diſpoſal. Upon this, the Plantation of Ulſter was undertaken by the City of London: Theſe Adventurers fortified Coleraine, built Londonderry, and purchas'd a great Tract of Land in the adjacent Parts. But the Planting this Province was more vigorouſly purſued by ſome of the Scots, who tranſported numerous Colonies. Theſe Planters improved the Country, and brought Preaching into the Churches where they ſettled. But being of the Presbyterian Perſuaſion, they form'd the Church upon their own Scheme. And as for Epiſcopal Government, and the Engliſh Common-Prayer, nothing was more deſpis'd and neglected.

The Difference between the Engliſh and Iriſh Articles.

And thus Calviniſm advancing by Degrees, both in Diſcipline and Doctrine, the latter was at laſt receiv'd as the publick Belief of the Iriſh Church. Thus the Articles of the Church of England not paſſing the Teſt, the Divines there went ſo far in their Singularities, as to bring in a Confeſſion of their own. The Draught was refer'd to the Conduct of Dr. James Uſher, then Provoſt of Dublin College, and afterwards Lord Primate. By this Gentleman's Management the Lambeth Articles rejected at the Hampton-Court Conference, were taken into the Confeſſion. Secondly, An Article was framed to juſtify the Morality of the Sunday Sabbath; and requiring the Spending it wholly in religious Exerciſes. Thirdly, Something of Calvin's Notion concerning our Saviour's Agony and Deſcent into Hell is maintain'd. Fourthly, Forbearing Fleſh upon certain Days of Abſtinence, is declar'd not to be done upon the Score of Mortification, but for politick Conſiderations. Fifthly, All Clergymen are ſuppos'd, lawfully called, who have their Buſineſs aſſign'd them by thoſe who have Authority in the Church: But that theſe authoriz'd Perſons are none but Biſhops, is not aſſerted. Sixthly, The Power of the Keys is ſaid to be only Declarative, which expounds away one main Branch of the ſacerdotal Commiſſion, and makes the Apoſtolick Privilege of binding and looſing ſignify nothing. The Pope is made Antichriſt, purſuant to the Doctrine of the Calviniſtick Synod at Gappe in Dauphiny. And laſtly, The Conſecration of Archbiſhops and Biſhops, is paſs'd over in Silence; as if 'twas done on Purpoſe to avoid aſſerting the Diſtinction between this Order, and that of Prieſts. Thus Uſher's private Opinions were thrown into the Articles for the Church of Ireland, paſs'd in the Convocation there this Year, and ratified by the Lord Deputy Chicheſter in the King's Name.

Anno Dom. 1615.

Conjectures upon the Grounds why his Majeſty confirm'd the Iriſh Articles.

As to his Majeſty's Sentiment, 'twas plainly different from many of theſe Deciſions: How then came it about that the Articles were confirm'd by his Authority? There are ſeveral Conjectures to ſatisfy this Queſtion. Firſt, 'Tis ſaid Archbiſhop Abbot, and James Mountague, Biſhop of Bath and Wells, had the Aſcendant at Court in Church Affairs: Now theſe Prelates had formerly undertaken the Defence of ſome, or moſt of theſe Opinions. Secondly, The King's engaging ſo earneſtly in the Controverſy with Vorſtius, and taking Part with the Prince of Orange againſt Barnevelt, and the Remonſtrants, might probably preſs him with his own Precedent; and thus he might be prevail'd with not to reject thoſe Opinions in Ireland, which had been countenanc'd by him in Holland. Laſtly, 'Twas no unuſual Method with this Prince to balance one extreme, by throwing Weight into another: Thus the Papiſts were ſometimes countenanc'd againſt the Puritans, and the Puritans againſt the Papiſts: That by this Means the Growth of each Diviſion might be check'd, and the Engliſh Reformation better ſecured. Whether the King was determin'd by theſe Motives, or by which of them, is uncertain. However, the Puritans made their Advantage of the Ratification: And when they happen'd to be pinch'd in any of the Points above-mention'd, their Way was to take Shelter in the Iriſh Articles, and appeal to King James's Teſtimony.

Abbot (George) Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

This Year, King, Biſhop of London, conſecrated a Chappel at Edmington, ſituate near the Houſe of John Weld Eſq; The Conſecration Prayer ſtands thus:

Biſhop King's Form for conſecrating a Chappel.

O moſt merciful Father, the Heaven is thy Throne, and the Earth is thy Footſtool, what Houſe then can be built for thee! Or what Place is there that thou ſhould reſt in! But yet ſince it has ever been thy Delight to be with the Sons of Men, therefore in all Ages of the World, thy Servants have ſeparated and Hallowed certain Places from all profane and common Uſes unto thy Divine Service, either by thy ſpecial Commandment, or by the Inſpiration of thy bleſſed Spirit. So Adam had his Oratory in Paradiſe, and Jacob his praying Place in the Fields. Moſes his holy Ground in the Wilderneſs, and the Children of Iſrael their Tabernacle for thy Worſhip in the Land of Promiſe; until it pleas'd thee at the laſt to put into the Heart of King Solomon to build a Temple to thy Honour in Jeruſalem, admirable for Beauty, unvaluable for Riches, renown'd for Sanctity throughout all the World; whither the Tribes of Iſrael did aſſemble Three Times a Year to offer Sacrifices and Oblations unto thee: And afterwards, thy People being inflamed with the Zeal of thine Houſe, added daily unto their Mother-Church, leſſer Synagogues in every Town. By which godly Examples reveal'd in thy Word, the Chriſtian Churches in their Succeſſion have made and conſecrated Houſes unto thee, as well for the Celebration of Divine Ordinances and Preaching of thy heavenly Word, as for the Invocation of thy great Name and Adminiſtration of thy Holy Sacraments. For the Temple is the Court of Audience wherein thou doſt ſit to hear our Prayers, and it is our Heaven upon Earth wherein we aſſemble and meet together to laud and magnify thy glorious Majeſty. And does not Reaſon and Religion enforce us to this Work? For ſhall the Sparrow have an Houſe, and the Swallow her Neſt, and ſhall we not find out an Houſe for thee, O Lord, our Redeemer? Shall we which are but Duſt and Aſhes build unto our ſelves ceil'd and beautified Houſes for our worldly Affairs, yea and for our Pleaſures; and ſhall we not build and dedicate ſome Houſes for thy Worſhip, unto thy great and fearful Name? And repay, as it were, the Tythes of our dwelling Places back again unto thee? For all Things come from thee, and we can give thee but thy own. Accept therefore, we beſeech thee, moſt gracious Father, this our bounden Duty; and becauſe, except thou build the Houſe, they labour but in vain that build it, ſanctify this Houſe with thy gracious Preſence, which is erected unto the Honour of thy Service. Now therefore ariſe, O Lord, and come unto this Place of Reſt; let thine Eyes be open to this Houſe Night and Day. Let thine Ears be ready towards the Prayers of thy Children, which they ſhall pour forth to thee in this Place. And let thine Heart delight to dwell here perpetually. And whenever thy Servants ſhall make their Petitions unto thee in this Houſe, either to beſtow thy good Graces and Bleſſings upon them, or to remove thy heavy Puniſhments and Judgments from them, hear thou from Heaven thy dwelling Place, and when thou heareſt, have Mercy, and grant, O Lord, we beſeech thee, that here and elſewhere thy Prieſts may be clothed with Righteouſneſs, and that all the Saints may rejoice in thy Salvation: So that when we ſhall ceaſe to pray to thee in theſe earthly Temples, we may at the laſt praiſe thee in thy glorious Temple, not made with Hands, but eternal in the Heavens, for thy dear Son, our bleſſed Saviour Jeſus Chriſt his Sake, who lives and reigns with thee, and the Holy Ghoſt, one God, World without End. Amen.

After this a Pſalm was ſung, and the Biſhop diſmiſs'd the Congregation with his Bleſſing.

In June the next Year, Thomas Bilſon, Biſhop of Wincheſter, departed this Life. His great Grand-father Arnold Bilſon, a high German, married a Daughter of the Duke of Bavaria. This Prelate, born in Wincheſter, and bred at New-College, was afterwards School-Maſter of Wincheſter, and then Warden of the College. His firſt See was that of Worceſter, from whence he was tranſlated to Wincheſter in the Year 1597. He was a Perſon of great Learning, particularly a good Linguiſt, and well read in the Fathers and Schoolmen. He was an Author of Character, and Writ in Defence of the Church of England, both againſt the Papiſts and Puritans. His Book intitled, The true Difference between Chriſtian Subjection, and Unchriſtian Rebellion, gives a dangerous Latitude to Subjects in ſome Caſes. 'Tis ſaid to be written at the Inſtance of Queen Elizabeth, who upon her Undertaking the Protection of the Dutch, was willing to put the beſt Colours upon their Revolt from the King of Spain. In his perpetual Government of Chriſt's Church, the Patriarchal Power with Reſpect to Religion, is aſſerted in the Fathers of Families before the Law; this Authority, as he endeavours to prove, was afterwards transferred upon the Tribe of Levi. In this Tract the Powers and Extent of Juriſdiction in the Jewiſh Sanhedrim is likewiſe conſidered. His Survey of Chriſt's Sufferings and Deſcent into Hell, is a learned Work, and levell'd againſt Calvin and the Puritans.

Canons of the ancient Church concerning Tranſlations.

Upon this Occaſion it may not be improper to give a brief Report of the Senſe of the ancient Church, with reſpect to Tranſlations. To begin with the Apoſtles Canons: 'Tis here decreed, "That 'tis not lawful for a Biſhop to "leave his own Dioceſe, and remove to another, without a juſtifiable Motive: That is, "unleſs he has a fair Proſpect of doing more "Service to the Church upon ſuch a Tranſlation: But even in this Caſe, he is not to "remove without ſtrong Solicitation, and by "the Order of a great Number of Biſhops. (f)

(f) Canon. Apoſtol. Can. 14.

The Council of Nice determines the Point to the ſame Senſe, and declares, "That if any "Biſhop quits his own See, and ſettles in another; his Tranſlation ſhall be void, and he "ſhall be return'd to the Dioceſe to which he "was firſt conſecrated. (g) But then this Prohibition is to be underſtood with the Limitation mention'd in the Apoſtles Canons.

(g) Concil. Nicen. 1. Can. 15. Anno Dom. 325.

Anno Dom. 347.

Notwithſtanding this Proviſion, the Council of Sardica complain'd, "That Covetouſneſs and Ambition had brought an ill Cuſtom upon the Church: And that 'twas too common a Practice for Biſhops to remove from a leſs City to a greater; and that an Inſtance the other Way, was ſeldom, or never to be met with. From whence 'twas plain they were govern'd by Conſiderations of Intereſt. 'Tis therefore decreed at the Suggeſtion of the famous Hoſius, that when Tranſlations are thus indirectly manag'd, the Criminal Biſhops ſhall be thrown even out of Lay Communion. (h)

To put a Stop to this Prevarication, the Council of Antioch ſomewhat before reſolv'd the Caſe to the ſame Purpoſe: The Canon ſpeaks thus, "If any undioceſed Biſhop * ſeizes a vacant See without the Conſent of an entire Synod, let him be diſcarded, tho' all the People of the new Dioceſe have concurr'd in his Election:" And to ſettle their Notion of an entire Synod, they tell us there muſt be a Metropolitan at the Head of it. (i)

* 'Επίσκοπος Σχολάζων.

Anno Dom. 341.

Thus we ſee by the Conſtitutions of the ancient Church Tranſlations were put into the Hands of the Biſhops, and not reckned valid when under any other Direction. But in after Ages, the Canons were overborn by the Pontificate and the Regale. And now the Biſhops choſe rather to lie paſſive under the Change, than run the Riſque of a Conteſt, and loſe the Protection of ſuch Sovereign Powers. But by the Way, the Inſtance before us is ſomewhat different: The Caſe put to Rives is not whether 'tis in the Prince's Power to aſſiſt the Ambition of a Biſhop, and promote him to a more wealthy and honourable See; but whether he may fairly remove him againſt his Will?

The King's Power for granting Commendams, argued in Weſtminſter-Hall.

About this Time the King's Power, in granting Commendams was diſputed in the Court of Common-Pleas, Serjeant Chibborn argued againſt the Crown, that Tranſlation of Biſhops was againſt Common Law: His Proof was the Canons of the Council of Sardis, he meant Sardica. But not to mention the giving the Canons of a provincial Council the ſame Authority with Common Law, is ſomewhat unuſual in a Serjeant; not to mention this, I ſay, what Connexion is there between Tranſlations and Commendams? Or which Way will the Conſequence hold from one to the other? The Serjeant argues farther, That nothing but Neceſſity could juſtify the King's granting Commendams: And that the preſent Caſe would not admit of this Plea: There was no need, he pleaded, for augmenting the Biſhops Revenues by Commendams, becauſe no Man is bound to Hoſpitality beyond the Bulk of his Fortune. But this Way of Reaſoning looks ſhort of the Point: For has not a Biſhop an honourable Station both in Church and State? Is it not therefore Neceſſary he ſhould be furniſh'd with a ſuitable Maintenance? With an Eſtate proper to recommend his Character, to enable him to anſwer his Poſt, and do publick Service?

This Caſe of Commendams was farther argued by all the Judges. The King being now upon his Progreſs, and advertis'd of the Diſpute, order'd the Attorney-General to acquaint them by Letter, that they ſhould defer their Reſolution till they had conſulted his Majeſty.

The Judges refuſe to ſtay the Proceedings at the King's Order.

The Judges notwithſtanding, proceed to the Argument, and return the King an Anſwer, that they look'd upon his Majeſty's Letter to be contrary to Law; and that their Oath would not give them Leave to obey: And to juſtify themſelves, they cite Two Acts of Parliament, That in Caſe any Letters came to them from the King contrary to Law, they are not to obey them, but proceed to Juſtice. To this Anſwer Ten of the Judges put their Hands, of which the Chief Juſtices, Coke and Hubbart were Two. The King replies in a Letter, That the alledging their Oath for their Noncompliance, was a weak and impertinent Pretence: That 'twas very unreaſonable to ſuppoſe his Predeceſſors ſhould be carried off their Guard to ſuch a Degree, as to paſs an Act ſo very prejudicial to their Prerogative: That their Oath reach'd only to private Caſes between Subject and Subject, and was deſign'd to prevent the Prince being ſolicited by either of the Parties. And in the Cloſe, commands them not to proceed in the Plea till his Return to London.

At his Majeſty's coming to Town, the Judges were all ſent for to the Council-Table. The King began with taking their Letter in Pieces, and ſhewing their Miſbehaviour with Reſpect both to Matter and Manner. He reprimands them for their Remiſneſs in permitting the Council to diſpute his Prerogative at the Bar; and tells them 'twas their Duty to check thoſe intemperate Sallies, and not ſuffer ſuch Inſolence upon the Crown. Then as to their own Buſineſs, he acquaints them, That deferring their Reſolution upon juſt and neceſſary Reaſons, is neither a Denial nor Delay of Juſtice: 'Tis rather a Pauſe of neceſſary Prudence: Nothing being more proper and adviſeable then to conſult the King where the Crown is concern'd. He told them farther, That to ſay the Point was a private Conteſt between the Subject, was wide of the Caſe: For that a Biſhop, the Defendant, pleaded for a Commendam only in Virtue of the Prerogative Royal: And beſides, they could not prove either of the Parties ſolicited for Expedition. And laſtly, he let them know their Letter was indecently couch'd, and fail'd in the Form. Upon this all the Judges kneel'd, own'd their Error, and crav'd Pardon. But as to the Matter, the Chief Juſtice Coke ſtood upon his Defence; declar'd that his Majeſty's Command for ſtopping the Proceedings, was a Delay of Juſtice, and by Conſequence againſt Law and their Oath: And that as they intended to manage the Pleading, the King's Prerogative ſhould not have been concern'd. To this the King anſwer'd, that for them to pronounce whether his Prerogative was concern'd or not, without conſulting him, was prepoſterous Management. And his Majeſty requir'd the Lord Chancellor to deliver his Opinion, whether he had commanded the Judges any Thing againſt Law, and their Oath.

They acknowledge their Error and ask Pardon.

The Chancellor excuſing himſelf as to the Point of Law, refer'd the Queſtion to the King's Council. Upon this, the Attorney-General Bacon declar'd, That to put off the Day, was no Delay of Juſtice, nor any Failure in their Oath: That the King's Reaſons for this Delay, were only to ſecure his Prerogative: And therefore puts the Queſtion to the Judges, Whether this Refuſal of theirs to make a Halt, was not nearer a Breach of their Oath? For they were ſworn to Counſel the King when they are called. But not to give his Majeſty Counſel till the Buſineſs is over, is in Effect not to give Counſel at all. The reſt of the King's Council concurr'd with the Attorney.

The Chief Juſtice Coke argued, the King's Council had exceeded their Bounds: That 'twas their Duty to plead before the Judges, but not againſt againſt them. To this the Attorney Bacon replied, That the King's Council were oblig'd by their Oath and Office, not only to plead, proceed, and declare againſt the greateſt Subject, but alſo againſt any Body of Subjects, were they Judges, Courts, or Commons in Parliament: That the Judges had diſoblig'd their Character by making this Challenge. And in the Cloſe, the Attorney appealing to the King, the Chief Juſtice ſaid he would not diſpute it with his Majeſty. The Lord Chancellor gave his Opinion for the King, and his Council learned in the Law.

Upon this, the Queſtion was put by all the Lords of the Board, Whether in a Caſe, where the King believ'd his Prerogative or Intereſt concern'd, and requires the Judges to attend him for their Advice; whether in ſuch a Caſe they ought not to ſtay Proceedings till his Majeſty has conſulted them.

All the Judges ſubmitted to the Affirmative-Side of the Queſtion, excepting Coke, Chief Juſtice of the King's-Bench, who ſaid, that when the Caſe happen'd, he would do his Duty. The Chief Juſtice of the Common-Pleas was more compliant in his Anſwer, and declar'd, That for his Part he would always truſt the Juſtice of the King's Command.

The Day drawing nigh for arguing the Commendams further, the King ask'd the Judges if they intended to diſcuſs, whether the King had a general Power for granting Commendams, or not? They all agreed not to draw his Majeſty's Power into Queſtion, and promis'd to correct the Preſumption of thoſe Pleaders who took the Liberty to ſtate the Prerogative. And as to the preſent Caſe, Judge Doderidge gave his Opinion for the King; that the Church was void, and in his Majeſty's Gift; And that he might grant a Commendam to a Biſhop before or after Conſecration, and that either during Life, or for Years.

The Privy Council ſign the King's Command to the Judges, warrantable.

When the Judges were gone, 'twas reſolv'd by the Privy Council, that what the King requir'd was neither againſt Law, nor the Judges Oath: And this Opinion was ſign'd by all the Board. (k)

This Year the King being at Royſton, Mr. Edward Sympſon, a good Scholar, and Fellow of Trinity College, preach'd before his Majeſty: His Text was, That which is born of the Fleſh is Fleſh. * From hence he endeavour'd to prove, that the committing any great Sin extinguiſhes the Operations of Grace while the Perſon continues in that State. To this he added, That St. Paul in the 7th Chapter to the Romans does not deſcribe himſelf, or the Condition of a Regenerate Perſon, but one ſub ſtatu Legis. The King expreſs'd his Diſlike of this Doctrine with ſome Warmth, becauſe Arminius had been lately cenſur'd for drawing a reſembling Expoſition out of Socinus's Works. His Majeſty, to ſatisfie himſelf farther, ſent to the two Divinity Profeſſors at Cambridge for their Judgment upon the Point. Theſe Learned Divines argu'd on the Contra-Remonſtrant's Side, and gave it under their Hands, That the Predominancy of Appetite, and the acting counter to Conſcience, mention'd in the 7th of the Romans, was to be underſtood of a Regenerate Man; And that this was St. Auſtin's laſt Opinion in his Retractations. After this Determination the Preacher was injoin'd a publick Recantation before the King, to which Sentence he ſubmitted. (l)

Sympſon recants his Expoſition of the 7th of the Romans, before the King.

But the Learned Heylin obſerves, That no Offence was taken at the firſt Part of Sympſon's Sermon; for here he went no farther than Dr. Overall's Precedent above-mention'd. Secondly, In the Opinion of this Learned Gentleman, 'tis probable the latter Part of his Diſcourſe might have paſs'd the Teſt, had it not been his Misfortune to have fall'n in with an unacceptable Author; Arminius having formerly declar'd himſelf of the ſame Opinion, might poſſibly give the King a Prejudice, and diſencline him to the Expoſition. (m) But whether Heylin is right or no in this Conjecture, is more than I ſhall determine.

Dr. Mocket*'s Book burnt, and why.*

To proceed; Dr. Mocket Warden of All-Souls in Oxford, and Chaplain to Archbiſhop Abbot, publiſh'd a Book in good Latin containing the following Tracts, viz. The Apology of the Church of England; The Greater and Leſſer Catechiſm; The Nine and thirty Articles; The Common Prayer; The Ordination of Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons; The Polity or Government of the Church of England. The Homilies being thought too voluminous for a full Tranſlation, he abridg'd them into Propoſitions. This Book was attack'd by ſeveral Criticks at its firſt Appearing. Some taxed him for Preſumption for undertaking ſuch a Work without the King's Commiſſion: Others complain'd he had been too looſe and Paraphraſtical, and exceeded the Liberty of a Tranſlator: And that the Propoſitions extracted out of the Homilies had a Biaſs in the Verſion, and run to his private Opinions. Another Objection was, That he had aſſerted the Privilege of the See of Canterbury too far, (n) and allow'd the Archbiſhop a Power to confirm the Election of his Provincials. And for this he cites the Authority of the firſt Council of Nice confirm'd by Conſtantine the Great. The Canon runs thus: "If any Perſon is conſecrated a Biſhop without the Conſent of his "Metropolitan, the Synod declares he ought "not to be own'd under that Character. This Doctrine, it ſeems, bore too cloſe upon the Regale: But Mocket afterwards brings himſelf off; for he expreſly declares, that the Kings's Aſſent to the Election, muſt precede the Metropolitan's Confirmation. (o) Farther, Dr. Mocket in his Tranſlation of the Nine and thirty Articles omitted the firſt Clauſe in the Twentieth, concerning the Authority of the Church in Controverſies of Faith. This Omiſſion, amongſt other Things, might probably occaſion the Burning his Book. This publick Cenſure made a melancholy Impreſſion upon the Doctor, who died in a ſhort Time after. (p)

Tho' as Fuller obſerves, cum Privilegio ſtands on the Title page.

The King having lately made a Progreſs thro' Lancaſhire, obſerv'd that the exceſſive Scruples of ſome Magiſtrates and Miniſters, and their tying People up from all Sort of Relaxation on the Sunday, had given the Papiſts an Occaſion to miſreport the Church of England; as if no innocent Recreation was allow'd among the Reform'd. Now to prevent their gaining Proſelytes upon this Colour, the King then at Greenwich publiſh'd the following Declaration.

The King's Declaration for Recreation on Sundays.

May 24. 1618.

That for his good Peoples lawful Recreations, his Pleaſure was, That after the End of Divine Service they ſhould not be diſturb'd, letted or diſcouraged from any lawful Recreations; ſuch as Dancing, either of Men or Women; Archery for Men, Leaping, Vaulting, or any ſuch harmleſs Recreations: Nor from having of May-Games, Whitſun-Ales, or Morrice-Dances, and ſetting up of May-poles, or other Sports therewith uſed, ſo as the ſame be had in due and convenient Time, without Impediment or Let of Divine Service: And that Women ſhould have Leave to carry Ruſhes to the Church for the decoring of it, according to their old Cuſtom; withal, prohibiting all unlawful Games to be uſed on the Sundays only, as Bear-baiting, Bull-baiting, Interludes, and (at all Times in the meaner Sort of People by Law prohibited) Bowling.

To prevent the ill Uſe of this Liberty, there were ſeveral Reſtraints in the Indulgence. Firſt, Theſe Recreations were to be ſo managed as not to hinder the Performance of publick Duty at Church. Secondly, That no Recuſant ſhould have the Benefit of this Liberty. Nor, thirdly, ſuch as Were not preſent at the whole of Divine Service. And, fourthly, That none ſhould have the Freedom of this Relaxation, but ſuch as kept to their own Pariſhes.

However, this Declaration was ſomewhat ſhocking to a great many People: And the Clergy were apprehenſive the Reading it in Churches would have been injoin'd them: And though 'twas publiſh'd only for the Uſe of Lancaſhire, they were afraid the Order might be enlarg'd, and reach the whole Kingdom. But whatever the firſt Intentions of the Court might have been, the Declaration was afterwards in a manner dropt, and no Churchman oblig'd to read it. And ſince this Subject will return in the next Reign, I ſhall diſmiſs it at preſent.

On the 31ſt of Auguſt this Summer a General Aſſembly met at Perth: The Lords Haddington, Cannegey and Scone were the King's Commiſſioners. And here the Five Articles which ſtuck at Aberdeen, after being debated by a Committee, paſs'd in the full Aſſembly.

Firſt, That in Reverence to the Divine Majeſty, and due Regard to the Myſtery of the Holy Euchariſt, 'tis decreed, that this bleſſed Sacrament ſhall be celebrated, and received kneeling.

Communicating the Sick.

Secondly, If any good Chriſtian viſited with long Sickneſs, and unable to come to Church; or ſhall declare to the Paſtor upon his Conſcience, that he believes his Sickneſs will prove mortal, earneſtly deſires to receive the Holy Euchariſt in his Houſe, the Paſtor ſhall not deny him ſo great a Comfort: But after Notice given the Night before, and upon Condition there ſhall be Three or Four unexceptionable Perſons to communicate with him, and all Things decently prepar'd, the Miniſter ſhall give him the Holy Sacrament according to the Order preſcrib'd.

Private Baptiſm.

Thirdly, The Miniſter ſhall frequently admoniſh the People not to defer the Baptiſm of Infants beyond the next Sunday after their Birth, unleſs the Reaſon for deferring this Sacrament is approved by him: The Miniſters are likewiſe to precaution the People againſt Baptizing their Children at Home, excepting in Caſes of apparent Neceſſity. But when this happens the Paſtor ſhall baptize the Child in the cuſtomary Form, and ſignifie what has been done the next Lord's Day to the Congregation.

Confirmation.

Fourthly, Since Confirmation is moſt neceſſary for the Education of Youth, and may be brought back to Primitive Practice, 'tis ordain'd that the Miniſter in every Pariſh ſhall catechiſe all Children of Eight Years old: And when they are inſtructed to repeat the Lord's Prayer, the Creed, and Ten Commandments, with the Anſwers to the Queſtions contain'd in the ſmall Catechiſm, that then the reſpective Biſhops ſhall order the Children to be brought to them, and give them their Bleſſing, with a Prayer for Encreaſe of Grace and Knowledge.

And obſerving ſome of the Church Feſtivals.

Fifthly, In Regard the ineſtimable Benefits convey'd to Mankind by the Birth of our Bleſſed Saviour, by his Paſſion, Reſurrection, Aſcenſion, and by the Deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt, were commendably commemorated at ſtated Times by the Univerſal Church, 'tis therefore agreed by the Aſſembly, that theſe Anniverſary Feſtivals ſhall be kept for the future; And that upon ſuch Days all Miniſters ſhall chuſe their Text, and manage their Diſcourſe ſuitably to the Occaſion. (q)

The Articles thus ſettled, Order was given to read them in all Pariſh-Churches: The Miniſters were likewiſe oblig'd to dilate upon the Lawfulneſs of them, and exhort their People to Submiſſion. The Burghers of Edinburgh expected their Paſtors would ſtand off from this Aſſembly, and keep cloſe to their old Practice: And therefore when they found themſelves diſappointed in the Compliance of their Paſtors, they deſerted their Communion, and applied to others of a more ſtubborn Behaviour. The King order'd the Articles to be publiſh'd at the Market-Croſs of the principal Burroughs, and commanded Conformity under Pain of his Diſpleaſure. And thus the Church of Scotland came ſtill nearer the Engliſh Eſtabliſhment, and made a conſiderable Advance to the Primitive Form.

Selden's Hiſtory of Tythes publiſh'd.

This Year the Learned Selden publiſh'd his Hiſtory of Tythes. The Preface diſcovers his Diſaffection to the Clergy in a remarkable Manner: He takes the Freedom of coarſe Language, reproaches the Order with Ignorance and Lazineſs; That they had nothing to ſupport their Credit but Beard, Title, and Habit; and that their Learning reach'd no farther than the Breviary, the Poſtilles, and the Polyanthea. Theſe Outrages were ſmartly reveng'd by Richard Mountague, afterwards Biſhop of Chicheſter. This Divine had a better Talent at Satyr, rallied with more Breeding and Wit, and beat him at his own Weapon. His Diatribæ is principally levell'd againſt the Philological Part of Selden's Diſcourſe: The Remainder, that is, the Authorities from Eccleſiaſtical Antiquity, and Imperial Conſtitutions, is undertaken by Dr. Richard Tilleſly, Arch-Deacon of Rocheſter. And becauſe theſe Books are out of Print, and not commonly met with, I ſhall abſtract ſome little of the Performance, and give the Reader a Taſte of the Argument.

He is anſwer'd by Mountague and Tilleſly.

An Abſtract of Part of Mountague's Anſwer.

To begin with Mountague: This Author takes Notice that Selden reſolves all the Right of Tythes into Temporal Laws, Cuſtom, Modus decimandi, Preſcription, Prohibition, &c. And that all Pleas for Tythes, without Reference to Poſitive (he means Human) Law, are perfectly idle: And that neither in this Kingdom, nor any other Parts of Chriſtendom the Jus divinum of Tythes was ever maintain'd or acknowledg'd (r) And yet after all this direct Aſſertion he pretends not to meddle with the Divine Right of Tythes. On the other Side, Mountague, in the Name of the Church of England, puts the Cauſe boldly upon the Jus Divinum, and offers to reſign all Benefit of Human Laws, if he fails in the Proof. He grants ſome Papiſts and Puritans are of a contrary Opinion; but as to the Conforming Clergy, they are wholly in his Sentiment. And here he cites Sir James Sempell, Sir Harry Spelman, and Sir Harry Mountague Chief Juſtice, in Favour of the Divine Right of Tythes.

Selden declares, That to hold the Payment of Tythes is no better than voluntary Alms, is a falſe Opinion. Notwithſtanding this Conceſſion, he pretends the Dominicans and Franciſcans made Tythes no more than an Inſtance of Charity. This Mountague affirms a Miſtake; and for Proof argues, That had Selden's Remark been true, the Council of Conſtance would never have condemn'd Wickliff's Doctrine upon this Score. Selden confeſſes, that if Tythes are due Jure Divino, they remain equally ſo, as well after, as before Human Laws: For nullum Tempus occurrit Regi; no Cuſtom can preſcribe againſt the King of Heaven and Earth. No State has any Power to diſpenſe with the Natural, Moral, or Poſitive Law of God. And here Mountague lays it down for an unconteſted Truth, that the Evangelical Prieſthood is more honourable than the Legal, and by Conſequence ought to receive a more honourable Maintenance: That Conſtantine the Great out of a Motive of Piety, refus'd to ſeize the Wealth of the Pagan Temples.

Selden aſſerts the Tythes paid by Abraham to Melchiſedech, were only the Tythes of the Plunder. But Solomon Jarki, and the Syriack and Arabick Interpreters expound it to a Tythe of all Abraham's Subſtance. Selden vouches Joſephus for his Opinion, that Abraham gave only the Tythe of the Spoils: But Mountague wreſts this Teſtimony from him. Philo-Judæus is produc'd on Mountague's Side of the Text concerning Abraham's giving Tythes of all in General. And to reinforce the Argument, 'tis obſerv'd, that none of the Fathers or Commentators affirm, that Abraham paid Tythes only of Spoils. From hence Mountague makes a farther Advantage, and infers from this Precedent of Abraham, That Tythes of Plunder in a juſt War, are due to the Evangelical Prieſthood. He argues from Probabilities, that Abel's Offering was a Tenth, and that Part of Cain's Fault was falling ſhort of that Proportion. He takes Notice that the Tenth which the Levites paid to the High-Prieſt, is call'd Therumah or Primitiæ; And that Pagan Authors make Firſt-Fruits and Tenths the ſame Thing.

Selden pretends the Jews paid Firſt-Fruits only of Seven Kinds of the Year's Product, viz. Wheat, Barley, Figs, Grapes, Olives, Pomegranates, and Dates. This Mountague rejects as a Rabbinical Fancy, and diſproves it from 2 Chron. 31, and 5. He remarks farther, that where all the Tenth was given to the Children of Levi, Numb, 18. 21. no Place for Payment is appointed: And therefore Selden and Joſeph Scaliger are miſtaken in ſaying Tythes were only to be paid at Jeruſalem. This Notion is diſprov'd from the Trouble and Impracticableneſs of the Thing: And for farther Evidence, from Nehemiah the 10th and 37th. it appears the Levites receiv'd their Tythes at their reſpective Dwellings: And in the next Verſe 'tis ſaid, they were to bring up the Tythe of the Tythe to the Houſe of God. From whence it ſeems plain the firſt Tythe was taken in the Country. All the Tythe of the Land, both Seed and Fruit, are declar'd to be the Lord's: The ſame is ſaid of the Flocks and Herds.

To proceed: Mountague obſerves Four Tythes were paid by the Jews. The firſt Tythe of all Encreaſe was paid to the Levites as their Inheritance; becauſe they had no Share in the Diviſion of the Lands. The ſecond Tenth was paid by the Levites to the High-Prieſt: The Laity paid another Tenth out of the Nine Parts remaining. This ſecond Tenth paid by the Laity, was reſtrain'd to Proviſions for Entertainment, being deſign'd only to furniſh the three great Feaſts at Jeruſalem. And here the Remainder unſpent ſerv'd for the Uſe of thoſe Prieſts and Levites that dwelt at this Capital: This Tythe therefore was to be paid at Jeruſalem.* This third Tythe was paid annually like the other two. Beſides theſe, the poor Man's Tythe made a Fourth, which was payable only every third Year.* This third Year is call'd the Year of Tything, becauſe it was an Addition to the former, Deuteronomy 26. 12. therefore the Septuagint tranſlate it ἐπιδέκατον, which ſignifies an Additional Tythe. And here Mountague, for a farther Mortification to Selden, charges him with being a Plagiary, and that he took his whole Diſcourſe of Jewiſh Tythes out of Joſeph Scaliger's Diatriba upon that Subject.

Mountague obſerves from Deuteronomy 14. 28. that Tythe Cattle were paid at the Second Laytything no leſs than at the firſt, and proves Self-contradiction upon his Adverſary.

Selden grants, that from the Purification of the Temple by Maccabæus, till Hircanus's Time, his Brother Simon's Son, which takes in about thirty Years; during this Period Selden grants, that both Therumahs and Tythes were paid as formerly. And why, ſays Mountague, not afterwards as well as then? The Rabbins deny it; but the Rabbins are late Writers, and Whimſical Authority. After the Captivity the Jews are remarkable for obſerving the Sabbath, and ſtanding clear of Idolatry; and why not for the Payment of Tythes? The Phariſees, a prevailing Sect in our Saviour's Time, were punctual in this Matter. And more than that, the Scribes and Phariſees are commended by our Saviour for their Exactneſs in paying Tythes.

To go on: Mountague obſerves, that the firſt Tythe paid to the Levites was Moral and Evangelical; as for the three others, they ſeem only Levitical: And therefore by preciſe Precept in Scripture, no Tythe was general of all, but the Firſt.* And that Chriſtian Prieſts claim only this Tythe which was paid to Melchiſedech, and given to the Levites. Upon the Progreſs of the Argument he produces Selden's Confeſſion, that the Levites had near a Fifth Part in Firſt-Fruits and Prædial Tythes; that they enjoy'd this Proportion beſide their other Advantages in Offerings and Sacrifices, in Ranſoms of the Firſt-born, in Cities and Suburbs. And here he harangues with ſome Vehemence againſt depriving the Engliſh Clergy of their Dues, and avers, that they loſe more than Half their Tythes by Cuſtom, Preſcription, and Prohibitions; and argues ſtrongly, that Tythes were due antecedently to the Moſaick Conſtitution.

Selden, to prove Tythes uncommanded and arbitrary, affirms the Pagan Greeks and Romans paid Tythes only to ſome particular Deities; and that this Homage was no Part of Natural Religion, but left to Diſcretion, and voluntary Devotion. Theſe Aſſertions are oppos'd by Mountague, and Counter-Teſtimonies alledg'd. Paulus Diaconus, who abridg'd Feſtus Pompeius, affirms from Feſtus, that Decima quæque Veteres Diis ſuis offerebant. And here Joſeph Scaliger puts Herculi inſtead of Diis, and falls foul upon Paulus without Reaſon. And to ſhew the ancient Uſage of paying Tythes among the Pagans, Mountague cites Dionyſius Halycarnaſſæus an Author of the firſt Claſs. This Hiſtorian relates, that Hercules at his Return out of Spain with Geryon's Oxen, offer'd the Tenth of the Spoil to the Gods. The ſame Duty was afterwards paid by Tarquinius Priſcus at the taking of Sueſſa, and by Aulus Poſthumius upon his Victory againſt the Latines. And to theſe are added the Precedents of Marcus Coriolanus, and Marcus Horatius. And here he brings his Adverſary to a frank Confeſſion, and tells us, Selden owns the Heathens paid the Gods the Tenth of their Plunder, the Tenth of their Gain in Trade, and the Tenth of the Product of their Land: Now this Diſtribution gives up this Branch of the Cauſe, and takes in the whole Thing conteſted.

Mountague proceeds to prove, that Decimæ and Primitiæ are the ſame, from the Authorities of Philo-Judæus, and Dionyſius Halycarnaſſæus, and cites Callimachus for the ſame Purpoſe. From hence he infers, that ſince Primitiæ among the Heathens reach'd all Parts of Encreaſe, their paying of Tythes to the ſame Compaſs cannot be queſtion'd. And a little forward he catches Selden at Self-Contradiction; for this Author in his Review grants, that Tythes and Firſt-Fruits were paid yearly.

Pag. 464. to 467.

Pag. 473.

And becauſe Selden attempted to make good, that Tythes depended moſtly upon Vows and voluntary Acknowledgment, Mountague undertakes the Diſproof of this Aſſertion; and argues, that the Matter of a Vow may be a Duty prior to the ſolemn Engagement. * Thus Jacob vow'd, that if God would be with him, and proſper him in his Journey, the Lord ſhould be his God. † And yet without doubt his Duty of worſhipping God did not commence upon that Vow. And for the ſame Reaſon his Obligation to pay Tythes, which he promis'd, might be antecedent to his Vow, and independent on it.

* Vid. St. Auguſt. in Pſalm. 75.

† Gen. 28. 20, & 21.

And to harraſs Selden farther in his Philological Learning, he proves that the Roman Feſtivals, in which they paid their Tenths to their Gods, return'd annually; that 'twas the Cuſtom of this Noble Nation not to touch their Vintage till their Deities had receiv'd the Firſt-Fruits. (s) That the Siphnians gave the Tenth of the Mines of Gold and Silver to Apollo at Delphi; and that when they left off paying this Duty, the Sea broke in and ſwallow'd them. That the Tythes of Sardis were to be paid to Jupiter when the Perſians took it, and that this was Matter of Right and common Cuſtom. More Teſtimonies for this Point are produc'd by Mountague out of Herodotus, Pauſanias, Ariſtotle and Xenophon. (t)

(t) Porphyr. de Abſtin. lib. 2.

Mountague obſerves from Porphyry, that Primitiæ (the ſame in Proportion with Tenths) were given to God by the Pagans out of all Things ſerviceable to Life; That thoſe who forbore making this Acknowledgment, were mark'd as irreligious; and that a memorable Judgment happen'd upon the Thoes, a Nation confining upon Thracia, for this Omiſſion. He brings farther Evidence from Harpocration and Didymus, that 'twas a general Cuſtom among the Grecians to give the Tenth of their Encreaſe to the Gods. And Selden in his Review, though in Contradiction to what he had formerly maintain'd, confeſſes the Gentiles were very devout in giving the yearly Encreaſe to their Deities.

And to make the Argument more full, Mountague cites Diodorus Siculus, who reports it the cuſtomary Practice of the Carthaginians to pay the Tenth of all their Iſſues and Profits to Hercules of Tyre. (u) And that the old Arabians were oblig'd to pay Tythes to the Prieſts of Sabis, before they had the Liberty of ſelling their Goods. Farther, Demoſthenes declaim'd againſt Androtion and Timocrates for robbing Minerva of her Tythes. And here this Orator brands both thoſe who kept back the Homage, and thoſe who conniv'd at the Fraud, with Sacrilege. And laſtly, Mountague challenges Selden to ſhew any Nation or Country that omitted paying Tythes to their Gods, and offers to give up the Cauſe upon Proof by his Adverſary.

To proceed: Dr. Tilleſly in his Animadverſions upon Selden's Hiſtory of Tythes, lays down theſe three Propoſitions.

Some Strictures of Tilleſly's Anſwer to Selden.

I. Firſt, That the Fathers who liv'd before Conſtantine the Great, held Tythes due Jure Divino.

II. That after the ceaſing of the Pagan Perſecutions, Tythes were paid to the Clergy before the making any Imperial Laws or Canons for this Purpoſe.

III. That the Imperial and Eccleſiaſtical Laws touching Tythes, are only declarative of a Divine, and not merely introductive of a Human Right. (x)

(x) Tilleſly, pag. 2, 3. Id. pag. 1. to p. 31.

And here he produces 72 Teſtimonies of Fathers and Councils, beginning at the ſecond Century, and ending at the Year 1212. to prove the Divine Right of Tythes. I ſhall mention ſome few of theſe Authorities.

For the Purpoſe, the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions injoin'd the paying of Tythes; and to make this Authority ſignificant, he takes Notice that theſe Records of Antiquity are cenſur'd but in Part by the Council in Trullo; and then proceeds to a Defence of this particular Conſtitution. He goes on to prove Tythes paid by the Chriſtians to the Church in Origen's Time. (y) And St. Cyprian, amongſt other Inſtances of the Decay of Piety, complains, At nunc de Patrimoniis nec Decimas damus. (z) The Council of Gangra held in the Year 324. mentions Firſt-Fruits or Tythes as an ancient Duty paid to the Church. St. Auſtin, who was born in the Year 350, tells us, Majores noſtri Decimas dabant; our Anceſtors paid Tythes. (a)

And St. Jerom in his Comment upon the 44th Chapter of Ezekiel, aſſerts the ſame Thing as a cuſtomary Practice.

And to make good that Tythes were not merely voluntary Oblations, and arbitrary Bounty of Princes; he obſerves that the Conſent of the Dioceſan or Pope, concurr'd with Charlemagne in the ſettling of Tythes.

And to ſhew that the fixing of Incumbents upon Cures, was Part of the Biſhop's Juriſdiction, he cites a Canon of the Council of Orleans, That no Lords of Manors ſhould ſettle any Clerks within the Precinct of their Eſtates, without the Biſhops Leave. (b) This was a Reſembling Conſtitution to that of the Emperor Juſtinian, in which 'tis declar'd, That if any Lay-Perſon built a Church, and endow'd it with a Maintenance for a Clerk, himſelf or his Heirs might preſent a qualify'd Incumbent, whom the Biſhop was oblig'd to ordain. But in Caſe the Clerk was under-qualify'd by the Canons, the Biſhop was to provide for the Cure: And here the Trial of the Prieſt's Ability ſeems left to the Dioceſan. (c) Tilleſly charges Selden with ſeveral Inſtances of Miſrepreſentation: For the Purpoſe, Selden cites the Ninth Council of Toledo unfairly to prove Lay-Patrons had a Right of diſpoſing the Church Revenues; whereas by the Words of the Canon the direct contrary is evident. (d)

Selden pretends, that when the Advowſon of a Church deſcended in Coparcenary, the Patrons might divide the Profits, and preſent as many Clerks as there were Coparceners. This Tilleſly diſproves from the Capitulars of Charlemagne, and the Council of Chaalon in the ſame Reign

Selden aſſerts Lay-Patrons gave Inveſtiture, or Seizin of the Tythes and Endowments; and that this Cuſtom was not wholly laid aſide till the End of the Twelfth Century. This Aſſertion Tilleſly likewiſe diſproves from his Adverſary's Authorities. This Learned Divine obſerves from Linwood, That Monaſteries which enjoy'd appro-

Appropriated Livings had no Authority to inſtitute or ſuſpend, but in Virtue of their being the Biſhops Delegates. (e)

And whereas the Pope's giving the Privilege of Exemption from Payment of Tythes had been objected by Selden, Tilleſly replies, This is no Argument againſt the Divine Right of that Maintenance: 1ſt, Becauſe by the Doctrine of ſome in thoſe Ages, the Pope might diſpenſe with the Law of God, as in the Caſe of Vows, Marriage, and Allegiance. 2dly, Theſe Papal Exemptions to the Religious were granted only lege Charitatis, that is, in Regard the Monks upon the Score of their Poverty, had ſome Intereſt in the Tythes. Selden confeſſes, That the Biſhops of Germany, and other more Northern Nations, had the Right of all Tythes within their Dioceſe, and therefore might appropriate what they pleas'd. This Conceſſion, Tilleſly obſerves, is a Contradiction to what Selden had formerly aſſerted.

Tilleſly's Animad. Page 151.

Id. Pag. 211.

Tilleſly, after having given ſome Inſtances to his Purpoſe in England, obſerves, That when Patrons paſt away Tythes from the Parochial Church, the Grant was confirm'd by the Pope or Dioceſan. Thus Gundulphus, Biſhop of Rocheſter, in his Charter to the Monks of that Cathedral, concurs with the Patrons in paſſing the Tythes of ſeveral Churches to the Monks. By this Charter the Biſhops Authority is plainly declar'd neceſſary to make the Grant valid. The Conſent of the Rectors of the Churches, from whence the Tythes were alienated, is likewiſe mentioned. And farther, the Biſhop Gundulphus gives the Monks the Tythes of his own Manors, and of thoſe which belong'd to themſelves. And in ſhort, all the Grants of Tythes convey'd to the Church of Rocheſter are confirm'd by the reſpective Biſhops.

Id. Page 212. 13, & deinc.

Id. Page 217.

Tilleſly, upon the Courſe of the Argument, proves by ſeveral Records that Parochial Tythes were leſſen'd by Compoſition with the Rector, and not by the Arbitrary Diſpoſal of Lay-Patrons.

Selden pretends Lay-Patrons might build a Church within their own Fees without the Biſhop's Conſent. But his Authority from Innocent the Third is miſcited. For in that Epiſtle, the Pope gives them a Licence for this Purpoſe, provided they had Leave from the Biſhop And that the new Erections did not prejudice the Endowments of the ancient Churches. Farther, in Monaſteries the Monks preſented as Patrons to the Biſhop, and the Biſhop uſually reſerved himſelf a Power of aſſigning a Competency to the Vicar, or elſe made the Vicar ſuch an Allowance when the Living was firſt appropriated.

Id. Page 225.

Id. Page 230.

Selden confeſſes that by the Common Law, according both to Modern and Ancient Practice, the Juriſdiction of Tythes, that is, the direct and original Queſtion of the Right, belongs properly to the Eccleſiaſtical Court. And for this, beſides other Authorities, Bracton and Fleta, are cited by Selden. And to draw to an End, Tilleſly remarks, That before the Statutes of Diſſolution, if a Religious Houſe had been diſſolv'd by Death, or Ceſſion of the Religious, all Appropriations belonging to it would have been Preſentative. The Patronage would have reverted to the Heirs of the Donors, and the Tythes to the Pariſh Prieſt.

Id. Page 257.

And here it may not be improper to obſerve, That the old Cuſtom of paying Money in Lieu of Tythes, is a great Oppreſſion upon the Clergy: Becauſe, to go no farther backwards than King Edward the Third it appears a Shilling in that Reign weigh'd three Shillings of the modern Coin: And by the Statute 1 Ed. 2. cap. 1. 'tis evident that thoſe who had Twenty Pounds a Year in Fee, or for Term of Life, were obliged either to be Knighted, or fine for their Refuſal. From hence we may infer, That yearly Income was at leaſt equivalent to Eight hundred Pounds per Annum at preſent. For beſides the Abatement of the Weight, the Value of Money is remarkably ſunk ſince the Diſcovery of the Weſt-Indies, inſomuch as Twenty Shillings will ſcarce go ſo far now in Commerce and Expences of Living, as one Shilling would formerly. The Government ſeems therefore bound in Juſtice to null the Cuſtoms; or if this is not done, to examine the Time when they began, to calculate the Proportion between the ancient and modern State of the Coin, and bring up the Payment to the preſent Value of Money.

Nettles, another Antagoniſt of Selden.

To return; Selden, beſides Montague and Tilleſly, had another conſiderable Adverſary, one Nettles, a Country Clergy-Man. This Divine engaged his two firſt Chapters concerning the Cuſtom of Tything among the Jews. But the Reader may poſſibly have enough of this Matter: Thoſe who are inclin'd to go farther in the Argument, may pleaſe to conſult what I have reported upon this Head in the Firſt Volume.

To proceed; The Reform'd in the United Belgick Provinces had for ſome Time been broken into Two Diviſions, the Remonſtrants and Contra-Remonſtrants. To take up theſe Differences, the States reſolv'd on the Expedient of a Synod, which was held at Dort in Holland. And ſince the King of Great Britain thought fit to diſpatch ſome Divines to make Part of this Aſſembly, I ſhall give a brief Account of the Riſe of the Controverſy.

The Riſe of the Controverſy between the Remonſtrants and the Contra-Remonſtrants.

James Van-Harmin, or Arminius, Preacher at the great Church at Amſterdam, being ſomething ſhock'd with Perkins's Armilla aurea, wrote Animadverſions upon it, entituled, Examen Prædeſtinationis Perkinſianæ. This Performance being well receiv'd, and Junius, Divinity-Profeſſor at Leyden, dying in the Year 1603. Arminius was choſen by the Univerſity to ſucceed him. The Calvinians, diſpleas'd with his Preferment, charg'd him with ſeveral Heterodoxies, and preferr'd an Information againſt him to the States. When the Buſineſs was heard at the Hague, Arminius was acquitted, and ſent to Leyden with a ſtrong Recommendation from the Church of Amſterdam. Thus he continued Profeſſor 'till his Death, which happen'd in October 1609.

Arminius had diſtinguiſh'd himſelf by his Learning, Diligence, and Exemplary Behaviour. To give him his Due, he had a good reaſoning Head, and was no ordinary Genius. By the Strength of theſe Advantages he gain'd upon the Audience, and left a ſtrong Party behind him. The Controverſy between the Calviniſts and thoſe of Arminius's Perſuaſion were reduc'd to Five Points. Theſe Queſtions were held by the former to the ſame Senſe with the Lambeth Articles already mention'd. In the Year 1610, thoſe who adher'd to Arminius addreſs their Remonſtrance to the States of Holland. In this Paper they ſet forth their Doctrine, and endeavour to prove it agreeable to ancient Belief. This Narrative and Defence was attack'd by a Counter-Remonſtrance, preſented by the Calviniſts: And from hence came the Diſtinction of Remonſtrants and Contra-Remonſtrants. To prevent the ill Conſequences of different Sentiments in Religion, a Conference was appointed at the Hague in the Year

The Conference at the Hague.

(e) Lindwood's Tit. de locat. & Conduct. Cap. licet. Bonæ, &c.

1611. This publick Diſpute was manag'd by a ſelected Committee of either Side. And here the Remonſtrants ſeem'd to preſs the Calviniſts, and come off with Advantage. But what Ground the Contra-Remonſtrants loſt in the Conteſt they recover'd by their Intereſt. For being much ſuperior in Numbers, and countenanc'd by Maurice, Prince of Orange, they convented the other Party before their Conſiſtories, and harraſs'd them with Suſpenſions, Deprivations, and other Cenſures of the Church. This rough Uſage forc'd the Remonſtrants to apply to the Protection of John Olden Barnevelt, a Hollander, and a Perſon of Figure in the Council of State. By the Intereſt of this Patron they procur'd an Edict from the States of Holland and Weſt-Friezland in the Year 1613, injoining a Toleration of the Opinions of either Party. The Juſtice of this Edict is much commended by the moſt learned Grotius in his Diſcourſe, entituled, Pietas Ordinum Hollandiæ, &c. Bogerman, Sibrandus, and ſome other warm Calviniſts, publiſh their Diſlike of theſe Proceedings, and reflected on the Magiſtracy for their Neutrality. Not long after Grotius and Barnevelt were ſeiz'd and impriſon'd by the Prince of Orange. The latter was tried and executed, which Uſage was complain'd of as contrary to the Fundamental Laws of the Country, and the Union Articles.

Barnevelt and Grotius impriſoned.

Conjectures upon the Reaſons why King James fell in with the Contra-Remonſtrants.

King James having engag'd againſt Vorſtius, and given Arminius a hard Character, was prepoſſeſs'd in Favour of the Contra-Remonſtrants. As to the prevailing Motives which govern'd the King, they can only be gueſs'd at. Some think his Judgment was led by Archbiſhop Abbot, and Mountague, Biſhop of Wincheſter. Others fancy his Education in Scotland might give him a Biaſs towards Calvin. And ſome will have it, the Strength of his Affection to the Prince of Orange over-rul'd him into theſe Meaſures. A fourth Conjecture reſolves the Matter into Reaſons of State: That the King countenanc'd the Contra-Remonſtrants to ſecure the publick Repoſe in the United Provinces, and prevent their flying out into Civil Diſtractions: That he look'd upon the Remonſtrants as a Faction: And that the Harmony of the Country was firſt diſturb'd by that Party. Now the King at this Time had a conſiderable Intereſt going in the Netherlands. The Cautionary Towns of the Brill, Fluſhing, and the Fort of Ramekins, were ſtill in his Hands. For theſe Reaſons, he is ſuppoſed to have a more than ordinary Concern for the Quiet of that Government. But after all, the moſt honourable Gueſs for the King's Memory is, That his Underſtanding might be ſurpriz'd; and that he had not look'd thoroughly through the Controverſy.

To go on: The Contra-Remonſtrants having cruſh'd their Adverſaries by Dint of Power, thought it prudent to ſecure their Conqueſt, and get the Face of a Church Authority to countenance their Rigours. To this Purpoſe the States General, ſolicited by the Prince of Orange and King James, order'd a National Synod at Dort. To this Aſſembly all the Calvinians in Europe (thoſe of France excepted) diſpatch'd their Commiſſioners. King James being requeſted by the States to contribute to the Solemnity of the Appearance, ſent four Divines of Character, viz. George Carleton, Doctor of Divinity, then Biſhop of Landaff, and afterwards tranſlated to Chicheſter, Joſeph Hall, Doctor of Divinity, then Dean of Worceſter, afterwards ſucceſſively Biſhop of Exeter and Norwich, John Davenant, Doctor of Divinity, Margaret-Profeſſor, and Maſter of Queen's-College in Cambridge, afterwards Biſhop of Saliſbury, Samuel Ward, Doctor of Divinity, and Maſter of Sidney-College in Cambridge, and Archdeacon of Taunton. Theſe Divines attending his Majeſty at New-Market receiv'd the following Inſtructions, which I ſhall give the Reader as they ſtand tranſcrib'd from Dr. Davenant's Manuſcript.

Four Engliſh Divines ſent by the King to the Synod of Dort.

The King's Inſtructions to theſe Divines.

1. "Our Will and Pleaſure is, That from this Time forward, upon all Occaſions, you inure your ſelves to the Practice of the Latin Tongue; that, when there is Cauſe, you may deliver your Minds with more Readineſs and Facility.

2. "You ſhall in all Points to be debated and diſputed, reſolve among your ſelves beforehand what is the true State of the Queſtion, and jointly and uniformly agree thereupon.

3. "If in debating of the Cauſe by the Learned Men there, any Thing be emergent, whereof you thought not before, you ſhall meet and conſult thereupon again, and ſo reſolve among your ſelves jointly what is fit to be maintain'd. And this to be done agreeably to the Scriptures, and the Doctrine of the Church of England.

4. "Your Advice ſhall be to thoſe Churches, that their Miniſters do not deliver in the Pulpit to the People thoſe Things for ordinary Doctrines which are the higheſt Points of Schools, and not fit for vulgar Capacity, but diſputable on both Sides.

5. "That they uſe no Innovation in Doctrine, but teach the ſame Things which were taught Twenty or Thirty Years paſt in their own Churches; and eſpecially, that which contradicteth not their own Confeſſions, ſo long ſince publiſh'd, and known unto the World.

6. "That they conform themſelves to the publick Confeſſions of the neighbour Reformed Churches, with whom to hold good Correſpondency ſhall be no Diſhonour to them.

7. "That if there be main Oppoſition between any, who are over-much addicted to their own Opinions, your Endeavour ſhall be that certain Poſitions be moderately laid down, which may tend to the Mitigation of Heat on both Sides.

8. These Engliſh Divines, in Regard to their Character, and the King who ſent them, had an Allowance from the States of Ten Pounds Sterling a Day, which they frankly ſpent in furniſhing an Hoſpitable Table. They had Orders from the King to ſend him weekly Diſpatches of what was done in the Synod,

The next Month Walter Balcanquell, Batchelor of Divinity, appear'd at the Synod with Credentials from King James. The Letter imported that 'twas his Majeſty's Pleaſure he ſhould act in the Synod as a Repreſentative of the Church of Scotland. He was accordingly admitted, and ſaluted with a Speech by the Preſident.

And now to keep cloſe to the Order of Time I ſhall go back to England, and give the Reader an Account of Selden's Submiſſion, regiſter'd in the High Commiſſion Court, in which he acknowleges his Fault under his own Hand for publiſhing his Book, entituled, The Hiſtory of Tythes. The whole Record ſtands thus:

Selden*'s Recantation for writing his Hiſtory of Tythes.*

Viceſimo Octavo die Menſis Januarii, Anno Domini juxta Computationem Eccleſiæ Anglicanæ 1618, *coram Reverendiſſimo in Chriſto Patre, Domino Georgio, Providentia Divina Cantuarienſi Archiepiſcopo, totius Angliæ Primate & Metropolitano, Johannne London, Lancelot. The Submiſſion runs in the Form following:

My Good Lords,

I moſt humbly acknowlege my Error, which I have committed in publiſhing the Hiſtory of Tythes, and eſpecially, in that I have at all, by ſhewing any Interpretation of Holy Scriptures, by meddling with Councils, Fathers, or Canons, or by what elſe ſoever occurs in it, offer'd any Occaſion of Argument againſt any Right of Maintenance Jure Divino of the Miniſters of the Goſpel; Beſeeching your Lordſhips to receive this ingenuous and humble Acknowlegement, together with the unfeigned Proteſtation of my Grief, for that through it I have ſo incurred both his Majeſty's and your Lordſhips Diſpleaſure, conceiv'd againſt me in the Behalf of the Church of England. John Selden.

This Year James Mountague, Biſhop of Wincheſter, departed this Life. He was Son to Sir Edward Mountague of Boughton in Northamtonſhire, bred in Chriſt's, and afterwards Maſter of Sidney-College in Cambridge. This Prelate had a great Share in the King's Eſteem, publiſh'd his Majeſty's Works, and wrote the Preface. He was firſt preferr'd to the See of Bath and Wells, and from thence to Wincheſter. He lies buried in the Cathedral of Bath, which Church he in a Manner rebuilt at his own Charge.

Fuller.

John Overal, Biſhop of Norwich, died about this Time. He was Maſter of Katherine-Hall, and King's Profeſſor of Divinity in Cambridge. He was a ſtrong Genius, made a great Improvement in Study, and was reckon'd one of the moſt learned Controverſial Divines of his Time.

Dr. Hall*'s Return to* England on the Score of ill Health.

To return to the Synod of Dort: Dr. Hall finding the Air unfriendly to his Conſtitution, got his Majeſty's Leave to diſengage, and come for England. He excus'd his going off in a Speech, in which he laments his being unſerviceable upon the Score of his Indiſpoſition, expreſſes his Eſteem of the Synod, and his Regret in parting with them. But though his Health was ſunk, his Oration is lively and florid, as the Reader may ſee in the Records. (i) Hall was ſucceeded by Thomas Goad, Doctor of Divinity, and Chaplain to Archbiſhop Abbot. The Preſident receiv'd him with the Compliment of a Speech, in which among other Things he made a Panegyrick upon the King for his Care of the Synod, and not recalling one Divine till he had furniſh'd another.

In the Hundred and forty fifth Seſſion the Belgick Confeſſion was brought in to be ſubſcrib'd by the Dutch, and publickly approv'd by the foreign Divines. In this Form of Belief there was one Article which claſh'd directly with the Conſtitution of the Engliſh Church. 'Tis the Thirty firſt, where 'tis expreſly affirm'd, That the Miniſters of the Word of God, in what Place ſoever ſettled, have the ſame Advantage of Character, the ſame Juriſdiction and Authority, in Regard they are all of them equally Miniſters of Chriſt, the only univerſal Biſhop, and Head of the Church. *

This Article being a broad Cenſure of the Government of the Church by Archbiſhops and Biſhops, was oppos'd by the Britiſh Divines, and particularly by Biſhop Carleton, who publickly proteſted againſt it. This Proteſtation, though admitted, and poſſibly enter'd upon Record, was not ſo far conſider'd as to receive an Anſwer. In what Form this Exception was couched the Reader may ſee from the Biſhops Declaration, publiſh'd upon his Return into England. His Words are theſe:

Biſhop Carleton*'s Proteſtation in the Synod in Behalf of Epiſcopacy.*

> When we were to yield our Conſent to the Belgick Confeſſion at Dort, I made open Proteſtation in the Synod, That whereas in the Confeſſion there was inſerted a ſtrange Conceit of the Parity of Miniſters to be inſtituted by Chriſt, I declar'd our Diſſent utterly in that Point. I ſhow'd, that by Chriſt a Parity was never inſtituted in the Church: That he ordain'd Twelve Apoſtles, as alſo Seventy Diſciples: That the Authority of the Twelve was above the other: That the Church preſerv'd this Order left by our Savionr. And therefore, when the Extraordinary Power of the Apoſtles ceas'd, yet this ordinary Authority continued in Biſhops, who ſucceeded them, who were by the Apoſtles left in the Government of the Church, to ordain Miniſters, and to ſee that they who were ſo ordain'd ſhould preach no other Doctrine: That in an Inferior Degree the Miniſters, who were govern'd by Biſhops, ſucceeded the Seventy Diſciples: That this Order hath been maintain'd in the Church from the Times of the Apoſtles. And herein I appeal'd to the Judgment of Antiquity, and to the Judgment of any Learned Man now living; and craved herein to be ſatisfied, if any Man of Learning could ſpeak to the contrary. My Lord of Salisbury is my Witneſs, and ſo are all the reſt of our Company, who ſpake alſo in the Cauſe.

The Dutch Divines Excuſe for living without Epiſcopacy.

To this the Biſhop ſubjoins, That in a Conference with ſome Divines of that Synod he told them, The Cauſe of all their Troubles, was becauſe they had no Biſhops amongſt them, who by their Authority might repreſs turbulent Spirits that broach'd Novelty, every Man having Liberty to ſpeak or write what they liſt: And that as long as there were no Eccleſiaſtical Men in Authority to repreſs and cenſure ſuch Contentious Spirits, their Church could never be without Trouble. To this their Anſwer was, That they had a great Honour for the good Order and Diſcipline in the Church of England, and heartily wiſh'd they could eſtabliſh themſelves upon this Model: But they had no Proſpect of ſuch a Happineſs; and ſince the Civil Government had made their Deſires impracticable, they hoped God would be merciful to them.

By the Way; The States upon their Revolt from the King of Spain deſtroy'd ſeven Sees, and applied the Revenues to the publick Service. The Names of them are theſe; the Biſhoprick of Harlem in Holland, of Middleborough in Zealand, of Lewarden in Friezland, of Groningue in Groningen, of Deventer in Overyſſell, of Ruremonde in Guelderland, and the Archbiſhoprick of Utrecht, to which the Biſhops of the other Sees above-mentioned were Suffragans.

Thus, 'tis poſſible, the Gain of Sacrilege prevail'd to break the Apoſtolical Government. Thoſe at the Helm might be averſe to the continuing Epiſcopacy, for Fear ſome Part of the old Endowments ſhould be expected to maintain it. Thus the Miter was ſent to the Mint, to keep the New Exchequer in Caſh: The Croſier was ſeized, and a Staff provided inſtead of it. Some People love a cheap Religion, and a poor Clergy: A Clergy without Strength either in Character or Circumſtances. This is the Way to make Diſcipline low and eaſy; to check the Freedom of the Pulpits, and prevent their being troubleſome to the Shop and Exchange.

To proceed; Church Government was not the only Point in Difference between the Dutch and Britiſh Divines: For theſe latter aſſerted an Univerſality of Redemption by the Death of Chriſt. But this would by no Means paſs upon the Majority. In ſhort, the Arminian Tenents were condemn'd, and the Remonſtrants requir'd to ſubſcribe the Cenſure of their own Doctrine. And upon their Refuſal of this Condition, about Seven hundred Families were baniſh'd by an Order of the States General.

April 29. An. Dom. 1619. The Breaking up of the Synod of Dort.

At the Breaking up of the Synod the Government preſented the Engliſh Divines with 200 l. to bear the Expences of their Voyage: They had likewiſe each of them a Golden Medal, repreſenting the Figure of the Synod. And at their going off, the States gave them their Letter to the King: In which, after having own'd their Obligation to his Majeſty for his Regard to their Church: They make an honourable Mention of theſe Divines in general; and then add a diſtinguiſhing Commendation of the Biſhop of Landaff. (k)

(k) See Records, Num. CVII.

Some Queries upon the Authority of this Meetning.

As to the Authority of the Synod of Dort, a few Queries may be put to the Reader's Solution. But before I do this, I ſhall ſuppoſe theſe Dort Divines to have been all Presbyters, or at leaſt, to have ſet up their Reformation upon Prieſts Orders, convey'd by ſome of the Epiſcopal College. I ſay, for Brevity's Sake, I ſhall ſuppoſe this, and enter upon no Diſquiſition touching Matter of Fact. This being ſuppoſed, the Firſt Query is,

Whether the Genuineneſs of St. Ignatius's Epiſtles is not proved beyond Exception by Biſhop Pearſon? Granting this; Whether that celebrated Martyr, who makes the Epiſcopal Office ſo abſolutely neceſſary in the Church; whether that celebrated Martyr, if living, would have aſſiſted at this Synod?

Secondly, Whether thoſe Primitive Biſhops who drew up the Thirty ſeventh and Thirty ninth of the Apoſtles Canons, would have allow'd a Company of Presbyters a Conciliary Character, and the Claim of a Supream Eccleſiaſtical Authority?

Thirdly, Whether the famous Synod of Alexandria, already mention'd, that cenſur'd Iſchyras and Colluthus would have taken theſe Divines by the Hand, or held any Church-Correſpondence with them?

Fourthly, Whether by the Diſcipline, and general Practice of the ancient Church, the Dort-Meeting would not have been counted an Invaſion upon the Epiſcopal College?

Fifthly, Whether the ſigning the Thirty firſt Article of the Belgick-Confeſſion, and declaring for a Parity in the Miniſtry, does not imply a Revolt from the Eccleſiaſtical Authority ſettled by the Apoſtles, and univerſally received for 1500 Years together?

Sixthly, Whether the Words Proteſtant and Reformed, clap'd to any Sect of Chriſtians, have Force ſufficient to alter the original Seat of Church Government, to renverſe the ancient Diſcipline, and turn the Spiritual Legiſlature into a new Channel? But I ſhall paſs on, and leave theſe Queries to the Reader's Determination.

As to the Management of the Synod of Dort, 'tis foreign to our Purpoſe; and therefore I ſhall wave relating the Partiality of their Proceedings, the hard Uſage put upon the Remonſtrants, and the Squabbles among themſelves: For whatever this Synod may ſignify in ſome Places, we have nothing to do with it.

The Engliſh that appear'd there were no other than four Court-Divines: Their Commiſſion and Inſtructions were only from the King: Properly ſpeaking, they were no more than his Majeſty's Plenipotentiaries: They had no Delegation from the Biſhops, and by Conſequence were no Repreſentatives of the Britiſh Church. The next Inference is, That what was done There can have no binding Force upon the Engliſh Communion.

The Bohemians refuſe to acknowlege the Emperor Ferdinand the Second.

About this Time Frederick, Elector Palatine, the King's Son in Law, engag'd in a very unfortunate Enterpriſe, and by graſping at the Crown of Bohemia, loſt his own Dominions. To give the Reader a ſhort Account of this Matter, I muſt take my Riſe a little higher.

In the Reign of the Emperor Rodolphus the Second, the Calvinian Confeſſioniſts in Bohemia being apprehenſive the Roman Catholicks had form'd a ſtrong Party againſt them, met in a General Aſſembly at New Prague, in the Year 1609. This Meeting, though not conven'd by the Emperor's Authority, made a publick Proteſtation of their Duty; and that their Buſineſs was only to promote his Majeſty's Service, and prevent the Deſigns of Evil Councellors. Upon this they write to the King of Hungary, the Elector Palatine, the Dukes of Saxony and Brunſwick, and other Princes of the Empire, requeſting them to ſolicit at Vienna for a Toleration of their Religion: For their Belief, as they affirm'd, was the ſame in Subſtance with the Augsbourg Confeſſion. After this they addreſs the Emperor in expoſtulating Terms: They complain how much they had been diſappointed from Time to Time: And in fine, take the Freedom to acquaint him they intend to exert themſelves in the Field: But then this Motion, as they ſaid, ſhould be only in Defence of his Imperial Majeſty, and to protect themſelves from the Practice of their Enemies: Purſuant to this Remonſtrance, they levy a conſiderable Army well officer'd, and march boldly into Prague. They likewiſe procured an Embaſſy from the Elector of Saxony, and the States of Sileſia, who interceded for them. This Application open'd the Emperor a Paſſage to give Way with ſomething of Honour, and put a better Complexion upon his Conceſſions: For notwithſtanding their Petition would have look'd well, had it been drawn in dutiful and unmenacing Expreſſions, the Emperor 'tis likely would not have gone their whole Length in his Condeſcenſions. But now being under a Neceſſity, he gave them a Toleration in Form, which continued undiſturb'd during his Reign.

They proffer the Crown to the Elector Palatine, who accepts it.

This Prince was ſucceeded in the Empire by his Brother Mathias, who reſign'd the Kingdom of Bohemia to his Couſin Ferdinand Arch-Duke of Gratz. Ferdinand was likewiſe elected to this Kingdom, but not with that general Conſent of the States, which appear'd for his Predeceſſor. For this Reaſon, the Bohemians conteſted the Legality of the Election, diſclaim'd Ferdinand, applied to the Elector Palatine, and offer'd him the Crown. And now Ferdinand, upon the Death of Mathias, was choſen Emperor. The Palſgrave ſtood ill with the Court of Vienna, firſt for Projecting the Confederacy of the Calviniſtick Princes of the Union: And Secondly, for razing the Fortifications at Udenhaine, made by the late Emperor's Orders: And for which he was proſecuted in the Chamber of Spiers. By the Toleration-Edict of the Emperor Rodolphus, the Bohemian Evangelicks had the Liberty of Building Churches in Towns and Villages: And this Privilege, as they conſtrued it, extended to the Precincts of the Roman Catholick Lords. But this Senſe of the Article was not agreed to by the Papiſts, who ſtop'd the Building of their Churches in their own Lordſhips. Upon this the Rupture began, the Bohemians ran to Arms, and endeavour'd to make an Alliance with the Proteſtant Princes of the Empire. In ſhort, the Elector Palatine hearkens to their Propoſal, ſends to the King of England for his Advice upon the Juncture, but cloſes with the Bohemians, and accepts the Crown, before 'twas poſſible for his Father in Law to return him an Anſwer. (l)

This News was very ſurprizing to the King: However, Archbiſhop Abbot, who ſeems biaſs'd towards Calviniſm, mov'd ſtrongly for ſupporting the Elector Palatine. And being in no Condition to come abroad, he wrote his Opinion in a very warm Strein to Secretary Nanton. His Letter is in theſe Words.

Archbiſhop Abbot's Letter to Secretary Nanton in Behalf of the Elector.

Good Mr. Secretary,

“I have never more deſired to be preſent at any Conſultation, than that which is this Day to be handled; for my Heart, and all my Heart goeth with it; but my Foot is worſe than it was on Friday, ſo that by Advice of my Phyſician, I have ſweat this whole Night paſt, and am directed to keep my Bed this Day.

“But for the Matter, my humble Advice is, that there is no going back, but a Countenancing of it againſt all the World; yea ſo far, as with Ringing of Bells, and making of Bonfires in London, ſo ſoon as it ſhall be certainly underſtood that the Coronation is paſt. I am ſatisfied in my Conſcience, that the Cauſe is juſt, wherefore they have rejected that proud and bloody Man; and ſo much the rather, becauſe he hath taken a Courſe to make that Kingdom not elective, but to take it from the Donation of another Man. And when God hath ſet up the Prince that is choſen to be a Mark of Honour thro' all Chriſtendom, to propagate his Goſpel, and to protect the Oppreſs'd; I dare not for my Part give Advice, but to follow where God Leads.

“It is a great Honour to the King our Maſter, That he hath ſuch a Son, whoſe Virtues have made him thought fit to be made a King. And methinks, I do in this, and that of Hungary, foreſee the Work of God, That by Piece and Piece, the Kings of the Earth, that gave their Power unto the Beaſt (all the Word of God muſt be fulfill'd) ſhall now tear the Whore, and make her deſolate, as St. John in his Revelation hath foretold. I pray you therefore with all the Spirits you have, to put Life into this Buſineſs; and let a Return be made into Germany with Speed, and with Comfort, and let it be really proſecuted, that it may appear to the World, that we are awake when God in this Sort calleth us.

“If I had Time to expreſs it, I could be very Angry at the Shuffling which was uſed toward my Lord Doncaſter, and the Slighting of his Embaſſage ſo, which cannot but touch upon our great Maſter who did ſend him; and therefore I would never have a noble Son forſaken, for Reſpect of them who truly aim at nothing but their own Purpoſes.

“Our ſtriking in will comfort the Bohemians, will honour the Palſgrave, will ſtrengthen the Union, will bring on the States of the Low-Countries, will ſtir up the King of Denmark, and will move his Two Uncles, the Prince of Orange, and the Duke of Bovillon, together with Tremoville (a rich Prince in France) to caſt in their Shares; and Hungary, as I hope (being in that ſame Cauſe) will run the ſame Fortune. For the Means to ſupport the War, I hope providebit Deus: The Parliament is the Old and honourable Way, but how aſſured at this Time, I know not; yet I will hope the beſt: Certainly, if Countenance be given to the Action, many brave Spirits will voluntarily go. Our great Maſter in ſufficient Want of Money, gave ſome Aid to the Duke of Savoy, and furniſh'd out a pretty Army in the Cauſe of Cleve. We muſt try once again what can be done in this Buſineſs of a higher Nature, and all the Money that may be ſpared, is to be turned that Way. And perhaps God provided the Jewels that were laid up in the Tower to be gather'd by the Mother for the Preſervation of her Daughter; who like a noble Princeſs hath profeſs'd to her Huſband, not to leave her ſelf one Jewel, rather than not to maintain ſo religious and righteous a Cauſe. You ſee that lying on my Bed, I have gone too far; but if I were with you, this ſhould be my Language, which I pray you humbly and heartily to repreſent to the King my Maſter, telling him, that when I can ſtand, I hope to do his Majeſty ſome Service herein. So commending me unto you, I remain, (m)

King James refuſes to own his Son in Law King of Bohemia.

Thus the Archbiſhop expreſs'd his Zeal, and I am willing to believe his Conſcience went along with it. But the King, who had better Opportunities for pronouncing upon the Merits of the Cauſe, was of a different Sentiment: He would by no Means follow his Son in Law's Meaſures: He neither ſaluted him in his new Title, nor ſuffer'd his being pray'd for in Churches in any higher Diſtinction than that of Prince Palatine.

Nov. 8. 1620.

The defeat of this Prince's Forces in a main Battle at Prague, was follow'd by the Loſs of the Palatinates; inſomuch, That the Elector and the Princeſs, were forced to quit their own Country, and retire into Holland.

On the 30th of January the King called a Parliament, and open'd the Seſſion with a Speech. Some Part of what his Majeſty deliver'd will acquaint us farther with his Judgment upon the Bohemian War, and may not be foreign to the Subject in Hand.

The King cenſured for treating a Match between his Son Prince Charles, and the Infanta of Spain.

As to Religion, the King remarks there were Laws enough, provided the true Meaning of them was purſued. "That the Maintenance of Religion conſiſted in Two Points, Perſuaſion and Compulſion, and that the latter Method ought never to be uſed, but where the firſt proves unſucceſsful. However, his Majeſty thinks the Iſſue ought not to be wholy caſt on the Goodneſs of the Cauſe: That Error ſhould be under Reſtraint: And neither the Jeſuits or Puritans be ſuffer'd to range at Diſcretion." And now, continues the King, "Becauſe a Rumor is ſpread, That I ſhould tolerate Religion in Reſpect of this Match, which has been long treated with Spain for my Son; I profeſs I will do nothing therein which ſhall not be honourable, and for the Good of Religion: The Trial which you have had of my Works and Writings, wherein I have been a Martyr, tortur'd in the Mouths of many idle Fellows, may give you ample Teſtimony of my Integrity, in ſuch a Sort, as I hope you truſt the Wiſdom of your King ſo far, as that I will never do one Thing in private, and another Thing in publick: But if after this my Declaration, any ſhall trangreſs, blame me not if I ſee them ſeverely puniſh'd.

The King declares his Diſlike of the Elector's accepting the Crown of Bohemia, and why.

Having gone over this Head, he tells them his chief Motive for calling them together, was for furniſhing Supplies. And now to ſpeak in his Majeſty's Perſon and Words, "The next Reaſon for Meeting you here, is for an urgent Neceſſity; the miſerable and torn Eſtate of Chriſtendom; which none that hath an honeſt Heart, can look on without a weeping Eye. I was not the Cauſe of the Beginning thereof (God knows) but I pray God I may be a happy Inſtrument of a happy Ending the Wars in Bohemia, I mean, wherein the States expell'd the Emperor, and choſe my Son in Law their King: I was requeſted at Firſt by both Sides to make an Agreement between them: Which coſt me 3000 l. in ſending Doncaſter on an Embaſſy for that Purpoſe. In the mean Time they caſt of all Allegiance, and choſe my Son, who ſent to me to know whether he ſhould take the Crown upon him or not; and yet, within Three Days after, before I could return my Anſwer, took the Crown on his Head; and then I was loath to meddle in it at all for Three Reaſons.

"Firſt, I would not make Religion the Cauſe of depoſing Kings. I leave that Cauſe to the Jeſuits, to make Religion a Cauſe to take away Crowns.

"Next I was not a fit Judge between them: For they might after ſay to me, as he ſaid to Moſes, Who made thee a Judge over us? And my ſelf would not be content that they ſhould judge whether I were a King or not.

"Laſtly, Becauſe I had been a Medler between them, and then to determine my Son might take the Crown upon him, had been improper; and yet I left not off ſo far, as Nature compell'd me, to admit his Good, I permitted a voluntary Contribution to preſerve the Palatinate, which came to a great Sum. For that Purpoſe I borrow'd alſo Seventy five thouſand Pounds of my Brother of Denmark, and have now ſent to him to make it up a Hundred thouſand Pounds, &c. (n)

The King thus frankly declaring himſelf, diſguſted the Engliſh Puritans, and thoſe of their Perſuaſion Abroad. But among the Lutherans and others, his prefering the Regards of Juſtice to Intereſt and Blood, gave a Luſtre to his Honour, and gain'd him the Reputation of a Religious Prince.

Archbiſhop Abbot's Miſfortune at Bramzil Park.

The next Summer Archbiſhop Abbot being invited by the Lord Zouch to kill a Buck at his Park at Bramzil in Hampſhire, met with a very calamitous Accident. For ſhooting at a Deer with a Croſs-bow, the Keeper coming up unwarily too forward, was ſtruck with the Arrow under the left Arm, and died about an Hour after. The King inform'd of this Miſfortune, and apprehenſive Scandal might be given, if the Matter was paſs'd over, reſolv'd to have the Caſe thoroughly examin'd. To this Purpoſe the following Letter was directed to the Lord Keeper Williams, the Biſhops of London, Wincheſter, Rocheſter, St. Davids, and Exeter, Sir Henry Hubbart Knight, Chief Juſtice of the Common-Pleas, Mr. Juſtice Dodderidge, Sir Henry Martin, and Mr. Dr. Steward, or any Six of them, whereof the Lord Keeper (then Biſhop of Lincoln) the Biſhops of London, Winton, and St. Davids to be four.

The King's Letter to ſeveral Biſhops, Judges, &c. to examine the Caſe.

"It is not Unknown unto you what happen'd this laſt Summer unfortunately to our Right Truſty, and our Right well-beloved Counſellor, the Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury; who ſhooting at a Deer with a Croſs-bow in Bramzil Park, did with that ſhoot caſually give the Keeper a Wound, whereof he died. Which Accident, tho' it might have happen'd to any other Man, yet becauſe his eminent Rank and Function in the Church, hath (as we are informed) miniſtred Occaſion of ſome Doubts, as making the Caſe different in his Perſon, in Reſpect of the Scandal (as is ſuppos'd) We therefore being deſirous (as it is fit we ſhould) to be ſatisfied therein, and repoſing eſpecial Truſt in your Learning and Judgment; have made Choice of you to inform us concerning the Nature of the Caſe: And do therefore require you to take it preſently into your Conſideration, and the Scandal that may have riſen thereupon: And to certify us, what in your Judgments the ſame may amount unto, either to an Irregularity, or otherwiſe. And laſtly, What Means may be found to redreſs the ſame (if need be) of all which Points we ſhall expect to hear your Reports, with what Diligence and Expedition you poſſibly may. Abbot (George) Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

To this Letter the Biſhops and others, to whom the Conſideration of the Archbiſhop's Caſe was refer'd, return'd their Anſwer in theſe Words.

Their Anſwer to his Majeſty.

May it pleaſe your Majeſty,

“ Whereas we receiv'd a Command from your Majeſty under your Royal Signet, to deliver our Opinions unto your Majeſty, whether an Irregularity or Scandal might ariſe by this unfortunate Act, which God permitted to come to paſs by the Hand of the moſt Reverend Father in God, the Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, ſhooting in a Croſs-bow at a Deer in Bramzil Park; as alſo of the Cure and Remedy of the ſame Irregularity, in Caſe it ſhould be ſo adjug'd; we do in all Lowlineſs and Humility return this Account to your Majeſty.

For the Firſt,

“ Whether any Irregularity be contracted by this Act, in the Perſon of my Lord Archbiſhop, or not? No greater Part of our Number could aſſent or agree: Becauſe the Canons and Decrees themſelves are ſo general and ſo ready to entertain Diſtinctions and Limitations, the Doctors and Gloſſes ſo differing, Inferences and Diſputes ſo peculiar to every Man's Conceit and Apprehenſion, Authorities of Canoniſts and Caſuiſts, ſo oppoſite in this very Caſe in Hand; that we could not return unto your Majeſty any unanimous Reſolution or Opinion in the ſame.

For the Second,

“ Whether any Scandal may ariſe out of this Act? We are of Opinion, a Scandal may be taken by the Weak at home, and the Malitious abroad; tho' moſt of us believe, there was no Scandal given by the ſaid Right Reverend Father.

For the Third,

“ We are all agreed, not only that a Reſtitution or Diſpenſation may be granted by your Majeſty, either immediately under the great Seal, or (which moſt of us in all Humility repreſent unto your Majeſty) by the Hands of ſome Clergymen, delegated by your Majeſty for that Purpoſe, or what other Way your Majeſty ſhall be pleas'd to extend that Favour. But withal, we are of Opinion, that it is moſt fitting for the ſaid Reverend Father, both in Regard of his Perſon, and the Honour of the Church, to ſue unto your moſt gracious Majeſty for the ſaid Diſpenſation in majorem Cautelam, ſi qua fortè ſit Irregularitas. All which, craving Pardon for our Weakneſs, we do in all Humbleneſs ſubmit to the Deciſion of your Majeſty's moſt Profound and incomparable Wiſdom.

The Archbiſhop govern'd by this Advice, and applying to the King, his Majeſty directed a Commiſſion to the Biſhop of Lincoln, Lord Keeper; to the Biſhops of London, Wincheſter, Norwich Coventry and Litchfield, to the Biſhops of Bath and Wells, Ely, and Chicheſter, impowering them, or any Six of them, (of which the Biſhops of Lincoln, London, Wincheſter, and Norwich were to be of the Quorum) to diſpenſe with any Irregularity, or Suſpicion of Irregularity, in Caſe the late Accident had drawn any ſuch Blemiſh or Imputation upon the Archbiſhop. By this Inſtrument, the Canons, in Caſe there was Need, are overrul'd and diſpens'd with. The Force of Abbot's Character is reviv'd, and he is fully reſtor'd to the Exerciſes of his Function. This is a wonderful Relief from the Crown! And ſuppoſes a Patriarchal at leaſt, if not a Papal Authority veſted in the King! The Record lays the Death of the Keeper upon his own Raſhneſs, and Want of Care, makes the Homicide perfectly caſual, that the Archbiſhop was in no Degree to blame for the Misfortune: And that this Requeſting his Majeſty for a Diſpenſation, was only ad Cautelam, & ex ſuperabundanti.

The Archbiſhop procures a Diſpenſation from the King for preventing Exceptions to his Character.

And that the Reader may better remark how far the Diſpenſation reaches, he may pleaſe to obſerve, that Irregularity lays the ſacerdotal Powers, as it were, aſleep, forfeits all Preferments, and makes the Perſon uncapable of any for the Future.

An Apology written for Archbiſhop Abbot.

To return; Beſides the favourable Report of the Archbiſhop's Caſe in the Commiſſion, there was a learned Apology drawn up for him. The Author proves Hunting for Health allow'd Clergymen: This Point he makes good from ſeveral Authorities, and diſables ſome Objections from the Canon Law. From hence he advances to prove that caſual Homicide ſticks no blemiſh, nor incurs any Irregularity, where the Perſon committing it was engaged in no unlawful Buſineſs or Recreation, and took all neceſſary Precaution to guard againſt Accidents. That all this might be fairly pleaded in Behalf of the Archbiſhop, is not only taken for granted in the Diſpenſation, but farther made out by this Apologiſt. For the Purpoſe, he takes Notice, that the Canon de clerico Venatore cited in the Decretum againſt the Archbiſhop, has a Mark of Cenſure and Unauthenticneſs put upon it by Gratian. He brings the Gloſs for Evidence, that whereas this Canon is cited out of the 4th Council of Orleans, there is no ſuch Thing there to be found. Thirdly, The pretended Canon is levell'd only againſt Clamoſa Venatio, but quieta or modeſta is allow'd by the Canoniſts: Now this latter was the Recreation in which the Misfortune happen'd at Bramzil, as may be ſeen in the Diſpenſing Inſtrument. The Apologiſt reinforces his Argument by obſerving, that by 35 H. 8. cap. 16. No Canon is in Force in England, which claſhes with the Laws and Statutes of this Realm, or the Prerogative Royal: And that the Canon urg'd againſt Abbot, is of this Nature. For by Charta de Foreſta, Archbiſhops and Biſhops have expreſs Liberty to hunt. And that from 13 R. 2. cap. 13. it follows by neceſſary Implication, That a Clergyman who has Ten Pounds per Annum or upwards, may keep Greyhounds or Hounds to hunt: And to mention nothing farther from him, he argues, That Lindwood, who was very well skill'd in the Engliſh Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitutions, condemns only the Exceſſes of Hunting in Clergymen, and the undue Application of that Liberty; but does no where pronounce it as abſolutely unlawful for their Profeſſion. After this, he gives ſeveral Inſtances of Biſhops, who have us'd this Diverſion without Cenſure or Imputation. (q)

Abbot (George) Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

And laſtly, The famous Sir Edward Coke, upon the Queſtion being put to him by Sir Henry Saville, Whether a Biſhop may hunt in a Park by the Laws of the Realm, anſwer'd affirmatively in theſe Words; He may hunt by the Laws of the Realm, by this very Token, that there is an old Law, that a Biſhop when dying is to leave his Pack of Dogs (call'd muta Canum) to the King's free Uſe and Diſpoſal.

Id. Pag. 111.

To this Apology there is an Anſwer return'd, as 'tis ſaid, by Sir Henry Spelman: But this Diſcourſe looks ſtrein'd, and diſcovers ſomething of a proſecuting Humour; and I can't help ſaying it falls ſhort of that Strength and Candour, cuſtomary to this learned Gentleman: And therefore being a Poſthumous Work, I would willingly believe, ſome Part of it at leaſt, was the Product of another Hand.

But notwithſtanding the Archbiſhop's Recreation, and his Precaution againſt Misfortune, was defenſible, yet his being excus'd the Forms of Law, and not brought to a Trial for this caſual Homicide, was ſomething remarkable. His being thus ſcreen'd from cuſtomary Proſecution, is I ſuppoſe, owing to the Protection of the Diſpenſation above-mention'd.

This Year John King, Biſhop of London, departed this Life. His Father was Page to King Henry the VIIIth, and deſcended from the Saxon Kings in Devonſhire. * Sir Edward Coke gives him the Character of the beſt Speaker in the Star-Chamber in his Time He had been Dean of Chriſt-Church, and as hath been obſerv'd, was one of the Four Preachers at the Hampton-Court Conference. He was an exemplary Prelate, and had a good Talent for the Pulpit. His Lectures upon Jonas, and ſeveral Sermons are in Print. After his Death, his Memory was ill uſed by one Gregory Fiſher, alias Muſquet, who publiſh'd a Book, entitled, The Biſhop of London his Legacy, or certain Motives of Dr. King, Biſhop of London, for his Change of Religion, and dying in the Catholick and Roman Church, with a Concluſion to his Brethren the Biſhops of England. Printed permiſſu Superiorum, in the Year 1621. But that this Narrative was all Falſhood, the Biſhop's Son, Henry King, declar'd ſoon after in a Sermon preach'd at Paul's Croſs. The Forgery is likewiſe detected by Godwin, Biſhop of Hereford, in the Appendix to his Commentarius de Præſulibus Angliæ, printed 1622. And laſty, the Calumny is refuted by John Gee, in a Tract of his, called, The Foot out of the Snare. *

* Stow's Survey of London, pag. 575.

* Cap. 12.

Dr. Laud made Biſhop of St. Davids.

About this Time, Dr. Laud was prefer'd to the See of St. Davids, at the Recommendation, as 'tis ſaid, of Biſhop Williams, * there had been ſome claſhing, as has been already related, between Laud and Robert Abbot, Divinity Profeſſor in Oxford, and afterwards Biſhop of Salisbury. And becauſe Laud appear'd on the Remonſtrants Side in the Quinquarticular Controverſy, Ruſhworth endeavours to repreſent him as Popiſhly affected. But his learned Book againſt Fiſher, to mention nothing more, is enough to confute this Calumny.

* See Arch biſhop Laud's Diary, pag. 4.

And now to give a ſmoother Courſe to the Treaty of the Spaniſh Match, and procure better Quarter for the Proteſtants in Roman Catholick Countries, the King thought fit not to inſiſt on the Rigour of the Laws, but diſcharg'd ſome Popiſh Recuſants upon their giving ſufficient Securities for Appearance and good Behaviour: To this Purpoſe the Lord Keeper was order'd to write to the Judges to this Effect.

Recuſants diſcharg'd out of Priſon upon ſufficient Securities.

James I.

The Lord Keeper William's Letter to the Judges.

That the King having upon deep Reaſons of State, and in Expectation of the like Correſpondence from foreign Princes to the Profeſſors of our Religion, reſolv'd to grant ſome Grace to the impriſon'd Papiſts, had commanded him to paſs ſome Writs under the broad Seal for that Purpoſe. Wherefore 'tis his Majeſty's Pleaſure, that they make no Niceneſs or Difficulty to extend his Princely Favour to all ſuch as they ſhall find Priſoners in the Gaols of their Circuits, for any Church Recuſancy, or refuſing the Oath of Supremacy, or diſperſing of Popiſh Books, or any other Point of Recuſancy that ſhall concern Religion only, and not Matters of State. (q)

(q) Annal. King James. Ruſhworth's Collections, Vol. 1.

But this Lenity being not generally well receiv'd, the Lord Keeper in another Letter to the Judges, endeavours to prevent Miſconſtruction, and juſtifies the King's Conduct more at large. The Letter runs thus:

Another Letter of the Lord Keeper to the Judges to juſtify the Government.

“ As the Sun in the Firmament appears to us no bigger than a Platter, and the Stars are but as ſo many Nails in the Pummel of a Saddle, becauſe of the Enlargement and Diſproportion between our Eye and the Object: So is there ſuch an unmeaſurable Diſtance between the deep Reſolution of a Prince, and the ſhallow Apprehenſions of common and ordinary People; that as they will ever be judging and cenſuring, ſo they muſt needs be obnoxious to Error and Miſtaking. The King is now a moſt zealous Interceſſor for ſome Eaſe and Refreſhment to all the Proteſtants in Europe, which were unreaſonable, if he did now execute the Rigour of his Laws againſt the Roman Catholicks.

“ Our viperous Countrymen, the Engliſh Jeſuits in France, had many Months before the Favour granted, invited the French King, by Writing a malitious Book, to put all the Statutes in Execution againſt the Proteſtants in thoſe Parts, which were enacted in England againſt the Papiſts, and (as they falſely informed) ſeverely executed. Beſides, theſe Papiſts are no otherwiſe out of Priſon, than with their Shackles about their Heels, ſufficient Sureties, and good Recognizances, to preſent themſelves at the next Aſſizes; and their own Demeanor and the Succeſs of his Majeſty's Negotiations muſt determine, whether they ſhall continue in this Grace.

“ But to conclude, from the Favour done to the Engliſh Papiſts, That the King favours the Romiſh Religion, is a Compoſition of Folly and Malice, little deſerved by a gracious Prince, who by Word, Writing, Exerciſe of Religion, and Acts of Parliament, hath demonſtrated himſelf ſo reſolved a Proteſtant.

As for his own Letter to the Judges, he ſaid, “ It recited only Four Kinds of Recuſancy, capable of the King's Clemency, not ſo much to include them, as to exclude many other Crimes, bearing the Name of Recuſancy, as, uſing the Function of a Romiſh Prieſt, ſeducing the King's Liege People from the eſtabliſh'd Religion, aſperſing the King, Church, or State, or the preſent Government.

“ All which Offences, being outward Practices, and no ſecret Motions of the Conſcience, are adjudg'd by the Law of England, to be merely Civil and Political, and are excluded by the Letter, from the Benefit of thoſe Writs.

The Quinquarticular Controverſy growing warm, and breaking the People into Parties, the King wrote to Archbiſhop Abbot, and ſent the following Directions for the Clergy.

The King's Letter to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

“ Moſt Reverend Father in God, right truſty and intirely beloved Counſellor, we greet “you well. Foraſmuch as the Abuſes and Extravagancies of Preachers in the Pulpit, have been in all Times ſuppreſs'd in this Realm by ſome Act of Council, or State, with the Advice and Reſolution of grave and learned Prelates: Inſomuch that the very Licenſing of Preachers had the Beginning by an Order of Star-Chamber, the 8th Day of July, in the Nineteenth Year of the Reign of King Henry the VIIIth, our noble Predeceſſor: And whereas at this Preſent, divers young Students, by reading of late Writers, and ungrounded Divines, do broach many Times unprofitable, unſound, ſeditious, and dangerous Doctrines, to the Scandal of the Church, and Diſquiet of the State, and preſent Government. We, upon humble Repreſentation unto us of theſe Inconveniencies by your ſelf, and ſundry other grave and reverend Prelates of this Church, as alſo of our Princely Care and Zeal for the Extirpation of Schiſm and Diſſention growing from theſe Seeds, and for the ſettling a religious and peaceable Government, both in Church and Commonwealth, do by theſe our ſpecial Letters, ſtraitly charge and command you, to uſe all poſſible Care and Diligence, that theſe Limitations and Cautions herewith ſent unto you, concerning Preachers, be duly and ſtrictly from henceforth put in Practice, and obſerv'd by the ſeveral Biſhops within your Juriſdiction. And to this End our Pleaſure is, that you ſend them forthwith Copies of theſe Directions, to be by them ſpeedily ſent and communicated unto every Parſon, Vicar, Curate, Lecturer, and Miniſter in every Cathedral or Pariſh-Church within their ſeveral Dioceſes: And that you earneſtly require them to employ their utmoſt Endeavours in the Performance of this ſo important a Buſineſs; letting them know, that we have a ſpecial Eye unto their Proceedings, and expect a ſtrict Account thereof, both from you and every of them. And theſe our Letters ſhall be your ſufficient Warrant and Diſcharge in that behalf.

His Majeſty's Directions for the Preachers are theſe:

His Majeſty's Directions to the Pulpits.

“I. That no Preacher under the Degree and Calling of a Biſhop, or Dean of a Cathedral, or Collegiate Church (and they upon the King's Days, and ſet Feſtivals) do take Occaſion by the Expounding any Text of Scripture whatſoever, to fall into any Set-diſcourſe or Common Place, otherwiſe than by opening the Coherence and Diviſion of the Text, which ſhall not be comprehended and warranted in Eſſence, Subſtance, Effect, or Natural Inference, within ſome one of the Articles of Religion ſet forth One thouſand five hundred ſixty and two, or in ſome of the Homilies ſet forth by Authority of the Church of England; not only for a Help for the Non-preaching, but withal for a Pattern and Boundary (as it were) for the Preaching Miniſters. And for their farther Inſtructions for the Performance hereof, that they forthwith read over, and peruſe diligently the ſaid Book of Articles, and the Two Books of Homilies.

“II. That no Parſon, Vicar, Curate or Lecturer ſhall preach any Sermon or Collation hereafter, upon Sundays or Holy-days in the Afternoon in any Cathedral or Pariſh-Church throughout the Kingdom, but upon ſome Part of the Catechiſm, or ſome Text taken out of the Creed, Ten Commandments, or the Lord's Prayer, (Funeral Sermons only excepted): And that thoſe Preachers be moſt encouraged and approv'd of, who ſpend the Afternoon's Exerciſe in the Examination of Children in their Catechiſm, which is the moſt ancient and laudable Cuſtom of teaching in the Church of England.

“III. That no Preacher of what Title ſoever, under the Degree of a Biſhop, or Dean at the leaſt, do from henceforth preſume to preach in any popular Auditory the deep Points of Predeſtination, Election, Reprobation, or of the Univerſality, Efficacy, Reſiſtibility, or Irreſiſtibity of God's Grace; but leave thoſe Themes rather to be handled by the Learned Men, and that moderately and modeſtly by Way of Uſe and Application, rather than by Way of poſitive Doctrines, being fitter for the Schools than for ſimple Auditories.

“IV. That no Preacher of what Title or Denomination ſoever, from henceforth ſhall preſume in any Auditory within this Kingdom to declare, limit, or bound out, by Way of poſitive Doctrine, in any Lecture or Sermon, the Power, Prerogative and Juriſdiction, Authority or Duty of Sovereign Princes, or otherwiſe meddle with Matters of State, and the Differences between Princes and the People, than as they are inſtructed and preſidented in the Homilies of Obedience, and the reſt of the Homilies and Articles of Religion ſet forth (as before is mention'd) by publick Authority, but rather confine themſelves wholly to thoſe two Heads of Faith and good Life, which are all the Subject of the ancient Sermons and Homilies.

“V. That no Preacher of what Title or Denomination ſoever, ſhall preſume, cauſeleſly, or (without Invitation from the Text) to fall into bitter Invectives, and undecent railing Speeches againſt the Perſons of either Papiſts or Puritans, but modeſtly and gravely, when they are occaſioned thereunto by the Text of Scripture, free both the Doctrine and the Diſcipline of the Church of England from the Aſperſions of either Adverſary, eſpecially where the Auditory is ſuſpected to be tainted with the one or the other Infection.

“VI. Laſtly, That the Archbiſhops and Biſhops of the Kingdom (whom his Majeſty hath good Cauſe to blame for their former Remiſneſs) be more wary and choice in their Licenſing of Preachers, and revoke all Grants made to any Chancellor, Official, or Commiſſary, to paſs Licences in this Kind. And that all the Lecturers throughout the Kingdom of England, (a new Body ſevered from the ancient Clergy, as being neither Parſons, Vicars, nor Curates) be licens'd henceforward in the Court of Faculties, by Recommendation of the Party from the Biſhop of the Dioceſe, under his Hand and Seal, with a Fiat from the Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, a Confirmation under the Great Seal of England: And that ſuch as do tranſgreſs any one of theſe Directions be ſuſpended by the Biſhop of the Dioceſe, or in his Default, by the Archbiſhop of the Province, ab Officio & Beneficio, for a Year and a Day, until his Majeſty, by the Advice of the next Convocation, ſhall preſcribe ſome farther Puniſhment.

The King's Directions, Anno Dom. 1622.

Theſe Directions were look'd on as a Reflection on the Diſcretion, and an unuſual Reſtraint of the Clergy. To take off this Imputation of Rigour, and explain the King to a more inoffenſive Senſe, the Lord Keeper Williams wrote the Biſhop of London the following Letter.

The Lord Keeper Williams's Letter to the Biſhop of London for explaining theſe Directions.

My very good Lord,

I doubt not before this Time you have receiv'd from me the Directions of his moſt Excellent Majeſty concerning Preaching and Preachers, which are ſo graciouſly ſet down, that no godly or diſcreet Man can otherwiſe than acknowledge that they do much tend to Edification, if he take them not up upon Report, but do punctually conſider the Tenor of the Words as they lie, and doth not give an ill Conſtruction to that which may receive a fair Interpretation. Notwithſtanding becauſe ſome few Churchmen, and many of the People have ſiniſterly conceiv'd, as we here find, that thoſe Inſtructions do tend to the Reſtraint of the Exerciſe of Preaching, and do in ſome Part abate the Number of Sermons; and ſo conſequently by Degrees do make a Breach to Ignorance and Superſtition; his Majeſty in his Princely Wiſdom hath thought fit that I ſhould advertiſe your Lordſhip of the grave and weighty Reaſons which induced his Highneſs to preſcribe that which was done.

You are therefore to know, that his Majeſty being much troubled and grieved at the Heart to hear every Day of ſo many Defections from our Religion, both to Popery and Anabaptiſm; or other Points of Separation in ſome Parts of this Kingdom: And conſidering with much Admiration, what might be the Cauſe thereof, eſpecially in the Reign of ſuch a King, who doth ſo conſtantly profeſs himſelf an open Adverſary to the Superſtition of the one, and Madneſs of the other, his Princely Wiſdom could fall upon no one greater Probability than the Lightneſs, Affectedneſs, and Unprofitableneſs of that Kind of Preaching, which hath been of late Years too much taken up in Court, Univerſity, City, and Country.

The uſual Scope of very many Preachers is noted to be ſoaring up in Points of Divinity, too deep for the Capacity of the People; or muſtering up of ſo much Reaſon, or diſplaying of their own Wit, or an ignorant meddling with civil Matters, as well in the private ſeveral Pariſhes and Corporations, as in the publick of the Kingdom, or a venting of their own Diſtaſtes, or a ſmoothing up thoſe idle Fancies (which when the Text ſhall occaſion the ſame, is not only approved, but much commended by his Royal Majeſty) both againſt the Perſons of Papiſts and Puritans.

Now the People bred up with this Kind of Teaching, and never inſtructed in the Catechiſm, and Fundamental Grounds of Religion, are for all this airy Nouriſhment, no better than a Braſs Tabret, new Table-Books to be fill'd up either with Manuals and Catechiſms of the Popiſh Prieſts, or the Papers and Pamphlets of Anabaptiſts, Browniſts and Puritans.

His Majeſty therefore calling to Mind the Saying of Tertullian, Id verum quod primum, and remembring with what Doctrine the Church of England in her firſt and moſt happy Reformation did drive the one, and keep out the other, from poiſoning and infecting the People of this Kingdom, doth find that the whole Scope of this Doctrine is contained in the Articles of Religion, the two Books of Homilies, the leſſer and greater Catechiſm, which his Majeſty doth therefore recommend again in theſe Directions as the Themes and proper Subjects of all ſound and edifying Preaching.

And ſo far are theſe Directions from abridging, That his Majeſty doth expect at our Hands, that it ſhould increaſe the Number of Sermons, by renewing every Sunday in the Afternoon, in all Pariſh Churches throughout the Kingdom, that Primitive and moſt Profitable Expoſition of the Catechiſm, wherewith the People, yea very Children, may be timely ſeaſon'd and inſtructed in all the Heads of Chriſtian Religion: The which Kind of Expoſition (to our Amendment be it ſpoken) is more diligently obſerved in all the Reformed Churches of Europe than of late it hath been in England. I find his Majeſty much moved with this Neglect, and reſolv'd (if we that are Biſhops do not ſee a Reformation thereof, which I truſt we ſhall) to recommend to the Care of the Civil Magiſtrate: So far is his Highneſs from giving the leaſt Diſcouragement to ſolid Preaching, or diſcreet and religious Preachers.

To all theſe I am to add, That it is his Majeſty's Princely Pleaſure, that both the former Directions, and thoſe Reaſons of the ſame, be fairly written in every Regiſter's Office, to the End that every Preacher, of what Denomination ſoever, may if he be ſo pleas'd, take out Copies of either of them with his own Hand gratis, paying nothing in the Name of Fee or Expedition. But if he does uſe the Pains of the Regiſter or the Clerk, then to pay ſome moderate Fee, to be pronounc'd in open Court by the Chancellor and Commiſſaries of the Place, taking the Direction and Approbation of my Lords the Biſhops.

Laſtly, That from henceforward a Courſe might be taken, that every Parſon, Vicar, Curate, or Lecturer, do make and exhibit an Account for the Performance of theſe his Majeſty's Directions, and the Reaſons for the ſame, at the enſuing Viſitation of the Biſhops and Archdeacons, paying to the Regiſter 6 d. for the Exhibiting. And ſo wiſhing, but withal, in his Majeſty's Name, requiring your Lordſhip to have a ſpecial and extraordinary Care of the Premiſes, I leave you to the Almighty.

Cabala, &c. 106

September 3. 1622. Your very Loving Friend,

J. Lincoln, C. S.

And now I muſt go back to the Spring, and report a remarkable Occurrence which happen'd at Oxford. One Mr. William Knight of Broad-Gate's Hall, preaching on Palm-Sunday at St. Peters in the Eaſt, preach'd upon theſe Words; What doſt thou here Elijah? From hence diſcourſing on the Perſecution the Prophet lay under, and the Means he had us'd to diſintangle himſelf, he came at at laſt to this Queſtion, Whether it was lawful for Subjects, when harraſs'd on the Score of Religion, to take Arms againſt their Prince in their own Defence? And being ſo hardy as to hold the Affirmative, the Vice-Chancellor Dr. Pearce, ſent for him, order'd him to deliver his Notes, and to diſcover thoſe who put him upon preaching this extraordinary Doctrine, and who he had preacquainted with this Buſineſs before he came into the Pulpit?

1 Kings 19.9.

Paræus's Doctrine of Reſiſtance ſolemnly condemn'd by the Univerſity of Oxford.

To theſe Interrogatories Knight return'd Anſwer, That as to the Doctrine, he follow'd the Opinion of Paræus now Divinity-Profeſſor at Heidleburgh, who in his Comment on the 13th Chapter of the Epiſtle to the Romans, has directly aſſerted the ſame Thing: But his principal Authority, he ſaid, was King James, who he underſtood was going to ſend the Rochellers a Reinforcement againſt their own Prince As to the other Queſtion, he told the Vice-Chancellor he had made no Body privy to his Sermon, excepting Mr. Herbert Vicar of Radley near Abingdon, and Mr. Code of his own Houſe.

Upon this Examination Knight and his two Abettors were committed. And immediately after the Vice-Chancellor wrote to Laud, Biſhop of St. Davids, and gave him an Account of what had paſs'd. Laud went to the King, and laid the Letter before him. Upon this his Majeſty order'd Knight and his Sermon to be brought up; who being examin'd at the Council-Board, and returning the ſame Anſwer he had given the Vice-Chancellor, was ſent to the Gate-Houſe.

“ And now the King wrote to the Vice-Chancellor, commends him for his Care in impriſoning Knight, Herbert and Code, requiring him not to diſcharge the two latter till farther Order. The Vice-Chancellor was likewiſe commanded to appoint a Meeting of the Preſidents and Heads of Colleges and Halls, and put them in Mind of the Direction ſent thither ſome few Years ſince by his Majeſty; that is, That thoſe who deſign'd to make Divinity their Profeſſion, ſhould chiefly apply themſelves to the Study of the Holy Scriptures, of the Councils, and Fathers, and the ancient School-Men: But as for the Moderns, whether Jeſuits or Puritans, they ſhould wholly decline reading their Works.

April 24. An. Dom. 1622.

And to prevent young Students being debauch'd with this Doctrine of Paræus, the King and Council order'd his Comment to be burnt: But before this was done, this Book and others of reſembling Principles were cenſur'd by all the Biſhops then in London: Theſe Prelates declar'd themſelves fully upon the Occaſion, and condemn'd the Propoſition maintain'd by Knight, as plainly ſeditious, contrary to the Tenor of the Holy Scriptures, the Sentiments of the ancient Fathers, and utterly repugnant to the Doctrine and Conſtitutions of the Church of England.

On the laſt of May the King ſent down an Order, ſign'd by Fourteen of the Privy Council, for ſearching the publick and private Libraries and Bookſellers Shops at Oxford: The Deſign was to ſeize all the Copies of Paræus his Comment above-mention'd. Theſe Books being brought to the Vice-Chancellor, were publickly burnt in St. Mary's Church-yard; and much about the ſame Time they were burnt at St Paul's Croſs, London, and at Cambridge.

June 6.

But Oxford went further in Defence of the Honor and Orthodoxy of that Univerſity. To this Purpoſe an Extract was made of Paræus his Aſſertions on the Queſtion above-mention'd, read at a publick Convocation, and cenſur'd by the Heads, Doctors, and Maſters, in the Manner following. And here I ſhall give the Reader Paræus his Propoſitions by themſelves, as they ſtand tranſcrib'd by Wood from the Univerſity Records.

Paræus his Firſt Propoſition.

'Tis lawful for Biſhops and Paſtors, with the Conſent of the Church, to deliver wicked and unjuſt Magiſtrates to Satan; and that they ought to proceed thus far in caſe the Magiſtrates prove contumacious.

The Cenſure.

This Propoſition is erroneous, impious, and ſubverſive of Civil Government.

The Second Propoſition.

Subjects, not private ones, but plac'd in ſubordinate Magiſtracy, may lawfully make uſe of Force, and defend themſelves, the Common-wealth, and the true Religion, in the Field againſt the Chief Magiſtrate, within the Caſes and Conditions following. Firſt, When the Chief Magiſtrate turns Tyrant. Secondly, When he either forces them, or any of their Fellow Subjects upon Blaſphemy, or manifeſt Idolatry, Thirdly, When any heavy Preſſure is laid upon them by the Government. Fourthly, When Reſiſtance is the only Expedient to ſecure them their Lives, their Fortunes, and Liberty of Conſcience. But then Fifthly, They are to take Care not to make Religion and Juſtice a Colour for Intereſt and private Ambition. And Sixthly, They muſt always manage within the Rules of Moderation and Temper, and do nothing unwarrantable by Law.

James I. K.

The Cenſure.

This Propoſition is falſe and ſeditious; and the Conditions annex'd are only thrown in for a Varniſh to Rebellion, and to give a Handle for an Inſurrection to be carried on with a better Grace.

The Third Propoſition.

Subjects altogether private, and who have no Share in the Magiſtracy, in caſe they may be protected by thoſe in the Adminiſtration, that is, by thoſe in Authority under the Government; ſuch private Subjects, without a lawful Call, have no Authority to make uſe of the Sword to attack a Tyrant, either by Way of Prevention, or to defend themſelves from actual Oppreſſion and Outrage, or to Revenge themſelves for what they have ſuffer'd already.

The Cenſure.

This Aſſertion goes upon a falſe Suppoſition, and is ſcandalouſly, inſidious, and treaſonable.

The Fourth Propoſition.

When a Tyrant manages like a Highway-Man, and commits an open Rape, as it were, upon Privilege and Property; in this Caſe, Subjects, though under the moſt private Capacity, when they are in no Condition of applying to the ſubordinate Magiſtracy, nor in any Poſſibility of avoiding the Danger, may lawfully make uſe of Force, defend themſelves and their Friends againſt the Inſults of the Tyrant, and treat him in the Character of one that goes upon the Road.

The Cenſure.

This Propoſition is falſe, dangerous, and wicked: *

* Wood's Hiſt & Antiq. Univer. Oxon.

And to prevent the Spreading of ſuch Peſtiſtilent Principles for the future, the following Proviſion and Decree was paſt in the Convocation:

Firſt, That by the Doctrine of the Holy Scriptures, 'tis in no Caſe lawful for Subjects to make uſe of Force againſt their Prince, nor to appear offenſively or defenſively in the Field againſt the King, either upon the Score of Religion, or any other Account whatever.

Secondly, That all the Doctors and Maſters, the Batchelors of Law and Phyſick, in the Univerſity of Oxon, ſhall ſubſcribe the Cenſure and Decree above-mention'd.

Thirdly, That all Perſons to be promoted to any Degree ſhall ſubſcribe theſe Cenſures, and at the ſame Time take their Corporal Oath, That they don't only at preſent condemn and deteſt the Propoſitions above-mention'd, but that they ſhall always continue of the ſame Opinion.

The Oath follows, the Reader ſhall have it in the Language 'tis pen'd.

Tu jurabis te ex Animo & bonâ fide conſentire Decreto Convocationis habitæ die Martis, viz. viceſimo quinto die Junii Anno Dom. CIƆDCXXII. ſuper quibuſdam Propoſitionibus, falſis, ſeditioſis, impiis, & ibidem damnatis, & quod nullam prædictarum concluſionum, earumve ſententiam docebis, defendes vel tenebis publicè aut occultè neque aliquem hujuſmodi Doctorem vel Defenſorem ope, conſilio vel favore juvabis, ſed ſed quantum in te eſt impedies, ita te Deus adjuvet, tactis Sacro Sanctis Dei Evangeliis.

And that Knight's Doctrine might not revive upon the Scholars, an Order was made at the ſame Convocation, That the King's Directions above-mention'd, for the regulating their Studies, ſhould be hung up in the College-Chappels, and other publick Places. And from this Time Calvin's Authority began to decline in the Univerſity. He was not now conſulted as their Oracle, nor taken upon Content as formerly. And as Calvin's Authority ſunk, the Doctrines of the Church of England emerg'd, and the Fathers recover'd a juſt Eſteem. (x)

Id. pag. 328.

The King's Care that the Engliſh Reformation ſhould not receive any Prejudice by the Spaniſh Match.

The Spaniſh Match already mention'd, being ſomewhat interwoven with the Hiſtory of Religion, I ſhall touch briefly upon that Affair. In February laſt Charles Prince of Wales, imbark'd at Dover, and landed at Boulogn in Picardy. He paſs'd through France incognito, being attended with no Perſons of Condition, excepting George Marquiſs of Buckingham, Mr. Emdymion Porter, and Mr. Francis Cottington. His Curioſity carry'd him to the French Court, where he had a View of the Princeſs Henrietta Maria, whom he afterwards marry'd. His Quality being ſoon diſcover'd through his Diſguiſe, the French King ſent after him, with Orders to bring him back: But the Prince had paſs'd Bayonne, and enter'd the Spaniſh Territories before the Meſſengers could reach him; and then riding Poſt to Madrid, he came to the Engliſh Ambaſſador's Houſe before the Spaniards were appriz'd of his Coming. The Lady courted by the Prince, was the Infanta Maria, Daughter to King Philip the Third, and Siſter to Philip the Fourth. And that no Diſadvantage might happen to the Engliſh Reformation by this Alliance, was carefully provided by the King, as appears by his Inſtructions to his Ambaſſador Digby. "The Matter of Religion, ſays the King, is to us of moſt principal "Conſideration; for nothing can be to us dearer "than the Honour and Safety of the Religion "we profeſs. And therefore ſeeing that this "Marriage (if it ſhall take Place) is to be with "a Lady of a different Religion from us, it "becomes us to be tender as on the one Part "to give them all Satisfaction convenient, ſo "on the other to admit nothing that may "blemiſh our Conſcience, or detract from the "Religion here eſtabliſh'd.

As for the Prince, he had been under the King's Inſtructions ſo long, and was ſo well fortify'd, that his Father was under no Apprehenſions of his being ſurpriz'd into a foreign Belief: The King thought him well prepar'd to maintain his Ground, and ſtand the Shock of a Conference, as appears by his Majeſty's Diſcourſe to Maw and Wren the Prince's Chaplains. Theſe Divines when they went to wait upon the King for his Commands, how they were to manage at the Court of Madrid, he adviſ'd them, amongſt other Things, not to engage unneceſſarily in Religious Controverſie, but to act defenſively in Caſe of a Challenge. And when 'twas anſwer'd, They ſhould have no Motive to venture upon ſuch Diſputes, in Regard there would be no indifferent Judge or Moderator between them. The King reply'd, That Charles ſhould moderate between them and the oppoſite Party. And when one of them ſeem'd to ſmile upon the other, the King told them, "That Charles "ſhould manage a Point in Controverſie with "the beſt ſtudied Divine of them all; and that "he had train'd up George ſo far as to hold the "Concluſion, though he had not yet made him "able to prove the Premiſſes.

And that a Face of the Church of England might appear, and the Worſhip be kept up in the Prince's Apartment at Madrid, the King gave the Chaplains above-mention'd the following Inſtructions.

His Majeſty's Directions for the Engliſh Service in the Prince's Family at Madrid.

I. That there be one convenient Room appointed for Prayer, the ſaid Room to be employ'd, during their Abode, to no other Uſe.

II. That it be decently adorn'd Chapel-wiſe, with an Altar, Fonts, Palls, Linen Coverings, Demy-Carpets, Four Surplices, Candleſticks, Tapers, Chalices, Pattens, a fine Towel for the Prince, other Towels for the Houſhold, a Traverſe of Waters for the Communion, a Baſon and Flaggons, two Copes.

III. That Prayers be duly kept twice a Day: That all Reverence be uſed by every one preſent, being uncovered, kneeling at due Times, ſtanding up at the Creeds and Goſpel, bowing at the Name of Jeſus.

IV. That the Communion be celebrated in due Form, with an Oblation of every Communicant, and admixing Water with the Wine, the Communion to be as often uſed as it ſhall pleaſe the Prince to ſet down: Smooth Wafers to be uſed for the Bread.

V. That in the Sermons there be no Polemical Preachings to inveigh againſt them, or to confute them, but only to confirm the Doctrine and Tenents of the Church of England, by all poſitive Arguments, either in Fundamental or Moral Points; and eſpecially to apply themſelves in moral Leſſons to preach Chriſt Jeſus crucify'd.

VI. That they give no Occaſions (or raſhly entertain any) of Conference or Diſpute (for Fear of Diſhonour to the Prince, if upon any Offence taken, he ſhould be requir'd to ſend away one of them:) But if the Lord Ambaſſador or Mr. Secretary wiſh them to hear any that deſire ſome Information, then they may ſafely do it.

VII. That they carry the Articles of our Religion in many Copies, the Books of Common Prayer in ſeveral Languages, Store of Engliſh Service Books; the King's own Works in Engliſh and Latin.

By theſe Inſtructions the Reader may perceive how careful the King was to guard on the Side of Religion; and that he was far from any Intention of Diſſerving the Engliſh Communion, or laying a Train to make his Son a Proſelyte to the Church of Rome. And yet the Ignorance or Malice of ſome People did not ſtick to miſinterpret the Prince's Voyage to ſuch a Deſign. But to take Leave of this Subject till the Order of Time calls for it, I ſhall begin the next Year with an Account of the Diſmiſſion of the Archbiſhop of Spalato.

A Brief Account of Antonius de Dominis Biſhop of Spalato. Anno Dom. 1623.

This Prelate Marcus Antonius de Dominis was a perſon thoroughly acquainted with the Writings of the Ancients: His Skill in Eccleſiaſtical Antiquity help'd him to diſcover ſeveral Innovations in the Doctrine and Worſhip of the Church of Rome; and being apprehenſive the Declaring his Exceptions might draw a Perſecution upon him, he quitted his See of Spalato in Dalmatia, and in the Year 1616. retir'd for Shelter to England. At his Arrival he had a very honourable Reception, both in the Univerſities, and at Court. The King recommended him as a Gueſt to Archbiſhop Abbot; and here in the Chappel at Lambeth he aſſiſted at the Conſecration of ſome Engliſh Biſhops. Afterwards his Majeſty preferr'd him to the Maſterſhip of the Savoy, and the Deanery of Windſor. However, 'tis very unlikely his coming to England could proceed from a covetous Fancy, as Fuller conjectures: For his Fortune was well eſtabliſh'd at home, and there was very little Proſpect of mending it in a ſtrange Country. During his Stay here, he publiſh'd his Learned Book de Republica Eccleſiaſtica, which received no Anſwer. His coming off from Popery gave the Court of Rome no ſmall Diſturbance. But his Pen afterwards attacking them with ſuch Vigour and Succeſs, doubled their Misfortune.

Being thus provok'd, ſome of that Communion made no Difficulty to throw Calumnies upon him: To miſreport the Reaſons of his coming over, and make it the Reſult of Fear and Declenſion of Intereſt. But their Pamphlets of this Strein finding little Credit, they applied to ſmoother Expedients: They procur'd Agents to ſuggeſt, That he had neither any Regard or Promotions ſuitable to his Merit: That the new Pope Gregory had a particular Eſteem for him: That provided he would return, he might make his own Terms, and chuſe his Station. On the other Hand, Gundamore, the Spaniſh Ambaſſador leſſen'd his Reputation, and brought him into Diſfavour with the King and the Engliſh Clergy. And thus being, as it were, abandon'd by his new Protection, he hearken'd to the Propoſals of the Roman Catholicks: And having brought himſelf to a Reſolution to diſengage Here, he ſolicited his Majeſty in ſeveral Letters for Leave to quit the Kingdom. (s) The King being diſpleaſed with his Irreſolution, directed a Commiſſion to Archbiſhop Abbot, to the Lord-Keeper Lincoln, to the Biſhops of London, Durham, and Wincheſter, with ſeveral Lords of the Privy-Council, to diſpoſe of him as they thought fit. Theſe Lords meeting at Lambeth, after having heard his Excuſes for going off, order'd him to depart the Realm within Twenty Days: That otherwiſe he muſt expect to be puniſh'd for holding Intelligence by Meſſage and Letters with the Popes of Rome. To this Sentence he ſubmitted with Regret, openly proteſting he would never maltreat the Church of England, nor ſpeak reproachfully of Her: That her Articles ſtood clear of Hereſy, and were all ſerviceable and ſound. That he declar'd thus much, appears by a Book, entituled, Spalato's Shiftings in Religion, publiſh'd, as 'twas ſuppos'd, by the then Biſhop of Durham. (t)

He is reconciled to the Church of Rome.

(s) Fuller's Church Hiſt. Lib. 13.

(t) Heylin Cyprian. Anglic.

He is diſappointed, and ventures upon uncautious Freedoms.

But he fail'd in keeping his Word; for being arriv'd at Bruſſels, he recants the Engliſh Reformation, treats that Communion with rough Language, and calls his coming hither a ſenſleſs unhappy Voyage: And that 'twas Inconſtancy, Weakneſs, and paſſionate Diſguſt, which brought him to that Fancy. (u) He ſtaid ſix Months at Bruſſels for the Pope's Brief, which was at laſt refus'd. Thus he was forc'd to venture to Rome without any ſafe Conduct in Writing. He miſs'd the Expectation of a Biſhoprick, and lived only on a Penſion from his Holineſs. This Maintenance, though continued during the Life of Pope Gregory the Fifteenth, was ſtopp'd by his Succeſſor Urban the Eighth. This Diſappointment being reſented by Spalato, made him venture on ſome dangerous Freedoms, and talk pretended Hereſy: Particularly being at Supper with one Cardinal Cleſel, an old Acquaintance, he happen'd to drop this Expreſſion, That no Catholick had anſwer'd his Books, De Republica Eccleſiaſtica; adding however, that himſelf was able to deal with them. 'Tis thought this Cleſel was diſguſted by Spalato's declining to apply to him for recovering his Intereſt at the Court of Rome: And that he invited this Prelate to an Entertainment on Purpoſe to lay a Train of Diſcourſe, and draw him into a Snare. But let this be as it will, he was immediately impriſon'd, his Study ſearch'd, and ſeveral Papers found amounting to Hereſy. He died ſome Months after his Confinement, and, as ſome ſaid, by Violence. But his own Relations at Venice gave other Intelligence to Fuller, (w) and affirm'd he died a natural Death; and that four of the Pope's ſworn Phyſicians, upon viewing the Corps, gave in Evidence upon Oath, that there was no Mark of foul Play found upon him. However, the dead Biſhop paſs'd through the Forms of the Inquiſition, and was pronounced a Relaps'd Heretick. After this Sentence, the Corps were publickly burnt by the Executioner in the Field of Flora.

When the Prince of Wales arrived firſt at Madrid, that Court was not without Hopes of making him a Proſelyte to their Communion: To this Purpoſe he was ſtrongly ſolicited by ſome of the firſt Quality. Some of the moſt learned Prieſts and Jeſuits likewiſe made a Trial this Way. To gain their Point they employ'd all their Rhetorick and Fineneſs, careſs'd his Highneſs with Speeches, dedicated Books to him, invited him to their ſolemn Proceſſions, gave him a View of their Churches moſt famous for Magnificence and Miracles, and treated him with all imaginable Regard. Neither was the Pope wanting to improve the favourable Juncture. To this Purpoſe, he wrote to the Prince; and after having flouriſh'd upon his Perſonal Merit, and commended his Predeceſſors for their Piety and Regard to the Apoſtolick See: He invites him to follow their Example, and come over to their Belief. The Letter is pen'd in a moving Strein of Affection and Reſpect, and concludes with his Holineſs's Good Wiſhes for the Prince's Proſperity. (r)

April 20th, An. Dom., 1623.

The Prince having put himſelf in the King of Spain's Power, had a very difficult Buſineſs to manage: Beſides, without the Pope's Diſpenſation for the Marriage, he knew the Treaty muſt miſcarry. His Highneſs therefore, to keep the Pope (Gregory the Fifteenth) upon ſomething of an Expectation, ſends him a Ceremonious Anſwer, promiſes to manage with Moderation, not to proceed to Extremities againſt the Roman Catholick Religion, but rather to govern in ſuch a Manner as may ſhew his Inclination towards a Coalition between both Churches. But here the Letter was couch'd in ſuch general Expreſſions, and guarded with ſuch Latitude and Reſerve, that the Prince could not be charg'd with any Breach of Promiſe for advancing no farther. In ſhort, notwithſtanding all the Careſſes of the Pope and the Spaniſh Court, the Prince, as even Ruſhworth confeſſes, continued firm to his Religion.

An expoſtulatory Letter ſent to the King.

King James began now to repent the Prince's Voyage to Spain without the Security of a ſafe Conduct. And therefore to recover this wrong Step, and diſpoſe the Pope for a Dipenſation, he found it neceſſary to be more than uſually kind to the Engliſh Roman Catholicks. Upon this View the Jeſuits and Prieſts of that Communion, formerly impriſon'd, are diſcharg'd, all Proſecutions againſt Recuſants are ſtopp'd, and the Penal Laws againſt them ſuſpended. This gentle Uſage was miſinterpreted, and clamour'd againſt: The Government was arraign'd of Partiality, and the King complain'd of as if he intended to go farther in theſe Meaſures, and come up to a full Toleration. And that theſe Jealouſies might not ſeem groundleſs, a Letter is diſperſed under Archbiſhop Abbot's Name, as Heylin reports, tho' the Cabala makes it written by the Archbiſhop of (y) Heylin Cyprian. Anglic. Cabala, Pag. 108.

* Mathews, then Archbiſhop of York.

York * (y) The Letter is pen'd in a warm expoſtulatory Strein, and goes to ſome Extremities of coarſe Language. This Remonſtrance charges the King with a Deſign of ſetting up a Toleration by Proclamation: That this Method is arbitrary and illegal, and may be attended with terrible Conſequences. In ſhort, he that wrote the Letter takes ſo much Freedom in the Manner, that it may well be queſtion'd whether the Privilege of his Character can bear him out. The Learned Heylin is of Opinion the Letter was none of Abbots. That this Prelate had Penetration enough to ſee through the Neceſſity of the Juncture; that he was better acquainted with the King's Temper and Principles than to ſuſpect him of making any near Approaches to the Church of Rome; and that a Regard to his Eccleſiaſtical Supremacy would keep him impregnable at this Quarter.

July 26. The Articles of Marriage ſworn by both the Kings.

Cyprian Anglic. Ruſhworth.

An. Dom. 1623.

The Prince arrives in England.

The Marriage Treaty breaks off, and why.

The Marriage-Treaty went ſmoothly forward; and the Articles were ſworn by the Kings of England and Spain. The Infanta was called the Princeſs of England at the Court of Madrid, and Preparations made for her Voyage into England in March following; but the Treaty for reſtoring the Palatinate hung backwards all this while. 'Tis ſaid the Infanta undertook the adjuſting that Affair, to make her ſelf more acceptable to the Engliſh. However, this being a Matter of too great Moment to be left merely to Courteſy, the Prince declin'd proceeding to the Nuptial Solemnity, writes to the King for a Squadron of Men of War to convey him to England: And to avoid giving Umbrage, he goes on with his Courtſhip with rather more Application than formerly, makes the Infanta a rich Preſent in Jewels, takes his Leave of the Spaniſh Court, and embarques on the 4th of Auguſt. At his going away, he conſtitutes a Proxy to eſpouſe the Lady, and puts the Inſtrument executed into the Earl of Briſtol's Hands, then the Engliſh Ambaſſador. The Ambaſſador had likewiſe Orders to deliver the Writing to the King of Spain within ten Days after the coming of the Diſpenſation from the new Pope, Urban the Eighth: But when the Prince was on Board, and out of the Spaniards Reach, he diſpatch'd an Expreſs to Briſtol, commanding him not to part with the Proxy till farther Inſtructions. His Highneſs arriv'd at Portſmouth on the 5th of October. His Return was every where welcom'd with Bonefires, and other Marks of publick Satisfaction. And being come to the King at Royſton, he acquainted his Majeſty, that though the Match went forwards, they could get no Aſſurances for reſtoring the Palatinate. Upon this the King ſent Orders to the Earl of Briſtol not to deliver up the Proxy, nor to proceed to the Eſpouſals till Chriſtmas; and in the mean Time, to inſiſt upon the Buſineſs of the Palatinate, and preſs the King of Spain to a Categorical Anſwer. The Pope did his Part to expedite the Matter, wrote a careſſing Letter to the Prince of Wales, and ſent his Diſpenſation to Madrid in the Beginning of December. When this Papal Brief for the Marriage came to the Spaniſh Court, that King order'd Bonefires to be made in all Parts of his Dominions, and appear'd willing to contribute his Share towards the laſt Solemnity.

Feb. 17. An. 162$\frac{3}{4}$.

The Parliament engag'd to ſupport the King and Prince in the War for recovering the Palatinate.

(z) Ruſhworth's Hiſt. Coll. Pag. 136.

But the Treaty concerning the Palatinate not keeping Pace with the other, a Parliament met at Weſtminſter in February. And here the Duke of Buckingham reported, if not miſreported, the Proceedings of the Spaniſh Court to Diſadvantage: That the Prince had not been handſomely dealt with: That they had thrown in unneceſſary Delays, refuſ'd to give Satisfaction in the Affair of the Palatinate, and ſent his Highneſs back without the Infanta. Upon this 'twas reſolv'd by both Houſes, that his Majeſty ſhould be addreſs'd to break off the Treaty with the King of Spain, and to commence a War for recovering the Palatinate. And here they promiſed to ſupport the King and the Prince in the Expence of the Enterprize. (z) Upon this Encouragement the King diſengag'd with Philip the Fourth, and the Match broke off. But whether the Engliſh or Spaniſh Court gave the firſt Occaſion for the Rupture, is ſomewhat uncertain.

This Parliament, to ſhew their Forwardneſs to furniſh the Exchequer, granted the King three Subſidies, with three Fifteenths and Tenths, to be paid before the 10th of May next enſuing. This Seſſion they gain'd one Point upon the Crown: They petition'd the King for a Faſt, and ſucceeded. This Requeſt had been made in ſome former Parliaments of this Reign: But 'twas then told them there were weekly Faſts ſettled already: That if theſe were kept, there would be no Occaſion to open the Parliament with any extraordinary Humiliations: But having wreſted this Precedent from the King, they continued the Cuſtom through the next Reign, and always began the Seſſion with a publick Faſt.

21 Jac. 1. cap. 28. Cyprian. Anglic.

The Act of 27 H. 8. cap. 28. obliging the Grantees of Religious Houſes to maintain Tillage, and keep on Hoſpitality, is repeal'd by this Parliament. And for the handſomer Conveyance, he that drew the Bill took Care neither to place it in the Beginning or End of the Statute, but to throw it deeper in the Crowd of other Repeals not altogether ſo remarkable.

In the Convocation, met at this Time, little or nothing was done, excepting the Granting of four Subſidies, after the Rate of four Shillings in the Pound. This is obſerv'd to have been the greateſt Aid that was ever given by the Clergy in ſo ſhort a Time.

The Accident at Black-friars.

To go back a little: In October laſt a Congregation of Roman Catholicks meeting at Hunſdon-Houſe in Black-Friars to hear one Drury, a Jeſuit, preach, the Floor being over-loaden ſunk under them. The Preacher and about Ninety three others were kill'd out-right, and moſt of the reſt lamentably bruiſ'd and maim'd. To prevent this Accident's being miſconſtrued Abroad, they endeavour'd to turn the Misfortune upon the Reformed. To this End they got a Pamphlet diſpers'd in France and Italy, containing a Narrative of God's Judgments upon the Hereticks; and that ſeveral of theſe Heterodox Proteſtants were kill'd by the Fall of a Houſe in St. Andrew's Holborn, where they met to hear a Geneva Lecture. They were right in the Day, though wrong in the People; for as they relate the Misfortune happen'd on our 26th of October, which falls on the 5th of November New Stile. (a)

Nine Queſtions put to Fiſher, the Jeſuit.

Before the Riſing of the Parliament Dr. White publiſhed a Book, entituled, A Reply to Jeſuit Fiſher's Anſwer to certain Queſtions propounded by his Gracious Majeſty, King James. The Occaſion was this: His Majeſty being preſent at a ſecond Conference between White and Fiſher, obſerved that the Jeſuit was much better at fencing againſt Oppoſition, than ſupporting his own Tenents. The King therefore put Nine Queſtions to Fiſher to diſcover his Force, and the Grounds upon which he went. The Points are theſe: 1. Praying to Images. 2. Prayers and Offerings to the Bleſſed Virgin. 3. Worſhipping and Invocation of Saints and Angels. 4. The Liturgy and Private Prayers in an unknown Tongue. 5. Repetition of Pater-noſters, Ave's, and Credo's, eſpecially reckoning a Sort of Merit in Proportion to the Number. 6. Tranſubſtantiation. 7. Communion under one Kind, and the Doctrine of Concomitancy. 8. Works of Supererogation, eſpecially with Reference to the Treaſure of the Church. 9. Depoſing Kings, and transferring their Dominions by Papal Authority either directly or indirectly.

Dr. White replies to the Jeſuits Anſwer.

To theſe Nine Queſtions the Jeſuit is ſaid to have return'd a plauſible and well manag'd Anſwer. Dr. White was pitch'd on by the King to diſentagle theſe ſeeming Difficulties. And to encourage the Undertaking, his Majeſty made him his Chaplain in Ordinary, and Dean of Carliſle. White's Anſwer was publiſh'd in the Beginning of April, with the third Conference between Laud and Fiſher added to it. The ſeaſonable publiſhing theſe two Books help'd to ſilence the Clamours againſt the Government. The Commons ſeem'd to be apprehenſive the King had been too indulgent to the Roman Catholicks: Upon this Jealouſy they drew up a remonſtrating Addreſs: And here they ſet forth the Danger which ſeem'd to threaten the Church and State from that Quarter. This Petition being read in the Upper Houſe. The Lords cut off the complaining Preamble, and reduced it to two Heads: Firſt, That all Laws formerly made againſt Popiſh Recuſants might be put in Execution Secondly, That his Majeſty would pleaſe to give his Royal Word, that upon no Score of Soliciting, Marriage, or Treaty, he would act with Remiſſneſs or Connivance in this Particular. This Addreſs was preſented by a Committee of both Houſes, and the Contents granted by the King.

April. 10. 1624.

About this Time ſome Roman Catholick Prieſts and Jeſuits were executing their Miſſion at Stamford Rivers in Eſſex. Mr. Richard Mountague, Prebendary of Windſor was then Rector of that Pariſh. This Divine, to ſecure his Charge to our Communion, left ſome Propoſitions at a Neighbour's Houſe where the Roman Catholicks uſed to meet. To this Paper a ſhort Declaration was ſubjoin'd, that if any of thoſe Miſſionaries could ſatisfy him in his Queries put, he would immediately be their Proſelyte. Inſtead of returning an Anſwer to theſe Queſtions, a ſhort Pamphlet was at laſt left for him, entituled a New Gag for the old Goſpel. This Book pretended to confute the Reformed out of their own Engliſh Bibles. In examining this Performance, Mountague perceiv'd ſeveral Points of Calviniſm, never own'd by the Church of England, were charged upon her: Such as the indiſpenſible Morality of the Sabbath, the Rejecting Confeſſion, and Sacerdotal Abſolution, the five Predeſtinarian Articles ſettled at Dort; the Indiſtinction of Biſhops and Presbyters, &c. Theſe Tenents peculiar to Puritaniſm Mountague ſet aſide in his Anſwer to the Gagger, diſclaim'd their being the Doctrines of the Church of England, and left them to the Defence of their private Abetters.

Mountague's Anſwer to the Gagger.

This Performance cenſur'd by the Puritans.

When this Anſwer appear'd, 'twas deeply cenſur'd by the Calvinian Party. They pretended the Author had deſerted the Church of England, and made dangerous Advances towards Popery and Arminianiſm. They were conſcious this Book, if unanſwer'd, would expoſe their Singularities, and prevent the paſſing their Private Opinions any longer upon the Church. To make their Attack more regular and formidable, 'twas reſolved, that Yates and Ward, two Preachers in Ipſwich, ſhould peruſe the Anſwer, make a Collection of ſome pretended Popiſh and Arminian Tenents, and lay them before the next Parliament.

Mountague applies to the King for Protection, and ſucceeds.

Mountague having procur'd a Copy of the Information againſt him, applies to the King's Protection. By the Way; His Majeſty had now diſentangled himſelf from ſome Calvinian Prejudices, and had a better Opinion than formerly of the Remonſtrants Side of the Controverſy. He had likewiſe a particular Eſteem for Mountague, and was well pleas'd with his Performance againſt the Hiſtory of Tythes: And over and above, the King approv'd Mountague's Anſwer to the Popiſh Gagger, and thought his diſtinguiſhing the Doctrines of Calvin from thoſe of the Church of England ſufficiently defenſible. (b) His Majeſty likewiſe taking Notice of the Informations being publiſh'd, and the Heat and Clamour of Mountague's Adverſaries, gave him Leave to appeal to himſelf, and make his Defence in Print: And that the Book might be the better recommended, the King expreſly order'd Dr. White, Dean of Carliſle, a celebrated Champion againſt the Church of Rome, ſhould ſee it publiſh'd. The Book was accordingly licenſed by the Dean with this Approbation, That there was nothing contained in the ſame but what was agreeable to the publick Faith, Doctrine, and Diſcipline, eſtabliſh'd in the Church of England. The Tract was entituled, Appello Cæſarem; or, A Juſt Appeal from two Unjuſt Informers: But the King dying before 'twas printed off, 'twas addreſs'd to King Charles, as ſhall be afterwards related.

His Book, entituled, Apello Cæſarem licenſed.

In the mean Time it may not be improper to inquire a little farther, what the Informers meant in their Charge of Popery Now by Popery they underſtood all ſuch Points of Doctrine, which either being determined by this Church, bear ſome Reſemblance with the Doctrines of the Church of Rome; or elſe being left undecided by the Engliſh Reformation, every Man has the Liberty to draw towards the Tenents of what Communion he pleaſes. Of the firſt Sort, theſe following Opinions were cenſur'd for Popery by the Puritans, viz. The perpetual Viſibility of the Church; The local Deſcent of Chriſt into Hell; The Lawfulneſs of Images; The Signing with the Sign of the Croſs; The Real Preſence; The Reward of Good Works; The Terms Sacrifice and Altar; with ſome others already mention'd. Now theſe were both received Doctrines, and the Language of the Church of England. (c.)

The Anticalvinian Divines encouraged in this Reign.

Amongſt the undecided Points may be reckon'd, Evangelical Councils, Antichriſt, and Limbus Patrum: And here Mountague was left to his own Judgment, and might ſettle his Aſſertions as his own Reaſon, and the Authority of the Ancients ſhould direct him. However, the Calvinian Intereſt was then ſo ſtrong, that had not this Divine been a Perſon of great Spirit and Abilities, and well ſupported, he muſt have ſunk in the Controverſie.

In November this Winter a Marriage was concluded between the Prince of Wales and Henrietta Maria Siſter to the French King. The Articles were not ſo full in Favour of the Roman Catholicks as thoſe agreed with the Spaniſh Court.

The Claſhing between the Engliſh Regulars and Seculars touching Juriſdiction, has been already related. To take up this Difference, to give Orders, and to keep their Party better united, the Seculars and Benedictines deſir'd the Pope to put them under the Government of a Biſhop: Matthew Kelliſon and Richard Smith were preſented to the Court of Rome for this Purpoſe. Pope Urban conſecrated the latter, and diſpatch'd him into England for a Biſhop to the Seculars and Laity.

(c) See Heylin's Introduct. to Cyprian. Anglic.

In the Beginning of the next Year the King fell ill of an Ague, which croſs'd the Proverb, and prov'd mortal. He died at Theobalds on Sunday the 27th of March.

The King, as has been obſerv'd, diſengag'd from the Calvinian Tenents towards the latter End of his Reign, and to ſpeak clearly, he was never intirely in that Perſuaſion. This, amongſt other Things, appears ſufficiently by his promoting the other Party to the higheſt Stations in the Church. Thus for Inſtance: Soon after the Hampton-Court Conference, Bancroft was preferr'd to the See of Canterbury, and Barlow to that of Rocheſter; and upon the Tranſlation of this latter to Lincoln, Neil Dean of Weſtminſter, was made Biſhop of Rocheſter; and at his Removal to Litchfield, was ſucceeded by Buckridge. In the Year 1614. when Neil was tranſlated to York, Overall ſucceeded him at Lincoln. The Famous Anticalvinian Harſnet already mention'd, was ſucceſſively promoted to the Sees of Chicheſter and Norwich. In the Year 1619. Dr. Houſon Canon of Chriſt-Church was made Biſhop of Oxford: Two Years after, Cary Dean of St. Pauls, is preferr'd to the See of Exeter, and Laud to that of St. David's. And thus at laſt the Anticalvinian Divines were ſtrong enough to maintain their Ground, and at leaſt, a Balance to the other Party. (d)

The King's Death and Character.

As to this Prince's Character, the Lord Bacon's Dedication ſhall ſpeak Part of it, which tho' intermix'd with ſome Strokes of Panegyrick, may not be unacceptable to the Reader. (e) "This great Author admires the King for the Compaſs and Extent of his Genius, for the Strength of his Memory, for the Quickneſs of his Apprehenſion, for his Penetration, for his ready, methodical, and perſuaſive Manner in Speaking; that theſe natural Advantages made him recollect Plato's Opinion, That Science was nothing more than Remembrance; That the Mind was naturally acquainted with all Sort of Knowledge: But that this Faculty was ſomewhat embarraſs'd by the Groſsneſs of her Vehicle: That if this Aſſertion was ever made good in any Perſon, 'twas in this King: That his Majeſty's Apprehenſion catch'd at the leaſt Spark or Glimmering of an Object: That as the Scripture reports of King Solomon, that his Heart was like the Sand of the Sea; vaſt in the whole Bulk, but very ſmall in the Parts; ſo God hath given his Majeſty's Underſtanding a wonderful Quality; a Faculty to graſp the greateſt Things, and yet faſten upon the leaſt, and ſtop them from running through. This without Experiment, would look like an Impoſſibility: That the ſame Inſtrument ſhould be able to command the greateſt Diſproportions in Quantity, and manage Things of ſuch different Dimenſions. As to your Majeſty's Elocution, continues the Lord Bacon, it brings what Tacitus reports of Auguſtus Cæſar, to my Memory. Auguſtus, ſays this Hiſtorian, had a flowing Eloquence, and ſpoke like a Prince. And if we examine the Matter cloſely, all drudging, affected, or imitating Rhetorick, tho' otherwiſe moving, has ſomething that looks mean and ſervile in it. But your Majeſty's Manner has an Air of Royalty, flows from your own Fountain, and yet keeps within the Channels which Nature directs. 'Tis remarkably eaſie, unborrow'd, and inimitable. And as Conduct and Fortune join in the Happineſs of your Majeſty's Adminiſtration, ſo in your intellectual Advantages there ſeems to be an Emulation between Nature and Improvement, between what you were born to, and what you have acquir'd. For ſince the Beginning of Chriſtianity 'tis hard to find a Prince ſo much ornamented, with Variety of Knowledge, or going ſo great a Length in the particular Kinds of it. Whoever runs over the Liſt of Kings and Princes, will be of my Opinion: For 'tis look'd on as no ordinary Attainment in Princes, if they can borrow ſomewhat of their Subjects Brains, compaſs ſome ſuperficial Learning, or give Incouragement to Men of Letters. But for one born a King, to go to the Bottom, and draw from the Fountain, or rather to be a Spring himſelf, is next to a Miracle. Your Majeſty, as the Noble Author goes on, is ſo richly furniſh'd with Divine and Human Learning, that you have a Right to the Character of the Celebrated Hermes Triſmegiſtus, and unite the Sovereignty of a Prince, the Illumination of a Prieſt, and the Learning of a Philoſopher, in the ſame Perſon. He goes on to ſomething more, but I ſhall tranſlate no farther.

The Lord Keeper Williams in his Sermon at the King's Funeral, taking his Text out of 1 Kings 2. v. 41,2,3. drew a Parallel between Solomon and the Prince deceas'd: He carry'd on the Compariſon from their Reſemblance in Knowledge, from the Proſperity of their Reigns, and the Peaceableneſs of their Inclinations. The Lord Keeper runs the Parallel through many other Inſtances too long to recite. He concludes how earneſtly his Majeſty recommended the Care of Religion and Juſtice to the Prince. Theſe he call'd the Two Supporters of his Throne. As to his Marriage, he adviſ'd him to marry like himſelf, and marry where he would. But if he marry'd the Princeſs laſt mention'd, he ſhould take Care to diſtinguiſh in the Engagement; marry her Perſon, but not her Religion.

To proceed a little in the Deſcription of this Prince: His Regard for Epiſcopacy appears by his reſtoring that Government in Scotland; And by his Majeſty's Diſcourſe and Deciſion at the Conference at Hampton-Court, his Inclination to the Engliſh Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitution, is ſufficiently evident: His Encouragement to Learning may be collected from his viſiting the Univerſities, and giving them particular Marks of Eſteem. For Inſtance; he augmented the Salary of the Regius Profeſſor at Oxford with a Prebendary in Chriſt-Church, and the Rectory of Ewelm in that County. The Profeſſors of Law and Phyſick had likewiſe their Income improv'd; the firſt with the Corps of a good Prebendary in the Church of Saliſbury, and the other with the Government of an Hoſpital in Ewelm above-mention'd, annex'd to their Imployment.

Benefactions to the Univerſity of Oxford in this Reign.

The Preſident of Princes commonly draws Imitation, and ſets ſomething of a Faſhion; whether this might be a Motive to other Benefactions, I ſhall not conjecture: However, it may not be improper to take Notice, that in this Reign two Mathematick Lectures were founded by Sir Henry Savil Provoſt of Eaton, and Warden of Merton-College: With theſe muſt be remembred the Hiſtory-Lecture founded by William Cambden, Clarencieux; the Lecture in Natural Philoſophy by Sir William Sidley Baronet; that in Moral Philoſophy by Dr. Thomas White Reſidentiary of St. Pauls. All theſe Lectures had a conſiderable Settlement: To which may be reckon'd an Anatomy Lecture ſet up by Richard Tomlins of Weſtminſter, though his Fortune would not reach to ſo plentiful an Endowment. To what has been mention'd, we may add the Magnificent Structures of the Publick Schools, the Incloſing a large Piece of Ground with a fine Wall for a Phyſick-Garden; not to repeat the founding of Wadham-College, and ſeveral other conſiderable Improvements in the Building of that Univerſity.

To draw towards an End of this Prince's Character; his peaceable Temper is by ſome People reckon'd to Diſadvantage of Conſtitution. His Mother's Fright at the Murther of Rizio affected the Fœtus, and gave an Over-balance of Fear. By this Accident, ſay they, the Son was born with a natural Averſion to Fighting. Thus the Image of War ſhock'd his Fancy, and his Blood wanted Heat for Military Enterprize. But all this is Roving and Miſtake: That the King could guard his Life handſomly upon Occaſion, and was not defective in neceſſary Courage, is plain from two Inſtances.

1ſt. At the Gowry-Conſpiracy; when the Traytors had drawn him from his Attendants, and convey'd him into a private Room, when Alexander Ruthen told him his Death was determin'd, and attempted to tie his Hands; when the Danger was thus menacing, the King grappled with the Aſſaſſin, drag'd him croſs the Room, and call'd out to his Court; where by the Vigour of his Reſiſtance, 'tis plain his Reſolution did not fail him. Had he been a Coward, he muſt have been loſt. Being thus ſurpriz'd in the middle of an Ambuſh, he would have deſpair'd of diſengaging himſelf; his Spirits would have been overſet, and his Limbs unſerviceable.

At another Time being adviſ'd to retire from an Inſurrection, he diſdain'd the Caution, faced the Rebels, and made a bold Stand upon them. From whence we may infer, that 'twas his Chriſtian Temper which made him ſo much inclin'd to Peace and Repoſe. He was too juſt and good natur'd a Prince to plague the World for Avarice and Pride; or delight in the Ravage and Deſolations of War.

To conclude: The Thurſday before his Death he deſir'd the Holy Euchariſt might be adminiſtred to him; gave an Account of his Faith, and declar'd himſelf fully ſatisfy'd with what he had written upon the Subject of Religion: After this he receiv'd Abſolution, and the bleſſed Sacrament. And now he told the Prince and thoſe who attended, how much this Viaticum had fortify'd and refreſh'd his Mind; and adviſ'd them to apply to this Support upon the ſame Occaſion. He behav'd himſelf with great Piety and Reſignation, during his Sickneſs, died without Agony or Reluctance; and though he quitted ſo much in this World, went pleas'd into the other.*

PART II. BOOK IX.

Abbot (George) Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

UPON the Death of King James, his only Son Charles was according to Cuſtom proclaim'd at Theobalds, in London, and elſewhere. The firſt Thing we meet with in Reference to the Church, is the King's Regulation of the Chaplains in Ordinary. Their Number was retrench'd, and their Time of officiating aſcertain'd. And to make the Regulation more perfect, Laud, Biſhop of St. Davids, was commanded to bring in a Liſt of the moſt eminent Divines: And to diſtinguiſh their Perſuaſions by the Two Capitals O. and P. the Firſt ſtanding for Orthodox, and the other for Puritan.

And now the Parliament and Convocation being ſhortly to meet, Laud was directed by his Majeſty to conſult the learned Biſhop Andrews upon the Juncture: And to take his Advice what was fit to be debated upon the Subject of Religion, eſpecially with Reference to the Five Points ſettled at Dort.

The Queen arrives at Dover, and is convey'd by the King to London.

The Marriage agreed in the late Reign between his preſent Majeſty and the French King's Siſter, was ſolemniz'd by Proxy at Paris, May the 1ſt, Old Style. And on the Seventh of this Month, King James was inter'd at Weſtminſter in Henry the VIIth's Chappel. The King receiving Advice of his Queen's being embark'd at Boulogn, met her at Dover, and convey'd her to London: But here Fuller miſtakes in relating a Chappel was prepar'd for her in Somerſet-Houſe, with a Convent of Capuchin Fryars: For 1ſt the Chappel then ready, was not prepar'd for her, but the Lady Infanta: 'Twas built in the King's Houſe at St. James's, when the Treaty with Spain was likely to ſucceed. 2*dly*, The Articles of Marriage make no mention of the Capuchin Fryars, as Fuller Reports. The Prieſts who came over with the Queen, were by Agreement to be all Oratorians, this Order being likely to prove more inoffenſive to the Engliſh, as having given them no Provocation. And to lay this Matter together, tho' happening at ſome Diſtance of Time, theſe Oratorians being ſent back to France in the Year 1626, the Capuchins under Father Joſeph, ſupplied their Place. But then this did not happen till after the Rupture with France, the Expedition at the Iſle of Rhee, and the Loſs of Rochel. But ſome Time after the Peace between England and France, the Queen prevail'd the Capuchins might have Leave to come over: Upon this, ſome Lodgings were fitted for them in Somerſet-Houſe, and a Chappel built there for her Majeſty's Devotions. The Parliament meets at Weſtminſter.

On the 18th of June the Parliament met at Weſtminſter. The Commons firſt Buſineſs was addreſſing the King with a Liſt of Grievances, to the moſt of which a ſatisfactory Anſwer was return'd. The Lower Houſe proceeded to concern themſelves with Matters of Religion, and ſummon'd Mountague to appear before them. Being brought to the Bar, the Speaker told him

Mountague ſummon'd to appear before the Commons.

Abbot (George) Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

'twas the Pleaſure of the Houſe, the Cenſure of his Books ſhould be poſtpon'd ſome Time: That in the Interim he ſhould be committed to the Cuſtody of the Serjeant; and afterwards they oblig'd him to give the Security of 2000 l. for his Appearance. Mountague being the King's Chaplain, his Majeſty was diſpleas'd with the Proceedings of the Commons, and look'd on it as an unpreſidented Stretch of Juriſdiction: And now Laud being apprehenſive the Reformation might ſuffer, if Controverſies in Religion were determin'd in the laſt Inſtance by the Laity, applied to the Duke of Buckingham to engage his Majeſty in Favour of Mountague. Neither was this Divine wanting to do his own Part in his Defence, To this Purpoſe he wrote to the Duke of Buckingham. He intreats this great Miniſter to report to his Majeſty the Hardſhips put upon him by the Commons. That they had no Authority to proſecute his Perſon, or cenſure his Book: That what he had written was publiſh'd by the late King's Order, and authoriz'd by his preſent Majeſty. After this he makes a bold Declaration, “ That in Caſe he did not give a ſolid and full Anſwer to every Article objected from his Book, he would willingly be given up to the Pleaſure of his Enemies, and not importune his Majeſty or his Grace for any Protection. (g)

(g) Cabala pag. 110.

This Application was ſeconded ſome few Days after by a Letter of Three Biſhops to the Duke of Buckingham, the Words are theſe:

Three Biſhops write in his Behalf to the Duke of Buckingham.

May it pleaſe your Grace,

“ We are bold to be Suitors to you, in the Behalf of the Church of England, and a poor Member of it, Mr. Mountague, at this Time, not a little diſtreſs'd. We are not Strangers to his Perſon, but it is the Cauſe which we are bound to be tender of.

“ The Cauſe we conceive (under Correction of better Judgment) concerns the Church of England merely; for that Church, when it was reform'd from the ſuperſtitious Opinions broach'd, or maintain'd by the Church of Rome, refus'd the apparent and dangerous Errors, and would not be too buſy with every particular School-Point. The Cauſe why ſhe held this Moderation, was, becauſe ſhe could not be able to preſerve any Unity amongſt Chriſtians, if Men were forced to ſubſcribe to curious Particulars diſputed in Schools.

“ Now, may it pleaſe your Grace, the Opinions which at this Time trouble many Men in the late Book of Mr. Mountague, are ſome of them ſuch as are expreſly the reſolv'd Doctrine of the Church of England, and thoſe he is bound to maintain: Some of them ſuch as are fit only for Schools, and to be left at more Liberty for learned Men to abound in their own Senſe, ſo they keep themſelves peaceable, and diſtract not the Church. And therefore to make any Man ſubſcribe to School Opinions, may juſtly ſeem hard in the Church of Chriſt, and was one great Fault of the Council of Trent. And to affright them from thoſe Opinions in which they have (as they are bound) ſubſcrib'd to the Church, as it is worſe in it ſelf, ſo it may be the Mother of greater Danger.

“ May it pleaſe your Grace farther to conſider, that when the Clergy ſubmitted themſelves, in the Time of Henry the VIIIth, the Submiſſion was ſo, That if any Difference, Doctrinal, or other fell in the Church, the King and the Biſhops were to be Judges of it in a national Synod or Convocation, the King firſt giving Leave under his Broad Seal, to handle the Points in Difference.

“ But the Church never ſubmitted to any other Judge, neither indeed can ſhe, tho' ſhe would: And we humbly deſire your Grace to conſider, and then to move his moſt gracious Majeſty (if you ſhall think fit) what dangerous Conſequences may follow upon it. For firſt, if any other Judge be allow'd in Matter of Doctrine, we ſhall depart from the Ordinance of Chriſt, and the continual Courſe and Practice of the Church.

“ 2. Secondly, If the Church be once brought down beneath her ſelf, we cannot but fear what may be next ſtruck at.

“ 3. Thirdly, It will ſome Way touch the Honour of his Majeſty's dear Father, and our moſt dread Sovereign of glorious and ever bleſſed Memory, King James, who ſaw and approved all the Opinions in this Book: And he in his rare Wiſdom and Judgment, would never have allow'd them, if they had croſs'd with Truth and the Church of England.

“ 4. Fourthly, We muſt be bold to ſay, That we cannot conceive what Uſe there can be of Civil Government in the Commonwealth, or of Preaching and external Miniſtry in the Church, if ſuch fatal Opinions as ſome which are oppoſite, and contrary to theſe deliver'd by Mr. Mountague, are, and ſhall be publickly taught and maintain'd.

“ 5. Fifthly, We are certain that all or moſt of the contrary Opinions were treated of at Lambeth, and ready to be publiſh'd; but then Queen Elizabeth of famous Memory, upon Notice given, how little they agreed with the Practice of Piety, and Obedience to all Government, cauſed them to be ſuppreſs'd, and ſo they have continued ever ſince, till of late ſome of them have receiv'd Countenance at the Synod of Dort. Now this was a Synod of that Nation, and can be of no Authority in any other national Church, till it be receiv'd there by publick Authority. And our Hope is, That the Church of England will be well adviſed, and more than once over, before ſhe admit a foreign Synod, eſpecially of ſuch a Church as condemneth her Diſcipline and Manner of Government, to ſay no more.

“ And farther, we are bold to commend to your Grace's Wiſdom this one particular. His Majeſty (as we have been inform'd) hath already taken this Buſineſs into his own Care, and moſt worthily refer'd it in a right Courſe to Church Conſideration. And we well hoped, That without further Trouble to the State, or Breach of Unity in the Church, it might ſo have been well and orderly compos'd, as we ſtill pray it may. Theſe Things conſider'd, we have little to ſay for Mr. Mountague's Perſon, only thus much we know; he is a very good Scholar, and a right honeſt Man. A Man every Way able to do God, his Majeſty, and the Church of England great Service. We fear he may receive great Diſcouragement, and which is far worſe, we have ſome Cauſe to doubt this may breed a great Backwardneſs in able Men to write in the Defence of the Church of England againſt either home or foreign Adverſaries, if they ſhall ſee him ſink in Fortunes, Reputation, or Health, upon his Book Occaſion.

And

Abbot (George) Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

"And this we moſt humbly ſubmit to your "Grace's Judgment, and Care of the Churches "Peace and Welfare. So recommending your "Grace to the Protection of Almighty God. (b)

How far this Letter engag'd the Duke of Buckingham, or what Regard it met with from the Commons, is uncertain: However, Mr. Mountague had no more Trouble given him this Seſſion, which was but ſhort: For the Plague being in London, the Parliament was adjourned to Oxford, and diſſolv'd in Auguſt following. The Reaſon which diſpos'd the King to part with them, was, becauſe he found the Commons began to reflect upon ſome of the Miniſtry, and were reſolv'd againſt granting Supplies till their Grievances were firſt redreſs'd.

Auguſt 12. 1625. The Parliament diſſolv'd.

The Lord Keeper Williams, who was now in his Declenſion at Court, endeavours to recover himſelf, but without Effect. He had diſoblig'd the Duke of Buckingham at the Parliament at Oxford. For when this Nobleman expoſtulated with him for Breach of Friendſhip, he frankly replied, he was engag'd with William Earl of Pembroke, to endeavour a Redreſs of Grievances; and that he was reſolv'd to ſtand upon his own Legs: If that's your Reſolution, ſays the Duke, take Care you ſtand firm, and ſo they parted. Soon after this Claſh, the Biſhop was diſcharg'd attending at Court; and on the 30th of October following the Broad Seal was given to Sir Thomas Coventry. (i)

The Broad Seal taken from the Lord Keeper Williams.

(i) Ruſhworth's Collect. pag. 198.

The King, to ſatisfy the late Remonſtrance in Parliament againſt the Growth of Popery, wrote to the Two Archbiſhops to perform their Part for diſcovering and apprehending of Jeſuits, and Seminary Prieſts, requiring them to proceed againſt Popiſh Recuſants by Excommunication, and other Cenſures of the Church: But withal, the Letter takes Notice of another Sort of People, no leſs dangerous than the Papiſts, to the eſtabliſh'd Religion: That to prevent Miſchief from this Quarter, the Two Archbiſhops are commanded to ſend Directions to the reſt of the Clergy. That all of them might be particularly careful in their reſpective Stations, for the Suppreſſing thoſe diſaffected to the national Church: That none of theſe religious Mal-contents might have any Countenance or Shelter from any Eccleſiaſticks in Authority: But that all proper Endeavours might be uſed to pull off the Fucus, and expoſe the falſe reaſoning of thoſe, who pretend to refine upon the Church Eſtabliſhment: And that his Majeſty could have no good Opinion of thoſe Prelates, who either encourag'd their Singularities, or ſo much as conniv'd at them. Upon the receiving the King's Letter, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury tranſmits Copies to his reſpective Suffragans. But here the King's Order was partially executed by Abbot, the Roman Catholicks were ſtruck at, and the Puritans overlook'd. (l)

The King having ſummon'd another Parliament to meet on the 6th of February, reſolv'd to proceed to his Coronation before the Seſſion: The Purification of the bleſſed Virgin was fix'd on for this Solemnity. And for the better adjuſting every Part of the Ceremony to the Service and Orders of the Church of England, the King iſſues a Commiſſion to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and ſome other Biſhops, Laud being one of the Number, to ſettle the Form. This Committee having compared the Ceremonial uſed in the late Reign with the publick Rituals, 'twas agreed to make ſome Alterations and Additions in the Ceremony, and the Prayers. For Inſtance, the Unction was to be made in the Figure of a Croſs, which was accordingly done by Archbiſhop Abbot. The ſupplemental Part in the Form conſiſted chiefly in a Prayer for the King, and a Requeſt to him, in Behalf of the Clergy: The Firſt ſounds extremely high for the Regale; and might ſerve very well at the Conſecration of a Patriarch. It ſtands thus:

The King's Coronation.

Charles I. K.

An Alteration in ſome of the Prayers.

Let him obtain Favour for the People like Aaron in the Tabernacle, Eliſha in the Waters, Zacharias in the Temple; give him Peter's Key of Diſcipline, and Paul's Doctrine.

In the Requeſt made to him, theſe Prelates were by ſome thought to remember their Character too far, and take too much upon them: It follows the Unction in theſe Words:

Stand, and hold faſt from henceforth the Place to which you have been Heir by the Succeſſion of your Forefathers, being now deliver'd to you by the Authority of Almighty God, and by the Hands of Us, and all the Biſhops, and Servants of God: And as you ſee the Clergy to come nearer to the Altar, than others; ſo remember that in Place convenient you give them greater Honour; That the Mediator of God and Man may eſtabliſh you in the kingly Throne, to be the Mediator between the Clergy and the Laity, that you may reign for ever with Jeſus Chriſt, the King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, who with the Father and the Holy Ghoſt, liveth and reigneth for ever. Amen.

And here the Oath taken by the King being Part of the Solemnity, it may not be improper to lay it before the Reader.

The Coronation Oath.

Sir (ſays the Archbiſhop) will you grant, keep, and by your Oath confirm to your People, of England, the Laws and Cuſtoms to them granted by the Kings of England; your lawful and religious Predeceſſors; and namely, the Laws, Cuſtoms and Franchiſes granted to the Clergy, by the glorious King St. Edward your Predeceſſor, according to the Laws of God, the true Profeſſion of the Goſpel eſtabliſh'd in this Kingdom, and agreeable to the Prerogative of the Kings thereof, and the ancient Cuſtoms of this Land?

The King anſwers, I grant and promiſe to keep them.

Archbiſhop. Sir, Will you keep Peace and godly Agreement entirely (according to your Power) both to God, the Holy Church, the Clergy, and the People?

Rex. I will keep it.

Archbiſhop. Sir, will you, (to your Power) cauſe Juſtice, Law, and Diſcretion in Mercy and Truth, to be executed in all your Judgments?

Rex. I will.

Archbiſhop. Sir, will you grant to hold, and grant to keep the Laws and rightful Cuſtoms which the Commonalty of this your Kingdom have? And will you defend and uphold them to the Honour of God, ſo much as in you lieth?

Rex. I grant and promiſe ſo to do.

Then one of the Biſhops reads this Admonition to the King before the People with a loud Voice. Our Lord and King, we beſeech you to pardon, and to grant, and to preſerve unto us, and the Churches committed to our Charge, all Canonical Privileges, and due Law and Juſtice; and that you would protect and defend us, as every good King in his Kingdom ought to be a Protector, and Defender of the Biſhops, and the Churches under their Government?

The King anſwereth, With a willing and devout Heart I promiſe and grant my Pardon, and that I will preſerve and maintain to you and the Churches committed to your Charge, all Canonical Privileges, and due Law and Juſtice; and that I will be your Protector and Defender to my Power, by the Aſſiſtance of God, as every good King ought in his Kingdom, in right to protect and defend the Biſhops and Churches under their Government.

The King ariſeth and is lead to the Communion-Table, where he makes a ſolemn Oath in Sight of all the People, to obſerve the Premiſſes and laying his Hand upon the Book, ſaith, The Things which I have before promiſ'd, I ſhall perform and keep, ſo help me God, and the Contents of this Book. (m)

The Oath not alter'd by Biſhop Laud, or the King.

I have the rather tranſcrib'd this Oath, becauſe both the King and Laud were afterwards charg'd with altering it to the Diſadvantage of the Subject. But this Calumny was effectually ſilenc'd by his Majeſty's referring the Objectors to the Records in the Exchequer: Where they might ſee his Coronation Oath was the ſame with that which had been cuſtomarily taken by his Predeceſſors.

Idem.

In the other Solemnities of the Coronation, the Abbots formerly, and after them the Deans of Weſtminſter, had a conſiderable Share: They had the Cuſtody of the old Regalia, that is the Crown, the Sword, the Sceptre, the Spurs, &c. of King Edward the Confeſſor: Theſe Royal Curioſities are never made Uſe of, excepting at a King's Coronation, or his going to Parliament. Williams, the late Lord Keeper was now Dean: But being under the King's Diſfavour, had Orders not to appear at this Solemnity: But to depute one of the Prebendaries to officiate in his Place. This Order put him ſomewhat to a Stand: He was unwilling to nominate Laud, then one of the Prebendaries, becauſe he look'd on him as his Rival at Court: But then to have overlook'd a Biſhop, and named another of a lower Rank, would have been too plain a Diſcovery of Diſaffection. He therefore prudently ſent the King the Names and Diſtinctions of all the Prebendaries, leaving the Choice to his Majeſty, who pitch'd upon Laud. Laud being thus nominated, did the Dean's Part, in preparing for that pompous Appearance. And finding the old Crucifix among the Regalia, he plac'd it upon the Altar, according to ancient Uſage.

Laud performs the Dean of Weſtminſter's Part at the Coronation.

The Duke of Buckingham keeping on his Miſunderſtanding with the Biſhop of Lincoln, was a Weight upon that Prelate's Fortune, and kept him from emerging at Court. He ſeems to have lain under a particular Hardſhip at this Time: For he had not receiv'd his Writ of Summons to ſit in Parliament: This, tho' with Submiſſion to his Majeſty's Pleaſure, he repreſented as unpreſidented Uſage: And that this Privilege was not denied to any Priſoners, or condemn'd Peers in his Father's Reign. He therefore entreated the King for Leave to make his Proxy, if not permitted to attend in Perſon. He likewiſe beg'd the King to ſoften the Duke, and bring him off his Reſentment: Who, tho' he had never receiv'd any real Provocation from him, was not to be reconcil'd by any Thing the Biſhop could do, or ſuffer. And laſtly, he humbly deſires the King's Name might not be us'd to his Diſadvantage, and that his Reputation might not ſuffer by his Abſence from the Parliament. He concludes with ſtrong Proteſtations of Duty and Affection to the King; ſtands boldly upon his Innocence; and ſolicits for no Protection againſt the Charge of any Subject whatever.

A Committee of Religion firſt appointed by the Commons.

And now the 2d Parliament being met, a Commiſſion for Religion was ſettled, and Mountague's Appeal to Cæſar was again debated. This Book being refer'd by the Commons to the Committee above-mention'd, Mr. Pym made his Report of ſeveral erroneous Opinions extracted from it; upon which the Houſe made this Reſolve, That Mr. Mountague endeavour'd to reconcile England to Rome, and alienate the King's Affection from his well affected Subjects. By the Way, this is the firſt Time we hear of a Committee of Religion in the Houſe of Commons. The Articles exhibited againſt Mountague were drawn up in the Form following.

Articles exhibited againſt Mountague.

“That he the ſaid Richard Mountague, in or about the 21 Year of the Reign of our late Sovereign Lord King James of famous Memory, hath cauſed to be printed, and in his Name to be publiſh'd, one Book, called, An Anſwer to the late Gag of Proteſtants; and in or about Anno 22. of the ſame King, he cauſ'd to be printed and publiſh'd one other Book, entituled, A Treatiſe of the Invocation of Saints; and likewiſe in the firſt Year of his Majeſty's Reign, that now is, he procured to be printed, and in his Name to be publiſh'd, another Book, entituled, An Appeal to Cæſar: In every of which Books he hath maintain'd and confirm'd ſome Doctrine contrary or repugnant to the Articles agreed by the Archbiſhops and Biſhops of both Provinces, and the whole Clergy, holden in the Convocation at London, Anno Domini, 1562. according to the Computation of the Church of England, for avoiding Diverſity of Opinions, and for eſtabliſhing Conſent touching true Religion: All which appears in the Places hereafter mention'd; and in divers other Places and Paſſages of the ſame Books; and by his ſo doing hath ſo broken the Laws and Statutes of this Realm in that Caſe provided, and very much diſturb'd both the Peace of Church and Common-wealth.

“I. Whereas in the Five and thirtieth Article of the Articles aforemention'd, it is declar'd, That the 2d Book of Homilies doth contain a godly and wholeſome Doctrine; in the Sixteenth Homily of which Book it is determin'd, That the Church of Rome, as it is at preſent, and hath been for the Space of Nine hundred Years and odd, is ſo far wide from the Nature of a true Church, that nothing can be more. He the ſaid Richard Mountague, in ſeveral Places in the ſaid Books, called, The Anſwer to the Gag; and in his other Book, called, The Appeal, doth adviſedly maintain and affirm, that the Church of Rome is and ever was a true Church, ſince it was a Church.

“II. Whereas in the ſame Homily, it is likewiſe declared, That the Church of Rome is not built upon the Foundation of the Prophets and Apoſtles; and in the Eight and twentieth Article of the ſaid Articles, that Tranſubſtantiation overthroweth the Nature of a Sacrament; and in the Five and twentieth of the ſaid Articles, that Five other reputed Sacraments of the Church of Rome, are not to be accounted Sacraments; yet contrary and repugnant hereunto, he, the ſaid Richard Mountague, doth maintain and affirm in his Book aforeſaid, call'd, The Anſwer to the Gag, that the Church of Rome hath ever remain'd firm upon the ſame Foundation of Sacraments and Doctrine, inſtituted by God.

“III. In the Nineteenth of the ſame Articles it is farther determin'd, That the Church of Rome hath erred, not only in their Living, and Mat“ ters of Ceremony, but alſo in Matters of Faith. He the ſaid Richard Mountague, ſpeaking of thoſe Points which belong to Faith and good Manners, Hope and Charity, doth in the ſaid Book, called, The Gag, affirm and maintain, that none of theſe are controverted in their Points, meaning the Proteſtants and Papiſts; and notwithſtanding, that in the One and thirtieth Article it is reſolved, that the Sacrifice of Maſſes, in which, as it is commonly ſaid, the Prieſt did offer Chriſt for the Quick and the Dead, to have Remiſſion of Pain and Guilt too, is a blaſphemous Fable, and dangerous Deceit; this being one of the Points controverted between the Church of England and the Church of Rome. The ſaid Richard Mountague in his Book, called, The Gag, doth affirm and maintain, that the controverted Points are of a leſſer and inferior Nature, of which a Man may be ignorant, without any Danger of his Soul at all; a Man may reſolve to oppoſe this or that without Peril of Periſhing for ever.

“ IV. Whereas in the Second Homily, entituled, Againſt Peril of Idolatry, contained in the aforeſaid Book of Homilies, and approved by the Five and thirtieth Article aforemention'd; it is declared, That Images teach no good Leſſon, neither of God nor Godlineſs, but all Error and Wickedneſs: He the ſaid Richard Mountague, in the Book of Gag aforeſaid, doth affirm and maintain, That Images may be uſed for the Inſtruction of the Ignorant, and Excitation of Devotion.

“ V. That in the ſame Homily, it is plainly expreſſed, That the attributing the Defence of certain Countries to Saints, is a ſpoiling God of his Honour, and that ſuch Saints are but Dii Tutelares of the Gentiles or Idolaters. The ſaid Richard Mountague hath, notwithſtanding in his ſaid Book, entituled, A Treatiſe concerning the Invocation of Saints, affirmed and maintain'd, That Saints have not only a Memory, but a more peculiar Charge of their Friends; and that it may be admitted, that ſome Saints have a peculiar Patronage, Cuſtody, Protection, and Power, as Angels alſo have, over certain Perſons and Countries by ſpecial Deputation; and that it is no Impiety ſo to believe: Whereas in the Seventeenth of the ſaid Articles, it is reſolved, That God hath certainly decreed by his Counſel, ſecret to us, to deliver from Curſe and Damnation, thoſe whom he hath choſen in Chriſt out of Mankind, and to bring them by Chriſt to everlaſting Salvation; wherefore they which be endued with ſo excellent a Benefit of God, be called according to God's Purpoſe, working in due Seaſon, they thro' the Grace obey the Calling, they be juſtified freely, walk religiouſly in good Works, and at length by God's Mercy attain to everlaſting Felicity: He, the ſaid Richard Mountague, in the ſaid Book, called, The Appeal, doth maintain and affirm, that Men juſtified may fall away, and depart from the State which once they had; they may ariſe again, and become new Men poſſibly, but not certainly, nor neceſſarily. And the better to countenance this his Opinion, he hath in the ſame Book, willfully added, falſified, and chang'd divers Words in the Sixteenth of the Articles before-mention'd, and divers other Words both in the Book of Homilies, and in the Book of Common-Prayer, and ſo miſrecited, and chang'd, the ſaid Places he doth alledge in the ſaid Book, called, The Appeal, endeavouring thereby to lay a moſt wicked and malicious Scandal upon the Church of England, as if ſhe did herein differ from the Reformed Churches beyond the Seas; and did conſent to thoſe pernicious Errors, which are commonly called Arminianiſm, and which the late famous Queen Elizabeth, and King James of happy Memory, did ſo piouſly, and diligently labour to ſuppreſs.

“ That the ſaid Richard Mountague, contrary to his Duty and Allegiance, hath endeavour'd to raiſe great Factions and Diviſions in this Common-wealth, by caſting the odious and ſcandalous Name of Puritans upon ſuch his Majeſty's loving Subjects as conform themſelves to the Doctrine and Ceremonies of the Church of England; under that Name laying upon them divers falſe and malicious Imputations, ſo to bring them into Jealouſy and Diſpleaſure with his moſt excellent Majeſty, and into Reproach and Ignominy with the reſt of the People, to the great Danger of Sedition, and Diſturbance in the State, if it be not timely prevented.

“ That the Scope and End of the ſaid Richard Mountague in the Books before-mention'd is to give Encouragement to Popery, and to withdraw his Majeſty's Subjects from the true Religion eſtabliſh'd, to the Roman Superſtition, and conſequently to be reconcil'd to the See of Rome, all which he laboureth by ſubtle and cunning Ways, whereby God's true Religion hath been much ſcandaliz'd, thoſe Miſchiefs introduced, which the Wiſdom of many Laws hath endeavoured to prevent, the Devices and Practices of his Majeſty's Enemies have been further'd and advanced, to the great Peril and Hazard of our Sovereign Lord the King, and of all his Dominions and loving Subjects.

“ That the ſaid Richard Mountague hath inſerted into the ſaid Book, called, The Appeal, divers Paſſages diſhonourable to the late King, his Majeſty's Father of famous Memory; full of Bitterneſs, Railing, and injurious Speeches to other Perſons, diſgraceful and contemptible to many worthy Divines, both of this Kingdom, and other Reform'd Churches beyond the Seas; impious and profane in Scoffing at Preaching, Meditating and Conferring, Pulpits, Lectures, Bible, and all ſhew of Religion; all which do aggravate his former Offences, having proceeded from malicious and envenom'd Heat againſt the Peace of the Church, and the Sincerity of the Reformed Religion publickly profeſs'd, and by Law eſtabliſh'd in this Kingdom. All which Offences, being to the Diſhonour of God, and of moſt miſchievous Effect and Conſequence againſt the Good of this Church and Common-wealth of England, and of other his Majeſty's Realms and Dominions. The Commons aſſembled in Parliament, do hereby pray, that the ſaid Richard Mountague may be puniſh'd according to his Demerits, in ſuch exemplary Manner, as may deter others from attempting ſo preſumptuouſly, to diſturb the Peace of the Church and State, and that the Book aforeſaid may be ſuppreſs'd and burnt. (n)

It does not appear this Impeachment was laid before the Houſe of Lords, in what Manner the Commons intended to proſecute their Charge, or how far they proceeded. Ruſhworth having made a Search into this Matter, could not find that Mountague was brought to his Defence, or that he return'd any Anſwer to the Articles: From whence we may conclude the Proceſs was drop'd by the Commons. Whether their Impeachment of the Duke of Buckingham might draw them from Buſineſs of lower Conſideration, or their Diſtruſt of making the Charge good, or the ſudden Diſſolution of the Parliament was the Occaſion of this Iſſue, is ſomewhat Uncertain.

April 12. 1626.

Before the Ending of the Parliament, the Biſhop of Gloceſter Preaching before his Majeſty, aſſerted the Real Preſence in ſuch ſtrong Language, that he was ſuſpected of going to an Exceſs, and coming too near the Verge of Popery. The Diſcourſe made a great Noiſe, and gave Diſguſt both in Town and Country. The Convocation examin'd the exceptionable Paſſages, but came to no Deciſion. The King being willing to ſatisfy himſelf and the Parliament, order'd Archbiſhop Abbot; Andrews, Biſhop of Wincheſter; and Laud, Biſhop of St. Davids, to make a thorough Enquiry into the Biſhop's Diſcourſe, and report their Opinion. They met accordingly, and after having perus'd the Sermon, and argued upon the Meaning of thoſe Sentences which gave Offence, they return'd the King this Anſwer. That ſome Things in that Sermon had been ſpoken leſs warily, but nothing falſely: That nothing had been innovated by him in the Doctrine of the Church of England: But however they thought very fit that Goodman ſhould be appointed to preach again before his Majeſty, for the better explaining of his Meaning, and ſhewing how, and in what Particulars he had been miſtaken by his Auditors, Goodman Preaching accordingly before the King, had no farther Trouble. (o)

Mountague*'s Buſineſs not mov'd in Convocation, and why.*

As for Mountague's Buſineſs, who had been charg'd with deſerting towards Popery and Arminianiſm, by the Commons of both Parliaments, the Reader may poſſibly be ſomewhat at a Loſs why the Convocation took no Cognizance of this Matter. For the Articles exhibited were Points of Religion, and by Conſequence proper to the Deciſion of the Clergy. Beſides, the King was plainly inclined to give the Convocation their juſt Liberty, as appears by the Letter of the Three Biſhops above-mention'd, to the Duke of Buckingham. Here they acquaint the Duke, That his Majeſty had taken that Buſineſs into his own Care, and moſt worthily refer'd it in a right Courſe to Church Conſideration. But then, we are to remember that Laud had been lately ſent by the Duke of Buckingham to conſult Andrews, about what was thought fit to be propos'd in the Convocation; and whether 'twas ſeaſonable to revive the Quinquarticular Controverſy. Now by the Iſſue, we may collect, Andrews did not think it proper to refreſh thoſe Diſputes at preſent. Thoſe of Mountague's Perſuaſion, 'tis likely, did not think it ſafe to puſh the Matter to a Criſis: They knew the Archbiſhop, and many of the Biſhops and Clergy, were rather of the Calvinian Side; and therefore 'twas more prudential to let the Cauſe ſleep, than run the Hazard of a Debate in Convocation.

Charles I. K.

Two Conferences upon the Five Points. Feb. 11. 162$\frac{5}{6}$.

But tho' the Convocation ſeem'd to overlook, or ſtand neuter in the Conteſt, Mountague was attack'd in Print by Carleton, Biſhop of Chicheſter; Sutcliffe, Dean of Exeter; by Yates, Rouſe, &c. And thus the Claſhing was kept on, and the Breach grew rather wider. To accommodate Matters, a Conference had lately been held in York Houſe, the Duke of Buckingham, and ſome other Temporal Lords being preſent. The Managers were Buckeridge, Biſhop of Rocheſter, and Dr. White, Dean of Carliſle, on the one Side, and Morton, Biſhop of Coventry, and Dr. Preſton, Preacher at Lincolns-Inn, on the other. They touch'd upon the Five Points, but the Queſtion argued moſt at length was, Whether 'twas poſſible for one elected to fall from Grace. The Advantage of the Diſpute was given to either Side, according to the Variety of Judgment or Inclination in the Audience. There was ſoon after a ſecond Conference in the ſame Place, and before the ſame Temporal Lords, of which Robert Earl of Warwick, and William Earl of Pembroke were Two. The Divines were likewiſe the ſame, excepting that Mr. Mountague appear'd in Biſhop Buckeridge's Room. As to the Event, 'twas not more ſucceſsful than the former; they came to no Accommodation, nor made any Converts of each other. (p)

The King's Proclamation againſt diſputing the Controverſy.

His Majeſty to prevent the Controverſy's growing warmer, and breaking the People into Parties, by the Advice of the Biſhops, publiſh'd a Proclamation to keep both Sides quiet. "In this State-Paper the King declares his utter Diſlike of all thoſe who to ſhew their Parts, to pleaſe their Humour, or play their Revenge, ſhall be ſo hardy as to propagate any new Opinions differing from the orthodoxal Belief of the Church of England: That he is fully reſolv'd never to admit any Innovation in the Doctrine or Diſcipline of the Church. And as he ſhall always be forward to encourage his religious and well affected Subjects, ſo he is reſolv'd not to forbear the Puniſhing thoſe, who out of ſiniſter Regards, ſhall preſume to embroil either Church or State. His Majeſty therefore commands all his Subjects, (and more eſpecially the Clergy) both in England and Ireland, that from henceforth they manage themſelves with ſuch Diſcretion and Conſcience, that neither by Writing, Preaching, Printing, Conferences, or otherwiſe, they raiſe any Doubts, or publiſh any Singularities concerning Religion: But that upon Arguments of this Nature they keep themſelves cloſe to the Doctrine and Diſcipline happily eſtabliſh'd by Authority.

From hence his Majeſty proceeds to charge, "All Archbiſhops and Biſhops, all Counſellors of State, Judges, and Miniſters of Juſtice, to correct and ſuppreſs thoſe mutinous Spirits, that ſhall venture to break thro' this Rule of Sobriety, and Obedience to his Majeſty, and forget the Submiſſion they owe to the Conſtitutions of the Church, and the Laws of the Realm." The Proclamation concludes, That in Caſe of Misbehaviour, his Majeſty will proceed againſt the Offenders with all the Severity their Crimes ſhould deſerve. (q)

The Articles of the Commons againſt Mountague, encourag'd the Calvinians to draw out their Force, and ſet upon him. Beſides thoſe already mention'd, Gode, Featly, Ward, Wooton, Pryn and Burton, furniſh'd Pamphlets upon the Argument. Laud and ſome Biſhops on the other Side, ſupported by his Majeſty's Proclamation endeavour'd to ſuppreſs thoſe Books, and ſtifle the Controverſy. In ſhort, ſome of the Pamphlets were ſtop'd at the Preſs, ſome call'd in, and both the Printers and the Authors queſtion'd for engaging in an Argument prohibited by the Government. Amongſt the reſt Burton and Pryn were call'd before the High Commiſſion: But when the Court was near their Cenſure, they were ſerv'd with a Prohibition from Weſtminſter-Hall to ſtop their Proceedings. This was the hardieſt Stroke of the Judges, and fell at the Rebound on his Majeſty's Proclamation.

The Commons Complaint of the Growth of Popery, and the King's Letters to the Biſhops and Judges to proſecute Recuſants, look'd like a Storm coming on that Quarter. The Pope receiving Advice of this unexpected Turn, ſent a Conſolatory Letter to the Engliſh Roman Catholicks. (r) This Pope, like Paul the 5th ſeems to miſtake the Purport of the Oath of Allegiance; he takes it for granted this Teſt means more than a Security for Loyalty and civil Obedience; that it ſtrikes at the Privileges of St. Peter's Chair, and implies a Claim of Spiritual Supremacy in the Crown. Notwithſtanding this Suppoſition, he recommends Submiſſion and Paſſive Obedience in moving Expreſſions; he lets them know they are not to apply to any Expedients of Violence; and that Prayers and Patience are the only Defence Chriſtian Subjects are allow'd to make uſe of.

(r)See Records Num. 109.

And now to open the Way, and make the Church-Hiſtory more intelligible, I muſt touch a little on what happen'd in the State. “ The King of Denmark lately publiſh'd a Manifeſto, ſetting forth, That at the Inſtance of the Kings of Great Britain and Denmark the Elector Palatine had offer'd a Submiſſion to his Imperial Majeſty, and thereupon was in Hopes of being reſtor'd to the Patrimony and Privilege of his Anceſtors: That notwithſtanding this Offer of Satisfaction the Emperor continu'd his former Hoſtilities upon the Elector's Country, and had much damnify'd the Lower Saxony by the Forces commanded by his General Count Tilly.

“ The Country being thus diſtreſs'd, the Princes of the Lower Saxony deſir'd the Aſſiſtance of him the King of Denmark to ſettle the Repoſe, and preſerve the Liberties of Germany, that his Daniſh Majeſty was reſolv'd to take the Field for the Reſtitution of the Elector Palatine: And that the King of Great Britain had enter'd into an Engagement for the ſame Purpoſe.

In the Beginning of the Year the War was proſperous on the Danes Side, but towards the End of the Campaign the Battle near Lutzern prov'd deciſive for the Emperor. In this Action where Count Tilly commanded againſt the King of Denmark, the Daniſh Infantry was intirely broken, the Train of Artillery loſt, and a great many General Officers kill'd and made Priſoners.

The King of England advertis'd of this Miſfortune, found it neceſſary to ſend out a Fleet, and furniſh a Reinforcement for his Unkle the Dane. But the Exchequer was not in Caſh for ſo great an Undertaking. The Parliament, unleſs allow'd to proceed in their Impeachment of the Duke of Buckingham, wou'd paſs no Subſidy-Bill. Inſtead of granting Supplies, the Commons had prepar'd a Remonſtrance. The King thinking himſelf ill us'd in their poſtponing the Money-Bill, that he was ſtruck at in his Miniſter,and not liking to be preſcrib'd to in the Adminiſtration, diſſolv'd the Parliament on the Fifteenth of June. But the Crown-Revenues were in no Condition to aſſiſt the Confederates, and ſupport the Charge of a War: And therefore to anſwer the Neceſſities of the Government, a Loan was pitch'd on as the beſt Expedient. To diſpoſe the People to aſſiſt this Way, the Clergy were call'd on to recommend the King's Affairs. To this Purpoſe the King gave Laud, now Biſhop of Bath and Wells, ſome Minutes to form into Inſtructions. This Biſhop's Draught being approv'd by the Council, his Majeſty ſent them to the two Archbiſhops, requiring by his Letters, to diſperſe them among the Clergy of their reſpective Provinces. To this end, beſides tranſmitting the Copies to the Incumbents within their own proper Dioceſes, they were to ſend them to their Suffragans, with Orders to publiſh them in the ſame Manner. To give the Reader ſomewhat of the Subſtance of the Inſtructions.

Septmb. 29 Anno Dom. 1626. Archbiſhop Laud's Diary.

“ After having mention'd the King of Denmark's Defeat in Germany, the Loſs of the Palatinate, and the exceſſive Power and Ambition of the Houſe of Auſtria, the Clergy were to remind the People, that the laſt Parliament in the late Reign addreſs'd his preſent Majeſty to ſolicit the King his Father to break off the Treaties with the Emperor and the King of Spain; promiſing at the ſame Time to enable the Crown to proſecute the War; and that the Subject could not deſert his Majeſty in this Enterprize without Reproach, and Failure in Duty: For this War being commenc'd at the Inſtance, and upon the Engagement of the Parliament, the People are bound by the Laws of God and Man to ſupport the Government in it.(s)

This Year the Roman Catholicks in Ireland finding the Government ſomewhat diſtreſs'd for Want of Money, offer'd to maintain Five hundred Horſe, and Five thouſand Foot on Condition of a Toleration. This Propoſal being ſomewhat inviting, my Lord Deputy Faukland conven'd a Meeting of both Communions to the Caſtle of Dublin: But the Project was daſh'd by a Proteſtation of the Biſhops againſt this Indulgence. The Inſtrument ſign'd by the Lord Primate Uſher and Eleven other Biſhops, was publiſh'd at Chriſt-Church before the Lord Deputy and Council, by Downham Biſhop of Derry, who preach'd ſtrongly againſt making Religion ſubſervient to State Policy, and preferring the Intereſt of this World to that of the other. And the next Sunday Primate Uſher diſcours'd with the ſame Freedom on this Subject. This Reſolution of the Biſhops prevail'd with the Government to wave the Thoughts of a Toleration, and pitch upon ſome other Expedient. *

The Death of Biſhop Andrews.

About this Time the moſt Learned Lancelot Andrews Biſhop of Wincheſter, departed this Life. He was buried at St. Saviours in Southwark, the Funeral Sermon being preach'd by Buckridge Biſhop of Rocheſter. To ſay ſomething more particularly of him: He was a great Orientaliſt, and throughly acquainted with the Fathers, and other Antiquities of the Chriſtian Church. He was over and above a very exemplary Perſon, had the Mien and Behaviour of a Primitive Biſhop, and was no leſs commendable in his Life, than in his Learning. While living he only publiſh'd in Latin his Apology againſt Cardinal Bellarmin; his Tortura Torti, and a ſmall Tract, entituled, Determinatio Theologica de Jurejurando exigendo. To theſe we may add a ſmall Volume of Sermons in Engliſh. As for the Book of Catechetical Doctrine printed without his Conſent, he expreſly diſown'd it, as being no better than ſome imperfect Collections taken by an unſkilful Hand from ſome Diſcourſes of his upon the Catechiſm in Pembrook-Hall. But after his Death Ninety Six of his Sermons collected by Laud then Biſhop of London, and Buckridge Biſhop of Ely, were publiſh'd and dedicated to the King in the Year One thouſand ſix hundred and twenty eight. And the next Year ſome other Tracts of his in Engliſh and Latin were printed by the ſame Prelates.

Archbiſhop Laud's Diary, pag. 37.

The Deanery of the Chappel Royal being void by the Death of Biſhop Andrews, Laud was preferr'd to that Station: And here he obſerv'd an over-ceremonious Cuſtom had prevail'd thro' the late Reign. When the King came into his Cloſet to hear the Sermon in the Chappel, it was the Cuſtom to break off Divine Service, and ſing the Anthem, that the Preacher might go into the Pulpit. This was exceſſive Reſpect, and look'd as if the King came into the Houſe of God to be worſhipp'd. The new Dean therefore intreated his Majeſty to be preſent at the Liturgy, no leſs than at the Sermon; and that at whatever Part of the Prayers the King came in, the Prieſt who officiated might proceed to the End of the Service. The King, without being the leaſt diſconcerted, gave his Conſent, and thank'd the Biſhop for ſo pious a Suggeſtion. As for the Deanry of the Chappel, tho' an ancient Office, it had been diſcontinu'd from the Year One thouſand five hundred ſeventy two, to the Death of Queen Elizabeth.

To return to the Loan: Notwithſtanding the Inſtructions above-mention'd, not a few Perſons of Figure declin'd contributing this Way, and were impriſon'd for their Refuſal. However, ſeveral of the Clergy did their Part with earneſtneſs enough, and ſome went too far in their Commiſſion: For inſtance, one Dr. Sibthorp, at an Aſſize Sermon preach'd at Northampton in February laſt, carried the Prerogative to an unwarrantable Length, and was too much a Court Divine. His Text was Romans the 13th and the 7th, Render therefore to all their Dues.

Sibthorp preaches up the Prerogative too high.

In this Sermon, amongſt other exceptionable Paſſages, he affirm'd, That the Prince, who is the Head, and makes his Court and Council, 'tis his Duty to direct and make Laws: And in Proof of the Chief Magiſtrate's unlimited Power, he cites the 8th of Eccleſiaſtes, the 3d and 4th Verſes, The King does whatſoever pleaſes him. And where the Word of a King is, there is Power, and who may ſay unto him what doſt thou? But to argue from Paleſtine to England, and make the Jewiſh Conſtitution a Standard for all other Governments, is ſlender reaſoning, and ſhews the Preacher was very defective, either in his Honeſty or Underſtanding.

To go on a little further with his Sermon, if Princes, ſays he, command any Thing which Subjects may not perform, becauſe it is againſt the Laws of God, or of Nature, or Impoſſible: Yet Subjects are bound to undergo the Puniſhment, without either reſiſting, or railing, or reviling, and ſo to yield a paſſive Obedience where they cannot exhibit an active one. I know no other Caſe (continues Sibthorp) but one of thoſe Three wherein a Subject can excuſe himſelf with paſſive Obedience: But in all other he is bound to active Obedience. This Doctrine is Arbitrary enough in all Conſcience; and were it purſued through its Conſequences, would make Magna Charta, and the other Laws for ſecuring Property, ſignify little. However, Sibthorp was by ſome Courtiers commended for his Loyalty, and the Sermon reported to the King as a ſerviceable Diſcourſe: Upon this, his Majeſty ſent it to Archbiſhop Abbot, with Orders to licence it: But Abbot being ſhock'd with the Paſſages above-cited, not to mention other Exceptions, refus'd to give it a Paſs. 'Twas afterwards ſent to Laud, who having qualified and corrected ſome crude Aſſertions, approv'd of the Reſt. Upon this, 'twas licenc'd by Mountaign, Biſhop of London, and publiſh'd under the Title of Apoſtolical Obedience. (t)

As for Abbot, the King was much diſpleas'd with his Refuſing to Licence this Sermon. 'Twas for this Non-compliance, as the Lord Conway confeſs'd to him, That he was ſuſpended from his Archiepiſcopal Function. (u) During this Suſpenſion, a Commiſſion was granted to the Biſhops of London, Durham, Rocheſter, Oxford, and Bath and Wells, the Inſtrument runs thus:

“ Charles, by the Grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. To the Right Reverend Father in God, George, Biſhop of London; and to the Right Reverend Father in God, our truſty and well-beloved Counſellor, Richard, Lord Biſhop of Durham, and to the Right Reverend Father in God, John, Lord Biſhop of Rocheſter; and, John, Lord Biſhop of Oxford; to the Right Reverend Father in God, our right truſty and well-beloved Counſellor, William, Lord Biſhop of Bath and Wells, Greeting, Archbiſhop Abbot ſuſpended.

Whereas George, now Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in the right of the Archbiſhoprick hath ſeveral and diſtinct Archiepiſcopal, Epiſcopal, and other Spiritual and Eccleſiaſtical Powers and Juriſdictions to be exercis'd in the Government and Diſcipline of the Church, within the Province of Canterbury, in the Adminiſtration of Juſtice, in Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical within that Province, which are partly executed by himſelf in his own Perſon, and partly, and more generally, by ſeveral Perſons nominated and authorized by him, being learned in the Eccleſiaſtical Laws of this Realm, in thoſe ſeveral Places whereunto they are deputed, and appointed by the ſaid Archbiſhop: Which ſeveral Places, as we are inform'd, they ſeverally hold, by ſeveral Grants for their ſeveral Lives; as namely, Sir Henry Martin Knight, hath and holdeth by the Grants of the ſaid Archbiſhop, the Offices and Places of the Dean of the Arches, and Judge, or Maſter of the Prerogative Court, for the natural Life of the ſaid Sir Henry Martin.

ſes, Actions, or Caſes, at his Pleaſure. And forasmuch as the ſaid Archbiſhop cannot at this preſent in his own Perſon attend the Services which are otherwiſe proper for his Cognizance and Juriſdiction, and which, as Archbiſhop of Canterbury, he might and ought in his own Perſon to have performed and executed in Cauſes and Matters Eccleſiaſtical, in the proper Function of Archbiſhop of the Province, We therefore of our Regal Power, and of our Princely Care and Providence, that nothing ſhall be defective in the Orders, Diſcipline, Government, or Right of the Church, have thought fit by the Service of ſome other Learned and Reverend Biſhops to be named by us, to ſupply thoſe Things which the ſaid Archbiſhop ought or might in the Caſes aforeſaid to have done, but for this preſent cannot perform the ſame.

Know ye therefore, that We repoſing ſpecial Truſt and Confidence in your approved Wiſdoms, Learning and Integrity, have nominated, authorized and appointed, and do by theſe Preſents, nominate, authorize and appoint you the ſaid George, Lord Biſhop of London; Richard, Lord Biſhop of Durham; John Lord Biſhop of Rocheſter; John, Lord Biſhop of Oxford; and William Lord Biſhop of Bath and Wells, or any Four, Three, or Two of you, to do, execute, and perform all and every thoſe Acts, Matters, and Things any Way touching, or concerning the Power, Juriſdiction, or Authority of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in Cauſes or Matters Eccleſiaſtical, as amply, fully and effectually, to all Intents and Purpoſes, as the ſaid Archbiſhop himſelf might have done,

And We do hereby Command you and every of you to attend, perform and execute this our Royal Pleaſure, in and touching the Premiſſes, until We ſhall declare our Will and Pleaſure to the contrary.

And We further hereby Will and Command the ſaid Archbiſhop of Canterbury, quietly, and without Interruption, to permit and ſuffer you the ſaid George, Biſhop of London; Richard, Biſhop of Durham; John, Biſhop of Rocheſter; John, Biſhop of Oxford; and William Biſhop of Bath and Wells, any Four, or Three, or Two of you, to execute and perform this Our Commiſſion, according to Our Royal Pleaſure thereby ſignified.

And We do further Will and Command all and every other Perſon and Perſons whom it may any Way concern in their ſeveral Places or Offices, to be attendant, obſervant and obedient to you and every of you, in the Execution and Performance of this Our Royal Will and Command, as they and every of them will anſwer the contrary at their utmoſt Perils.

Nevertheleſs We do hereby declare Our Royal Pleaſure to be, That they the ſaid Sir Henry Martin, Sir Charles Cæſar, Sir Thomas Ridley, and Nathanael Brent, in their ſeveral Offices and Places aforeſaid, and all other Regiſters, Officers and Miniſters, in the ſeveral Courts, Offices, and Juriſdictions appertaining to the ſaid Archbiſhop, ſhall quietly, and without Interruption, hold, uſe, occupy and enjoy their ſaid Offices and Places, which they now hold by the Grant of the ſaid Archbiſhop, or of any other former Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in ſuch Manner and Form, and with thoſe Benefits, Privileges, Powers and Authorities, which they now have, hold, and enjoy therein, or thereout ſeverally and reſpectively, they and every of them in their ſeveral Places being Attendant and Obedient unto you the ſaid George, Biſhop of London; Richard, Biſhop of Durham; John, Biſhop of Rocheſter; John, Biſhop of Oxford; and William Biſhop of Bath and Wells, or to any Four, Three, or Two of you, in all Things, according to the Tenor of this Our Commiſſion, as they ſhould or ought to have been to the ſaid Archbiſhop himſelf, if this Commiſſion had not been had or made.

In Witneſs whereof We have cauſed theſe Our Letters to be made Patents, Witneſs Our ſelf at Weſtminſter, the Ninth Day of October, in the Third Year of our Reign.

Remarks upon the ſequeſtring the Archbiſhop's Juriſdiction.

It muſt be confeſs'd this Revocation of the Powers of the Hierarchy purely by the Force of the Regale, looks like a modern Way of Proceeding. The Diſcipline of the ancient Church was convey'd thro' another Channel. The Council of *Antioch mentions a Synod as a proper Judicature for the Trial of a Biſhop; † neither does it ſo much as ſuppoſe there could be any other. And by the Council of Carthage * 'tis decreed, that in caſe a Biſhop is reported a Criminal, and a Synod can't conveniently be called, he ſhall be try'd by Twelve Biſhops. † By the Way; both theſe Councils were held under Chriſtian Princes, and yet the Fathers order'd the Proceſs againſt a Biſhop ſhould be manag'd by thoſe of his own Order. It was not then the Cuſtom for Princes to lay any Penalties upon Biſhops unleſs for Crimes againſt the State. But as to Failures in their Function, Eccleſiaſticks were only to take Notice of ſuch Matters.

† Can. 12.

Thus, for Inſtance, St. Chryſoſtom was depos'd by a Synodical Sentence. (t) Arcadius the Emperor, though willing to be rid of him, did not think fit to arreſt his Juriſdiction, or ſilence his Preaching, by exerting the Regale: Such Proceedings were altogether unprecedented in that Age. The Church at that Time of Day would have been extreamly ſurpriz'd to ſee a Prince ſuperſede a Spiritual Commiſſion, underiv'd from him. But ſuppoſing the Spiritual Authority lay never ſo much at the Pleaſure of the Crown, was it not ſomewhat of a Hardſhip the Archbiſhop ſhould be put under an Incapacity, and barr'd the Execution of his Office, without aſſigning the Reaſon for this Correction, without bringing him to a Hearing, and allowing the common Liberty of a Defence?

(t) Theod. Hiſt. Eccleſ. Lib. 4. c. 34.

Fuller relates this Suſpenſion was drawn on the Archbiſhop for the caſual Homicide committed in the late Reign. (u) But this is a Miſtake: For Firſt, He had a Royal Diſpenſation already mention'd to ſhelter him againſt the Canons. This muſt of Courſe make him Rectus in Curia, ſo far, at leaſt, as to cover him from Proſecution. Secondly, This Commiſſion, granted by King Charles, is wholly ſilent as to Abbot's former Misfortune, and only takes Notice that the Archbiſhop can't at this preſent in his own Perſon attend the Servics which are otherwiſe proper for his Cognizance and Juriſdiction, &c. And why could he not attend them? Becauſe his Majeſty was diſpleas'd, and would not permit him.

But after all, the Good King was miſdirected into theſe Rigours, and believ'd himſelf in the Right. The Archbiſhop complains the Duke of Buckingham was his Enemy. This Favourite was diſappointed in the Homage he expected: Abbot, it ſeems, did not think it proper to make his Court to the Duke, (w) to treat him with Submiſſion, and compliment his Standing to the others Courteſy.

(w) Ruſhworth's Collect. Vol. I.

Beſides, the King was embarraſs'd with the War, uneaſy at the Conduct of the Parliament, and as Meaſures were taken, had no other Way to retrieve his Affairs but by borrowing Money. Now Sibthorp had laid out himſelf with a great deal of Zeal to ſet the Loan forward; and Abbot's refuſing to recommend this Diſcourſe to the Publick, touched the King in a tender Part, and made him more liable to unfavourable Impreſſions.

The Learned Heylin believes the King was ſway'd by another Motive. He thought Abbot was ſomewhat byaſs'd towards the Nonconformiſts, and too remiſs in his Government: That for this Reaſon he ſeiz'd his Juriſdiction, and put it in Hands more diſpos'd to act for the Advantage of the eſtabliſh'd Church. (x)

The French Part of the Queen's Family ſent home.

This Year a Miſunderſtanding between the Courts of England and France began upon ſome Diſputes touching the Government of the Queen's Family. By the Articles of Marriage it was agreed her Majeſty ſhould have a certain Number of Prieſts to officiate in her Chapel, together with a Biſhop, who was to be allow'd the full Exerciſe of Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction. Some of theſe Eccleſiaſticks enjoin'd her Majeſty a very odd Penance: 'Twas to go to Tyburn to perform her Devotions, where ſome Roman Catholick Prieſts had been lately executed. (y)

The King reſenting this Diſcipline; and having been ill uſed by the Queen's Family in other Reſpects, complain'd of their Miſbehaviour to the French King. In ſhort, the French Part of the Queen's Court were paid their Salaries, and ſent home. And though the King order'd his Ambaſſador, the Lord Carleton, to repreſent the Matter at Length for the Satisfaction of his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, yet the Excuſe would by no Means paſs with the French: They remonſtrated againſt this Diſcharge as a Breach of the Articles of Marriage. And, in a Word, the two Crowns, on this Occaſion came to an open Rupture, which was not clos'd, as has been obſerv'd, till the latter End of the next Year.

Cozens his Devotions publiſh'd, and Exceptions againſt it.

About this Time there was a Book publiſh'd, entituled, A Collection of Private Devotions, or the Hours of Prayer. 'Twas written by Cozens, Prebendary of Durham, at the Requeſt of the Counteſs of Denby, the Duke of Buckingham's Siſter. This Lady being then ſomewhat unſettled in her Religion, and warping towards Popery, theſe Devotions were drawn up to recommend the Church of England farther to her Eſteem, and preſerve her in that Communion. This Book, though furniſh'd with a great deal of good Matter, was not altogether acceptable in the Contexture. The Title Page ſets forth 'twas form'd upon the Model of a Book of Private Prayers authoriz'd by Queen Elizabeth in the Year 1560.* To give the Reader ſome Part of it: After the Calendar it begins with a Recital of the Apoſtles Creed in Twelve Articles, the Lord's Prayer in Seven Petitions, the Ten Commandments, with the Duties enjoin'd, and the Sins forbidden. Then follows the Precepts of Charity, the Seven Sacraments, the Three Theological Vertues, the Three Kinds of Good Works, the Seven Gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, the Twelve Fruits of the Holy Ghoſt, the Spiritual and Corporal Works of Mercy, the Eight Beatitudes, the Seven Deadly Sins, their oppoſite Vertues, and the Quatuor Noviſſima. And after ſome explanatory Prefaces and Introductions were ſubjoin'd the Forms of Prayer for the Firſt, Third, Sixth, and Ninth Hours, and likewiſe for the Veſpers and Compline, formerly call'd the Canonical Hours. Next to theſe was the Litany, the Seven Penitential Pſalms, Prayers preparatory for Receiving the Holy Euchariſt, Prayers to be uſed in Time of Sickneſs, and at the Approach of Death; beſides many others.

* Horarium Regia Authoritate, Editum An. 1560, and reprinted An. 1573. Cum Privilegio by William Seers.

'Twas licenſed Feb. 1626.

This Book, though approv'd by Mountaign, Biſhop of London, and licenſed with his own Hand, was ſomewhat ſurprizing at the firſt View; and ſome moderate Perſons were ſhock'd with it, as drawing too near the Superſtitions of the Church of Rome; at leaſt they ſuſpected it as a Preparation to further Advances. The Top of the Frontiſpiece had the Name of Jeſus in three Capital Letters, J. H. S. Upon theſe there was a Croſs incircled with the Sun, ſupported by two Angels, with two Devout Women praying towards it. This Repreſentation, tho' innocent enough, did not paſs without Cenſure. 'Twas not long before Pryn and Burton, two Malcontents, appear'd againſt it.

Indeed, 'tis no Wonder to find the Arriere Ban of the Puritans drawn out upon this Occaſion. Pryn call'd his Performance a Brief Survey and Cenſure of Cozens, his Cozening Devotions. And here, not diſtinguiſhing between Popery and Primitive Practice, he falls blindly on Cozens his Book, and without either Judgment or Juſtice condemns every Thing in the publick Devotions and Offices of the Church of Rome. But notwithſtanding all this Vehemence, and the Clamours of the Party, the Book gain'd Ground, grew up into Eſteem, and was approved by many of thoſe who ſcrupled it at firſt.

An. Dom. 162^{7}. The Parliament meets.

On the 17th of March a new Parliament met at Weſtminſter. This Parliament, to ſhew their Concern for Religion, brought in a Bill for Reformation on ſundry Abuſes committed on the Lord's-Day. There was a Statute to this Purpoſe made in the firſt Year of this Reign. (z) And here 'twas enacted, That no Perſons ſhould come out of their own Pariſhes on the Lord's-Day for any Sports and Paſtimes whatſoever: Nor that any Bear-baiting, Bull-baiting, Interludes, Common Plays, or other unlawful Exerciſes and Paſtimes, ſhould be uſed by any Perſons within their own Pariſhes. But then the Act does not define what thoſe other unlawful Exerciſes and Paſtimes are. Whether this Omiſſion was intended for a Connivance at other Relaxations, is ſomewhat uncertain. To proceed, Thoſe who offended in any of the Premiſſes were to forfeit three Shillings and Four-pence, Toties Quoties, for the Uſe of the Poor of the Pariſh. This Act was fortified and extended to farther Prohibitions by the preſent Parliameut. (a) And now Carriers, Car-men, and Drovers, who travell'd or follow'd their Buſineſs on the Sunday, were to forfeit Twenty Shillings; and Butchers that kill'd or ſold Meat that Day, ſix Shillings Eight-pence for every Offence.

(z) 1 Car. cap. 1.

(a) 3 Car. 1. cap. 1.

And by another Statute, Thoſe who either went beyond-Sea, or ſent any Perſon into foreign Countries, to be train'd up in Popery, were diſabled from ſuing, from being Executors or Adminiſtrators, made incapable of any Legacy, Deed of Gift, or to bear any Office within within the Realm; and over and above, were to forfeit all their Goods and Chattels, all their Lands, Tenements, Rents, Annuities, Offices, &c. during Life. (b)

(b) 3 Car. 1. cap. 2.

This Parliament ſat till the 26th of June, and was then prorogued to the 20th of October. Some Time before this Prorogation the Commons brought in a Charge againſt Dr. Manwaring for preaching Arbitrary Doctrine. This Divine had lately, in two Sermons before the King at Whitehall, deliver'd himſelf very indiſcreetly to this Purpoſe:

Dr. Manwaring*'s extravagant Aſſertions.*

“That the King is not bound to preſerve the Subjects in their Legal Rights and Liberties: That his Royal Will and Abſolute Command in impoſing Loans and Taxes, tho' without the Conſent of the Parliament, ought to be obey'd by the Subject under the Penalty of Eternal Damnation: That thoſe who refus'd to comply with this Loan, tranſgreſs'd the Law of God, inſulted the King's Supream Authority, and incurr'd the Guilt of Impiety, Diſloyalty, and Rebellion: That the Authority of both Houſes is not neceſſary for the raiſing Aids and Subſidies: That the ſlow Proceedings of ſuch great Aſſemblies were not ſuitable to the Exigencies of the State: And that by going thus far about, Princes muſt of Neceſſity be clogg'd, and diſappointed in their Buſineſs.

He is proſecuted by the Commons and cenſur'd by the Houſe of Lords

This without Doubt was extravagant Divinity, ſubverſive of the Conſtitution, and preaching directly againſt a great Part of the Statute-Book. The Declaration of the Commons againſt Manwaring was deliver'd to the Lords by Mr. Pym, who manag'd the Impeachment with Vigour and Advantage enough.

Sir Benjamin Rudyer's Speech for the Augmentation of ſmall Livings.

This Seſſions a Bill was brought in for the Augmentation of Livings, and the Commons having turn'd themſelves into a Committee of the whole Houſe. A remarkable Speech was deliver'd upon this Subject by Sir Benjamin Rudyer. He directs his Diſcourſe to Mr. Pym, then in the Chair.*

Mr. Pym,

“I did not think to have ſpoken again to this Bill, becauſe I was willing to believe, that the Forwardneſs of this Committee would have prevented me: But now I do hold my ſelf bound to ſpeak, and to ſpeak in Earneſt.

“In the firſt Year of the King, and the ſecond Convention, I firſt moved for the Encreaſe and Enlarging of Poor Miniſters Livings: I ſhew'd how neceſſary it was to be done; how ſhameful it was that it had been ſo long neglected: This was alſo commended to the Houſe by his Majeſty. There were then (as now) many Accuſations on Foot againſt ſcandalous Miniſters: I was bold to tell the Houſe, that there were ſcandalous Livings too, which were much the Cauſe of the other; Livings of five Marks and five Pounds a Year: That Men of Worth and of good Parts would not be muzzled up to ſuch Pittances: That there were ſome Places in England, which were ſcarce in Chriſtendom, where God was little better known than among the Indians. I exampled it in the uttermoſt Parts of the North, where the Prayers of the common People are more like Spells and Charms than Devotions. The ſame Blindneſs and Ignorance is in divers Parts of Wales, which many of that Country do both know and lament.

“I declar'd alſo, That to plant good Miniſters in good Livings, was the ſtrongeſt and ſureſt Means to eſtabliſh true Religion: That it would prevail more againſt Papiſtry than the making of new Laws, or executing of old; that it would counter-work Court-Connivance, and luke-warm Accommodation; that though the calling of Miniſters be never ſo glorious within, yet outward Poverty will bring Contempt upon them, eſpecially among thoſe who meaſure Men by the Acre, and weigh them by the Pound, which indeed is the greateſt Part of Men.

“Mr. Pym, I cannot but teſtify how being in Germany I was exceedingly ſcandaliz'd to ſee the poor ſtipendiary Miniſters of the Reformed Churches there deſpiſed and neglected by Reaſon of their Poverty, being otherwiſe very Grave and Learned Men. I am afraid, that is a Part of the Burden of Germany, which ought to be a Warning to us. I have heard many Objections and Difficulties, even to Impoſſibilities, againſt this Bill. To him that is unwilling to go, there is ever a Bear or a Lion in the Way. Firſt let us make our ſelves willing, then will the Way be eaſy and ſafe enough. I have obſerv'd that we are always very eager and fierce againſt Papiſtry, againſt ſcandalous Miniſters, and againſt Things which are not within our Power. I ſhall be glad to ſee that we do delight as well in rewarding, as in puniſhing, and in undertaking Matters within our Reach, as this is abſolutely within our Power. Our own Duty is next, and other Mens is farther off.

“I do not ſpeak this that I do miſlike the deſtroying and pulling down of that which is ill; but then let us be as earneſt to plant and build up that which is good in the Room of it: For why ſhould we be deſolate? The beſt and neareſt Way to diſpel Darkneſs, and the Deeds thereof, is to let in Light. We ſay that Day breaks, but no Man ever heard the Voice of it. God comes in the ſtill Voice; let us quickly mend our Candleſticks, and we cannot want Light. I am afraid this Backwardneſs of ours will give our Adverſaries Occaſion to ſay, That we chooſe our Religion, becauſe it is the cheaper of the two; that we would willingly ſerve God with ſomewhat that ſhould coſt us nought.

“Believe me, Mr. Pym, He that thinks to ſave any Thing by his Religion but his Soul, will be a terrible Loſer in the End. We ſow ſparingly, that is the Reaſon we reap ſo ſparingly, and have no more Fruit. Methinks, whoſoever hates Papiſtry, ſhould by the ſame Rule hate Covetouſneſs; for that is Idolatry too. I never like hot Profeſſions, and cold Actions. Such a Heat is rather the Heat of Diſtemper and Diſeaſe, than of Life and Saving Health.

“For ſcandalous Miniſters, there is no Man ſhall be more ſincerely forward to have them puniſh'd than I will be. When Salt has loſt its Savour, let it be caſt out upon the unſavoury Place, the Dung-hill. But, Sir, let us deal with them as God hath dealt with us. God, before he made Man, he made the World, a handſome Place for him to dwell in. So let us provide them competent Livings, and then puniſh them in God's Name: But till then ſcandalous Livings cannot but have ſcandalous Miniſters. It ſhall ever be a Rule to me, that “when the Church and Commonwealth are both of one Religion, it is comely and decent that the outward Splendour of the Church ſhould hold a Proportion, and participate with the Proſperity of the Temporal Eſtate: For why ſhould we dwell in Houſes of Cedar, and ſuffer God to dwell in Skins?

“It was a Glorious and Religious Work of King James; I ſpeak it to his unſpeakable Honour, and to the Praiſe of that Nation, who, though their Country be not ſo rich as ours, yet are they richer in their Affections to Religion. Within the Space of one Year he cauſed Churches to be planted through all Scotland and the Borders, worth Thirty Pounds a Year a-piece, with a Houſe and ſome Glebe belonging to them; which Thirty Pounds a Year, conſidering the Cheapneſs of the Country, and the modeſt Faſhion of Mens Living there, is worth double as much as any where within an Hundred Miles of London. The printed Act and Commiſſion, whereby it was executed, I have here in my Hand, deliver'd unto me by a noble Gentleman of that Nation, and a worthy Member of this Houſe, Sir Francis Steward.

“To conclude: Although Chriſtian Religion be eſtabliſh'd generally through this Kingdom; yet until it be planted more particularly, I ſhall ſcarce think this a Chriſtian Commonwealth: And ſeeing it hath been mov'd and ſtir'd in Parliament, it will be heavy upon Parliaments till it be effected. Let us do ſomething for God here of our own; and no Doubt God will bleſs our Proceedings in this Place for ever after. And for my own Part, I will never give over ſolliciting this Cauſe as long as Parliaments and I ſhall live together.

June 13. An. Dom. 1628.

To proceed; The Commons, by their Speaker, demanded Judgment of the Lords againſt Doctor Manwaring: Upon which the Upper Houſe gave the following Sentence:

“Firſt, That Roger Manwaring, Doctor in Divinity, ſhall be impriſon'd during the Pleaſure of the Houſe.

“Secondly, He is fin'd a Thouſand Pounds to the King.

Dr. Manwaring's Submiſſion at the Bar of the Houſe Commons.

As for Dr. Manwaring's Submiſſion, 'twas preſcrib'd by a Committee of the Commons, and made by him in theſe Words:

May it pleaſe this Honourable Houſe, I do here in all Sorrow of Heart and true Repentance acknowlege the many Errors and Indiſcretions which I have committed, in preaching and publiſhing thoſe two Sermons of mine, which I called Religion and Allegiance; and my great Fault in falling upon this Theme again, and handling the ſame raſhly and unadviſedly in my own Pariſh Church of St. Giles's in the Fields, the 4th of May laſt paſt. I do humbly acknowlege thoſe three Sermons to have been full of many dangerous Paſſages, Inferences, and ſcandalous Aſperſions, in moſt Part of the ſame: And I do humbly acknowlege the Juſtice of this Honourable Houſe in the Judgment and Sentence paſt upon me for my great Offence: And I do from the Bottom of my Heart crave Pardon of God, the King, and this Honourable Houſe, and the Church, and this Commonwealth in general, and thoſe worthy Perſons adjudg'd to be reflected upon by me in particular, for theſe great Errors and Offences.

Roger Manwaring.

The Commons Remonſtrance with Reference to Religion.

About this Time the Commons addreſs'd the King with a Remonſtrance: “They begin with Thanks to his Majeſty for his Satisfactory Anſwer to their Petition of Right. After this they ſuggeſt a general Apprehenſion of a ſecret Deſign concerted for introducing a Change in Religion: That theſe Jealouſies were grounded upon Matter of Fact: 'Twas the viſible Encreaſe of Popery, and the particular Countenance thoſe of that Perſuaſion receiv'd at Court, which occaſion'd this Jealouſy: That the Minds of his Subjects were further alarm'd by his Majeſty's Letters for ſtopping legal Proceedings againſt Papiſts; and by Commiſſions under the Great-Seal granted and executed for Compoſition to be made with theſe Recuſants, with Inhibitions both to the Eccleſiaſtical and Temporal Courts in their Favour. All which, in their Opinion, amounts to little leſs than a Toleration. They proceed to complain, that the Hearts of his good Subjects are no leſs perplex'd by the daily Growth and Spreading of the Arminian Faction: That this, as his Majeſty well knows, is but a more covert Practice for the bringing in Popery: That thoſe who profeſs theſe Opinions are no better than Incendiaries and common Nuſances both in Church and State, being Proteſtants without-ſide, but Jeſuits within: That notwithſtanding his Majeſty's publick Diſlike of thoſe Perſons, and their Opinions, in his Proclamation, they are remarkably cheriſh'd, and advanced to Poſts of Honour and Truſt. And to give ſome Inſtances, Neile, Biſhop of Wincheſter, and Laud, Biſhop of Bath and Wells, are juſtly ſuſpected of unſound Opinions this Way: That Arminianiſm being now look'd on as the moſt thriving Perſuaſion, and the Road to Preferment, many Scholars, are tempted to declare themſelves of that Party: That the Books which maintain ſuch Singularities are ſuffer'd to be printed, and thoſe written againſt them ſuppreſs'd.

“That the Fears of the Commons are further increas'd by ſome Endeavours which have been uſed for removing the moſt powerful Means to ſtrengthen the Proteſtant Religion; that is, the Inſtruction of the People has been diſcourag'd by miſrepreſenting, and “laying uncreditable Imputations upon Pious, Painful, and Orthodox Preachers.

“From hence they proceed to report the miſerable Condition of Ireland, where, as they ſay, the Popiſh Religion is openly profeſs'd, where Monaſteries and other Superſtitious Houſes, are newly erected, furniſh'd with Religious of both Sexes, and plentifully maintain'd at Dublin, and many other Great Towns in that Kingdom. (d)

(d) Ruſhworth's Collect. Vol. 1. Pag. 620.

The reſt of the Remonſtrance, relating to the State, ſhall be omitted.

June 26.

This Addreſs, being preſented with the Subſidy-Bill, was not well received by his Majeſty, who thought it an unſuitable Return for his granting their Petition of Right. However, the Commons went on to draw another Remonſtrance againſt Tonnage and Poundage. Upon which his Majeſty prorogu'd them to the 20th of October, and from thence to the 20th of January. And thus the preſenting the ſecond Remonſtrance was prevented.

As to the firſt, the King publiſh'd an Anſwer to it: 'Twas drawn up by Laud, and ſo much of it as relates to Religion is to this Purpoſe:

The King's Anſwer.

“Firſt, The King takes Notice the Remonſtrance begins with Religion, and the Fears of a Relapſe into Popery: To ſcatter theſe Jealouſies the King would have his Subjects recollect what Difficulties and Dangers he met with, not many Years ſince, on the Score of Religion: That his Faith and Reſolution was ſtill the ſame; and that he was no leſs careful to guard againſt Innovation than thoſe who ſeemed ſo much diſturb'd upon that Head: That the Favour and Relaxation granted to ſome Recuſants, was occaſion'd by the Parliament's refuſing to ſupply the Neceſſities of the Government. However, upon an exact Enquiry into Matter of Fact, 'twill be found there is no ſuch Increaſe of Popery, nor any Thing that looks like the pretended Toleration: That the Commiſſion, ſo much complain'd of, neither diſpenſes with any Penalty, nor reſtrains the Courſe of Juſtice againſt Recuſants. Their next Fear ariſes from the daily Growth of the Arminian Faction: This is call'd a Cunning Way to bring in Popery. But this Charge the King looks on as a very injurious Reflection upon his Perſon and Government: That it is not fit his Subjects ſhould be lead into a Miſtake by a Parliamentary Remonſtrance, or by any other Means; as if his Majeſty is either ſo ignorant in Matters of Religious Belief, or ſo indifferent in maintaining them, as that any ſingular Opinion ſhould grow up, or any Faction prevail in his Kingdoms, without his Knowlege: That this was a Fancy altogether without Ground, and endeavour'd to perſuade the People the King ſlept over the Government. That two eminent Prelates, attending his Perſon were much wrong'd in being accus'd without the leaſt Colour of Proof produc'd againſt them: And that ſhould either theſe Biſhops, or any others, attempt the altering of Religion, his Majeſty would quickly animadvert upon them, without ſtaying for the Commons Remonſtrance.

“To give a Colour to their Complaint, the People are made to believe Orthodox Books have a Reſtraint clap'd upon them: But the King is very well aſſur'd, that ſince the late Parliament began, ſome whom the Remonſtrance calls Orthodox, had ventur'd upon intolerable Liberty in Printing: That his Majeſty's Proclamation commanded both Sides to acquieſce, and lie by till the Paſſions of Men had Time to cool, and grow calm: Had this Order been duly obey'd, the Nation had not been toſs'd in the preſent Tempeſt. As for the Diſcountenancing Good Preachers, his Majeſty knows none who can anſwer this Character that lie under any ſuch Diſtreſs: That it ſhall be his Majeſty's conſtant Care to provide his People with ſufficient Guides for Conſcience and Spiritual Aſſiſtance. And as for the Church Preferments in the Crown, he has always endeavoured to beſtow them upon Induſtry and Deſert: But then as the Preferments are his Majeſty's own, he ſhall make himſelf Judge of the Merit of Perſons, and not be taught by a Remonſtrance.

“Then with Reference to Ireland, the King believes Religion in no worſe Condition in that Kingdom than Queen Elizabeth left it: That his Majeſty looks on the Report of Monaſteries and other ſuperſtitious Houſes, built and furniſh'd in Dublin, and other Towns of Note, as a great Diſparagement to his Government: That his Deputy and Council in that Kingdom would not ſuffer ſuch hardy Innovations, ſo diſhonourable to God and the Government, without acquainting him with it: And that he could not endure his good People ſhould be thus impos'd on with Miſrelations. And whereas the Remonſtrance lays ſome Streſs on the Circumſtance of Time, and ſets forth that the true Religion is undermin'd at home, and openly attack'd in foreign Parts, at the ſame unhappy Juncture. To this his Majeſty replies, The Reformation is ſafe enough from any Attempts at home, if thoſe who ſeem moſt concern'd for its Support are not in a Practice againſt it: For while the Intereſt of Religion is thus factiouſly purſued, the Heat of the Conteſt oftentimes melts off the Purity which 'tis intended to preſerve: And that his Majeſty is well aſſur'd theſe violent diſtemper'd Motions are none of God's Methods. Biſhop Laud tranſlated to London.

Aug. 24.

Soon after the Receſs of the Parliament, Laud was tranſlated from Bath and Wells to London, and Mountague promoted to the See of Chicheſter. Before he was conſecrated an unexpected Rub was thrown in the Way. At the Confirmation of Biſhops, in the Court of Arches at Bow-Church in Cheapſide, there is publick Notice given, That if any Perſons can object either againſt the Party elected, or the Legality of the Election, they are to come and offer their Exceptions at the Day prefix'd. This Intimation being given, one Jones, a Bookſeller, attended with the Mob, appearing at the Confirmation, excepts againſt Mountague as a Perſon unqualified for the Epiſcopal Dignity. And to be ſomewhat particular, he charges him with Popery, Arminianiſm, and other Heterodoxies, for which his Books had been cenſur'd in the former Parliament. But Dr. Thomas Rives, who then officiated for Brent, the Vicar-General, diſappointed this Challenge. For Jones had made ſome material Omiſſions in the Manner, and not offer'd his Objections in Form of Law. For the Purpoſe, the Exceptions were neither given in Writing, nor ſign'd by an Advocate, nor preſented by any Proctor of the Court. Upon the Failure of theſe Circumſtances, the Confirmation went on. And to ſet Mountague out out of the Reach of theſe Cavils, he was conſecrated two Days after at Croyden.

Exceptions againſt* Mountague *in his Confirmation.

After the Murder of the Duke of Buckingham, who was ſtabb'd at Portſmouth by one John Felton, a Lieutenant, Laud ſeem'd to fill his Room in the King's Eſteem, and had a conſiderable Direction of Affairs both in Church and State. To give an Inſtance; This Prelate for ſilencing the Controverſy between the Calviniſts and Arminians, procur'd the Reprinting of the Nine and Thirty Articles, with the King's Declaration prefix'd at the Head of them. This was conceiv'd the beſt Expedient to lay the Predeſtinarian Diſputes aſleep. For by the Statutes of the Realm, all Incumbents were oblig'd to read the Book of Articles at Church ſoon after their Inſtitution: And by the Canons, all that took Orders were bound to ſubſcribe them. As to the King's Declaration at the Head of the Articles; the Deſign of it was to guard them from Miſconſtruction, and prevent their being wreſted out of the obvious and literal Senſe. The Declaration runs thus:

By the King.

The King's Declaration prefix'd to the Nine and thirty Articles.

“Being by God's Ordinance, according to our juſt Title, Defender of the Faith, and ſupreme Governour of the Church within theſe our Dominions, we hold it moſt agreeable to our Kingly Office, and our own religious Zeal, to conſerve and maintain the Church committed to our Charge in the Unity of true Religion, and in the Bond of Peace: And not to ſuffer unneceſſary Diſputations, Altercations, and Queſtions to be rais'd which may nouriſh Faction both in Church and Common-wealth; we have therefore upon mature Deliberation, and with the Advice of ſo many of our Biſhops, as might be conveniently call'd together, thought fit to make this Declaration following: That the Articles of the Church of England (which had been allow'd and authoriz'd heretofore, and which our Clergy generally have ſubſcrib'd unto) do contain the true Doctrine of the Church of England, agreeable to God's Word: Which we do therefore ratify and confirm, requiring all our loving Subjects to continue in the uniform Profeſſion thereof, and Prohibiting the leaſt Difference from the ſaid Articles; which to that End we command to be re-printed, and this our Declaration to be publiſh'd therewith.

“That we are ſupreme Governour of the Church of England, and that if any Differences ariſe about the external Policy concerning Injunctions, Canons, or other Conſtitutions whatſoever thereunto belonging; the Clergy in their Convocation are to order and ſettle them, having firſt obtained Leave under our Broad Seal ſo to do; and we approving their ſaid Ordinances and Conſtitutions, provided that none be made contrary to the Laws and Cuſtoms of the Land. That out of our Princely Care, that the Churchmen may do the Work which is proper unto them; the Biſhops and Clergy, from Time to Time, in Convocation, upon their humble deſire, ſhall have Licence under our Broad Seal, to deliberate of, and to do all ſuch Things, as being made plain by them, and aſſented to by us, ſhall concern the ſettled Continuance of the Doctrine and Diſcipline of the Church of England eſtabliſh'd; from which we ſhall not endure any Variation or Departing in the leaſt Degree. That for the Preſent, tho' ſome Differences have been ill raiſed, we take comfort in this, that all Clergymen within our Realm, have always moſt willingly ſubſcribed to the Articles eſtabliſhed, which is an Argument to us, that they all agree in the true uſual literal Meaning of the ſaid Articles, and that even in thoſe curious Points, in which the preſent Differences lye, Men of all Sorts take the Articles of the Church of England to be for them; which is an Argument again, that none of them intend any Deſertion of the Articles eſtabliſh'd. That therefore in theſe, both curious and unhappy Differences, which have for many hundred Years, in different Times and Places, exercis'd the Church of Chriſt, We will that all further curious ſearch be laid a-Side, and theſe Diſputes be ſhut up in God's Promiſes, as they be generally ſet forth unto us in Holy Scriptures; and the general Meaning of the Articles of the Church of England, according to them. And that no Man hereafter ſhall either Print or Preach to draw the Article aſide any Way, but ſhall ſubmit to it in the Plain and full Meaning thereof: And ſhall not put his own Senſe or Comment to the Meaning of the Article, but ſhall take it in the literal and grammatical Senſe. That if any Publick Reader in either of our Univerſities, or any Head or Maſter of a College, or any other Perſon reſpectively in either of them, ſhall affix any new Senſe to any Article, or ſhall publickly read, determine, or hold any publick Diſputation, or ſuffer any ſuch to be held either Way, in either the Univerſities or Colleges reſpectively; or if any Divine in the Univerſities ſhall preach or Print any Thing either Way, other than is eſtabliſh'd in Convocation with our Royal Aſſent: He or they the Offenders ſhall be liable to our Diſpleaſure, and the Churches Cenſure in our Commiſſion Eccleſiaſtical, as well as any other: And We will ſee there ſhall be due Execution upon them. (f)

The Calvinian Party complain'd loudly of this Declaration: They gave out the Deſign of it was chiefly for the ſuppreſſing orthodox Books, for the Diſcouraging godly Miniſters from Preaching the comfortable Doctrines of Man's Election to eternal Happineſs, and for Promoting the Growth of Arminianiſm. And to give theſe Jealouſies an Appearance of Probability, a Letter pretended to be written to the Rector of the Jeſuits-College in Bruſſels, is induſtriouſly diſpers'd. And here his Correſpondents acquaint him what Care they had taken to plant the Sovereign Drug, as they call it, of Arminianiſm: That this would purge off the Proteſtant Hereſy; that they began to find the Effects of it already: And that for preventing Diſappointment on the Puritan-Side, the Arminians had poſſeſs'd themſelves of the Duke: The Letter goes on in a reſembling Strain of Confidence, and was look'd on by Men of Senſe as no better than a Piece of Forgery. However, notwithſtanding its Romantick Air, the Paper gain'd Belief, and help'd to do Buſineſs. For now the Calviniſts in and about London, drew an Addreſs to the King, which they intended to preſent for recalling his Declaration. “The Petition ſets forth what a Reſtraint was laid upon them from Preaching the Saving Doctrines

“ of God's free Grace in Election and Predeſtination: That this had brought them under a very uncomfortable Dilemma, either of falling under the Divine Diſpleaſure, if they did not execute their Commiſſion in declaring the whole Counſel of God; or of being cenſur'd for Oppoſition to his Majeſty's Authority in Caſe they preach'd the receiv'd Doctrines of the Church, and attack'd the Pelagian and Arminian Hereſies, both boldly publiſh'd from Pulpit, and Preſs.” That therefore they humbly intreat his Majeſty would be pleas'd to take the fore-mention'd Evils and Grievances into his Princely Conſideration; and as a wiſe Phyſician, apply ſuch ſpeedy Remedies as may both cure the preſent Diſtempers, and preſerve the Church and State from thoſe Plagues with which their Neighbours had not been a little diſtreſs'd. (g)

(g) Canterbury's Doom.

But this Addreſs was ſtop'd in its Paſſage, and never reach'd the King: However, when the Parliament met, ſomething of this Kind was reſolv'd as the Senſe of the Houſe: But of this by and by.

Manwaring's Sermons ſuppreſs'd by Proclamation, and Mountague's Appello Cæſarem call'd in.

To proceed; In the Interval between the Two Seſſions, Dr. Manwaring's Sermons, entituled, Religion and Allegiance, were ſuppreſs'd by Proclamation; in which the King declar'd, that tho' the Grounds of the Diſcourſe were rightly laid to perſuade the Subject to obedience for Conſcience ſake, there was, notwithſtanding ſeveral exceptionable Paſſages: That ſome of the Dr.'s Inferences and Applications, claſh'd with the Laws of the Land, and the Proceedings of Parliaments: That the Dr.'s Ignorance of the Conſtitution, had miſled him to that Degree, that he had juſtly drawn upon himſelf the Cenſure of the High Court of Parliament. That his Majeſty being deſirous to remove Occaſions of Scandal, had thought fit thoſe Sermons ſhould be wholly ſuppreſs'd. (h) About the ſame Time Biſhop Mountague's Appello Cæſarem was call'd in. The Order ſets forth, That this Book had been the firſt Occaſion of thoſe Diſputes and Differences, which had diſturb'd the Repoſe of the Church. His Majeſty therefore Commands all Perſons who had any of thoſe Books in their Hands to deliver them to the Biſhop of the Dioceſe, or to the Chancellor or Vice-Chancellor of the Univerſities, provided that they were found in either of thoſe Societies. And that if any Perſon by Preaching, Reading, or Printing, ſhould revive thoſe unneceſſary Diſputes, his Majeſty was reſolv'd to make them repent their Preſumption. On the other Side, to ſecure Biſhop Mountague from further Trouble, and relieve Manwaring a little under the Parliamentary Sentence, they had both of them his Majeſty's Pardon for all Errors formerly committed in Speaking, Writing, or Printing. Mountague's Preferment, ſince his being harraſs'd by the Commons, has been mention'd already: And as for Manwaring, notwithſtanding the Sentence of the Lords had diſabled him from Promotion, he was preſented to the Rectory of Stamford-Rivers in Eſſex, with a Diſpenſation to hold it with his Living of St. Giles's in the Fields, and was afterwards made Biſhop of St. Davids. The Preferring this Gentleman, who had recanted in Form, and own'd himſelf ſo remarkable a Criminal, was no ſerviceable Conduct: This Countenance look'd ſomething like a Partiality for the Prerogative, made the Parliament more warm at their next Meeting, and the King loſe Ground in the Affection of his Subjects.

They are both preferr'd.

But to give Satisfaction another Way, a Proclamation was iſſued for Proceeding againſt Popiſh Recuſants, and Directions ſent to his Majeſty's Commiſſioners for taking the Forfeitures of Two Thirds of their Eſtates. But the Rigour of the Statutes is ſaid to have been mitigated by favourable Compoſition. This Proclamation was ſeconded with another for apprehending all Prieſts and Jeſuits and committing them to Gaol without Bail, or Mainprize. And here Richard Smith, Biſhop of Chalcedon, was particularly mention'd. He was ſent hither by the Pope, with Epiſcopal Juriſdiction over the Engliſh Roman Catholicks. He wrote a Book entitled, the prudential Balance, and was a Perſon well eſteem'd by the Laity and Seculars. But his Character was by no Means acceptable to the Regulars, who appeared ſtrongly againſt him, and particularly one Nicholas Smith. This Titular Biſhop of Chalcedon finding the Country unfriendly, retir'd to France, and was kindly receiv'd by Cardinal Richlieu.

Proclamation againſt Smith, Biſhop of Chalcedon, &c.

About Chriſtmas this Year, Archbiſhop Abbot was reſtor'd to his Liberty and Juriſdiction: He was ſent for to Court, kiſs'd the King's Hand, and was order'd not to fail being at the Council Board twice a Week: After this he was no more put under any Reſtraint, but enjoy'd the Privilege of his Station as long as he liv'd. *

* Examen Hiſtor. Ruſhworth Collect. Vol. 1.

At the next Meeting the Commons concern'd themſelves with Controverſies of Religion, pronounc'd upon the Senſe of the Nine and thirty Articles, and ſeem'd to claſh with the King's late Declaration. This Vow of the Houſe of Commons, as Ruſhworth calls it, ſtands thus:

The Commons Declaration upon the Nine and thirty Articles.

> We the Commons in Parliament aſſembled, do claim, proteſt, and avow for Truth, the Senſe of the Articles of Religion, which were eſtabliſhed by Parliament in the Thirteenth Year of our late Queen Elizabeth, which by the publick Act of the Church of England, and by the general and current Expoſitions of the Writers of our Church, have been delivered unto us. And We reject the Senſe of the Jeſuits, and Arminians, and all others wherein they differ from us.

The Commons being thus deciſive in Points of Religion, and Myſtery, was ſomewhat ſurprizing: 'Twas thought the Reſolution of theſe Matters, in which the moſt learned Clergy were ſo much divided, had been more proper for a provincial Council, That the ſetting a Rule for Belief, was foreign to the Buſineſs of the Commons; That their Profeſſion had not qualified them for Enquiries of this Kind: And that they had neither Character or Authority for ſettling the Controverſy. To inſtance in one Clauſe of their Declaration, They Vow for Truth the Senſe of the Articles, which were eſtabliſh'd by Parliament, in the Thirteenth Year of Queen Elizabeth.

But by the Way, neither the Senſe of the Articles, nor the Articles themſelves, are eſtabliſh'd either in that Parliament, or in any other. We hear of no Committee of Religion appointed to examine the Orthodoxy of theſe Credenda, or any Reſolution of the Houſe upon their Report. The Deſign of the Statute, (i) as has been already obſerv'd, was only to provide againſt Non-Conformity: For which Purpoſe the Clergy are oblig'd to ſubſcribe the Articles, and read them in their Pariſh Churches.

(i) 13 Eliz. cap. 12.

The Commons were by no Means pleas'd with the Adminiſtration; they inſinuated Popery and Arminianiſm were in a Concert to undermine the Conſtitution, and make Way for Arbitrary Government. That the Juncture call'd for an Enquiry into the Pardons that had been granted, and the Eccleſiaſtical Preferments beſtow'd ſince the laſt Seſſion: That the Work of the Lord muſt not be done Negligently; and that the Buſineſs of Religion ought to have the Preference to that of Tonnage and Poundage. And the Committee being ſettled, Mr. Pym ſpoke to the following Effect.

They complain of Innovations in Religion.

Religion he ſaid, was diſtreſs'd with Popery and Arminianiſm: “As to the Firſt, they ought to enquire into Three Things. 1ſt. The Non-Execution of the Laws againſt Papiſts. 2dly, How much theſe Recuſants had been employ'd and countenanc'd. 3dly, They were to take Notice of the Breach made upon the Law by bringing in ſuperſtitious Ceremonies. And here he Inſtances in the Innovations pretended to be practis'd at Durham, by Mr. Cozens: Such as Angels, Crucifixes, Saints, Altars, Candles on Candlemas-Day burning in the Church.

Now if Pym meant Invocation of Saints and Angels, and Worſhipping the Croſs, or the Altar, 'twas a downright Calumny on Cozens: But if this is not his Meaning, his Charge is trifling, and nothing to the Purpoſe. Then ſpeaking to the Point of Arminianiſm, he paſſes the Lambeth Articles for the Doctrine of the Church of England: Taking this for granted, he would have a Teſt for examining the late contrary Opinions: And moves that an Enquiry may be made what Men have been ſince preferr'd, who have profeſs'd theſe Hereſies: What Pardons they have had for falſe Doctrine: What Books have been prohibited that appear'd againſt them, and how much thoſe on their Side have been ſuffer'd to Paſs.

Purſuant to this Speech, the Committee, except to the Pardons of Mountague and Manwaring, complain of Neile, Biſhop of Wincheſter, for procuring them, and call an Arminian the Spawn of a Papiſt. And thus the Humour running high againſt the Court in the Lower Houſe, the King diſſolv'd the Parliament.

Leighton's ſcandalous Pamphlet.

Before the Breaking up of the Parliament, one Leighton, a Scotchman, and Doctor of Phyſick, dedicated a ſcandalous Book to the Two Houſes, entituled, Sion's Plea. In this phrantick Performance he ſolicits his Patrons to kill all the Biſhops, and ſmite them under the Fifth Rib: His Manners to the Queen is of the ſame extraordinary Size. For he ſalutes her Majeſty in no better Language than that of an Idolatreſs, a Canaanite, and a Daughter of Heth. For theſe coarſe Liberties he was taken up, brought into the Star Chamber; and ſentenc'd to have his Ears crop'd, his Noſe ſlit, his Fore-hand branded, and to be whip'd. Between the Sentence and the Execution, he made his Eſcape out of the Fleet; but was ſeiz'd in Bedfordſhire, and ſuffer'd the Puniſhment. (k)

Laud, who had now the Aſcendant at Court, being ſenſible the Diſcipline and Revenues of the Church were miſmanag'd, and out of Order, was Intent in projecting a Remedy. To this Purpoſe he conſulted Harſenet, who ſucceeded Mountaign in the See of York: Theſe Two Prelates threw their Scheme into Ten Articles and preſented them to the King: This Draught was ſign'd by his Majeſty, and publiſh'd under the Title of his Inſtructions to the Moſt Reverend Father in God, George, Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, containing certain Orders to be obſerv'd and put in Execution by the ſeveral Biſhops in his Province. The Inſtructions are theſe following.

CHARLES Rex.

The King's Inſtructions to the Archbiſhop of Cant. &c.

“I. That the Lords the Biſhops be commanded to their ſeveral Sees, there to keep Reſidence; excepting thoſe which are at neceſſary Attendance on the Court.

“II. That none of them Reſide upon his Land or Leaſe that he hath purchaſed, nor on his Commendam, if he hold any; but in one of his Epiſcopal Houſes, if he have any ſuch: And that he Waſte not the Woods where any are left.

“III. That they give Charge in their Triennial Viſitations, and at other convenient Times, both by themſelves and their Archdeacons, That the Declaration for ſettling all Queſtions in Difference, be ſtrictly obſerved by all Parties.

“IV. That there be a ſpecial Care taken by them all, That their Ordinations be ſolemn, and not of unworthy Perſons.

“V. That they take great Care concerning the Lecturers in their ſeveral Dioceſes, from whom we give theſe ſpecial Directions following.

“1. That in all Pariſhes the Afternoon Sermons be turned into Catechizing by Queſtion and Anſwer, where and whenſoever there is not ſome great Cauſe apparent to break this ancient and profitable Order.

“2. That every Biſhop Ordain in his Dioceſe, That every Lecturer do read Divine Service according to the Liturgy, printed by Authority, in his Surplice, and before the Lecture.

“3. That where a Lecture is ſet up in a Market-Town, it may be read by a Company of Grave and Orthodox Divines near adjoining, and in the ſame Dioceſe, and that they preach in Gowns and not in Cloaks, as too many do Uſe.

“4. That if any Corporation do maintain a ſingle Lecturer, he be not ſuffer'd to preach till he profeſs his Willingneſs to take upon him a Living with Cure of Souls within that Incorporation, and that he do actually take ſuch Benefice or Cure, ſo ſoon as the ſame ſhall fairly be procured for him.

“VI. That the Biſhops do incourage and Countenance the Grave and Orthodox Divines of their Clergy, and that they uſe all Means by ſome of their Clergy, or others, that they have Knowledge how both Lecturers and Preachers within their Dioceſes, behave themſelves in their Sermons, that ſo they may take Order for any Abuſe accordingly.

“VII. That the Biſhops ſuffer none under Noblemen and Men qualified by the Law, to have any private Chaplain in his Houſe.

"VIII. That they take eſpecial Care, that Divine Service be diligently frequented, as well for the Prayers and Catechiſm, as Sermons; and take particular Notice of all ſuch as abſent themſelves as Recuſants, or otherwiſe.

"IX. That every Biſhop, who by our Grace and Favour, and good Opinion of his Service, ſhall be nominated by us to another Biſhoprick, ſhall not from that Day of Nomination preſume to make any Leaſe for Three Lives, or One and twenty Years, or concurrent Leaſe, or any Way renew any Eſtate, or cut any Wood or Timber, but merely to receive the Rents due, and ſo quit the Place; for We think it a hateful Thing that any Man's leaving a Biſhoprick, ſhould almoſt undo his Succeſſor. And if any Man ſhall preſume to break this Order, We will refuſe him our Royal Aſſent, and keep him at the Place which he hath ſo abuſed.

"X. And laſtly, We command you to give us an Account every Year, on the Second of January, of the Performance of theſe Our Commands. (l)

The King's Letter to the Lords Juſtices of Ireland, in behalf of the Clergy.

About this Time the King ſent an Order to the Lords Juſtices of Ireland, for improving the Revenues of the Iriſh Clergy: 'Tis in theſe Words, "Right Truſty and well-beloved Couſins and Counſellors, We greet you well, Whereas our late dear Father of bleſſed Memory, did (by his Inſtructions for the Good and Welfare of Holy Church in our Realm of Ireland,) ordain and command that all ſuch impropriate Parſonages as were his own Inheritance, and held by Leaſe from the Crown, ever as the ſaid Leaſes expir'd, ſhould be thenceforth let to the ſeveral Curates and Miniſters of all ſuch Churches, that were to attend the Cure of Souls, and from Time to Time ſhould be Incumbent upon the ſeveral Parſonages, they ſecuring his Majeſty the Rents, Duties and Services reſerved upon ſuch Leaſes, which order We alſo out of our Own like Zeal to God's Glory and Advancement of true Religion, have likewiſe heretofore confirmed by our Royal Letters of the 8th of July, 1626, all which notwithſtanding We are now to our great Diſpleaſure informed, that ſince the giving of our ſaid Father's Letters and our Own; ſundry Leaſes of Tythes, upon Expiration, Surrender, or otherwiſe, have been again Let to Lay-men, and not to the Incumbents of the ſaid Churches, to the Wrong of our Religion, and Breach of our Commandment: Whereof We ſhall not fail to take Account in Time convenient, but for your better Aſſurance of ſuch our pious and princely Grant unto the Church, of that our Realm in Time to come, We have thought good to declare, and by theſe our Letters do declare unto you, That our princely Will and Pleaſure is, for Us, our Heirs and Succeſſors; to give and Grant the Reverſion of all ſuch Reſervations, only as formerly have been expreſſed, irrevocably unto Almighty God, and to the particular Churches within that our Kingdom, unto which ſuch Tythes did anciently belong, and to the ſeveral Incumbents which ſhall happen to be in the ſaid Churches, when ſuch Leaſes ſhall expire or otherwiſe be determined, and to their Succeſſors for ever, giving hereby the ſeveral Incumbents and their Succeſſors, which ſhall be when it ſhall happen the ſaid Leaſes to expire or otherwiſe to determine, full Power to enter into Poſſeſſion of the whole Tythes, paying only unto Us, our Heirs and Succeſſors, ſuch Rents, Duties and Service as are now payable out of the ſame reſpectively; and charging our Officers of our Exchequer in that Kingdom to receive the ſame in ſuch Manner and Form as now they are receiv'd, without any further Charge or Exaction upon the ſaid Incumbents; and for the effecting this our godly Purpoſe and princely Donation, We do hereby authorize and require you, that upon the Sight hereof, you by the Advice of our learned Council there; do forthwith make out under the Great Seal of that our Kingdom, ſuch Grant and Grants as ſhall be neceſſary and requiſite for the Settling and Eſtabliſhing of all ſuch impropriate Benefices, upon the Corporation of Dublin or Londonderry, within that our Kingdom, as ſhall be moſt convenient and available for the Church, to the Uſe of the ſaid Incumbents, and their Succeſſors for ever. And our further expreſs Will and Pleaſure is, That whenſoever it ſhall happen the ſaid Leaſes, or any of them now in Being to determine, you our Juſtices for the Time being, or other Deputy, chief Governor or Governors that ſhall be hereafter, ſhall hereby be enabled to preſent the then Incumbent unto the ſame Church, by the Title of the full Rectory thereof, as unto other Churches of our Patronage, reſerving as aforeſaid, the Rents, Duties, and Service formerly reſerved unto Us. And theſe our Letters, &c. (m)

Dated at Weſtminſter the 30*th*. 1629.

And thus the Impropriations remaining in the Crown were return'd to the Parochial Clergy. The Occaſion was this: Uſher, Lord Primate of Armagh, being ſenſible of the ill Condition of the Church for Want of a competent Maintenance for the Clergy, ſolicited Laud to move his Majeſty for a Grant of his Impropriations; for this purpoſe Laud acquainted the Lord Treaſurer and the Chancellor of the Exchequer with this Motion. In fine, after a long Debate, the King was pleas'd, at Laud's Requeſt, to paſs the Grant in the Form above-mention'd. *

The Iriſh Roman Catholicks being ſomewhat too ſanguine in their Expectations, and hoping the Neceſſities of the Government would Force the King to cloſe with their Propoſal, and Grant them a Toleration: Upon this Proſpect they over-drove their Buſineſs, and had the Courage to ſet up ſome Religious Houſes in Dublin: Beſides this large Step, Fryars appear'd openly in their Habits, and gave a publick Affront to the Mayor and Archbiſhop. His Majeſty receiving Advice, diſpatch'd an Order to the Privy Council in Ireland, "That the Houſe where the Seminary Fryars appear'd in their Habits and affronted the Archbiſhop and Mayor, ſhould be ſpeedily demoliſh'd, and made a Mark of Terror to the Reſiſters of Authority: And that the reſt of the Houſes employ'd there, or elſewhere, to the Uſe of ſuperſtitious Societies, ſhould be converted to Houſes of Correction, and to ſet People on Work, or to other publick Uſes for the Advancement of Juſtice, or good Arts, or Trade. The Condition of ſome part of Ireland, with reſpect to Religion.

At this Time the Intereſt of the Reformation was but low in Ireland, as appears by the Account Dr. Beadle, Biſhop elect of Kilmore, tranſmitted to Laud: Beadle, at the Inſtance of this Biſhop of London, acquaints him that the Popiſh Clergy were more numerous, than thoſe of the Church of England: That they had their Officials and Vicars-General for Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction: And were ſo hardy as to excommunicate thoſe who appear'd at the Courts of the Proteſtant Biſhops: That almoſt every Pariſh had Prieſts of the Roman Communion, that Maſſes were ſometimes ſaid in Churches, that excepting a few Britiſh Planters, not amounting to the Tenth Part of the People, the reſt were all declar'd Recuſants: That in each Dioceſe, there were about Seven or Eight of the Reform'd Clergy, ſufficiently qualified: But theſe being Engliſh, and not underſtanding the Language of the Natives, they could neither perform Divine Service, nor converſe with their Pariſhioners to advantage; and by Conſequence were in no Condition to put a Stop to ſuperſtition. By the Way, the Reader is to obſerve, That this Relation of Biſhop Beadle, refers only to the Two Dioceſes of Kilmore and Ardagh. Upon the Death of William Lord Herbert, Earl of Pembroke, Laud was choſen Chancellor of Oxford; which, beſides other Inſtances of Service, gave him an Opportunity of Reforming the Statutes of that Univerſity. The next remarkable Occurrent is, the Birth of Prince Charles, afterward King Charles the Second.

To go back a little; In Lent this Spring Davenant Biſhop of Sarum, Preaching before the King, happen'd to touch upon the Quinquarticular Controverſy. The King diſpleas'd with his Handling this prohibited Argument, order'd him to appear before the Lords of the Council. Here Harſenet, Archbiſhop of York, put Davenant in Mind of his Obligations to the King, dilated upon the Contempt of his Majeſty's late Declaration, and heightned the Charge with Smartneſs enough. The Biſhop of Sarum's Text was taken out of Romans the Sixth, Verſe the Third, Eternal Life is the Gift of God through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. The Third Head of his Sermon was, That the Godly are Happy in the Manner of their Reward, becauſe the eternal Life beſtow'd upon them was, Donum gratuitum, or free and unmerited Bounty. From this Propoſition he conſider'd eternal Life under Three Reſpects; That is, in the eternal Deſtination thereof, which we call Election. This being the Paſſage which gave Offence, the Biſhop's Apology was, "That the "Doctrine of Predeſtination was not forbidden "by the King's Declaration. This he endea"vour'd to prove Firſt, becauſe in the Declara"tion, all the Nine and thirty Articles are eſta"bliſh'd, amongſt which, that of Predeſtina"tion is one. Secondly, Becauſe all Miniſters "are urg'd to ſubſcribe the Truth of the Article, "and all Subjects to continue in the Profeſſion "of that, as well as of the reſt." From theſe Grounds he inferr'd Predeſtination could not be reckon'd amongſt curious and forbidden Doctrines. And here, deſiring the Declaration might be produc'd, he appeal'd to it for the Inoffenſiveneſs of his Conduct. The Lords of the Council neither produc'd the Declaration, nor charg'd his Diſcourſe with Heterodoxy: They thought it ſufficient to tell him 'twas his Majeſty's Pleaſure theſe myſterious Queſtions ſhould not be debated: And that ſilence in theſe Points was the beſt Expedient to ſecure the Peace of the Church. To this the Biſhop replied, he was ſorry he miſunderſtood his Majeſty's Mind: That had he been better inform'd, he would not have dip'd in the Controverſy, but treated an unexceptionable Argument: And that for the Future he ſhould govern himſelf accordingly. Upon this, he was diſmiſs'd without further Trouble, and afterwards admitted to kiſs the King's Hand; who told him this Doctrine of Predeſtination was too big for the People's Underſtanding, and therefore he was reſolv'd not to give Leave for diſcuſſing this Controverſy in the Pulpit, and that the Preachers inſiſting on Reformation and good Life, would be much more ſerviceable to the Audience. Biſhop Davenant promis'd Obedience, and took his Leave. (o)

His Defence at the Council-Board.

This Controverſy reviv'd at Oxford.

In the Beginning of the next Year, this controverſy was reviv'd at Oxford. Hill of Hart-Hall Hodges, of Exeter College; Thorn, of Baliol College, and Ford of Magdalen-Hall, preach'd warmly at St. Mary's againſt the Remonſtrant Opinions, call'd thoſe of that Perſuaſion Pelagians and Semi-Pelagians, and fell foul on his Majeſty's Declaration. For this Miſbehaviour they were convented before Dr. Smith, Warden of Wadham, then Vice-Chancellor. They appeal'd from the Vice-Chancellor to the Proctors, Bruch of Brazen-Noſe College, and Doughty of Merton. The Appeal being receiv'd, the Vice-Chancellor complain'd to his Majeſty then at Woodſtock, where the Matter was heard before the King and Council. As for Hill, he had ſometime before procur'd his Pardon upon his Submiſſion in the Convocation. The other Three were by an Order of the Council-Board expell'd the Univerſity: The Proctors for receiving their Appeals, contra formam Statuti, were ſentenc'd to reſign their Office in the Convocation-Houſe: And Dr. Prideaux, Rector of Exeter College, and Dr. Wilkiſon, principal of Magdalen-Hall, were reprimanded for abetting thoſe Preachers. Hodges afterward recanted publickly in St. Mary's, But Ford refus'd to give that Satisfaction. (p)

Auguſt 23. Anno Dom. 1631.

And in Ireland.

This Year Uſher, Lord Primate of Ireland publiſh'd his Hiſtory of Gotteſchalcus. In this Tract he undertook Voſſius in ſome Meaſure upon the Pelagian Controverſy; and here his Pen run out a little in Defence of the Predeſtinarian Scheme. Not long before, Downham, Biſhop of Derry, publiſh'd a Diſcourſe concerning Perſeverance: In this Performance there were ſome Paſſages that claſh'd directly with the King's Declaration. Uſher's Book being written in Latin, did leſs Diſſervice: And beſides, ſome Regard was ſhewn to the Eminence of his Station. However, to make the Primate ſenſible of the King's Diſpleaſure, he was commanded to call in Downham's Book, but his Majeſty's Letters not coming to Uſher's Hands till the Middle of October, moſt of the Copies were diſpers'd and out of reach. However, for preventing theſe prohibited Sallies, Beadle, Biſhop of Kilmore, was order'd to overlook the Preſs, and keep it inoffenſive.

Auguſt 24.

The Repair of St. Paul's.

This Year Laud ſet forward the Repairing St. Paul's: Somewhat had been done in the Two late Reigns to recover it from the lamentable Condition 'twas reduc'd to by the Fire which happen'd in the Beginning of Queen Elizabeth's Government; Laud had no Difficulty to diſpoſe the King for encouraging ſo pious a Work: In ſhort, a Commiſſion was iſſu'd under the Broad-Seal to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, to the Lord Keeper, to the Biſhops of London, Wincheſter and Ely, to Sir Robert Ducy, Lord Mayor of London, and ſeveral others. The Purport was, That all Monies brought in for the Repair of this Cathedral ſhould be paid to the Chamber of London. That a Regiſter ſhould be kept of all Subſcriptions for Contribution. That the Judges of the prerogative Court, and all Biſhops Officials in England and Wales, ſhould be put in Mind to remember this Church, and ſet aſide ſome Part of the Goods of inteſtate Perſons, proper for pious Uſes. And laſtly, Commiſſions of the like Nature were to be iſſu'd thro' the whole Kingdom.

To break a little into the Order of Time, and diſpatch this Matter at once: Before the Year One thouſand ſix hundred and forty, the Contributions brought into the Chamber of London, amounted to an Hundred, thirteen thouſand Pounds, and upwards. By theſe large Supplies of Money (of which the King ſent in more than Ten thouſand Pounds) the whole Body of the Church was finiſh'd, and the Steeple ſcaffolded to the Top: The Deſign was to take down the Tower to the Arches, and rebuild it to a more magnificent Height. There was likewiſe a ſtately Portico built at the Weſt End of the Church: 'Twas ſupported with Pillars of the Corinthian Order, and embelliſh'd with the Statues of King James and King Charles. But the Rebuilding the Spire, and finiſhing the projected Decorations, miſcarried by the Misfortune of Biſhop Laud, and the Breaking out of the Rebellion.

Upon the Death of Archbiſhop Harſenet, Neile was tranſlated from Wincheſter to York: Curle was tranſlated from Bath and Wells to Wincheſter; Pierce from Peterborough to Bath and Wells, and Dr. Auſtin Lyndſell, Dean of Litchfield, was made Biſhop of Peterborough.

Anno Dom. 1632.

Mr. Francis Windebank, now Secretary of State by Laud's Intereſt, offer'd Two Propoſals to the Privy Council at the Inſtance of this Prelate. The one related to the State of Religion in foreign Factories and Regiments: The other ſuggeſted a Regulation of the Dutch and French Churches in London and elſewhere in England.

With Reference to the firſt Propoſal, we are to obſerve the Engliſh Factory at Hamburgh, tho' allow'd the Privilege of their own Church Conſtitution, deſerted to the Geneva Diſcipline and Worſhip. They omitted Reading the Common-Prayer, and manag'd their Church Affairs upon Calvin's Plan of Elders and Deacons. (q)

(q) Cyprian Anglic. pag. 232.

But moſt of thoſe Engliſh who traded, or ſettled in Holland, fell ſhort of the Liberties at Hamburgh, and were oblig'd to conform to the Religion of the State. To ſet this Matter in a fuller Light I ſhall give the Reader the Petition of the Engliſh Miniſters in the Low-Countries: 'Twas preſented to the late King in the Year 1624. The Addreſs ſtands thus,

May it pleaſe your excellent Majeſty. (r)

The Petition of the Engliſh Miniſters in the Low-Countries.

“ We your Highneſs's humble Subjects the Preachers of the Holy Goſpel reſiding in the united Provinces, having to our unſpeakable Comfort and Joy taſted of your Royal Favour and Grace above Three Years ſince, in the Princely Approbation of the preſent Remedy then tendred, for Redreſs of all Enormities amongſt us; as alſo having obſerved and felt the bleſſed and admirable Fruit enſuing upon the ſame, to the Diſplacing divers ſcandalous Perſons, and ſettling Men more worthy in; and in an uniform and proſperous Proceeding in all Chriſtian Conſent with the Churches with whom we live; and due Contentment to thoſe higher Powers under whom we here adminiſter all that we undertake: And being now lately re-aſſembled to the ſame happy Ends and Purpoſes, notice being given of your Majeſty's Pleaſure by your Majeſty's Ambaſſador, either to ſet over us a Moderator of your Majeſty's chuſing, to be inſpector in the Ordering our Affairs; or preſently to ſurceaſe all further Proceedings: We fell to deliberate how to diſcharge our ſelves in this particular; ſo as we might be free from Offence to God, Diſloyalty to your Majeſty, and Undutifulneſs to our preſent Governors. And perceiving (to our utmoſt Apprehenſion) Two Things only, to offer themſelves unto us in your Majeſty's Order, viz. either Obedience to your Majeſty's Motion for Nomination of a Moderator, or elſe ſurceaſing all further ſynodal Proceedings: And withal, finding the Difficulty of the Firſt, we have done our beſt to ſatisfy your Majeſty's Will in the Second, till we may underſtand your Majeſty's further Pleaſure: Which good Pleaſure of your Majeſty, that it may be happy to us, and our after Proceedings in this reſpect; according to our Hopes and humble deſires; we have thought it our Duty by Information to your Majeſty of the Inconvenience of both theſe, and of the worthy Benefit and Advantage of our former Courſe, both to our Perſons and to the Cauſe, moſt humbly to intreat your Majeſty's Favour for the Continuance and Approbation of the ſame: It being (in our Judgments) the only ſafe Way to give Satisfaction both to God and to your Majeſty, and to the State wherein we live.

“ The Firſt being ſuch as neither admits Safety to attempt, nor Poſſibility to attain the ſame: Becauſe our primary and fundamental Liberty of erecting this Eccleſiaſtical Form of Government was limited expreſly unto us both in the Supplication of the Deputies of the Synod of South Holland, who petition'd it, and in the Act of the illuſtrious Lords, who granted it only with Condition of plenary and entire Conformity to the Churches of theſe Provinces, according to the Example of the Walloon Churches, Strangers as we are: Which ſaid Liberty we having alſo embraced and ſubſcribed accordingly, cannot without Diſloyalty or Breach of Fidelity, revoke, or alter during our abode and reſidence in theſe Parts: As alſo becauſe the Miniſtry of the Churches, who rejoiced in our Unanimity with them before, were greatly griev'd at the firſt Hearing of this Command; as importing ſuch Mutation as carries with it inſupportable Miſeries and Miſchief in this State; as by lamentable Experience they have too lately found, that cannot yet be forgotten. So that the ſaid Miniſters do judge it more Expedient for the Safety of their Churches, to ſuffer both our ſelves and our Churches wholly to diſſolve and annihilate, than that a Courſe ſo ſtrange to them ſhould ariſe and take Place amongſt them. Which Diſſolution, how eaſily and quickly they may Effect with the Lords of the States, is evident to all who pleaſe to know that every Engliſh and Scottiſh Church in theſe Parts (Two only excepted) have their whole Dependance, Maintenance and Being in all Reſpects upon the ſaid Lords, the States, their Favour and Supportation. And farther, becauſe the Suſpicion and Fear of ſome ſuch Thing as now appeareth, hath withholden from us (and that by the Conſent, Countenance and Support of ſome principal Aſſemblies) ſome of our reverend and beloved Brethren, thren, and hath cauſed others to ſtagger, whoſe Communion, as we much deſire, ſo we nothing doubt of, if it may pleaſe your Majeſty to relieve us in this Particular: For otherwiſe, if the Fear thereof could be ſo forceable to work in them this Diſaffection towards us, what great Evil may we juſtly fear the Acceptation thereof will produce, being ſuch as is aforeſaid.

“The ſecond, to wit, our total Diſſolution, is ſuch as cannot fall either without apparent and undeniable Attaint of our ſelves in the Point of Ingratitude and Diſregard, both of your Majeſty's Favour in approving, and the States in yielding us our Liberties thus far enjoy'd; or of an inexcuſable Imputation of Impiety againſt God in the Neglect of his Church under our Overſight. Seeing thereupon a Ruin of former Order and the Confuſions (now in a good Meaſure remov'd) will aſſuredly re-enter. And further, it cannot be without the Neglect and Contempt of your Majeſty's Subjects, both Miniſters and People, in theſe Provinces, whoſe Honour and Eſtimation began to grow great and firm by this bleſſed Band of Union unto them, and Communion with them in theſe Eccleſiaſtical Orders; (the chief, both Colonels and other Officers amongſt your Majeſty's Subjects in theſe Parts concurring in our Meetings by their perſonal Preſence, and by their Deputies; and ſo receiving from, and giving Countenance to our Courſe interchangeably) which muſt now needs fade and conſume in our Diſunion from them. And therefore we have thought beſt humbly to preſent to your Majeſty that which in our Judgments) can only ſubſiſt, being ſuch as we take to be moſt free from all Offence, and moſt fit to give Content to all Sides; both becauſe 'tis well known to be moſt acceptable to this State, and moſt profitable for their Churches; and alſo becauſe by our ſelves it is the more comfortably embraced, in reſpect it is wholly harmleſs to the Churches in your Majeſty's Dominions, becauſe of our publick Declaration, and irrevocable Proteſtation in the accepting thereof, of our Integrity towards them, acknowledging in our Souls and Conſciences, that we have, and ſhall (by God's Grace) ever eſteem them as the true Churches of Chriſt, precious in his Sight, with our ſelves reſolving ſtill to hold Communion with them, notwithſtanding any Difference of external Order. This different Practice being undertaken by us without any Diſreſpect, Cenſure, Prejudice, Separation or Condemnation of the ſaid Churches, reſerving to them all due Reverence, and perpetually praying for, and procuring (to our uttermoſt) their Happineſs and Welfare with our own.

“And farther, we have found our poor Eſſays, and Beginnings in this Courſe to be ſeconded from Heaven with a rich and happy Succeſs in theſe few Seſſions we have holden, that the Rooting which it hath taken, cannot be torn up again without Danger of the Spoil of this Work of Reformation, which the Lord has begun here in the Churches amongſt us. Which Cauſes (moſt Gracious Sovereign) beſides a Multitude more of unavoidable Inconveniencies enſuing upon the leaſt Alteration in our ſettled Proceedings, we moſt humbly make Tender of that to your Majeſty, which Almighty God (we doubt not) hath put into our Hearts, viz. That it would pleaſe your Highneſs of your eſpecial Grace, not only to permit our comfortable Proceeding in our former Courſe, but alſo to encourage and countenance us therein by your Majeſty's Royal Favour. And to this our humble and dutiful Deſire, we are the more hopefully heartened by calling to Mind your Majeſty's publick Opinion touching the equal Power and Freedom of all Princes and Potentates in the external Order and Diſpoſition of Church-Diſcipline within their particular Territories: And alſo becauſe your Majeſty is the only Man whom the World may, and theſe Lords do profeſs and bleſs, as the moſt honourable Inſtrument of quenching the conſuming Fires of Schiſm which were lately kindled amongſt them by the Vorſtian and Arminian Faction; which apparently will be more dangerouſly reviv'd now again by this Change between our ſelves and the Dutch and French Churches, with whom we converſe, to the Infamy and Obloquy both of our Perſons and all our precedent Actions, and the expoſing of our ſelves and our Congregations, to the aforeſaid Perils, either of plenary Diſſolution, or ſuch grievous Vexation as we ſhould not be able to endure; being thereby left deſtitute of all comfortable Order and Government: and the laudable Means to make our lawful Proceedings known ſo far as the French and Dutch do, when they are requir'd by their Superiours, and as we have done, and are ready ſtill to do by their Example.

“Wherefore, moſt mighty King, we your Majeſty's Subjects do here proſtrate our ſelves in the Perſon of this our Brother Mr. John Forbes, whom in all Duty we ſend from amongſt our ſelves to your Majeſty, beſeeching your Grace to ſhine now again, and for ever upon us, to the renewing of our happy Hopes, the refreſhing of our grieved Hearts, and the rejoycing of all with whom we converſe, who jointly with us ſhall ever praiſe the God of Heaven for your Majeſty's experienced Favours paſt, and theſe at this preſent thus humbly deſir'd; and ſhall pray together with us for all Increaſe and Accumulation of all honourable Felicities upon your Majeſty's Soul and Body, Crown and Poſterity for ever and ever.

Tho. Barklei Preſes, Tho. Scot Scribe in Name, and at the Command of the reſt of the Synod.

Your Majeſty's humble and obedient Subjects.

What Anſwer theſe Miniſters receiv'd to their Petition I have not met with; but by the Scheme Biſhop Laud offer'd this Year to the Privy-Council for Regulating Divine Service in the Engliſh Factories and Troops abroad; from this Scheme I ſay, 'tis pretty plain the Engliſh Clergy in Holland were conniv'd at both by the late King, and his preſent Majeſty, and ſuffer'd to act in Synods by their own Inclination, and manage to the Latitude of their Petition.

Laud's Draught for a Regulation of theſe Matters is digeſted into Ten Articles.

Biſhop Laud's Suggeſtions to the Privy-Council for ſecuring Conformity to the Church amongſt the Engliſh beyond Sea.

“Firſt, The Colonels of Engliſh Regiments in the Low Countries ſhould entertain no Clergy as Preachers to their Regiments, but ſuch as ſhould entirely conform to the Church of England, being firſt recommended by the Lords of the Privy-Council, with the Advice of the Archbiſhops of Canterbury and York. (2ly.) That “the Merchants reſiding there, or in any other foreign Dominions, ſhall admit no Miniſter as Preacher to their Company, but ſuch as ſhall be qualified and recommended as aforeſaid. (3*ly.*) That if any Clergyman has made Uſe of any indirect Means to procure ſuch a Recommendation, and proves afterwards a Diſſenter, he might be oblig'd either to conform within Three Months, or be diſcharg'd. (4*ly.*) The fourth Article except that it obliges the Scotch Clergy officiating in Factories and Regiments beyond Sea, to the ſame Length of Conformity, is coincident with the firſt. (5*ly.*) That if any Miniſter or Preacher, being the King's born Subject, ſhould print, preach, or diſcourſe, to the Diſparagement of the Doctrine or Diſcipline of the Church of England, Notice ſhould be given to the Ambaſſador, and by him to his Majeſty, that the Perſon offending might be ſent for home, and anſwer for his Miſbehaviour. (6*ly.* That no Colonel or Deputy-Governor ſhould permit the Preacher (when ſick, or neceſſarily abſent) to ſubſtitute any Perſon to preach or officiate for him, but ſuch for whoſe Conformity he will be anſwerable. (7*ly.*) That no Deputy-Governor ſhould be ſent to Delph, or any other Place of Reſidence for the Engliſh Merchants, but ſuch as would engage to ſee the Service of the Church of England exactly perform'd within the Factory. (8*ly.*) That as often as the Merchants ſhall renew their Patents, a Clauſe for the obſerving theſe Inſtructions (or at leaſt ſo many of them as ſhould ſeem neceſſary to the Lords of the Privy-Council) may be inſerted. (9*ly.*) That all his Majeſty's Agents beyond Sea may have theſe Inſtructions given them in Charge, and be oblig'd once a Year to give the Board an Account of the Succeſs of this Affair. (10*ly*) That the Engliſh Miniſters in Holland, being his Majeſty's natural born Subjects, may not be permitted to hold any Claſſical Meetings, but eſpecially not to Ordain. For unleſs they ſhould be reſtrain'd from this laſt Branch of Eccleſiaſtical Authority, there would be a ſtanding Nurſery for Schiſm and Faction, which might ſenſibly affect the Repoſe of this Kingdom. (s)

Thus far with reſpect to Factories and foreign Parts, As to the French and Dutch Churches in England, Laud's Suggeſtions to the Privy-Council went upon other Heads.

His Scheme for regulating the Dutch and French Churches in England.

“Firſt, He ſet forth the great Piety and Compaſſion of this Government in entertaining Foreigners when perſecuted at home, and indulging them the Liberty of their own Religion. Secondly, That 'twas never the Intention of the Government, that after the firſt Generation was worn out, their Poſterity born Subjects of this Realm, ſhould continue in their Anceſtors Separation from the Engliſh Church. That ſuch a diſtinct Communion muſt of Courſe make them diſaffected to the State, and apt to promote, or fall in with any Change more ſuitable to their Humour. He obſerv'd, Thirdly, That they kept themſelves a ſeparate Body, and intermarried only within themſelves; that by this particular Management, as they are now a Church within a Church, they might in a little Time grow up to a Commonwealth within a Kingdom. Fourthly, That theſe Foreign Bodies thus divided from Church and State, are for the moſt Part ſettled in Port-Towns next to France and the Low Countries, which may tempt them to ſtrike in with an Emergency, and make an unſerviceable Uſe of ſuch a Situation. Fifthly, That the Example of ſuch an Indulgence makes an ill Impreſſion on the Engliſh, and confirms them in their Stubbornneſs and Nonconformity. And therefore, ſixthly, That neither the French, nor Dutch Churches ſhould be tolerated in this Kingdom, unleſs the Engliſh reſiding in Foreign Parts, have the ſame Liberty in Doctrine, Diſcipline and Worſhip.

The Dangers and Inconveniencies being thus ſet forth, the Biſhop proceeds to the Remedies.

“And, firſt, he moves that the Numbers of theſe Foreigners planted in this Kingdom, may be exactly computed, in order to judge the better of the Practicableneſs of bringing them to Conformity. Secondly, That for this Purpoſe an Order may be iſſued by the Government to take an exact Liſt of them in their reſpective Abodes: And that a Certificate may be return'd of thoſe of moſt Intereſt and Subſtance amongſt them. Thirdly, Provided they reſolve to continue a ſeparate Body both from Church and State, they ſhould then lie under the common Diſadvantage of Strangers, have all Duties doubled upon them, and not be capable of the Privileges of Natives. Fourthly, That when it ſhall be thought proper to bring them to the ſame Condition with other Subjects, they ſhould be warned in an Eccleſiaſtical Way to frequent their Pariſh-Churches, and conform themſelves to the Service and Worſhip eſtabliſh'd: And in Caſe of Noncompliance, to proceed againſt them by Excommunication, and ſerve the Writ de Excommunicato Capiendo upon them. And to lay this Matter more together, though happening at ſome Diſtance of Time, I ſhall obſerve that about three Years forward, when Laud was tranſlated to Canterbury, he practis'd ſome Part of theſe Suggeſtions both in his Dioceſe and Province. For Inſtance; his Vicar-General made the following Regulation for thoſe Foreign Churches at Canterbury, Sandwich and Maidſtone; and the ſame Thing was done at Southampton and Norwich. This Act or Order was publiſh'd by their own Miniſters in their Congregations.

Idem.

“I am commanded to ſignifie unto you, that it is not his Majeſty's Intent, nor of the Council of State, to diſſolve our Congregations. And to that End his Majeſty is content to permit the Natives of the firſt Degree to continue Members of our Congregations, as before: But the Natives in this Church, after the firſt Deſcent, are injoin'd to obey my Lord Archbiſhop his Injunction; which is to conform themſelves to the Engliſh Diſcipline and Liturgy, every one in his Pariſh, without inhibiting them notwithſtanding from reſorting ſometimes to our Aſſemblies. And my Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury means notwithſtanding, that the ſaid Natives ſhall continue to contribute to the Maintenance of the Miniſtry and Poor of this Church, for the better ſubſiſting thereof; and promiſeth to obtain an Order from the Council, if need be, and they require it, to maintain them in their Manufactures againſt thoſe that would trouble them by Informations. That Queen Elizabeth kept theſe Foreigners under a Reſtraint, and allow'd them only the Engliſh Liturgy in their own Language, appears by a Letter ſign'd by her Majeſty to the Lord Treaſurer Pawlet.

Queen Elizabeth's Letter for regulating Foreign Churches in England.

Elizabeth:

Right Truſty and Right Well-beloved Couſin, we greet you well. Whereas in the Time of our Brother, and Siſter alſo, the Church of the Auguſtine Fryers was appointed to the Uſe of all the Strangers repairing to the City of London, for to have therein Divine Service; conſidering that by an Univerſal Order all the reſt of the Churches have the Divine Service in the Engliſh Tongue for the better edifying of the People, which the Strangers born underſtand not. Our Pleaſure is, That you ſhall aſſign and deliver the ſaid Church and all Things thereto belonging, to the Reverend Father in God the Biſhop of London, to be appointed to ſuch Curates and Miniſters as he ſhall think Good, to ſerve from Time to Time in the ſame Churches, both for daily Divine Service, and for Adminſtration of the Sacraments, and Preaching of the Goſpel; ſo as no Rite nor Uſe be therein obſerv'd contrary or derogatory to our Laws. And theſe our Letters ſhall be your ſufficient Warrant and Diſcharge in that Behalf. Given under our Signet at our Palace at Weſtminſter the ... Day of February, the ſecond Year of our Reign.

Feoffees conſtituted by the Puritans for buying in Impropriations.

In the latter End of this Year the Feoffees for buying Impropriations, were broken, and received Judgment in the Exchequer-Chamber. To begin the Narrative of this Matter: About Six Years ſince, when Preſton was at the Head of the Puritans, a Project was form'd by that Party to ſet up Lectures with the Encouragement of a Maintenance in Market-Towns. To this Purpoſe certain Feoffees were conſtituted in Truſt for purchaſing ſuch Impropriations as were remaining in the Hands of the Laity: Their Buſineſs, as they ſaid, was to ſet up a conſtant Preaching Miniſtry: And to make the Scheme practicable, they form'd themſelves into a Kind of Corporation; they form'd themſelves, I ſay, for they had neither any Act of Parliament, nor the King's Letters-Patents for their Warrant. The Names of the Feoffees were theſe; William Gouge, Richard Sibbs, C. Offspring, T. Davenport, Doctors in Divinity; Ralph Eyre, S. Brown, Barriſters of Lincolns-Inn; C. Sherland, Barriſter of Grays-Inn; John Geering, Richard Davis, George Harwood, Francis Bridges, Citizens. To theſe Rowland Heylin Alderman of London, was afterwards added, as Treaſurer, for the Convenience of a caſting Voice.

Remarks upon this Settlement.

This Deſign being well ſolicited, and having a ſtrong Appearance of Piety, anſwer'd Expectation; and thus great Sums of Money were rais'd in a ſhort Time. But notwithſtanding theſe ſpecious Colours, there lay a Snake in the Graſs: For after all, this extraordinary Zeal and Expence was only to ſtrengthen the Intereſt of the Diſſenters, to bring in the Geneva Diſcipline, and raiſe a Battery againſt the Church. That this Remark is no Exceſs of Cenſure, may appear by conſidering, firſt, That theſe Feoffees were Men of known Diſaffection to the eſtabliſh'd Diſcipline. Secondly, Their Way of Management is a plain Indication of their Intentions; for the Impropriations purchas'd by them were not annex'd to the Churches or Chappels to which they originally belong'd: Had this been done, the Buſineſs had been commendable, and clear from Suſpicion: But this they knew was the wrong Way to ſerve the Cauſe. Inſtead therefore of reſcuing the Parochial Clergy from the Hardſhips they ſuffer'd, they parcell'd out the purchas'd Impropriations into Penſions of Forty or Fifty Pounds per Annum. With theſe Salaries they ſubſiſted Lecturers in Market-Towns. In theſe Places People have commonly moſt Leiſure, and by Conſequence are further diſpos'd to receive Impreſſions from the Pulpit, and give into Singularities. For when Leiſure has not a Counterbalance of Knowledge and Judgment, it proves a Temptation to run after Novelties, and is a dangerous Circumſtance.

Thirdly, The Views theſe Feoffees went upon, may be further diſcover'd by the Perſons they made choice of. Now theſe were generally Nonconformiſts, and ſometimes ſuch as had been ſilenc'd by their Ordinary, or the High Commiſſion, of which there are ſeveral Inſtances too long to inſert. (u)

Fourthly, The ſame Collection may be made from the Precariouſneſs of the Salaries; for theſe Penſions were Arbitrary Favours revokeable at Pleaſure; and the Lecturers had no Intereſt in them during Life, or for Term of Years. They were altogether on their Good Behaviour, and hung intirely upon the Humour of their Patrons. And thus if they happen'd to diſappoint the Feoffees in their Principles, if they manag'd languidly in the Cauſe, and abated of their firſt Fervours, the Penſions were withdrawn, and the Men diſcharg'd.

From theſe Obſervations 'tis pretty plain that this Scheme had no friendly Aſpect either upon Church or State: For thoſe who were ſchiſmatical, with Reſpect to the firſt Society, were commonly diſaffected to the other. To what has been remark'd may be added, that to tie the Lecturers faſter to the Intereſt of the leading Men in this new Corporation, they allow'd private Penſions to thoſe who had been ſilenc'd, or ſuſpended in the Eccleſiaſtical Courts; and oftentimes furniſh'd ſomewhat of a Maintenance to their Wives and Children after their Death. Theſe were powerful Motives to engage the Diſſenting Preachers to their Patrons Fancy, and make them ſpeak ſmooth Things. And thus by drawing off their Audience from the Church, and reinforcing the Faction, the Elections were commonly ſway'd the wrong Way in Corporations, and Mal-contents return'd to Parliament. For theſe Reaſons the Feoffees were proſecuted by Attorney General Noy. The Feoffment was cancell'd in the Court of Exchequer, the Impropriations purchas'd, confiſcated to his Majeſty's Uſe, and the Penalties they had incurr'd, referr'd to further Conſideration. Upon the Feoffees receiving Sentence in the Exchequer Chamber, Archbiſhop Laud makes this Remark in his Diary: Theſe Feoffees, ſays he, were the main Inſtruments for the Puritan Faction to undo the Church. (w)

Some Means taken in the late Reign for ſettling the Liturgy in Scotland.

The next Year the King went a Progreſs into Scotland: The Deſign of his Journey, beſides the Solemnity of a Coronation, was to reconcile that Nation further to the Engliſh Church, and make Way for the Settlement of the Liturgy. To introduce this Conformity in both Kingdoms, ſome preparatory Meaſures had been taken in the late Reign. For in the Year 1617. King James gave Order the Engliſh Service ſhould be read daily at the Chappel Royal in Holy-Rood Houſe. And purſuant to the General Aſſembly at Aberdeen, Commiſſioners were appointed to draw up a Book of Common-Prayer for Scotland. This Book when finiſh'd, was ſent up to the King by Archbiſhop Spotſwood, carefully perus'd by his Majeſty, and afterward reviewed by ſome Scotch Biſhops at the Engliſh Court. And having paſt this this Teſt, and receiv'd the laſt Improvement, the King return'd it to the Scotch Biſhops, who were to recommend it to the Uſe of their own Church. But this Prince being embroil'd in a War with the Houſe of Auſtria, and dying not long after, the Buſineſs had no Succeſs. His Son King Charles equally embaraſs'd at his Acceſſion to the Throne, was for the firſt Four Years in no Condition to revive the Undertaking. But after the Peace with France being ſomewhat more at Liberty, he reminded the Scotch Biſhops of their Duty, and order'd them to ſolicit this Affair with the utmoſt Application. Upon this they diſpatch'd Maxwell a Preacher at Edinburgh to the Engliſh Court. This Gentleman applying to Laud Biſhop of London, receiv'd the following Anſwer, That if his Majeſty would have a Liturgy ſettled there different from what they had already, 'twas beſt to take the Engliſh Liturgy without any Variation from it; ſo that the ſame Service Book might paſs through all his Majeſty's Dominions. To this Maxwell reply'd, That the Scotch would be beter pleas'd to have a Liturgy of their own, but ſuch an one as ſhould come near the Engliſh, both in Form and Matter. In ſhort, the Cauſe was brought before the King, who having conſider'd the Arguments of each Party, declar'd for the Engliſh Book. The main Reaſon urg'd by the Scotch Biſhops was, That a Liturgy made by themſelves, and in ſome Things different from the Engliſh Service, would be moſt acceptable to their Countrymen, whom they found very jealous of the leaſt Dependance on the Church of England. And thus the Matter reſted till this preſent Year. (x)

Anno Dom. 1633.

The Kirk Party appoint private Faſts.

By the way, the Scots of the Kirk-Party, who either out of Opinion or Intereſt, were unfriendly to the Hierarchy, had lately ſome Opportunities to work their Purpoſe. It had been the Manner of the Presbyterian Miniſters, for ſome Time paſt, to keep a Faſt on the firſt Sunday of every Quarter; and here to lie under Shelter, and guard againſt the Laws, they took the Precaution not to give any publick Notice of theſe Humiliations: Their Method was only to give ſome private Intimation to thoſe of their Flock they could confide in. Upon the Faſting Days they us'd to declaim againſt Epiſcopacy, and give broad Innuendo's of the Danger the Reformation lay under from this Eſtabliſhment. And to drive this Doctrine deeper into the Audience, Part of their Prayer was for Relief againſt this Grievance, and for a Bleſſing upon all good Means which Providence ſhould ſuggeſt for that End. Theſe were popular Topicks, and improv'd their Intereſt with the Burghers and Peaſantry. But that which was more ſerviceable to the Cauſe, was the coming over of Seven or Eight of the Nobility, who openly declar'd for them. (y)

A commendable Cuſtom touching the Nomination of Biſhops chang'd in this Reign.

Another Advantage was the Want of good Underſtanding amongſt the Biſhops; the new Biſhops not paying a due Regard to thoſe who had liv'd longer in that Order. 'Twas King James his Method, when a Biſhoprick fell void, to order the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews to conſult the reſt of the Prelates for naming Three or Four for the Vacancy. And when the Biſhops had pitch'd upon the Perſons, they laid the Liſt before the King, who made Choice of one of them. And thus the Elections paſſing under ſo ſerviceable a Direction, the Men beſt recommended for Life and Merit, were generally preferr'd.

But King Charles had the Miſfortune, as Biſhop Guthry reports, to change this commendable Cuſtom. In this Reign Churchmen were preferr'd to the Sees in Scotland by the Intereſt they had at Court: Now Favourites and Stateſmen are not always the beſt Directors in theſe Affairs. Beſides, the young Biſhops, as Guthry calls them, not being oblig'd to the old ones for their Promotion, abated of the cuſtomary Obſervance, and kept a kind of ſeparate Correſpondence among themſelves. And happening to fall into a cloſe Acquaintance with Laud, they put him upon preſcribing Meaſures to the old Biſhops, which were not well taken.

Id. p. 14.

The new Biſhops manage to Diſadvantage, and why.

To proceed: The growing Diſcontent among the Miniſters was another Advantage to the Presbyterians. The young Biſhops, it ſeems, treated the inferior Clergy with too much Loftineſs and Diſregard. The old Biſhops were inoffenſive, and manag'd this Point with Diſcretion. But thoſe of this Reign, as this Author relates, laid too much Streſs upon their Character, and ſteer'd with more Sail than Ballaſt. But that which had the moſt weight in precipitating the Scotch Biſhops, was the Inſincerity of the Miniſters of State. And here the Earl of Traquair, Lord Treaſurer, did them moſt Diſſervice. It ſeems he was under ſome Apprehenſion the Prelates intended to work him out of the King's Favour, and that they were in a Concert to bring Maxwell Biſhop of Roſs into his Poſt.

The Juncture preſenting thus fair for the Presbyterians, they reſolv'd to petition the King for a Redreſs of Grievances: One main Branch of the Remonſtrance, was a Complaint againſt Epiſcopacy. This Inſtrument ſubſcrib'd by the Party, was put into the Hands of the Earl of Rothes, who was privately to preſent it to the King. According to cuſtomary Method, and Form of Law, the Paper ought to have been given to the Clerk-Regiſter: But they thought it moſt adviſeable to ſound the King's Inclination in the firſt Place, and not run the Riſque of a publick Diſappointment. By the Event it appears their Caution was not ill-grounded; for his Majeſty, upon reading the Petition, commanded the Earl of Rothes not to ſolicit any further. The Party receiving this Check, thought it proper to acquieſce; and thus the Remonſtrance was drop'd for this Year.

Several Acts relating to the Church, paſs'd in the Parliament at Edinburgh.

About Ten Days after a ſolemn Coronation, the Parliament ſate. At this Seſſion there were ſeveral Acts paſs'd relating to the Church, which I ſhall (z) briefly mention. To begin with the Act which declares his Majeſty's Sovereign Authority over all Eſtates, Perſons, and Cauſes whatſoever, purſuant to a reſembling Recognition made in Parliament in the Year One thouſand ſix hundred and ſix. In the latter Part of this Statute 'tis enacted, That the Power of preſcribing an Habit to Churchmen ſhall remain in his Majeſty and Succeſſors. This Proviſion was a Continuing the Branch of an Act made in the Year One thouſand ſix hundred and nine, which determin'd with the Life of the late King. The paſſing this Statute was regretted by the Presbyterians, who were afraid the Engliſh Surplice might be forc'd upon them.

The next Act ratifies and approves all and whatſoever Acts and Statutes made before, anent the Liberty and Freedom of the true Kirk of God, and Religion preſently profeſs'd within this Realm; and ordains the ſame to ſtand in their full Force and Effect, as if they were ſpecially mention'd, and ſet down herein.

Id. cap. 4.

This Act, upon the Score of its confirming the Privileges of Epiſcopacy, being the preſent Eſtabliſhment, was a Grievance to the Kirk Party. The next Act makes a Proviſion for ſecuring Legacies given to pious Uſes. The Statute ſets forth, That Lands and Sums of Money lately bequeath'd to Colleges, Schools, Hoſpitals, &c. had been miſmanag'd by the Executors and Adminiſtrators, and applied to Uſes foreign to the Will of the Teſtator.

Id. cap. 6.

To proceed; In the Act of General Revocation or Reſumption, there's a Clauſe which revokes and reſcinds all Grants and Infeoffments of Erection of Abbeycies, or other Prelacies, granted by his Majeſty at any Time. And likewiſe all Grants of Abbeycies, Priories, and Nunneries, granted by his Majeſty's Father, or any of his Predeceſſors, provided theſe Abbeycies, &c. were not erected into a Temporal Barony or Lordſhip, are declar'd void, and of no Effect.

Id. cap. 8.

By another Act, a Branch of the Statute, made in the Year One thouſand Five hundred Eighty ſeven, concerning the Annexation of the Temporalty of Benefices to the Crown, is confirm'd. And here 'tis further enacted, That all Grants made by his Majeſty, his Father, or his Grandmother, Queen Mary, of the Right and Privilege of Regality pertaining to whatſoever Abbot, Prior, or Prioreſs, Preceptor, or other beneficed Perſon whatſoever, are caſſed, annull'd, and reſcinded. Then follows two Proviſo's:

Id. cap. 13.

By the Firſt, All heritable Infeoffments of Baileries and Stewartries of the ſaid Regalities, granted by the ſaid beneficed Perſons, at any Time Prior, to the Date of Erections of the ſaid Abbeycies and Priories into Temporal Lordſhips, are ſecur'd to the Heirs of the firſt Grantees. Secondly, 'Tis further declar'd, That theſe Preſents ſhall no Ways be extended to the Right of Regality of whatſoever Lands and Superiorities pertaining to the Archbiſhops and Biſhops of this Kingdom, by Vertue of their Gifts and Proviſions, granted to them or their Predeceſſors thereupon, which ſhall remain with them unhurt or prejudg'd by this preſent Act.

The next Statute mentions a general Commiſſion, dated at White-hall, January the 17th, 1627, which Inſtrument contains a general Surrender of the Superiorities of all Lands, Baronies, Fortalices, Manor Places, &c. belonging to all Abbacies, Priories, Prioreſſes, Preceptories, and all other Benefices, erected into Temporal Lordſhips, Baronies, or Livings. The Inſtrument, I ſay, contains a Surrender of all theſe Superiorities, and other Incidents, Emoluments, and Profits, to the Crown, upon ſome Conditions, and with ſome Limitations too long to mention. The Statute concludes with this ſaving Proviſo, That no Clauſe therein contain'd ſhall be extended to the Superiorities of whatſoever Lands, Baronies, and others, pertaining to whatſoever Archbiſhop, Biſhop, and their Chapters: But that the ſame ſhall remain with them and their Succeſſors unhurt or prejudg'd by this preſent Act.

Id cap. 14.

Laſtly, To mention but one Statute more: The Act of Commiſſion of Surrenders and Teinds, * dated at Holy-Rood-Houſe the 26th Day of June, in the Year 1627, is ratified and confirm'd.

 Teinds or Tythes.*

Id. cap. 8.

By this Commiſſion of Surrenders, &c. the Maintenance of the Parochial Clergy was ſomewhat improv'd, and the Heritors or Freeholders had the Liberty of buying their own Tythes: And thus the Bulk of the People were made more eaſy and independent, and reſcued from being oppreſs'd by the great Men. However, ſome of the Nobility were unpleas'd with loſing their new Homage, and parting with their Juriſdiction, tho' exceptionally acquir'd; and from this Time they grew Malcontent, and waited an Opportunity of Revenge upon the Crown: Tho', after all, the King had only conſulted the general Good of the Subject, done nothing but what was equitable in the Matter, and legal in the Manner: For the Surrenders, as has been obſerv'd, were confirm'd by Act of Parliament.

Some of the Nobility diſguſted at the Commiſſion of Surrenders, &c.

Before this was done, the King takes Notice that many of his Subjects of Scotland, particularly the Gentry and their Tenants, who paid their Tythes to the Nobility, and other Lords of the Erection or Impropriators, complain'd loudly that theſe Lords and Lay Patrons ſtrain'd the utmoſt Rigour of the Law upon them: That they refus'd to ſet out their Tythes when the Owners of the Corn deſir'd them: And by their acting perfectly at Pleaſure in this Matter, the Owners of the Corn not being ſuffer'd to take the Opportunities of fair Weather, oftentimes loſt the greateſt Part of their Harveſt. Neither was there any Remedy in the Caſe; for by the Laws of Scotland, the Landlord can carry off none of the Nine Parts till the Proprietary of the Tythes has ſet out his Tenth. This Privilege, together with the Superiorities of the Abbey-Lands, was a terrible Tie upon a great Part of the Subjects; and by laying their Fortunes thus at the Mercy of their Patrons, their Perſons were ſo too in a great Meaſure.

Beſides, as his Majeſty obſerves, the Condition of the Miniſters was lamentably ſlender and ſervile; for inſtead of receiving the Tythes of the Pariſh, originally ſettled upon the Cure, they had only ſome poor Stipend paid by the Lords of the Erections; and this was ſometimes left at Diſcretion, and more than they could command: And that the Clergy by being thus meanly ſubſiſted, fell under the utmoſt Contempt, and liv'd tied to a ſcandalous Dependance. To diſengage the Subject from this Servitude, the King paſs'd the Commiſſion of Surrenders of Superiorities and Tythes, and got them confirm'd in Parliament. With this Proviſion the Nobility, and other Lay-Patrons concern'd, ſeem'd fully ſatisfied; in Regard the Compenſation they receiv'd came up to the utmoſt Value of what they relinquiſh'd. And as for the Heritors and Miniſters, they were ſo ſenſibly oblig'd with theſe Surrenders, that the firſt made a publick Acknowledgement to the King that he had deliver'd them from an intolerable Bondage which themſelves and their Anceſtors had lain under ever ſince the Reformation. The latter were no leſs tranſported with Joy, and magnify'd the King as the Founder and Protector of their Churches. But notwithſtanding the Clergy, many of the Gentry and Heritors had been thus ſignally relieved; yet no ſmall Number of theſe Men rebell'd afterwards upon their Sovereign that reſcued them, abetted their arbitrary Patrons, and ſeem'd to court an ignoble Vaſſalage. And thus, beſides making themſelves remarkable for their Ingratitude, they prov'd falſe to their Intereſt, and diſcover'd their Treaſon and their Folly at the ſame Time. To proceed;

The King not unacquainted with the Temper of the Faction, and perceiving Things not diſpos'd for bringing in the Liturgy, dropp'd that Buſineſs. However, as far as his Prerogative would reach, he went on in making Proviſion for the Benefit of the Church: For this Purpoſe, he erected an Epiſcopal See at Edinburgh. This Town lying in the Dioceſe of St. Andrews, Spotſwood, Archbiſhop of that See, was willing to reſign Part of his Profit and Juriſdiction to the publick Intereſt. And thus the whole County of Lothian, reaching from Edinburgh-Firth to Berwick, was ſever'd from St. Andrews, and laid to the Dioceſe of Edinburgh. And to ſubſiſt the Biſhop with ſomething towards a Competency, Part of the Lands belonging to the Priory of St. Andrews was purchaſed of the Duke of Lenox by the King, and ſettled upon this See. Forbes, an exemplary and learned Divine, was the firſt Biſhop; and the Church of St. Giles aſſign'd for his Cathedral. And to compleat the Eſtabliſhment, and bring it up to the common Regulation, a Dean and Prebendaries were ſettled. (a) Laud, Biſhop of London, attending his Majeſty to Scotland, and ſworn Privy-Councellor for that Kingdom, us'd his Intereſt, as may eaſily be imagined, for the Founding this Biſhóprick. The Parliament being diſſolv'd, the King, after having taken a View of ſome of the principal Towns, return'd to England, and came to the Queen at Greenwich on the 20th of July.

The Death and Character of Archbiſhop Abbot.

On the 4th of Auguſt following Abbot, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, departed this Life. To ſay ſomething of him: He was born at Guilford in Surrey, bred in Baliol-College Oxon, where having liv'd Fellow for ſome Time, he was preferr'd to the Maſterſhip of Univerſity-College, and afterwards to the Deanery of Wincheſter. His next Promotion was the Biſhoprick of Litchfield: From hence, after a few Months, he was tranſlated to London, and from thence within a Year to Canterbury. He had paſs'd through Proſperity and Adverſity in ſome very ſenſible Inſtances. He has the Character of an unblemiſh'd Converſation, and a good Preacher. As to the governing Part, he was not altogether ſo happy. He was apparently ſomewhat leaning towards the Puritan Perſuaſion. Under this Diſpoſition he is reported over-remiſs in his Diſcipline. By holding the Reins thus looſe, the People were practis'd upon by the Diſſenters, and gain'd over to Calviniſm. The Ceremonies of the Church were neglected: And thus in many Places the Worſhip of God being left too much at Diſcretion, the preſſing Conformity afterwards was clamour'd againſt, and interpreted to Rigour and Innovation. (b) Further, Archbiſhop Abbot is taxed with unfriendlineſs to thoſe of his own Function; that he Brow-beat the inferior Clergy, and diſcover'd a Partiality to the rich Laity in Cauſes brought before him. To defend himſelf againſt this Imputation, his Anſwer was, That he was ſo ſevere to the Clergy on Purpoſe to reſcue them from the Severity of others, and to prevent the Puniſhment of them by Lay Judges to their greater Shame. (c)

(b) Hamond L'eſtrange's Hiſt. of King Charles.

(c) Fuller's Church Hiſt. Book XI. Pag. 128.

But this Excuſe is a harſh Reflection upon the Conduct of the Clergy, and ſuppoſes them remarkably defective either in common Honeſty or common Diſcretion. However, theſe Singularities, together with his Relaxation of Diſcipline, are no Diſproofs of Integrity: His Meaning might be good, though his Meaſures fell ſhort of Exactneſs. As for his Benefactions, he built a fair Hoſpital at Guilford, and ſettled a plentiful Endowment.

Laud ſucceeds him in the See of Canterbury.

After Abbot's Death the King was at no Loſs about a Nomination: He had already reſolv'd upon his Succeſſor. And when Laud (who travelled ſlower than the Court) came off his Scotland Journey, and waited on the King, his Majeſty ſaluted him with this Expreſſion, My Lord's Grace of Canterbury, you are very welcome. In Six Weeks the Cuſtomary Forms for the Tranſlation were gone through, and the Archbiſhop ſettled at Lambeth; where at his coming he made a ſplendid Entertainment.

Septemb. 19. Anno Dom. 1633.

The firſt Directions he received from Court referred to the Buſineſs of Ordinations. To ſecure the Clergy from Indigence and Dependence, 'twas provided by the Canons, (c) that none ſhould be ordain'd without a Title. Now a Title for Maintenance is thus ſettled by the Church. The Perſon to be ordained muſt either exhibit his Preſentation to ſome Benefice within the Dioceſe of the Biſhop ordaining, or bring an unqueſtionable Certificate of his being provided of a Curacy in the ſaid Dioceſe, or that he is aſſur'd of officiating as Deacon or Prieſt in ſome Cathedral or Collegiate Church, or that he can make Proof of his being a Fellow or Chaplain in ſome College in Cambridge or Oxford, or that he is five Years ſtanding Maſter of Arts, and lives in one of the Univerſities upon his own Charge; or laſtly, the Biſhop who ordains him muſt engage to prefer him ſhortly to ſome Cure then void. Notwithſtanding the Precaution of this Canon, Ordinations were ſometimes paſs'd to ſlender Qualifications either of Title or Merit: And thus theſe Clergy being unfurniſhed with a Maintenance, turn'd Lecturers, or Chaplains, and were frequently entertain'd upon Terms of Diſadvantage: By being ſupported in a Precarious Manner, they lay more obnoxious to unhandſome Compliance; and when their Patrons were factious or ſchiſmatical they were in Danger of deſerting from their Duty. By his Majeſty's Inſtructions, in the Year 1629, 'twas order'd that no Lay Gentleman, not qualified by Law, ſhould entertain a Chaplain. But 'twas not long before this Order was diſregarded in ſeveral Families: And therefore to retrench the Number of Lecturers and Houſhold Prieſts, 'twas thought fit to ſtop the Source of this Inconvenience, and refreſh the obſerving the Canon above-mention'd upon the Biſhops. To this Purpoſe the King, at the Inſtance of the Archbiſhop, ſent him the following Letter.

The King's Letters to the Biſhops touching Ordinations.

CHARLES Rex.

Moſt Reverend Father in God, Right Truſty and Right entirely Beloved Counſellor, We Greet you well. There is nothing more Dear to Us than the Preſervation of true Religion, as it is now ſettled and eſtabliſhed in this Our Kingdom, to the Honour of God, the great Comfort of Our ſelf and Our Loyal People: And there can nothing more conduce to the Advancement thereof than the ſtrict Obſervation of ſuch Canons of the Church as concern thoſe who are to take Orders in their ſeveral Times; more eſpecially of keeping that particular Canon which enjoins, That no Man be made a Prieſt without a Title: For We find that many not ſo qualified do by Favour, or other Means, procure themſelves to be ordain'd, and afterwards, for want of Means, wander up and down to the Scandal of their Calling, or to get Maintenance, fall upon ſuch Courſes as were moſt unfit for them, both by humouring their Auditors, and other Ways altogether unſufferable. We have therefore thought fit, and We do hereby ſtreightly Command, Require, and Charge you to Call ſuch Biſhops to you as are now preſent in or near Our City of London, and to acquaint them with this Our Reſolution. And further, That you fail not in the Beginning of the next Term, to give Notice of this Our Will and Pleaſure openly in Our High-Commiſſion-Court; and that you call in to the ſaid Court every Biſhop reſpectively that ſhall preſume to give Orders to any Man that hath not a Title, and there to cenſure him as the Canon aforeſaid doth enjoin, (which is to maintain the Party ſo ordered till he give him a Title) and with what other Cenſure you in Juſtice ſhall think fit. And Our further Will is, That nothing ſhall be reputed a Title to enable a Man for Orders but that which is ſo by the ancient Courſe of the Church and the Canon-Law, ſo far forth as that Law is received in this Our Church of England. And as you muſt not fail in theſe Our Directions, nor in any Part of them; So We expect that you give us from Time to

Time a ſtrict Account of your Proceedings in the ſame.

Given under Our Signet at Our Palace of Weſtminſter, September 19. in the Ninth Year of Our Reign, 1633.

The Archbiſhop purſuant to his Majeſty's Order convenes his Suffragans in or near the Town, acquaints them with the Scandal and Danger of uncautious Ordinations, preſſes their managing this Affair by the Strictneſs of the Canon, and delivers them a Copy of his Majeſty's Letters. Theſe Letters were likewiſe tranſmitted to the Biſhops in the Country; and others of the ſame Tenor ſent by the King to the Archbiſhop of York.

The Judges at the Aſſizes at Exeter and in Somerſetſhire ſuppreſs Wakes, &c.

About this Time the King publiſh'd his Declaration concerning lawful Sports. The Occaſion of it was this: Some of the Judges had lately made Orders at the Aſſizes for ſuppreſſing all Revels, Church-Ales, Clerk-Ales, and Bid-Ales, on the Sunday. The Publiſhing this Order was enjoined the Parochial Clergy on the firſt Sunday in February every Year. Theſe Regulations were thought to exceed the Reſtraints of the Statutes made in the firſt and third Years of this Reign, for the better Keeping the Lord's-Day. And in this Buſineſs Sir Thomas Richardſon, Chief Juſtice of the King's-Bench, was particularly active at the Lent-Aſſizes in Somerſetſhire. The Enjoining the Clergy to publiſh the Judges Orders in their Churches, was look'd upon as an Impoſition, and an Encroachment over and above on the Eccleſiaſtical Courts. Laud, then Biſhop of London, complain'd of this Uſage to the King, who commanded the Chief Juſtice to diſcharge the Order at the next Aſſizes. Richardſon was ſo far from obeying his Majeſty, that he confirm'd his former Proceedings, and made them more menacing than before. This hardy Step was reſented by the principal Gentry of the Country. The King likewiſe much diſpleas'd with Richardſon's Reſolution, commanded the Biſhop of London to write to the Biſhop of Bath and Wells for an Account of Matter of Fact; and in what Manner the Wakes and other Feſtivals were manag'd. Upon the Receipt of this Letter, Bath and Wells ſends for above Seventy Clergy-Men of Character, living in the Country. Theſe Divines certified under their Hands, "That on the Feſtivals (which commonly fell on the Sunday) " Divine Service was moſt ſolemnly perform'd, " and the Congregation fuller both in the Forenoon and in the Afternoon than upon any " other Sunday: That the People deſir'd they " might be continued, and that the Clergy in " moſt Places were of the ſame Sentiment: " They believ'd theſe annual Solemnities ſerviceable for preſerving the Memory of the " Dedication of Churches, for taking up Differences by the Meeting of Friends, for cultivating a good Correſpondence among " Neighbours, and for refreſhing the Poor with " the Entertainments made upon thoſe Anniverſaries." Whether theſe Reaſons for keeping up the Wakes, &c. were ſtronger than the Objections againſt them, is what I ſhall leave undetermin'd. However, upon the Return of this Certificate, the Lord Chief Juſtice Richardſon was ſummon'd again before the Council, where notwithſtanding he had endeavour'd to juſtify his Proceedings, by alledging his Order was made at the Requeſt of the Juſtices of Peace, and with the general Conſent of the Bench. Notwithſtanding this Defence he was poſitively commanded to reverſe it. By the Way, from the Account which Heylin and Ruſhworth give of this Matter, 'tis plain the Juſtices of Peace in Somerſetſhire were divided upon the Point. (e)

The Sabbatarian Controverſy reviv'd.

About this Time the Sabbatarian Controverſy was reviv'd. One Theophilus Bradburn, a Clergy-Man in Suffolk, refreſh'd this Diſpute. About four Years ſince he publiſh'd a Book, entituled, A Defence of the moſt Ancient and Sacred Ordinance of God, the Sabbath-Day. In this Tract he maintains the Fourth Commandment was abſolutely moral: That Chriſtians as well as Jews were oblig'd to the perpetual obſerving that Day: And laſtly, That the Lord's-Day or Sunday is a working Day; that it deſerves no Preference; and that it is no better than Will-worſhip and Superſtition to raiſe it to the Solemnity of a Sabbath in Vertue of the Fourth Commandment. This Judaiſing Performance was dedicated to the King. His Majeſty much diſpleas'd with this Reſolution, order'd the Proſecution of the Author in the High-Commiſſion. Before the Cauſe came to a Hearing, Bradburn was prevail'd with by the Biſhops to ſubmit to a Conference; where his Scruples being happily diſentangled, he was recover'd to an Orthodox Belief. However, theſe Sabbatarian Miſtakes had ſpread in ſome Meaſure upon the People. The Juſtices of Peace in Somerſetſhire ſign'd an Addreſs to the King for ſuppreſſing Church-Ales, Clerk-Ales, &c. But before the Petition was deliver'd, his Majeſty, by Way of Prevention, publiſh'd the late King's Declaration upon this Subject, with a Supplement of his own. His preſent Majeſty's Addition is in theſe Words:

The King's Declaration concerning Sports.

Now out of a like Pious Care for the Service of God, and for ſuppreſſing of any Humours that oppoſe the Truth, and for the Eaſe, and Comfort, and Recreation of Our well-deſerving People, We do Ratify and Publiſh this Our Bleſſed Father's Declaration; the rather becauſe of late, in ſome Counties of Our Kingdom, We find that under Pretence of taking away Abuſes, there hath been a general Forbidding, not only of ordinary Meetings, but of the Feaſts of the Dedication of Churches, commonly call'd Wakes. Now Our expreſs Will and Pleaſure is, That theſe Feaſts with others ſhall be obſerv'd, and that Our Juſtices of the Peace, in their ſeveral Diviſions, ſhall look to it, both that all Diſorders there may be prevented or puniſh'd, and that all Neighbourhood and Freedom, with Man-like and Lawful Exerciſes, be us'd. And We further command Our Juſtices of Aſſize, in their ſeveral Circuits, to ſee that no Man do trouble or moleſt any of Our Loyal and Dutiful People in or for their Lawful Recreations, having firſt done their Duty to God, and continuing in Obedience to Us and Our Laws. And of this We command all Our Judges, Juſtices of the Peace, as well within Liberties as without, Mayors, Bailiffs, Conſtables, and other Officers, to take Notice, and to ſee obſerv'd, as they tender Our Diſpleaſure. And We further will, That Publication of this Our Command be made, by Order from the Biſhops, thorow all the Pariſh Churches of their ſeveral Dioceſſes reſpectively.

Given at Our Palace at Weſtminſter, October 18. in the Ninth Year of Our Reign, 1633.

This Declaration, whether upon the Score of indulging too much Liberty, or diſpenſing with a late Act of Parliament, (f) was not well received, and gave the People a further Diſguſt at the Adminiſtration: And ſome of the Clergy, who ſcrupled the reading of it in their Churches, were were ſuſpended by their Ordinaries, and proſecuted in the High-Commiſſion. Theſe Rigours, tho' not very frequent, heighten'd the Complaint, and diſſerv'd the Government both in Church and State.

To go back a little, and Report the Condition of the Church of Ireland, at the Lord Deputy Wentworth's coming thither. For this Purpoſe, I ſhall inſert Dr. Bramhall's (afterwards Lord Primate) Letter to Laud, Biſhop of London. It runs thus:

Dr. Bramhall's Letter to Laud concerning the Condition of the Church of Ireland.

Right Reverend Father,

“My moſt Honour'd Lord, preſuming partly upon your Licence, but eſpecially directed by my Lord Deputy's Commands, (g) I am to give your Fatherhood a brief Account of the preſent State of the Poor Church of Ireland, ſuch as our ſhort Intelligence here, and your Lordſhip's weightier Imployments there, will permit. Firſt, For the Fabricks, it is hard to ſay whether the Churches be more ruinous and ſordid, or the People irreverent, even in Dublin the Metropolis of this Kingdom, and Seat of Juſtice: (To begin the Inquiſition where the Reformation will begin) we find our Parochial Church converted to the Lord Deputy's Stable, a ſecond to a Nobleman's Dwelling-Houſe, the Quire of a third to a Tennis-Court, and the Vicar acts the Keeper. In Chriſt's-Church, the principal Church in Ireland, whither the Lord Deputy and Council repair every Sunday, the Vaults, from one End of the Minſter to the other, are made into Tippling-Rooms, for Beer, Wine, and Tobacco, demiſed all to Popiſh Recuſants, and by them and others ſo much frequented in Time of Divine Service, that though there is no Danger of blowing up the Aſſembly above their Heads, yet there is of poiſoning them with the Fumes. The Table uſed for the Adminiſtration of the Bleſſed Sacrament in the midſt of the Choir, made an ordinary Seat for Maids and Apprentices. I cannot omit the glorious Tomb in the other Cathedral Church of St. Patrick in the proper Place of the Altar, juſt oppoſite to his Majeſty's Seat, having his Father's Name ſuperſcribed upon it, as if it were contriv'd on Purpoſe to gain the Worſhip and Reverence, which the Chapter and whole Church are bound by ſpecial Statute to give towards the Eaſt. And either the Soil it ſelf, or a Licence to build and bury, and make a Vault in the Place of the Altar under Seal, which is a Tantamount paſſed to the Earl and his Heirs, Credimus eſſe Deos? This being the Caſe in Dublin, your Lordſhip will judge what we may expect in the Country.

“Next for the Clergy; I find few Footſteps yet of foreign Differences, ſo I hope it will be an eaſier Task not to admit them than to have them ejected. But I doubt much whether the Clergy be very orthodox, and could wiſh both the Articles and Canons of the Church of England were eſtabliſh'd here by Act of Parliament, or State; that as we live all under one King, ſo we might both in Doctrine and Diſcipline obſerve an Uniformity. The inferior Sort of Miniſters are below all Degrees of Contempt, in reſpect of their Poverty and Ignorance. The boundleſs heaping together of Benefices by Commendams and Diſpenſations in the Superiors is but too apparent; yea, even often by plain Uſurpation, and indirect Compoſitions, made between the Patrons, (as well Eccleſiaſtick as Lay) and the Incumbents; by which the leaſt Part, many Times not above 40 s. rarely 10 l. in the Year, is reſerv'd for him that ſhould ſerve at the Altar; inſomuch that it is affirm'd that by all or ſome of theſe Means one Biſhop in the remoter Parts of the Kingdom doth hold Three and twenty Benefices with Cure. Generally their Reſidence is as little as their Livings. Seldom any Suitor petitions for leſs than three Vicarages at a Time. And it is a main Prejudice to his Majeſty's Service, and an Hindrance to the right Eſtabliſhment of this Church, that the Clergy have in a manner no Dependance upon the Lord Deputy, nor he any Means left to prefer thoſe that are deſerving amongſt them: For beſides all thoſe Advowſons which were given by that great Patron of the Church, King James, of happy Memory, to Biſhops, and the College here, many alſo were conferr'd upon the Plantations, (never was ſo good a Gift ſo infinitely abuſed); and I know not how, or by what Order, even in theſe Bleſſed Days of his Sacred Majeſty, all the reſt of any Note, have been given or paſſed away in the Time of the late Lord Deputy.*

“Laſtly, For the Revenues, how ſmall Care hath been taken for the Service of his Majeſty, or the Good of the Church, is hereby apparent, that no Officer, or other Perſon, can inform my Lord what Deanery or Benefices are in his Majeſty's Gift, and about Three hundred Livings are omitted out of the Book of Tax for Firſt-Fruits, and Twentieth Parts; ſundry of them of good Value, two or three Biſhopricks, and the whole Dioceſe of Killfannore. The Alienations of Church Poſſeſſions by long Leaſes and Deeds are infinite; yea, even ſince the Act of State to reſtrain them, it is believ'd that divers are bold, ſtill to practice in Hopes of Secrecy and Impunity, and will adventure until their Hands be tied, by Act of Parliament, or ſome of the Delinquents cenſur'd in the Star-Chamber. The Earl of Cork holds the whole Biſhoprick of Liſmore at the Rent of 40 s. or Five Marks, by the Year; many Benefices that ought to be Preſentative, are by Negligence enjoy'd as though they were Appropriate.

“For the remedying of theſe Evils, next to God and his Sacred Majeſty, I know my Lord depends on your Fatherhood's Wiſdom, and Zeal for the Church. My Duty binds me to pray for a Bleſſing upon both your good Endeavours. For the preſent, my Lord hath pull'd down the Deputy's Seat in his own Chapel, and reſtor'd the Altar to it's ancient Place, which was thruſt out of Doors. The like is done in Chriſt's-Church. The Purgation and Reſtitution of the Stable to the right Owners and Uſes will follow next, and ſtrict Mandates to my Lords the Biſhops, to ſee the Churches repar'd, adorn'd, and preſerved, from Prophanation through the whole Kingdom.

“For the Clergy and their Revenues, my Lord is careful that no Petitions be admitted without good Certificate and diligent Enquiry, (thought a ſtrange Courſe here) and to enable himſelf, and the ſucceeding Deputies, to encourage ſuch as ſhall deſerve well in the Church, his Lordſhip intends, as well in the Commiſſion for defective Titles, as for the Plantations, to reſerve the Right of Advowſons to his Majeſty, and as well by diligent

This Teſtimony I muſt give of his Care, that it is not poſſible for the Intentions of a mortal Man, to be more ſerious and ſincere than his in thoſe Things that concern the Good of the Poor Church.

“ It is ſome Comfort to ſee the Romiſh Eccleſiaſticks cannot laugh at us, who come behind none in Point of Diſunion and Scandal.

I will not add a Word more, but the Profeſſion of my humble Thanks, and bounden Service; and ſo being ready to receive your Lordſhip's Commands, I deſire to remain, as your Noble Favours have for ever bound me,

The Archbiſhop endeavours to reform ſome Negligences in Churches.

(h) Lord Clarendon's Hiſt. Vol. 1.

On the 14th of October the King's ſecond Son, James, Duke of York, was born, and Chriſten'd by Archbiſhop Laud the 24th of November. It has been obſerv'd the Remiſſneſs of Abbot introduc'd a negligent Latitude, not to ſay Prophaneſs, in Divine Service. The Churches had neither Ornament or Decency, or ſo much as Reparation beſtow'd on them; and the Sacraments were adminiſter'd where the People had moſt Mind to receive them. (h) This prophane Indifference the Archbiſhop was reſolv'd to reform, and call'd upon his Suffragans for their Concurrence. The recovering the Churches from a Condition of Offenſiveneſs and Scandal, and bringing the Circumſtances of Devotion to an Uniformity, was without Queſtion a commendable Undertaking: But whether through the Obſtinacy of the People, the Expence of the Execution, or want of Temper in the Management, the Deſign miſcarried in ſome Places, and made the Diſcontents againſt the Hierarchy run higher.

And now to look over the Affairs of the Church in Scotland: The King had obſerved the Orders in the late Reign for officiating in the Engliſh Liturgy at Holy-Rood-Houſe had been diſcontinu'd; and being reſolv'd to attempt the bringing the whole Iſland to an Uniformity of Worſhip, he conceiv'd the Uſe of the Engliſh Common-Prayer in the Chapel Royal might prove a ſerviceable Introduction. For the Trial of this Expedient, he order'd Ballantine, Biſhop of Dunblaine, and Dean of the Chapel there, the following Inſtructions for Holy-Rood-Houſe.

The King's Inſtructions for officiating in the Engliſh Liturgy at the Chapel in Holy-Rood-Houſe.

CHARLES Rex.

I. Our expreſs Will and Pleaſure is, That the Dean of Our Chapel that now is, and his Succeſſors, ſhall be aſſiſtant to the Right Reverend Father in God the Archbiſhop of St. Andrew's at the Coronation, ſo often as it ſhall happen.

Charles I. K.

II. That the Book of the Form of Our Coronation, lately uſed, be put in a little Box, and laid into a Standard, and committed to the Care of the Dean of the Chapel ſucceſſively.

III. That there be Prayers twice a Day with the Choirs, as well in Our Abſence as otherwiſe, according to the Engliſh Liturgy, till ſome other Courſe be taken for making one that may fit the Cuſtoms and Conſtitutions of that Church.

IV. That the Dean of the Chapel look carefully that all that receive the bleſſed Sacrament there, receive it kneeling; and that there be a Communion held in that Our Chapel the firſt Sunday of every Month.

V. That the Dean of Our Chapel that now is, and ſo ſucceſſively, come duly thither to Prayers upon Sundays, and ſuch Holidays as the Church obſerves, in his Whites, and preach ſo whenſoever he preach there; and that he be not abſent thence but upon neceſſary Occaſion of his Dioceſſe, or otherwiſe, according to the Courſe of his Preferment.

VI. That theſe Orders ſhall be Our Warrant to the Dean of Our Chapel, that the Lords of Our Privy Council, the Lords of the Seſſion, the Advocate, Clerk, Writers to the Signet, and Members of Our College of Juſtice, be commanded to receive the Holy Communion once every Year, at the leaſt, in that Our Chapel Royal, and kneeling for Example ſake to the Kingdom. And we likewiſe command the Dean aforeſaid to make Report yearly to us how we are obeyed therein, and by whom; as alſo if any Man ſhall refuſe, in what Manner he doth ſo, and why.

Oct. 8. 1633.

VII. That the Copes which are conſecrated for the Uſe of Our Chapel be deliver'd to the Dean to be kept upon Inventory by him, and in a Standard provided for that Purpoſe, and to be uſed at the Celebration of the Sacrament in Our Chapel Royal.

To theſe Orders we ſhall hereafter add others, if we find others more neceſſary for the Service of God there. (i)

And the King poſſibly being apprehenſive Ballatine might be warping toward the Presbyterian Perſuaſion, gave the Archbiſhop of Canterbury a Warrant in Writing to correſpond with this Biſhop of Dunblaine, and tranſmit his Majeſty's Directions to him for the Management of the Chapel.

Id. Sect. XI. Num. 4.

Notwithſtanding Archbiſhop Laud exerted himſelf for retrieving the Uſages of the Church, he found the Puritan-Novelties very difficult to deal with. Calvin, and ſome others of that Complexion, were in many Places the Idols of the People: Inſomuch, that to practice up to the Primitive Church, to worſhip God in the Beauty of Holineſs, and guard the Solemnities from Contempt, was interpreted to Superſtition. To give an Inſtance of the undiſtinguiſhing Obſtinacy of theſe Men. The Pariſhioners of St. Gregory's in St. Paul's Church-yard, had been at a conſiderable Expence in ornamenting their Church: Amongſt other Furniture they had prepar'd a Table for the Holy Euchariſt. Now the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's being Ordinaries of the Place, directed them to ſet it at the Eaſt End of the Chancel, that by this Situation it might recover its ancient Standing, and be conformable to the Mother-Church. About five of the Pariſhioners conteſting this Order, appeal'd to the Dean and the Arches; and the Dean and Chapter to countermine them, referr'd the Deciſion to the King. On the 3d of November the Matter was brought before the Council-Board, the King being preſent. After the Cauſe had been pleaded at Length on both Sides, his Majeſty having firſt declar'd his Diſlike of all Innovation, gave Sentence for the Dean and Chapter: The Pariſhioners had urg'd the Eighty ſecond Canon to prove prove the Liberty of placing the Communion-Table in a Situation of moſt Conveniency. But here the King's Deciſion takes Notice, " That " this Liberty is not to be ſo underſtood, as if " it was left to the Direction of the Pariſh, and " much leſs to the ſingular Fancy of every humourſome Perſon, to over-rule this Matter. " To make this Inference, was a wide Miſconſtruction of the Canon: For theſe Circumſtances, both of Place and Time, were to be " govern'd by the Direction of the Ordinary." (k) This Judgment in Behalf of the Dean and Chapter was a ſerviceable Precedent, and encourag'd the Ordinaries in other Dioceſes to go through with the ſame Regulation. Towards the latter End of this Year the King wrote to the Archbiſhop for encouraging the printing Greek Manuſcripts: And becauſe the Letter may not be unacceptable to the Reader, I ſhall inſert it in the Records.* Farther, to promote the Intereſt of Oriental Learning the following Letter was ſent to the Turkey Merchants:

Truſty and Well-beloved We Greet you well. (l)

(l) Regiſt. Laud, Par. 1. fol. 196.

We have of late taken into Our Princely Care, how to furniſh the Greek Preſs within Our Kingdom, That ſuch of Our Subjects as are Learned in that Language might be able to ſet forth ſome of thoſe divers Manuſcripts in Greek, with which Our own Library, and the Libraries in Our Univerſities, are well furniſhed. Which Courſe, if it be well followed, (as we doubt not but it will) muſt needs bring a great deal of Profit and Honour both to Church and State. With the Conſideration of this concerning the Greek, we took into Our Care alſo a great Difficulty, which yet we conceive may be well maſter'd, if it be providently look'd into. There is a great deal of Learning, and that very fit and neceſſary to be known that is written in Arabick; and there is a great Defect in both Our Univerſities, very few ſpending their Time to attain that, or any other of the Eaſtern Languages; which We impute not ſo much to the Fault of the Students there, as partly to the great Scarcity and Want of Arabick and Perſian Books, on which they might ſpend their Pains, and partly to their lack both of Opportunity and Means to provide and furniſh themſeves with ſuch Books: While We took thus into Our Royal Conſideration, and withal how uſeful and neceſſary the Knowledge of thoſe Languages would be for Our Subjects, We could not but think and adviſe which Way ſome better Store of Arabick and Perſian Books might be gotten, and brought unto us. After along Deliberation, We could not find any Way ſo good, and likely to be ſucceſsful, as the employing your Service which trade thereabouts. And becauſe We would do it with little or no Burden at all unto you, We have thought of this Courſe, which We pray and command you to follow carefully, and with Effect; namely, That every Ship of yours, at every Voyage that it makes, ſhould bring home one Arabick or Perſian Manuſcript Book, to be deliver'd preſently to the Maſter of the Company, and by him ſent or carried to the Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury for the Time being, who ſhall diſpoſe of them as We in Our Wiſdom ſhall think fit. And we doubt not but you will be careful at all Times readily to perform this Service, which ſo much tends to Our own Honour, the Advancement of Learning, and the Good of Our People; the Value of one Book being not a conſiderable Thing. And always provided that they bring any other Books beſides the Alchorans, becauſe we have Choice of them already.

The Death of Godwin, Biſhop of Hereford.

This Year Francis Godwin, Biſhop of Hereford, departed this Life. He was Son to Thomas Godwin, Biſhop of Bath and Wells. Francis was tranſlated from the See of Landaff to that of Hereford by King James. He was a conſiderable Mathematician, a good Preacher, and an eminent Antiquary, and wrote well in Latin. His principal Works are his Book De Præſulibus Angliæ, and his Annals of the Reign of Henry the Eighth, King Edward the Sixth, and Queen Mary. Juxon, Dean of Worceſter, and Clerk of the Cloſet, was nominated for his Succeſſor. But upon Laud's Advancement to Canterbury, he was recommended to the King by that Archbiſhop for the See of London; and hither his Majeſty promoted him. And thus the Church of Hereford continuing vacant, Auguſtin Lyndſell was tranſlated thither, and Francis Dee, Doctor in Divinity, and Dean of Chicheſter, was made Biſhop of Peterborough.

Pryn proſecuted and cenſured in the Star-Chamber.

This Year William Pryn, Outer-Barriſter of Lincolns-Inn, was called to an Account for his Hiſtriomaſtix. In this Performance the Heat of his Temper, and his Puritanical Principles, carried him too far. He writes with no Guard of Diſcretion or Charity, rambles extravagantly beyond his Bounds; and not only falls upon Masks and Dancing without Reſerve, but flies his Satyr againſt Hunting, Publick Feſtivals, Keeping Chriſtmas, Bonefires, and May-Poles. (m)

* Ruſhworth's Collect. Vol. 2. Page 221.

Beſides theſe Miſdeameanors, for which he was proſecuted in the Star-Chamber, Attorney-General Noy cites ſeveral ſcandalous Paſſages in his Book, of which the Information took no Notice. The Reaſon why theſe Things were overlook'd in the Matter alledg'd againſt him, was their being of Eccleſiaſtical Cognizance, and proper for the High-Commiſſion.

To mention ſomewhat of this Part of Pryn's Invective. He throws a general Cenſure upon the Biſhops and Clergy, falls upon them for making an over expenſive and foreign Figure, and Taxes them with Scorning to feed the Poor. He complains of Cringing and Ducking to new erected Altars, and of dedicating St. Paul's to Diana. He goes on in this coarſe Way of Rallying, calls the Church-Muſick, a Bleating of brute Beaſts; Choriſters, ſays he, Bellow the Tenor as if they were Oxen, Bark a Counterpoint like a Kennel of Dogs, Rore a Treble as if they were Bulls, and Grunt out a Baſe like a Parcel of Hogs. The Lords of the Star-Chamber, that deliver'd their Opinion at large, and harangu'd upon Pryn's Misbehaviour, were the Lord Cottington, Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Lord Chief Juſtice Richardſon, the Earl of Dorſet, and Secretary Cook. After Three Days hearing, this Sentence paſs'd upon him; That he ſhould be expell'd the Society of Lincoln's-Inn, be degraded at Oxford, ſtand in the Pillory at Weſtminſter, and Cheapſide, loſe an Ear in each Place, with a Paper on his Head declaring his Offence; That he was puniſh'd for Publiſhing an infamous Libel againſt both their Majeſty's State and Government. And laſtly, he was fined Five thouſand Pounds to the King, and condemn'd to a perpetual Impriſonment. By Ruſhworth's Narrative one might conclude the reſt of the Court concurr'd with the Lords above-mention'd without making any Speeches. Had the Archbiſhop heightned the Charge, and deliver'd himſelf with the Acrimony and Vehemence of Lord Cottington and the other Three, we may reaſonably imagine it would not have been omitted by this Collector. But notwithſtanding this comparative Gentleneſs, Prynn is particularly picqu'd at Laud, ſends him a provoking Letter, and miſreports what the Archbiſhop had ſpoken when the Cenſure paſs'd in the Star-Chamber. Upon this, the Attorney General, by the King's Order, ſends for Prynn, ſhews him the Letter, and asks him whether 'twas his Hand: Prynn deſir'd to read it, for that otherwiſe he could not anſwer the Queſtion. The Letter being put into his Hands, he tore it in ſmall Pieces, and threw it out at the Window. Notwithſtanding this ſtroke of Art, he was proſecuted for a Libel, and at laſt pardon'd by Laud, in the Star-Chamber. This happen'd the next Year: But to give the Story more unbroken, I have mention'd it now.

I ſhall conclude this Year with the Archbiſhop's Account of the Condition of his Province, which he gave in to the King. It begins thus,

May it pleaſe your moſt ſacred Majeſty.

Anno Dom. 163¾. Archbiſhop Laud's annual Account of his Province to the King.

According to your Royal Commands, I do here upon the Second of January, preſent my Account of both the Dioceſe and Province of Canterbury, concerning all thoſe Church Affairs, which are contain'd within your Majeſty's moſt gracious Declaration and Inſtructions; publiſh'd out of your moſt princely and religious Care to preſerve Unity in Orthodox Doctrine, and Conformity to the Government, in this Church of England.

And firſt for his own Dioceſe of Canterbury, he acquaints the King, his Time has been ſo ſhort, that he can only certify, ſome of his Peculiars in London, are extremely out of Order.

For the Biſhoprick of London, 'tis certified, that the Biſhop had not receiv'd a Complaint againſt any of his Clergy ſince his coming to that See, which was at laſt Michaelmas.

The Biſhop of Bath and Wells had taken a great Deal of Pains in his late Viſitation, to make all the King's Inſtructions obſerv'd. And particularly, he put down ſeveral Lecturers in Market-Towns, who were benefic'd in other Dioceſes. Becauſe he found that when they preach'd factious Sermons, they retir'd into other Counties, beyond the Reach of his Juriſdiction.

In the Dioceſe of Rocheſter, the Town of Mawling, and that whole Deanry, were very much out of Order: But the Archbiſhop, by the Lord Biſhops Command had ſettled them.

And whereas his Majeſty's Inſtructions require, that Lecturers ſhould turn their Afternoon Sermons into Catechiſing, ſome Parſons and Vicars within the Dioceſe of Peterborough, object againſt their being included within the Order; becauſe Lecturers, as they pretend, are only mention'd: But this being no better than Miſconſtruction, the Biſhop will quickly take Care to clear the Doubt, and ſettle the Practice accordingly.

The Biſhop of Coventry and Litchfield complains, the Peculiars of his Dioceſe (in which he has no Power) are much out of Order. His Lordſhip further certifies his having ſuppreſs'd a ſeditious Lecture at Repon: He had likewiſe put down ſeveral Monthly Lectures, kept with a Faſt, and manag'd by a Moderator. He had alſo ſuppreſs'd a Meeting, call'd, the Running-Lecture: 'Twas ſo call'd, becauſe the Lecturer went from Village to Village; and at the End of the Week gave publick Notice where they might find him for the next Exerciſe.

The Biſhop of St. Aſaph acquainted the Archbiſhop, that the Condition of his Dioceſe was without Exception, abating the Increaſe of Romiſh Recuſants in ſome Places, which ſeems to be encourag'd, by their ſuperſtitious Concourſe to St. Winifred's Well.

The Biſhop of Landaff certifies, that he has not ſo much as one ſtubborn Non-Conformiſt, or ſchiſmatical Miniſter within his Dioceſe. And that there are but Two Lecturers, and thoſe both licens'd Preachers.

The Lord Biſhop of Lincoln reports, That the Company of Mercers in London, intruſted with the Legacy of one Mr. Fiſhburn, has ſet up a Lecture in Huntington, with an Allowance of Forty P[illegible]ds per Annum: But then the Eſtabliſhment is lodg'd with this Proviſo, that upon the Company's Diſlike of any Lecturer, he was to be diſcharg'd at a Month or a Fortnight's Warning; neither was his Dioceſan or Metropolitan to interpoſe in this Affair. And here the Archbiſhop intreats the King that no Layman whatſoever, and leaſt of all Companies or Corporations, may under any Pretence of a Benefaction to the Church, or otherwiſe, have Power to put in, or turn out, any Lecturer, or other Miniſter. To this Requeſt, the King Anſwers in theſe Words: "Certainly I "can't hold fit, that any Lay Perſon or Corpo"ration whatſoever, ſhould have the Power "theſe Men would take to themſelves. For I "will have no Prieſt have a Neceſſity of a Lay"Dependancy.

To proceed, The Biſhop of Lincoln complains, 'tis the Cuſtom of ſome in Bedfordſhire, to ſtrole from their Pariſh Churches, and follow Preachers of their own Fancy: And that he had order'd his Officers to take ſtrict Notice, of their Miſbehaviour; and as for the Placing of the Communion-Table in Pariſh Churches, this Prelate declares, he takes Care of it purſuant to the Canon. Theſe Two laſt particulars, tho' not within the Regal Inſtructions, the Archbiſhop takes Care to report, to do Juſtice to Biſhop Williams, and recommend him to his Majeſty's good Opinion. The Biſhopricks of Hereford and Bangor were void, and no Certificates tranſmitted before the Vacancy.

The Biſhop of Ely certifies, that by the beſt Information he can get, none of his Majeſty's Inſtructions are diſobey'd in his Dioceſe.

All theſe Biſhops, continues the Archbiſhop, agree, That all other Things (abating the Singularities above-mention'd) in his Majeſty's Inſtructions, are carefully obſerv'd: And particularly that Branch of them, which relates to diſcourſes upon the prohibited Queſtions. And laſtly, the Archbiſhop acquaints the King, that from the Dioceſes of Saliſbury, Norwich, Worceſter, Oxford, Briſtol, Wincheſter, Chicheſter, Glouceſter and Exeter, he had as yet receiv'd no Certificate. (n)

And thus, I have given the Reader the moſt material Paſſages in this Report. By the Way, the Archbiſhops giving the King an annual Account of his Adminiſtration, and the Condition of his Province, was altogether new, (excepting Abbot's laſt Year,) neither does it appear that Neile Archbiſhop of York followed the Precedent. But from hence it muſt not be inferr'd, that Laud was ſo far an Eraſtian, as to believe his Epiſcopal Authority deriv'd from the Crown. No; he diſclaims this Opinion at his Tryal. The Report therefore of theſe Matters, was only to inform his Majeſty of the State of the Church: To ingage his Countenance, and diſpoſe him to abet the Spiritual Cenſures.

I ſhall now break off the Hiſtory at Home, and attend the Affairs of the Church in Ireland. On the Fourteenth of July the Parliament met at Dublin Caſtle. Before I proceed to the Statutes which concern Religion, I ſhall give the Reader part of the Convocations Addreſs, for the better Maintenance of the Rural Clergy: It ſtands thus,

To

(n) Hiſt. of the Troubles, &c. of Archbiſhop Laud, p. 525.

To our dread Sovereign Charles, by the Grace of God, King of Great-Britain, France and Ireland.

The humble Petition of his Highneſs's moſt loyal and devoted Subjects, the Archbiſhops and Biſhops of Ireland aſſembled in Convocation by his Majeſty's Special Command, (o)

(o) Paper Office.

Anno Dom. 1634. The Iriſh Convocations Addreſs to the King.

Sheweth unto your Sacred Majeſty,

That in the whole Chriſtian World, the Rural Clergy have not been reduc'd to ſuch extreme Contempt and Beggery, as in this your Highneſs's Kingdom, by the Means of the frequent Appropriations, Commendams, and violent Intruſions into their undoubted Rights in Times of Confuſion: Having their Churches ruin'd, their Habitations left deſolate, their Tythes detain'd, their Glebes conceal'd, and by inevitable Conſequence an invincible Neceſſity of a general Non-Reſidence impos'd upon them, whereby the ordinary Subject has been left wholly deſtitute of all poſſible Means to learn true Piety to God, Loyalty to their Prince, Civility towards one another, and whereby former Wars and Inſurrections have been occaſionally, both procreated and maintain'd: Whereas by ſettling a Rural Clergy, endow'd with Competency to ſerve God at his Altar, beſides the general Protection of the Almighty, which it will moſt ſurely bring upon your Majeſty and this Kingdom, Barbariſm and Superſtition will be expell'd, the Subject ſhall learn his Duty to God and his Sovereign, and true Religion be propagated.

Our moſt humble Suit is, That your Highneſs would be graciouſly pleas'd for God's Cauſe, and for his Churches Cauſe, and for the Encouragement of others by your Royal Example to ſo good a Work, to perfect the pious Intentions of your bleſſed Father, and your ſacred Majeſty, by Eſtabliſhing upon a Rural and Reſident Clergy, thoſe Appropriations which are yet in the Crown undiſpos'd. So as the ſame may bring no Diminution to your Revenue, nor conſiderable Prejudice to the Rights of the imperial Crown of this Realm, as by a Repreſentation of the true State of theſe Benefices made to the Lord Deputy, and hereunto annexed, may appear, &c.

By this Addreſs 'tis evident the King's Letters Patent for reſtoring Impropriations, were not fully executed.

To proceed, our Nine and thirty Articles were receiv'd by this Convocation. In the Year One thouſand ſix hundred and fifteen, the Iriſh Church had ſettled upon a different Belief from the Engliſh Reformation, as has been already obſerv'd. The Lord Primate Uſher being now Calviniſtically inclin'd, and having a conſiderable Aſcendant over the Biſhops and Clergy, the Ratifying the Iriſh Articles was mov'd in both Houſes. This Point would moſt probably have been carried, had not the Buſineſs been dextrouſly manag'd by ſome Members of a different Perſuaſion. The Suggeſtion was, That theſe Articles paſs'd in the Year One thouſand ſix hundred and fifteen; were already fortified, with all the Authority that Church could give them: And that a further Confirmation would imply a Defect in their Conſtitution: The Blow being thus put by, they advanc'd to a further Step, and mov'd the Primate, that for ſilencing the Papiſts Objections of Diſagreement amongſt the Proteſtants, and bringing the Britiſh and Iriſh Churches to a cloſer Correſpondence; to this Purpoſe they mov'd the Primate, a Canon might be paſs'd for approving the Articles of the Church of England. The Archbiſhop being gain'd to this Propoſal, the Canon was drawn up, and paſs'd Nemine Contradicente, a ſingle Vote only excepted. It ſeems one Calviniſt had look'd deeper than the reſt into the Matter. The Canon which approv'd and receiv'd the Articles of the Church of England, was couch'd in the following Words, viz.

Of the Agreement of the Church of England and Ireland, in the Profeſſion of the ſame Faith.

They receive the 39 Articles of the Church of England.

For the Manifeſtation of our Agreement with the Church of England, in the Confeſſion of the ſame Chriſtian Faith; and Doctrine of the Sacraments, We do Receive and Approve the Book of Articles of Religion, agreed upon by the Archbiſhops and Biſhops, and the whole Clergy in whole Convocation holden at London, Anno Dom. 1562. for the Avoiding of Diverſities of Opinions, and for the Eſtabliſhing of Conſent touching true Religion. And therefore, if any hereafter ſhall affirm, that any of thoſe Articles are in any part Superſtitious and erroneous, or ſuch as he may not with a good Conſcience ſubſcribe unto, let him be excommunicated, and not abſolved before he makes a publick Revocation of his Error. (p)

(p) Bibl. Reg. Sect. 3. Num. 13.

It has been affirm'd that the Iriſh Articles abovemention'd, were formally null'd by this Convocation. But in Diſproof of this Aſſertion, Archbiſhop Uſher's Teſtimony is cited by a conſiderable Hiſtorian. (q) However, this entire Receiving the Nine and thirty Articles, without the leaſt Reſerve, implies a vertual Abrogating their Own: This, I ſay, is the neceſſary Conſequence, as far as there is any Inconſiſtency between the Engliſh and Iriſh Articles. For this Canon being the laſt Act of the Iriſh Church, it muſt like a laſt Will, ſtand in force againſt all Prior Declarations of a contrary Import.

Biſhop Uſher's Life, by Parr. pag. 42.

To go on to the Parliament at Dublin. I ſhall begin with the Act for confirming Eight entire Subſidies, granted by the Prelates and Clergy. The Preamble of this Grant addreſs'd to the King, ſets forth the miſerable Condition of the Church of Ireland, at King James his Acceſſion to the Throne. And here, after having repreſented the Calamity of the Clergy, much in the ſame Manner already mention'd in their Petition, they proceed to this Acknowledgment, That now (to uſe their own Words) by the Piety and Bounty of your bleſſed Father, and by the gracious Influence of your ſacred Majeſty, being new enlivened, and Beginning to lift up our Heads out of Darkneſs and Obſcurity, do freely Acknowledge to your immoꝛtal Gloꝛy, befoꝛe God and the whole Chꝛiſtian Woꝛld, that as no Church under Heaven did ever ſtand moꝛe in need, ſo none did ever find moꝛe Royal and Munificent Patrons and Pꝛotectoꝛs, than the pooꝛ Church of Ireland. You have not only made Reſtitution of that which the Iniquity of foꝛmer Ages had bereft us of. But alſo as though you intended to expiate their Faults, enriched us with New and Pꝛincely Endowments: All which great Favours do yet become moꝛe ſweet unto us, whilſt we entertain them as Pledges of your future unexhauſted Goodneſs: And if we do not ſeriouſly endeavour thꝛoughout our whole Lives, to make unfained Expꝛeſſions of true Loyalty and Thankfulneſs to your ſacred Majeſty, we deſerve to be condemned by Men, and puniſhed by God, as Monſters of Ingratitude. To which infinite Obligations, and many others, we may add your Majeſty's ineſtimable Goodneſs, in pꝛoviding foꝛ us your pꝛeſent Deputy, Thomas Viſcount Wentworth, a Governour ſo Juſt, Careful, Pꝛovident and Pꝛopitious to the Church. (r)

This Petition was graciouſly receiv'd, and ſeveral of the Privy Council were appointed to conſider it. Charles I. K.

This Year the Archbiſhop of Canterbury began his metropolitical Viſitation in the Dioceſe of Lincoln; and in the Firſt Place, the Biſhop and the Six Archdeacons were ſuſpended the Exerciſe of their Juriſdiction; during the Time of this Viſitation. Biſhop Williams at firſt refus'd to acknowledge this Archiepiſcopal Privilege, and pretended a Papal Exemption. But the Buſineſs being brought before the Council Board, and the Records of either Side examin'd, this Plea was found inſufficient. This Obſtruction being got over, Brent the Vicar-General goes on with the Viſitation, and purſuant to his Articles, enjoins the Church-Wardens to remove the Communion-Table to the Eaſt End of the Chancel, and incloſe it with a decent Rail. He gave them further in Charge, that they were to return the Names of the Lecturers in their reſpective Pariſhes: And whether thoſe Lecturers, and the reſt of the Preaching Clergy, obſerv'd his Majeſty's Inſtructions, publiſh'd in the Year, 1629.

Conteſts about placing the Communion-Table.

The bringing the Communion-Table into the Chancel, which ſituation had been long diſcontinued in ſeveral Places, occaſion'd a warm Conteſt, both in this Dioceſe and elſewhere. As to Biſhop Williams, he ſeems formerly to have been entirely in Laud's Sentiment. For in his own Chapel at Bugden, the Communion-Table was plac'd at the Eaſt End, where the Altar ſtood before: The Table ſtood in the ſame Poſture in his Cathedral of Lincoln, and in the collegiate Church of Weſtminſter, where he was Dean. But now he chang'd his Opinion in ſome Meaſure, and gave Orders for railing in the Communion-Table in the Middle of the Chancel, and not at the Eaſt End. And to ſupport his Practice, he writes Two Tracts upon the Controverſy; one entituled, A Letter to the Vicar of Grantham, and the other call'd, Holy Table, Name and Thing. Both theſe Performances were anſwer'd by Doctor Heylin.

The Factories, &c. conform to the Engliſh Liturgy.

June 1634.

And now Archbiſhop Laud had procured an Order of Council for bringing the Engliſh Factories and Forces in Holland to a Conformity with the Liturgy. 'Twas the ſame in Subſtance with the Conſiderations laid before the Board, already mention'd. This Order gain'd the laſt Winter, was executed this Year.

And the Number of the Engliſh Merchants being conſiderable in Holland, and particularly at Delph. The Archbiſhop wrote the following Letter to the Factory there.

Archbiſhop Laud's Letter to the Factory at Delph.

After our hearty Commendations, &c. We are commanded by his Majeſty to ſignify unto you, That this Bearer, Mr. Beaumont, choſen by joint Conſent of your Company, to be your Preacher at Delph, or where elſe you ſhall at any Time reſide, is a Man learned, ſober and conformable to the Doctrine and Diſcipline eſtabliſhed in the Church of England, and that you are to receive him with all decent and courteous Uſage, fitting his Perſon and Calling, and to allow him the uſual ancient Stipend, which Mr. Forbes lately, or any other before him, hath received. And further we are to let you know, that it is his Majeſty's expreſs Command, that both you, the Deputy, and all and every other Merchant that is, or ſhall be reſiding in thoſe Parts beyond the Seas, do conform themſelves to the Doctrine and Diſcipline ſetled in the Church of England: And that they frequent the Common-Prayers with all Religious Duty and Reverence at all Times required, as well as they do Sermons. And that out of your Company, you do yearly about Eaſter, as the Canons preſcribe, name Two Church-Wardens, and Two Sides-Men, which may look to the Orders of the Church, and give an Account according to their Office. And

And Mr. Beaumont himſelf is hereby to take Notice, that his Majeſty's expreſs Pleaſure and Command to him is, that he do punctually keep and obſerve all the Orders of the Church of England, as they are preſcribed in the Canons and the Rubricks of the Liturgy. And that if any of your Company ſhall ſhew themſelves refractory to this Ordinance of his Majeſty (which we hope will not be) he is to certify the Name, of any ſuch Offender, and his Offence to the Lord Biſhop of London for the Time being, who is to take Order, and give Remedy accordingly. And theſe Letters you are to regiſter and keep by you, that they which come after may underſtand what Care his Majeſty hath taken for the well ordering of your Company in Church Affairs. And you are likewiſe to deliver a Copy of theſe Letters to Mr. Beaumont, and to every Succeſſor of his reſpectively, that he and they may know what his Majeſty expects from them, and be the more inexcuſable if they diſobey. Thus, not doubting but that you will ſhew your ſelves very reſpectful to theſe his Majeſty's Commands, we leave you to the Grace of God, and reſt

The ſame Directions, as to the Main, were ſent to the Factory at Hamburgh, and all other Places of Trade, and Plantations, where the Engliſh were ſettled: Ambaſſadors Families were likewiſe put under the ſame Regulation for Divine Service. (t)

The Nonconformiſts in New-England erect a Calviniſtick Church.

But notwithſtanding this Order was generally receiv'd in the four great Diviſions of the World, New-England was ſomewhat of an Exception. The Diſſenters, who tranſported themſelves thither, eſtabliſhed their own Fancy, and form'd a Church this Year upon Calvin's Model. (u)

As for the French and Dutch Churches in England, they ſtruggled for a Spiritual Independency; but at laſt finding the Diſcipline and Worſhip of the Church preſs'd ſtrongly upon them, they ſeem'd to acquieſce; and complied ſo far as to publiſh the Archbiſhop's Injunction (already mentioned) in their Aſſemblies, through this whole Province. Neile, Archbiſhop of York, held 'em to ſtricter Terms, allow'd no Indulgence to thoſe of the firſt Deſcent, and denied them the Uſe of any Juriſdiction of their own Eſtabliſhment. (w)

This Year Thomas Cooke, Batchelor of Divinity, Fellow of Brazen-Noſe in Oxford, had, in a Latin Sermon, exceeded the Bounds preſcribed in the King's Injunctions, and run out upon the Quinquarticular Controverſy: For this Misbehaviour he made a publick Recantation: And notwithſtanding his Diſcourſe was bending toward the Puritan Side of the Queſtion, he afterwards ſtood clear of that Byaſs, and died a very Orthodox Member of the Church of England. (x)

From the Archbiſhop's Report of the Affairs of his Province this Year, I ſhall only obſerve his acquainting the King, that in all the Dioceſſes he had viſited, the lamentable Snbſiſtence of the poor Vicars was a general Grievance: And which was a harder Circumſtance in this Calamity, the Vicars in great Market Towns, where the Congregations were very numerous, had commonly the ſlendereſt Proviſion. By the reſt of this Annual Account, it appears, the Province ſtood much in the ſame Condition 'twas in the laſt Year, and therefore I ſhall omit the Recital: Only thus much may be obſerved, that Conformity came forward, and the Church gain'd Ground upon the Puritan Party. (y)

Jan. 2*d*. Ann. Dom. $163\frac{4}{5}$.

To proceed, the Metropolitical Viſitation was continued from Year to Year, till the whole Province was gone through. The Vicar General Brent having given the Charge, and allow'd the Church-wardens Time for returning their Certificates, left the further Management to their reſpective Biſhops. And here the placing the Communion-Table at the Eaſt End of the Chancel was not every where underſtood; particularly, this Viſitation-Article was not carried without Conteſt in the Dioceſſes of Litchfield and London: Pierce, Biſhop of Bath and Wells, had better Succeſs. To make this Alteration paſs ſmoothly, he endeavoured to convince his People of the Reaſonableneſs of it. “ He ſuggeſted, 'twas ordered by Queen Elizabeth's Injunctions, that the Communion-Table ſhould ſtand in the Place of the Altar; that there ought to be ſome Difference between placing the Lord's Table in the Church, and that of a Common Table for eating in our own Houſes: That 'twas not decent the People ſhould ſit above God's Table, or above his Miniſter the Prieſt, when he conſecrates: That by this Situation of the Communion-Table at the Eaſt End, the Chancel would be enlarged, and more Room left for the Communicants. That the Prieſt officiating upon an Aſcent would be ſeen and heard to more Advantage, than if the Table ſtood upon a Level in the Middle: That 'twas highly proper the Parochial Churches ſhould conform to the Cuſtom of their reſpective Cathedrals. And laſtly, that being fenced with a Rail in this Situation, would be the only way to ſecure it from Prophanation and Common Buſineſs.

Ann. Dom. 1635.

Ancient Uſages retrieved in the Cathedrals, and elſewhere.

And thus by convincing their Underſtandings, before he commanded their Practice, he reconciled a great Part of his Dioceſs to this commendable Uſage.

The Archbiſhop went on to the Regulation of Cathedrals, for a Precedent to the reſt. And here in one half of the Sees, want of Force and full Direction in the Statutes, occaſion'd Confuſion. Of the Twenty-ſix Sees in England and Wales, Thirteen are founded in Secular Canons; and of theſe I have given a Recital in the former Part of this Work. Theſe Churches of the old Foundation, as they are call'd, were well furniſh'd with Statutes, and excepting Hereford, wanted no Aſſiſtance this way: The other Moiety ſtanding originally on Monaſtick Orders, being diſſolv'd by King Henry the Eighth, were new founded with a Dean and Chapter of Secular Prieſts. Under this laſt Diviſion, the Churches of Canterbury, Wincheſter, Ely, Worceſter, Rocheſter, Norwich, and the four new Biſhopricks of Oxford, Peterborough, Glouceſter, and Briſtol, together with thoſe of Durham, Carliſle, and Cheſter, in the other Province, are to be reckoned. For each of theſe Cathedrals of the new Foundation, a Body of Statutes were drawn, but neither carried to a full length, nor confirm'd in the Forms of Law. The Meaſures of Conduct lying thus uncertain, occaſioned frequent Claſhes between the Dean and Prebendaries; the Deans pretending to a more Arbitrary Government than the Chapters were willing to acknowledge. The perfecting theſe Regulations, and bringing the Cathedrals to a better Harmony, was projected by the Archbiſhop: And in all likelihood he had gone thorough with this worthy Undertaking, had he not been diſabled by the publick Diſturbances.

Different Regulations in the Cathedrals of the old and new Foundations.

A new Body of Statutes provided for the Church at Canterbury.

However, he made ſomething of an Eſſay, and loſt no Time while the Seaſon laſted: And to recommend his Method, he began his Reformation with his own Cathedral at Canterbury; and here he found Things in a tolerable Order: The Table was plac'd at the Eaſt End of the Choir, and bowing us'd towards it, by the Appointment of the Dean and Chapter. This Decency and Devotion being thus far ſettled, he advanc'd another Step, and ordered new Ornaments of Plate and Hangings for the Furniture of the Altar, and to keep Things from relapſing into Negligence and Diſuſe, he drew a new Body of Statutes for the Cathedral, and got them confirmed under the Broad Seal. By one Article in theſe Statutes, the Deans, Prebendaries and Officers, were oblig'd by Oath to worſhip God, by bowing towards the Altar at their coming in, and going out of the Choir. Reſembling Regulations were made this Year by the Vicar General, at Wincheſter and Chicheſter; where Directions were given to provide four Copes, to rail in the Communion-Table, to place it in the Altar-Situation, to bow towards it, and conſtantly read the Epiſtles and Goſpels at it. The Statutes of Hereford being imperfect, he threw them into a new Form, and ſent them down fortify'd with the Broad Seal. "By this "Regulation the Prebendaries were bound to "officiate on Sundays and Holy-days in their "Copes: To ſtand up at the Creeds, Goſpel and "Doxologies: To bow at the Name of Jeſus, and "towards the Altar, and not ſuffer any Perſon to be cover'd in the Church; and that the "Prayer before their Sermons ſhould be made "purſuant to the Fifty-fifth Canon. By theſe Appointments we may collect how far this Cathedral had warp'd towards Puritaniſm, and gone off from the Rules of the Church. This Reformation was carried through other Dioceſſes: And thus, by degrees, Religion appear'd more venerable, and the Cathedrals were recover'd to their Ancient Splendor and Solemnity.

The Biſhops Davenant and Morton of the Archbiſhop's Opinion in two Inſtances.

After all, the Archbiſhop was not ſingular in placing the Communion-Table, and worſhipping towards the Altar: For Davenant of Salisbury, and Morton of Durham, two Biſhops altogether unſuſpected of any Byaſs towards Popery, were of the ſame Sentiment. For the Purpoſe, there happening a Diſpute between the Parſon and Church-wardens, in Wiltſhire, about placing the Communion-Table, the Buſineſs was referr'd to Biſhop Davenant, who determin'd in Favour of the Incumbent: And by a Decree under his Epiſcopal Seal, order'd the Table ſhould ſtand in the Place of the Altar: In this Decree there are two remarkable Paſſages: Firſt, That by the Injunctions of Queen Elizabeth, and by the Thirty ſecond Canon under King James, the Communion-Tables ſhould ordinarily be ſet, and ſtand with the Side to the Eaſt Wall of the Chancel. And Secondly, That it is Ignorance to think that the ſtanding of the Table in that Place does reliſh of Popery. (z)

Further, for Adoration towards the Table, Biſhop Morton's Teſtimony is a ſufficient Purgation. This Prelate, in a Tract againſt the Sacrifice of the Maſs, founded upon the Belief of Tranſubſtantiation, has theſe Words: "The like Difference, ſays he, may be diſcern'd between their "Manner of Reverence in bowing towards the "Altar for Adoration of the Euchariſt only, and "ours in bowing, as well when there is no "Euchariſt on the Table, as when there is, "which is not to the Table of the Lord, but to "the Lord of the Table, to teſtify the Communion of all the faithful Communicants therewith, even as the People of God did in adoring him before the Ark his Footſtool, Pſalm 99.

To take off ſome hard Imputations upon the King's Declaration, concerning lawful Sports, two Books were publiſhed againſt the Calvinian Party; one of them was written by White, Biſhop of Ely, a Learned Prelate, who had ſignalized himſelf againſt the Papiſts in Defence of the Reformation: His Book going on the argumentative and ſcholaſtick Part, was entituled, A Treatiſe of the Sabbath-day, containing a Defence of the Orthodoxal Doctrine of the Church of England againſt Sabbatarian Novelty. The other Tract call'd, The Hiſtory of the Sabbath, was written by Dr. Heylin, Prebendary of Weſtminſter: The Deſign is to ſhew the Practice of the Church through all Ages: In his firſt Part he takes his Riſe from the Creation of the World, and reports Matter of Fact, to the Deſtruction of the Temple. His ſecond Part begins with the Hiſtory of our Saviour and his Apoſtles, and comes down to the Year One thouſand ſix hundred thirty-three, when the reading the King's Declaration was enjoin'd the Clergy. This Book muſt be confeſs'd a Learned Performance, but that the Author has not puſh'd the Controverſy towards an Extream, and encouraged too great a Liberty, is more than I dare determine.

A Book of Canons for the Scotch Church publiſhed.

About this Time the Scotch Biſhops were employed in drawing a Book of Canons, and forming a Liturgy for the Uſe of that Church. The Canons being finiſhed in the firſt Place, his Majeſty was pleaſed to give theſe Reaſons in his large Declaration, for ſetting them forth.

"Firſt, he thought it neceſſary ſome Book, comprizing the Rules of Eccleſiaſtical Government, "ſhould be publiſhed: That by this Means there "might be a fixed Meaſure for ſtating the Power "of the Clergy, and the Practice of the Laity. "Secondly, That the Acts of their Aſſemblies being "only in Manuſcript, would not reach the Generalty: Beſides, theſe Records were ſo bulky "and voluminous, that the tranſcribing them was "almoſt impracticable: And thus few, even of "the Presbyters could pronounce upon the Authority of the Copies, and diſtinguiſh between genuine, and interpolated Paſſages: Beſides, the "Removing of them from one Cuſtody to another, and lodging them ſo uncertainly, they "ſcarcely knew where to apply for Information. "Thirdly, That by reducing theſe Regulations "to a leſſer Compaſs, and laying them open to "publick View, no Body could miſcarry through "Ignorance, or complain of being over-charged. "And, Laſtly, That not one in that Kingdom governed his Practice by the Acts of thoſe General Aſſemblies.

Bibl. Reg. Sect. 2. Num. IX.

The Canons being drawn upon this View, and preſented to his Majeſty, he ſigned a Warrant to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, requiring him and Juxton, Biſhop of London, to examine this Draught; to alter and reform at Diſcretion, and bring it as near as might be to a Conformity with the Engliſh Canons. Theſe two Biſhops having executed the King's Orders, and prepared a Book for the Preſs, the King confirmed it under the Great Seal. The Inſtrument ſets forth, that his Majeſty by his Prerogative Royal, and Supreme Authority in Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical, ratifies and confirms the ſaid Canons, Orders and Conſtitutions, and all and every thing in them contained, And ſtrictly commands all Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and others exerciſing Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, to ſee them punctually obſerved *.

When

The Scotch Miniſters Exceptions againſt the Matter.

When theſe Canons were publiſhed, the Scotch Preſbyters declared againſt them: Their Objections were of two Sorts; they diſliked the Matter enjoyned, and the Manner of impoſing them. The Canons rejected upon the Score of the Matter, were chiefly theſe following. They neither underſtood the Aſſertions of ſome, nor the Injunctions of the reſt. The Canons conteſted were,

“(1.) That whoever ſhould affirm the King's Majeſty, had not the ſame Authority in Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical, that the godly Kings had among the Jews, (tho' without Queſtion the ungodly ones had the ſame) or the Chriſtian Emperors in the Primitive Church; or impugn in any Part his Royal Supremacy in Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical, was to incur the Cenſure of Excommunication.

“(2.) The like Cenſure was to paſs upon thoſe who ſhould affirm the Worſhip contained in the Book of Common-Prayer, and Adminiſtration of the Sacraments; or that the Government of the Church by Archbiſhops and Biſhops, &c. contained any Thing repugnant to the Scriptures; or was corrupt, ſuperſtitious, or unlawful in the Service and Worſhip of God.

“(3.) That Ordinations were reſtrained to four Times of the Year, that is, the firſt Weeks of March, June, September and December.

“(4.) That every Eccleſiaſtical Perſon at his Admiſſion, ſhould take the Oath of Supremacy, according to the Form required by Parliament; and the like Oath for avoiding Simony, required in the Book of Conſecration.

“(5.) That every Preſbyter ſhall either by himſelf, or by another Perſon lawfully called, read or cauſe Divine Service to be done, according to the Form of the Book of the Scottiſh Common-Prayer, before all Sermons; and that he ſhould officiate by the ſaid Book of Common-Prayer, in all the Offices, Parts and Rubricks of it.

“(6.) That no Preacher ſhould impugn the Doctrine delivered by another in the ſame Church, or any adjacent one, without Leave from the Biſhop.

“(7.) That no Preſbyter ſhould hereafter be Cautioner or Surety for any Perſon whatſoever, in Civil Bonds or Contracts, under the Penalty of Suſpenſion.

“(8.) That the Remainder of the Bread and Wine, prepared for the Communion, ſhould be given to the poorer Sort of thoſe, who received that Day, and which was to be eat and drank by them before they went out of the Church.

“(9.) Preſbyters are enjoyned to adminiſter the Sacrament of Baptiſm, without Diſtinction of Days in Caſe of Sickneſs and Danger: And the People are required to receive the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper in a kneeling Poſture.

“(10.) That in all Sentences of Separation, à Thoro & Menſâ, there ſhall be a Condition inſerted, and Security given: That the Perſons divorced ſhall live regularly and unlicentiouſly, and not marry again during each others Life.

“(11.) That no private Meeting be held by Preſbyters, or any other Perſons, whatſoever, for expounding Scripture, or debating Matters Eccleſiaſtical: Things of this Nature being only to be diſcuſſed in Synods of Biſhops.

“(12.) That, under the Penalty of Excommunication, no Preſbyter or Layman, jointly or ſeverally, ſhall be allowed to make Rules, Orders or Conſtitutions, in Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical: Or to add, or take away, from any Rubricks, Articles, or other Things now eſtabliſhed, without the Authority of the King, or his Succeſſors.

“(13.) That National or General Aſſemblies are to be called only by the King's Authority; And that the Decrees of ſuch Aſſemblies in Matters Eccleſiaſtical, ſhould bind the Abſent: And that it ſhould not be lawful for the Biſhops themſelves in ſuch Aſſemblies, or elſewhere, to alter any Article, Rubrick, Canon Doctrinal, or Diſciplinary, without his Majeſty's Leave firſt had and obtained.

“(14.) That no Man ſhould be covered in Time of Divine Service, unleſs with a Cap or Night-Coif, in Caſe of ill Health: And that all Perſons ſhall reverently kneel, at the Reading the Confeſſion, and other Prayers, and ſtand up at the Creed.

“(15.) That no Preſbyter, or Reader, ſhall be permitted to pray Extempore, or uſe any other Form in the Publick Service, than that preſcribed, under the Penalty of Deprivation.

“(16.) That all Preſbyters, and Preachers, ſhall exhort the People to join with them in Prayer, uſing ſome few and ſuitable Expreſſions, and always concluding with the Lord's-Prayer.

“(17.) That no Perſon ſhould teach either in publick Schools, or private Houſes, unleſs licenced by the Archbiſhop of the Province, or by the Biſhop of the Dioceſs, under their Hand and Seal: And that none are thus to be licenced, unleſs Men of Orthodox Belief, and Conformity, to the Orders of the Church.

“(18.) That none ſhould be admitted to read in any College, without qualifying themſelves by taking the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy.

“(19.) That nothing ſhall be printed, unleſs firſt peruſed and allowed by the Viſitors, appointed for that Purpoſe; the Penalty of Contravention being left (as in all other Caſes where no Penalty is expreſſed) to the Diſcretion of the Biſhops.

“(20.) That no publick Faſts ſhall be appointed upon Sundays (as has beeen Cuſtomary) and that the Appointment of ſuch Humiliations be made by none but his Majeſty.

“(21.) That for adminiſtring the Sacrament of Baptiſm, a Font ſhall be prepared and fixed near the Church Porch, according to ancient Uſage: That a fine Linen Cloth ſhould likewiſe be provided for this Purpoſe, and all decently kept.

“ (22.) That a decent Table for celebrating the Holy Communion ſhould be provided, and ſet at the upper End of the Chancel or Church: That at the Time of Divine Service the Table ſhall be covered with a handſome Stuff Carpet; and when the Holy Euchariſt is adminiſtered with a white Linnen Cloth: And that Baſons, Cups or Chalices, of ſome fine Metal, ſhall be provided to furniſh the Communion Table, and uſed only for that Purpoſe, “ (23.) That ſuch Biſhops and Presbyters, as ſhall happen to die without Iſſue, ſhall leave their Effects, or a great Part of them to pious Uſes: And in Caſe they had Iſſue, they ſhould beſtow ſome Legacies as a Mark of their Affection upon the Church, and for promoting the Intereſt of Religion.

“ (24.) That no Sentence of Excommunication ſhould be pronounced, or Abſolution given by any Presbyter, without the Leave and Approbation of the Biſhop: And that no Presbyter ſhould diſcover any Thing told him in Confeſſion, to any Perſon whatſoever, excepting the Crime is ſuch, that by the Laws of the Realm, his own Life may be in Danger by concealing it.

“ (25.) And, laſtly, That no Perſon ſhall be admitted to Holy Orders, nor ſuffered to preach, catechize, adminiſter the Sacraments, or perform any other Eccleſiaſtical Function, without firſt ſubſcribing the Canons.

And now to Inſtance in ſome of the particular Objections, with Reference to the twenty-five Canons already recited. They complained that the firſt, the twelfth, and the thirteenth, mounted the Regale, to an Exceſſive Pitch; And left the Kirk, and by Conſequence the Chriſtian Religion, at the Mercy of the Civil Government: That the ſecond, fourth, fifth and fifteenth Canons, referred to the Book of Common-Prayer, which was not yet finiſhed, or at leaſt not publiſhed. Now the urging Subſcription to a Book not extant, and which they had never ſeen, was tying them up too implicitly, and a Hardſhip upon Conſcience and Underſtanding. By what was enjoined in the ſixth Canon, they thought themſelves obliged to reſign too far, to the Judgment and Authority of the Biſhops. The tenth Canon, touching Divorce, they conceived not well-founded, becauſe it gave no Preference to the Innocent Party; but put both the Injuring and Injured, under the ſame Reſtraints. They diſliked the ſixteenth, pretending themſelves bound to the Form of Bidding Prayer, preſcribed in Our fifty fifth Canon: Which was in Effect, they ſaid to ſubject them to the Diſcipline of a Foreign Church. Againſt the Reſt they remonſtrated in General, that the Biſhops were eſtabliſhed in too abſolute a Juriſdiction, and that Papal Idolatry was revived upon them. In ſhort, their Exceptions were ſome of them with, and ſome of them without Reaſon. Thus far for the Matter: But then as for the Manner, they had ſtronger Colours for Complaint.

And the Manner of impoſing theſe Canons.

For they never were publickly debated in their Aſſemblies, the paſſing them was never put to the Queſtion, but impoſed without their Conſent. This Method of Proceeding, it muſt be ſaid, was ſomewhat unprecedented, and contrary to the Uſage of the Church. Theſe Meaſures were extremely ſhocking in Scotland: In this Kingdom, the Presbyters had formerly diſowned the King's Supremacy in the Extent maintained by the Canons: The Miniſters were ſo far from complying to this Length, that they aſſerted an Independent Power in the Church, for convening their Aſſemblies: And that the Decrees made there were binding without any Confirmation from the Crown. And therefore, to have Points of Belief preſcribed, and Rules of Religious Practice ſet them by the Prerogative, was looked on as intolerable Vaſſalage. But not to inſiſt any further upon theſe Exceptions, 'twas thought by moderate People, that the Publiſhing the Canons before the Common-Prayer, was beginning at the wrong End: That the requiring Submiſſion to Things unſeen, alarmed the People to a Jealouſy of wild Innovation, gave them Time to improve their Prejujudice, and form Parties againſt the Liturgy, when it appeared. Whereas had the Common-Prayer come out firſt, it might have met with a ſmoother Paſſage, and the Canons been leſs critically examined.

Archbiſhop Laud promotes a Collection for the Palatine Miniſters.

To go back to England: The laſt Year the Archbiſhop receiving Letters from the Queen of Bohemia (as they called her) about promoting a Collection for the baniſhed Miniſters of the Palatinate; ſollicited ſo ſtrongly with the King, that he granted Letters Patent, to paſs through the Kingdom for this Purpoſe. This Brief being brought to the Archbiſhop for Direction and Conveyance, he excepted againſt the wording of the following Clauſe, which ſtands thus: Whoſe Caſes are the more to be deplored, for that this Extremity is fallen upon them for their Sincerity and Conſtancy in the true Religion, which we, together with them, profeſſed, and which we are all bound in Conſcience to maintain to the utmoſt of our Powers: Whereas theſe religious and godly Perſons being involved among other their Countrymen, might have enjoyed their Eſtates and Fortunes, if with other Back-ſliders in the Times of Tryal, they would have ſubmitted themſelves to the Anti-Chriſtian Yoke, and have renounced or diſſembled the Profeſſion of the true Religion.

He excepts againſt two Clauſes in the Letters Patent, and why?

Upon the Reading this Paſſage, there were two Things which embaraſs'd the Archbiſhop. Firſt, The Religion of the Palatine Churches was affirmed to be the ſame with Ours: This Aſſertion is what Laud could not digeſt. He knew the Five Points were held by theſe Reformers in the Sublapſarian Senſe: That theſe Palatines maintained a Parity in the Clergy in direct Contradiction to the Doctrine and Government of the Engliſh Church. And that their Profeſſor of Divinity, Paræus, formerly mentioned, aſſerts a Power in the inferior Magiſtracy, to controul and reſiſt the Prince: And that this Divine paſſing uncenſured in his own Country, was ſuppoſed to have delivered more than his private Opinion. Now, not to repeat the reſt, the Archbiſhop was well aſſured this laſt Doctrine was Point-blank againſt the Homilies: In which, Reſiſtance of the Supreme Magiſtrate is condemned in the moſt deciſive Terms imaginable: And that without any Exception or Reſervation whatſoever. For theſe Reaſons the Archbiſhop did not believe this Part of the Clauſe defenſible, “That the Religion of the Palatines was the ſame with ours, and that we ought to maintain it to the utmoſt of our Power.” To which may be added, that the Palatine Miniſters were in the ſame Condition with the Genevians: They had no Epiſcopal Ordination, by Conſequence are ſelf-originated, and without any authoritative Miſſion: And being thus eſſentially defective in their Character, what Right can they pretend to repreſent our Saviour, and ſeal Covenants in his Name?

The other exceptionable Paſſage in the Letters Patent, was calling Communion with the Church of Rome, An Anti-Chriſtian Yoke. Now this has the Appearance of an intemperate Cenſure, and is more than is determined in the Church of England. Thoſe who drew theſe Letters Patent ſeemed not to have been aware, that the Orders in the Church of England are derived from the Church of Rome: If therefore the Church of Rome is an Anti-Chriſtian Society, her Authority is gone, and her Privileges forfeited; by Conſequence ſhe is in no Capacity to convey Sacerdotal Power in Ordinations: From whence the next Inference is, that the Benefit of the Prieſthood, and the Force of Holy Miniſtrations, muſt be loſt in the Engliſh Church. Upon theſe Conſiderations, as may be reaſonably conjectured, the Archbiſhop was ſhocked with the Brief. And therefore, to prevent the Miſchief which might enſue, he acquainted the King with theſe crude Paſſages. His Majeſty being ſatisfied with Laud's Objections, gave Orders for expunging the Clauſe in a new Draught: And now the Letters Patent being couched in defenſible Expreſſions, the Archbiſhop promoted the Collection (a).

July 26. 1635.

Penalties of the Act againſt Swearing given to the Poor.

In July this Summer, a Proclamation was publiſhed againſt prophane Swearing and Curſing, purſuaut to an Act in the late Reign (b). An Office was likewiſe erected for receiving the Penalty of the Statute. The Monies ariſing from thence was to be paid to the reſpective Biſhops, and diſtributed among the Poor where the Offender dwelt (c).

The King continued his Care for recovering the Clergy of Scotland to a competent Maintenance, and retrieving the Patrimony of the Church: But to prevent haſty Steps, and uncautious Management in that Country, Laud wrote to the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews, to proceed warily, to wait for Opportunities, and not precipitate Matters: For that at preſent, Things were ſomewhat unripe, and not prepared for any free Motion (d).

Juxon Biſhop of London, made Lord Treaſurer.

In the latter End of this Year, Juxon Biſhop of London, was made Lord Treaſurer; 'twas by Laud's Intereſt the Staff was put in his Hand. This Office being a Place of the greateſt Benefit in the Kingdom, and not executed by a Churchman ſince the Reign of Henry the Seventh, was grudged Juxon, and heightned the great Mens Diſguſt againſt Laud. However, the Archbiſhop being well aſſured of Juxon's Integrity, and believing his being put in this Poſt would be a Service to the Exchequer, and ſtrengthen the Church's Intereſt, he reſolved to ſtand the Event of recommending to ſo invidious a Preferment. As for Capacity to manage the Buſineſs, Juxon was not ill furniſhed. For Laud, who had lately been joined in Commiſſion for the Treaſury, had given him Inſtructions. And as for the Conduct of this Biſhop, he was every Way equal to the Employment, and managed to great Commendation. But whether the Archbiſhop found his Account in bringing him to this Place of Truſt and Profit, will bear a Queſtion. For ſome great Courtiers being diſappointed in ſo conſiderable an Expectation, diſreliſhed the Biſhops, and fell off to the Puritan Party.

The Archbiſhop's Annual Account of his Province.

To conclude this Year with the Archbiſhop's Account of the State of his Province to the King. As to his own Dioceſs, he complained “the French and Dutch Churches at Canterbury, Maidſtone, and Sandwich, notwithſtanding they made ſome Shew of Conformity to his Injunctions, had not complied ſo thoroughly as might reaſonably be expected. In the Dioceſs of London, Dr. Stoughton, Rector of Aldermanbury, Simpſon, Curate and Lecturer of St. Margaret's New-Fiſh-Street; John Goodwin Vicar of St. Stephen's Coleman-ſtreet, and Viner Lecturer of St. Laurence in the Old Jewry, were convented for Breach of Canons. But upon their Promiſe of Amendment and Submiſſion, the Biſhop proceeded no further againſt them. Moſt, if not all, of theſe Men, went into the Rebellion afterwards, and were remarkable for their Miſbehaviour.

“The Biſhop of Lincoln certified, that he knew but one Non-conforming Clergyman in that large Dioceſs. By the Biſhop of Bath and Wells his Certificate to the Archbiſhop, it appeared the Dioceſs was brought forward to very good Order. For the Purpoſe. There was no ſingle Lecture in any Corporation, but a Combination of Divines preached by Turns. And over and above, the Afternoon Sermons were turned into Catechiſing in all Pariſhes. Corbet Biſhop of Norwich, being dead about half a Year ſince, there was no Certificate returned from thence. But the Archbiſhop by his Viſitation, perceived the whole Dioceſs was much out of Order; and more eſpecially at Yarmouth and Ipſwich: And that Ward, Preacher at this laſt Town, had been cenſured in the High-Commiſſion-Court for preachiug againſt the Common-Prayer Book, and other reſembling Miſdemeanours. The Biſhops of Oxford, Sarum, Ely, Chicheſter, St. Aſaph and Briſtol, certifie an entire Conformity of all the Clergy, without ſo much as a ſingle Inſtance to the contrary. The Biſhop of Landaff found only two noted Schiſmaticks, Wroth and Erbury, who miſled a great many ignorant People. But to check them in their Courſe, Articles were preferred againſt them in the High-Commiſſion. The Clergy in the Dioceſſes of Hereford, Wincheſter, Peterborough, Rocheſter and Exeter, were regular and well managed, and paid a due Submiſſion to his Majeſty's Inſtructions. The late Biſhop of St. David's (now tranſlated to Hereford) complains, that few Clergymen in that poor remote Dioceſs, were tolerably qualified to inſtruct the People. The Biſhop of Glouceſter informs his Metropolitan, that upon the Score of the great Number of Impropriations in his Dioceſs, the Clergy are very ſlenderly ſupported:

ported: And that their Poverty draws them to Popularity and Faction. From the remaining Biſhops of Coventry and Litchfield, Worceſter and Bangor, the Archbiſhop had received no Certificate (e).

The Beginning of the next Year a Conteſt happened between the Archbiſhop and the two Univerſities, concerning the Right of Viſitation: The Archbiſhop claimed a Right of Viſiting, upon the Privilege of his See: The Univerſities on the other Side alledged, this Juriſdiction was veſted in the King upon the Score of his being their Founder. The Cauſe was brought before the Council-Board, and ſtands thus reported in Laud's Regiſter (f).

June 21 1636, at Hampton-Court.

“His Majeſty ſitting in Council, was graciouſly pleaſed to hear and determine a Difference and Debate, lately riſen between the Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury his Grace, and the two Univerſities of England, concerning the Right of Viſiting the ſaid Univerſities Jure Metropolitico, in the Preſence of the Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, being alſo Chancellor of the Univerſity of Oxon; and of the Earl of Holland, Chancellor of the Univerſity of Cambridge, and of Perſons ſent and authorized by each of the ſaid Univerſities, and of the Council of all the ſaid Parties.

The Archbiſhop claims a Right to viſit both Univerſities Jure Metropolitico.

“In the firſt Place it was of all Sides acknowledged to be the undoubted Right of the Crown, to viſit the ſaid Univerſities, whenſoever his Majeſty pleaſeth: And it was on all Parts confeſſed, That the Archbiſhop in Right of his Metropolitical Church of Canterbury, hath Power to viſit his whole Province, in which the ſaid Univerſities are ſituate, and are under the ſame Power, unleſs they could ſhew Privilege and Exemption; which they then offered to ſhew, but were not ſuch as did, or could give Satisfaction. And his Majeſty upon full Hearing of the Proofs on both Sides, and great Conſideration had of them, declared that by no Papal Bull they could be exempted, and likewiſe that by none of their Charters, they were exempted. And, laſtly, the Omiſſion of the Archbiſhops to viſit, ſince the Viſitations ſhewed unto his Majeſty, could no Way in this Caſe, be a Preſcription to barr the Right of the Metropolitical See. But it appeared unto his Majeſty for, and in Affirmance of the Right of the Archbiſhop, that actually both the Univerſities had been viſited by three of his Predeceſſors, Jure Metropolitico, and not by any Legantine Power: And that the Metropolitical Right coming in Queſtion, upon the Reſiſtance of the Univerſity of Oxon, to be viſited by the Archbiſhop: It was upon great Advice, and full Hearing of both Parties, adjudged for the Archbiſhop by his Majeſty's Predeceſſor, King Richard the Second. And afterwards upon a like Re-hearing, and Re-examination, adjudged, and affirmed by King Henry the Fourth; and both of their Judgments, upon a third and full Re-examination, eſtabliſhed by Act of Parliament, 13 Hen. 4. now ſhewed by the Archbiſhop under the Great Seal of King Henry the Fourth. And the Archbiſhop produced before his Majeſty the Original Renunciation of all Privileges from any Pope, by the Univerſity of Cambridge, under the Hands of Heads of Houſes there. Upon which Right ſo clearly appearing both by Practice and Reſolution of the Kings and Parliament; his Majeſty, with the Advice of his Council, declared and adjudged the Right of viſiting both the Univerſities, as Univerſities, and the Chancellors Scholars, their Servants, and others, enjoying the Privilege of the ſaid Univerſities, to belong to the Archbiſhop, and Metropolitical Church of Canterbury, by themſelves or Commiſſaries; and that they ſhall be from Time to Time obedient thereunto: Whereupon the Archbiſhop made an humble Motion to his Majeſty, firſt, for himſelf, that he would be graciouſly pleaſed, That he might have this Sentence drawn up by Advice of his Majeſty's Learned Council; and put under the Broad Seal, to ſettle all Differences that might hereafter ariſe. Then on the Behalf of both the Univerſities, that though they were to be viſited by the Archbiſhop, and his Succeſſors, yet that they ſhould not be viſited by the Biſhop of the Dioceſs, or the Arch-Deacon; but ſhould perpetually remain free and exempt from the Viſitation and Juriſdiction of the Biſhop and Arch-Deacon of the Places where they are. But then, ſince it was declared his Right to viſit Metropolitice: And that it was not limited by Law how often he might viſit: Therefore (notwithſtanding the late Cuſtom of Viſitation, Semel in vitâ tantum) he might viſit the Univerſities by himſelf, or his Commiſſaries, as often as any great Emergent Cauſe ſhould move him thereunto: Provided, that neither the ſaid Archbiſhop, nor any of his Succeſſors (after his firſt Viſitation) ſhall viſit on ſuch Emergent Cauſe, unleſs the ſaid Cauſe be firſt made known to his Majeſty, and his Succeſſors, and approved by him or them. All which was graciouſly granted by his Majeſty, and ſo ſettled.

Judgment given for him by the King and Council.

“And, laſtly, Whereas it was alledged, that the Chancellor of either Univerſity, were, and are like to be Perſons of great Honour and Eminency; and therefore it might be inconvenient that they ſhould be called to ſuch Viſitations; it was declared by his Majeſty, that ſuch Inconvenience would eaſily be helped, for that in Courſe of Law, the Chancellor would be allowed to appear by his Proxy.

Exr. Ed. Nicholas.

This Deciſion fortify'd the Archbiſhop's Character, and made him more regarded in both Univerſities; even in Cambridge, where his Authority was leſs, his Meaſures for Conformity were better purſued: The Communion-Tables in the Univerſity Church, and ſeveral College Chappels, were railed in: The Ornaments were richer, and the Worſhip more ſolemn than formerly. In Oxford, where Laud was Chancellor, he met with no Difficulty; here his Motions tions were ſmooth and ſtrong, and every Thing anſwer'd to Inclination. I have already juſt mention'd the Archbiſhop's drawing a Body of Statutes for this Univerſity: He found the old Regulation grown unſerviceable, partly by the Alterations in Religion, and partly upon the Score of long Diſuſe: Beſides, they wanted Conſiſtency in the Senſe, and Order in the Digeſtion: To remedy this Obſcurity and Confuſion, the Biſhop directed their being review'd, clear'd of Contradiction, and thrown into a new Form: When this was done, and the Draught receiv'd in Convocation, he got them confirm'd under the Broad Seal. For this Favour the Univerſity return'd him Thanks in a Latin Letter very handſomely penn'd. (g)

Statutes of the Univerſity of Oxon reform'd, and confirm'd under the Broad Seal.

To proceed, the reading the King's Declaration about lawful Sports ſtuck with many of the Clergy: Their Meaning, 'tis likely, might be fair, but they were not ſufficiently enlightned to maſter their Scruples. Their being proſecuted in the Conſiſtories and High Commiſſion, for their Refuſal, brought the Government and Biſhops under no kind Repreſentation. Now, to clear the Church and State from Imputations of Rigour, the Biſhops made a ſort of Defence for the Crown and themſelves, and alledg'd the Reaſons for enjoining the Clergy the reading this Declaration. Firſt, In Juſtification of the King, they argued that the Orders of a Prince, when not evidently repugnant to the Holy Scriptures, or the Law of Nature, (I think it might be added, or the Laws of the Realm) are preciſely to be obey'd. (2*dly*), That a poſſible and remote Inconvenience, reſulting from Compliance, is not a ſufficient Diſcharge. For every good Subject ought to ſuppoſe, that his Prince, with the Aſſiſtance of his Council, is in a better Condition to foreſee Diſadvantage, and guard againſt ill Conſequences, than himſelf. (3*dly*), By diſobeying our Prince, where the Command is lawful, we run our ſelves upon a certain Sin; but this is ruinous Obſtinacy, and ought not to be ventured on for preventing Inconveniences: Thus far their Apology for the Crown, if we may call it ſo.

The Biſhop's Defence for enjoining the reading the King's Declaration for Sports.

In Defence of themſelves the Biſhops alledg'd, That they receiv'd an Order from the King for publiſhing the Declaration in their Pariſh Churches. Now who could the Biſhop lay their Commands upon, for this Purpoſe, excepting the Clergy? And whereas 'twas objected, no Penalty was laid upon the Refuſers: To this 'twas anſwer'd, Some Penalty, tho' not expreſs'd, was evidently imply'd; for that otherwiſe the Order would be precarious, and given to no Purpoſe. And laſtly, 'twas urged, that there was nothing in the Declaration, that was plainly contrary either to the Word of God, the Canons of the Church, the Laws of the Land, or the Practice of the Reform'd in other Countries. That if ſome Mens Scruples ſuggeſted otherwiſe, publick Regards, and the Intereſt of Society, would oblige them to acquieſce. That if it was lawful for private Perſons to indulge their Doubts, and ſuſpend their Obedience, the Functions of Government would be lamentably embaraſs'd. And they urg'd further, That a Sheriff, by his Office, is bound to publiſh his Majeſty's Proclamations, tho' it were for the apprehending his own Father, or tho' it contain'd Matter unſerviceable to the Publick. That a Prieſt may, without Wrong to his Conſcience, pronounce an Excommunication legally put into his Hands, notwithſtanding he is convinced, the Party is unjuſtly excommunicated. That when the Emperor Mauritius made an Order that no Soldier ſhould be admitted into any Monaſtery; and enjoin'd the Publication of this Edict upon Gregory the Great: The Pope, upon the Score of his being the Emperor's Subject, diſpers'd the Order through his Juriſdiction, notwithſtanding he believ'd it an unlawful Command. But then it muſt be obſerved, that at the ſame Time, when this Pope publiſhed the Order in Duty to his Prince, he remonſtrated to the Matter, and openly declar'd the Unlawfulneſs of it. (h) Laſtly, St Auſtin, in his Book againſt Fauſtus the Manichee, (i) gives a Reſolution which ſeems to fit the Caſe, that a Chriſtian Soldier, under a Heathen Prince, may lawfully purſue his Profeſſion, and obey his ſuperior Officers, tho' he has no clear Proofs of the Juſtice of the War, or the Serviceableneſs of the Orders receiv'd. Theſe Reaſons, tho' not without their Effect, fell ſhort of giving General Satisfaction.

The King, as has been obſerved, deſign'd to introduce the Engliſh Liturgy in Scotland: To recommend it to that Nation, the daily reading of it was ordered in the Chappel at Holy-Rood Houſe. But Ballentine, Biſhop of Dunblaine, proceeding negligently in this Affair, Laud thought it neceſſary to provide another better diſpos'd. And thus, when the See of Aberdeen fell void, he got him tranſlated thither, and procured his Preferments for Dr. Weederburn, a Scotch Man by Birth, but bred and benefic'd in England: This new Dean purſued the King's Inſtructions, and might probably have ſucceeded, if the reſt of the Scotch Biſhops had fallen in with him. But theſe Prelates moving for a diſtinct Liturgy, upon the Reaſons abovementioned, his Majeſty commanded the Archbiſhop of Canterbury to aſſiſt them; Laud deferr'd concerning himſelf in this Affair, in hopes of prevailing with them to drop their Motion, and acquieſce in the Engliſh Book. But perceiving them fixt in their Reſolution, he contributed his Aſſiſtance: To bring him forward, he was ſtrongly ſollicited by Letters brought him by Maxwell, Biſhop of Roſs, and ſign'd by the Archbiſhops of St. Andrews and Glaſcow, by the Biſhops of Murray, Dunblain, and Brechein. The Scheme of this Performance being firſt ſtruck out, and fill'd up in Scotland, and from thence tranſmitted to the Court, his Majeſty referr'd the Review to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Lord Treaſurer Juxon, Biſhop of London, and Wrenn, Biſhop of Norwich: But Juxon having his Hands full of his own Buſineſs, the Matter reſted with the other two. Upon the Peruſal of the Book, they perceiv'd Weederburn had work'd by ſome Directions given him at London, and gone moſtly upon the Model and Form of the Engliſh Service. There was likewiſe a Paper ſent up, containing ſome Alterations to be inſerted, provided they were approv'd by his Majeſty. To mention ſome of them; 'twas propos'd, That the Magnificat, and the reſt of the Hymns, together with the Epiſtles and Goſpels, ſhould be printed according to the laſt Tranſlation in the Reign of King James: And that this might be be done purſuant to ſuch Directions as they had receiv'd for printing the Pſalms of David in the laſt Tranſlation. That for the better ſinging of thoſe Pſalms to the Organ, a Colon ſhould be made in the Middle of every Verſe as it ſtands in the Engliſh. That every Prayer. or Office through the whole Communion, ſhould be nam'd in the Rubrick before it, that the Parts of the Service might be better diſtinguiſh'd to the Congregation. That the Invitation, Confeſſion, Abſolution, Sentences, Prefaces and Doxology, ſhould be ſet in the ſame Order they ſtand in the Engliſh Liturgy: And that the Prayer of humble Acceſs to the Holy Table might ſtand immediately before Receiving. Theſe Suggeſtions for Alteration were paſt by the Archbiſhop and Biſhop Wrenn, and afterwards ſign'd by his Majeſty.

Further, Weederburn acquainted the Archbiſhop with ſome Defects in the Scotch Ordinal: As firſt, That the Order of Deacons was made no more than a Lay Office. And ſecondly, In the Admiſſion to the Prieſthood, the Eſſential Words for conferring Orders were omitted. When the King underſtood their Book for conſecrating and ordaining Biſhops and Prieſts, &c. was thus remarkably ſhort, he commanded Laud to give them the Choice of this Alternative; either to admit the Engliſh Book, or elſe rectify their own, in thoſe two Important Inſtances: And when the Book was ready to be publiſhed, his Majeſty ſent the Archbiſhops and Biſhops fuller Inſtructions upon this Affair: "First, He requires them to take Care that the Proclamation for authoriſing the Service-Book ſhould "not be drawn to the Prejudice of his Prerogative Royal. Secondly, That in their Calendar they ſhould retain ſuch Catholick "Saints as were in the Engliſh Book. That "ſome of the Scottiſh Nation, Eminent for "their Sanctity, eſpecially thoſe of the Blood "Royal; and ſome Biſhops of the beſt diſtinguiſh'd, and moſt Primitive Character, "ſhould be inſerted. The Saints added through the Months in the Scotch Calendar, are theſe, January 11th, David, King; January 13th, Mungo, or Kentigernius, Biſhop; February 18th, Colman; March 11th, Conſtantine the Third, King; 17th, Patrick; 20th, Cutbert; April 1ſt, Gilbert, Biſhop; 20th, Serfe, Biſhop; May none; June 9th, Columba; July 6th, Palladius; Auguſt none; September 18th, Ninian, Biſhop; 25th, Adaman, Biſhop; October none; November 16th, Margaret, Queen; 27th, Ode, Virgin; December 4th, Droſtane.

"To go on with the King's Inſtructions, the "Archbiſhops. &c. are requir'd, that in their "Book of Ordination, in giving Orders to Presbyters, they ſhould keep the Words of the "Engliſh Book without Change, receive the Holy Ghoſt, &c. Fourthly, That amongſt the "Leſſons, ordinarily to be read in the Service, "the 1ſt, 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, and 6th Chapters of "Wiſdom; and the 1ſt, 2d, 5th, 8th, 35th, and "49th Chapters of Eccleſiaſticus, ſhould be put "in the Calendar. Fifthly, That every Biſhop "ſhall have the Service read twice a Day in "his Family; and that all Archbiſhops and "Biſhops ſhall oblige all Univerſities and Colleges within their Dioceſſes to the ſame "Frequency and Form of Devotion. Sixthly, "That the Preface to the Book of Common-Prayer, ſign'd by his Majeſty, and the Proclamation for authoriſing the ſame, ſhall be "printed in the Book of Common Prayer.

To go on with the remaining Alterations: The Word Prieſt in the Engliſh Common-Prayer Book, being offenſive to the Scotch Novelliſts, Presbyter, which is the ſame in Senſe, was us'd inſtead of it. In the Office for publick Baptiſm, this Sentence inclos'd in Crotchets is added; Sanctify this Fountain of Baptiſm, thou which art the Sanctifier of all Things. By the Rubrick the Water in the Font was to be chang'd twice a Month at leaſt; and then thoſe Words were to be pronounc'd by the Presbyter.

The main Alterations ſtand in the Communion Service, where there are ſeveral Additions, Tranſpoſitions, and one remarkable Omiſſion; I ſhall give them the Reader in their Order: After the reading the Epiſtle, the Rubrick directs the People to ſtand up and ſay, Glory be to thee O Lord. And after the reading of the Goſpel, the People in a ſtanding Poſture are ordered to ſay, Thanks be to thee O Lord. In the Prayer for the whole Eſtate of Chriſt's Church Militant here on Earth. When the Holy Euchariſt is celebrated, this Sentence is added: And we commend, eſpecially unto thy merciful Goodneſs, the Congregation which is here aſſembled in thy Name, to celebrate the Commemoration of the moſt precious Death and Sacrifice of thy Son and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt. * Towards the End of this Prayer the Engliſh Form is chang'd thus: And we alſo bleſs thy Holy Name for all thoſe thy Servants, who having finiſh'd their Courſe in Faith, do now reſt from their Labours: And we yield unto thee moſt High Praiſe and Hearty Thanks for the wonderful Grace and Vertue declared in all thy Saints, who have been the choice Veſſels of thy Grace, and the Lights of the World in their ſeveral Generations; moſt humbly beſeeching thee, that we may have Grace to follow the Example of their Stedfaſtneſs in thy Faith, and Obedience to thy Holy Commandments, that at the Day of the General Reſurrection, we, and all they which are of the Myſtical Body of thy Son, may be ſet on his Right Hand, and hear that his moſt Joyful Voice, Come ye Bleſſed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you from the Foundation of the World. Grant this, &c.

Immediately after the Doxology, Therefore with Angels and Archangels, &c. the Conſecration Prayer followeth: Where the Rubrick directeth the Presbyter to ſtand at ſuch a Part of the Holy Table, where he may with the more Eaſe and Decency uſe both his Hands. In the Prayer, this Ancient Clauſe for invocating the Holy Ghoſt is inſerted: Hear us, O moſt Merciful, &c. And of thy Almighty Goodneſs vouchſafe ſo to bleſs and ſanctify with thy Word and Holy Spirit theſe thy Gifts and Creatures of Bread and Wine, that they may be unto us the Body and Blood of thy moſt dearly beloved Son. (k)

* When there is no Communion this Sentence is omitted.

(k) Scotch Book of Common-Prayer; and ſee my Remarks above on the firſt Liturgy in the Reign of King Edward the Sixth.

The next which follows is that which the Rubrick calls the Memorial or Prayer of Oblation. It begins thus, Wherefore, O Lord and Heavenly Father, according to the Inſtitution of thy dearly beloved Son our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, we thy humble Servants do celebrate and make here before thy Divine Majeſty, with theſe thy Holy Gifts, the Memorial which thy Son hath willed us to make, having in Remembrance his bleſſed Paſſion, mighty Reſurrection, and glorious Aſcenſion, rendring unto thee moſt hearty Thanks for the innumerable Benefits procured unto us by the ſame. The reſt of this Prayer is the ſame with that of the Engliſh Book in the Poſt-Communion, which begins thus. O Lord, we thy humble Servants entirely deſire thy Fatherly Goodneſs mercifully to accept, &c.

After this Memorial, or Prayer of Oblation, the Lord's Prayer followeth. The next is the Collect of Humble Acceſs, which, tho' chang'd in the Order, is the ſame in Words with that in the Engliſh Liturgy, which begins thus. We do not preſume to come to this thy Table, O Lord, &c.

The Benediction, as the Scotch Rubrick calls it, or the Words pronounc'd by the Presbyter at receiving or giving the conſecrated Elements, ſtand as they did in the firſt Liturgy made in the Reign of King Edward the Sixth, viz. The Body of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt which was given for thee, preſerve thy Body and Soul unto Everlaſting Life. The Blood of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt which was ſhed for thee, preſerve thy Body and Soul to Everlaſting Life. At the end of each of the Benedictions the Rubrick requires the Perſon receiving, to ſay Amen.

When all the Communicants have received, this Collect of Thankſgiving is ſaid by the Preſbyter: It begins, Almighty and Everliving God, &c. and is the ſame with that in the Engliſh Liturgy: After this the Gloria in Excelſis is ſaid or ſung, Glory be to God on High, on Earth Peace, &c. as we have it. The Office concludes with the Biſhop or Presbyter's Bleſſing: The Peace of God which paſſes all Underſtanding, &c. And thus I have gone through the Alterations. The reſt of the Book is the ſame with the Engliſh Common Prayer, only there is ſome Difference in diſpoſing what was offer'd at the Holy Euchariſt: The Scotch Rubrick aſſigning one half of this to the Preſbyter for providing him Books of Divinity; the other Moiety was to be ſpent in furniſhing the Church, or relieving the Poor, at the Diſcretion of the Presbyter and Church-wardens.

The King's Proclamation for Authoriſing the Book.

The Proclamation for Authoriſing the Book ſtands thus:

Charles, by the Grace of God, King of Great-Britain, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith.

To our Lovits,

Meſſengers.

Our Sheriffs in that Part conjunctly, and ſeverally ſpecially conſtitute, greeting. Foraſmuch as we, ever ſince our Entry to the Imperial Crown of this our Ancient Kingdom of Scotland eſpecially ſince our late being here in the ſame, have divers Times recommended to the Archbiſhops and Biſhops here, the publiſhing of a Publick Form of Service, in the Worſhip of God, which we would have uniformly obſerved therein. And the ſame being now condeſcended upon, although we doubt not but all our Subjects, both Clergy and others, will receive the ſaid Publick Form of Service with ſuch Reverence as appertaineth: Yet thinking it neceſſary to make our Pleaſure known, touching the Authorizing of the Book thereof.

Our Will is, and we charge you ſtraitly and command, that incontinent theſe our Letters ſeen, you paſs, and in our Name and Authority command and charge all our Subjects, both Eccleſiaſtical and Civil, by open Proclamation at the Market Croſſes of the Head-Burroughs of this our Kingdom, and other Places needful, to conform themſelves to the ſaid Publick Form of Worſhip, which is the only Form which we (having taken the Councel of our Clergy) think fit to be uſed in God's Publick Worſhip in this our Kingdom, commanding alſo all Archbiſhops and Biſhops, and other Presbyters and Church-men, to take a ſpecial Care that the ſame be duly obeyed and obſerved, and the Contraveeners condignly cenſured and puniſhed, and to have ſpecial Care that every Pariſh, betwixt this and Paſch next, procure unto themſelves two at leaſt of the ſaid Books of Common Prayer for the Uſe of the Pariſh. The which to do, we commit to you conjunctly and ſeverally our full Power, by theſe our Letters, delivering the ſame by you duly execute and indorſed again to the Bearer.

Given under our Signet at Edinburgh the Twentieth Day of December, and of our Reign the Twelfth Year, 1636.

'Tis generally clamour'd againſt by the Scots.

Before this Proclamation was publiſh'd the Scotch took the Alarm, clamour'd every where againſt the Book, and diſcover'd the ſtrongeſt Averſion; Prejudice of Education, and Ignorance of Primitive Practice, made them eaſily impos'd on. Beſides thoſe who were miſled by Principle, there were not a few who ſeem'd govern'd by intereſted Views: The late Commiſſion of Surrenders was hard of Digeſtion; for let the Title be never ſo myſterious, People oftentimes are unwilling to let go their Hold, and part with unjuſt Acquiſitions. Theſe Men had no Proſpect of recovering their Prey in Times of Publick Repoſe: This made them watch all Opportunities to embaraſs the Adminiſtration, and diſtreſs the Church and the Crown: Their Buſineſs was to inflame Diſcontents, to make the Ferment boil over, and blow up the People to Sedition. In ſhort, theſe Men of Deſign joining the Presbyterian Party, made the Generality beleive Religion lay at Stake, that Laud, and ſome of their own Biſhops, had concerted a Project to revive Popery, and bring the Maſs-Book upon them. This Report catch'd upon the Populace, heated them almoſt to Madneſs, and brought them entirely into the Meaſures of the Mal-Contents. Their Underſtandings being thus ſeiz'd, and their Paſſions at the Direction of their Managers; the ſuppreſſing the Book was thought the only Expedient to prevent a Commotion, and bring them to Temper. The Archbiſhop of St. Andrews, and ſome of the moſt Prudent of his Brethren, were of this Opinion. They wrote to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury to ſollicit the King, that the publiſhing the Book might be poſtpon'd to a more ſeaſonable Juncture. This Advice might probably have been follow'd in caſe the Scotch Biſhops had been better agreed, and acted unanimouſly: But ſome of thoſe of this Order lately prefer'd, having an Overbalance of Heat and Spirits, refus'd to concur with their Brethren of better Experience. Inſtead of managing with this Precaution, they went in with the Earl of Traquair's Sentiment, and preſs'd for Execution and Diſpatch. By the way, this Noble Man, who was Lord Treaſurer, had a bottom Deſign which they were by no means aware of. His Buſineſs was to promote unacceptable Meaſures, to puſh Things to Extremity, and ruin the Biſhops. He was apprehenſive, it ſeems, theſe Men might grow too big for his Intereſt: And particularly, that Maxwell, Biſhop of Roſs, endeavoured to ſupplant him in his Poſt, and graſp'd at the Treaſurer's Staff: (l) And believing the reſt of the Biſhops inclin'd to ſecond Maxwell in his Ambition, he prov'd a mortal, though a ſecret Enemy, to the whole Order. And now the Opportunity preſenting fair, he prevail'd with ſome of the moſt Sanguine, to give him their Letter to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury. Thus furniſh'd his Lordſhip poſted to Court, told Laud there was no Reaſon to be apprehenſive of Danger; that the old Biſhops were Men of Phlegm, and overgrown with Spleen and Timorouſneſs. That if Laud could prevail with the King to truſt this Earl with the Execution, he wou'd venture his Life to go through with the Buſineſs, without any conſiderable Ruffle. Laud not ſuſpecting the Treaſurer's Integrity, eſpecially being recommended by Letters from thoſe Biſhops he confided in; Laud, I ſay, for theſe Reaſons, not ſuſpecting any Deſign, was much affected with Traquair's Report: And tho' he did not think it proper this Affair ſhould be manag'd by a Lay-man, yet he procured himſelf a Warrant from the King, to command the Scotch Biſhops to go forward with the Undertaking at the utmoſt Hazard; threatning them withal, that in caſe they mov'd Languidly, and threw in unneceſſary Delays, the King would remove them, and fill their Sees with Men of more Zeal and Reſolution. This Order was executed; but the Report of the Event muſt be reſpited to the next Year.

The Manner of bringing in the Scotch Common-Prayer unacceptable.

In the mean time, it may be obſerved, that the Manner of introducing this Common-Prayer was ſomewhat extraordinary, and gave a plauſible Colour for Diſguſt: For 'twas never laid before the Repreſenting Part of the Church, nor paſs'd in a General Aſſembly. The Scotch Presbyters could never be reconcil'd to this Method, and thought the Authority of the Church would be entirely loſt by thus reſigning to the Regale. Further, they were not a little prepoſſeſs'd againſt the Uſe of any Liturgy: And more than that, they neither lik'd a Form ſo reſembling the Engliſh Book, and much leſs the Alterations.

Archbiſhop Laud*'s Defence of ſome Paſſages in the* Scotch Liturgy.

Theſe Alterations being afterwards charg'd upon Laud by the Scotch Commiſſioners; I ſhall mention his Defence of ſome Paſſages. Firſt, he takes Notice theſe Commiſſioners fall ſhort in their Proof that this Affair was govern'd by his Direction: Having premis'd this, he proceeds to anſwer what was objected from the Matter. The Commiſſioners urg'd that the Changes and Supplements in the Scotch Common-Prayer Book, are taken from the Maſs-Book, and other Romiſh Rituals; and that by theſe the Book is made to vary from the Book of England. In Anſwer to theſe Objections, the Archbiſhop replies, "That the Church is only burniſh'd "and refin'd by the Reformation, and not "melted down, and made a new one. That "all regular and defenſible Reformation retrenches nothing but Error and wrong Practice, "and leaves unaltered whatever will bear the "Teſt. That if theſe Variations from the Engliſh Service are good, 'tis no Matter whence "they are taken. That every Part of the Miſſal, or other Popiſh Rituals, are not Corruptions. That there are many good Prayers "in them, neither is any thing ill, meerly becauſe 'tis there. That provided there is nothing ſuperſtitious, or unlawful retain'd, the "leſs Alteration in the Ancient Service of the "Church, the better. To this he adds, that "theſe Variations were either taken from the "firſt Book in Edward the Sixth's Reign, which "is no Popery; or elſe from ſome Ancient Liturgies, which ſtand clear from all ſuch Imputation. (m)

The next Thing which I ſhall mention, objected by theſe Commiſſioners, is the Scotch Books inverting the Order of the Communion in the Engliſh Liturgy. To this the Archbiſhop replies, "That changing the Order, either in the Communion-Office, or any other Part of the Service, is no Diſimprovement of the Prayers, "or any Corruption of the Worſhip. For, "provided the Prayers are all good, the Method of their ſtanding can't make them otherwiſe, unleſs where the Order is Eſſential to "a right Performance. For Inſtance, if the "Abſolution was read before the Confeſſion, in "ſuch Caſes, changing the Order, would affect the Quality of the Service. And to come cloſer, tho' he does not find fault with the Order of the Prayers as they ſtand in the Communion Book of England, (for God be thanked, ſays he, 'tis well) yet if they will preſs him to a Compariſon, he believes the Scottiſh Liturgy ought to have the Preference: That this latter comes nearer the Worſhip in the Primitive Church: And for this he appeals to the Judgment of the Learned. From hence he infers a great deal of Will and Weakneſs in calling this a New-Communion, only becauſe ſome of the Prayers are removed from their former Situation.

Thirdly, which is the laſt Objection; I ſhall report, the Commiſſioners urg'd the Oblation of an unbloody Sacrifice, and this they pretend is Bellarmine's Doctrine. To this the Archbiſhop's Anſwer is, That if Bellarmine means no more by the Oblation of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, than a Commemorative Repreſentation of that great Sacrifice upon the Croſs, the Cardinal is in the Right, as Biſhop Jewell freely acknowledges. As for the Oblation of the Elements, that is fit and proper as the Archbiſhop continues, and that he is ſorry it is not in the Book of England.

Id. pag. 124.

As to the unacceptable Method of bringing in the Scotch Common-Prayer, 'tis rather to be charged upon the Biſhops of that Nation. For when the Direction of this Affair was debated, Archbiſhop Laud adviſ'd the Scotch Prelates to move with great Precaution, to govern themſelves by the Advice of the Lords of the Secret Council, and do nothing that might claſh with the Laws and Conſtitution of that Kingdom. But theſe Biſhops, it ſeems, thought themſelves oblig'd to run a new Courſe, and croſs upon the Cuſtom of the Church. They durſt not truſt their Clergy with this Affair, nor venture the Book with a General Aſſembly.

Baſtwick, Burton and Pryn, write Libels againſt the Hierarchy.

The Engliſh Puritans finding the Scotch diſconcerted, ſtruck in with the Humour, and play'd their Libels upon the Hierarchy. Baſtwick, a Doctor of Phyſick, led the Way in a Pamphlet, entituled, Flagellum Epiſcoporum Latialium; in which he aſperſes the Biſhop's Conduct, and taxes them with an Inclination for Popery. But this Book being written in Latin,

Latin, and therefore not likely to ſpread the Infection ſo ſucceſsfully, he recollected himſelf, and, like Rabſhekah, rail'd in the Vulgar Tongue. However, this ſecond Pamphlet, called his Litany, had nothing extraordinary in it, but Coarſeneſs and Malice. And, that Baſtwick might not ſtand ſingle in the Field, Prynn takes Care to reinforce him in two Tracts, publiſh'd this Year: One is entituled the Quench Coal, in Anſwer to the Coal from the Altar: The other was called, The Unbiſhoping of Timothy and Titus. The Deſign of it was to diſprove the Apoſtolical Inſtitution of Dioceſan Biſhops. Burton, Parſon of St. Matthew Friday-ſtreet, London, came into the Cauſe with ſomewhat more Force and equal Aſſurance. This Divine, preaching in his Pariſh on the fifth of November, took theſe Words for his Text; *My Son, fear thou the Lord, and the King, and meddle not with them that are given to change. In this Sermon he inſulted the Biſhops in the moſt ſcurrilous Language, and accus'd them of the deepeſt Prevarication. He lays Innovation both in Doctrine and Worſhip to their Charge. That they encroach'd upon the Civil Conſtitution, carried their Juriſdiction over the Laws, and broke through an Act of Parliament. (n) That they had falſify'd the Records of the Church, and ſtuff'd in the firſt Clauſe of the Twentieth Article. In ſhort, he arraigns them for notorious Oppreſſion; flouriſhes upon the Fortitude of thoſe who have withſtood their Impoſitions; animates the People to remonſtrate againſt them, and ſeems contented to run the utmoſt Riſque to undo them.

* Prov. chap. 24. v. 22.

(n) 1 Edw. 6. cap. 2.

Being impriſon'd by the High-Commiſſion for this ſcandalous Invective, he appeals to the King, juſtifies his Sermon in an Apology, and afterwards addreſſes the Nobility. In this laſt Application, he exhorts all Degrees of People to appear reſolutely in Defence of the Goſpel againſt the Biſhops. And, laſtly, he prints theſe Diſcourſes together, with a Dedication to the King. Here he endeavours to prepoſſeſs the King with an ill Opinion of the Biſhops Conduct. He tells his Majeſty their Management tends only to create a Miſunderſtanding between him and his People; to alienate the Affection of his good Subjects, and draw an Odium upon the Government. That 'twas the Buſineſs of theſe Factors of Anti-Chriſt to break the Publick Union, and ſubvert the Conſtitution, that they might erect the Throne of Anti-Chriſt upon the Ruins. That the Subverſion of the Goſpel, the Rebuilding Babel, and the Bringing in of Popery, was the chief Deſign of the Prelates and their Party: And that all their Innovations, Encroachment, and dangerous Practice, were only Introductive to this Buſineſs. In his Sermon, which from the Text he miſ-entitules, for God and the King, he makes a Tragical Complaint of Perſecution in Norfolk and Suffolk. "That in thoſe Counties (where Wrenn was now Biſhop) they had made the greateſt Havock of good Miniſters, that had been known within the Memory of Man: That Threeſcore were already ſuſpended in that ſingle Dioceſs. And that by Chriſtmas next, betwixt Three or Fourſcore more muſt either take Leave of a good Conſcience, or elſe be thrown out of their Function and Subſiſtence. And, laſtly, that in all Queen Mary's Reign, the Faithful Miniſter's of God, were not haraſs'd to this Degree (in ſo ſhort a Time) in any Dioceſs, or in the whole Kingdom." Wrenn, to wipe of this Calumny, and reſcue himſelf from ſo ugly an Imputation, order'd his Regiſters to be examin'd: And upon inſpecting the Records of his Court, 'twas found there was not above thirty Clergymen, Lecturers included, that lay under any Sort of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure. That of theſe but Sixteen were ſuſpended; and of theſe Sixteen, Eight had their Reſtraints diſcharged, and were referr'd to a further Time of Tryal. Burton's Clamour of Perſecution might be diſprov'd through ſeveral other Particulars: But this may be ſufficient to diſcover, what Credit is to be given to this Reporter (o).

Archbiſhop Laud's Annual Account of his Province.

"Archbiſhop Laud in his Annual Account of his Province informs the King, that the Walloons, and other Foreigners in his Dioceſs, eſpecially at Canterbury, came orderly to their Pariſh Churches, and conform'd to his Injunctions, within the Limitation allow'd by his Majeſty. That in the Dioceſs of London the Lord Biſhop acquainted him with three groſs Miſdemeanours: That Dr. Cornelius Burgeſs was one Inſtance of this Miſbehaviour: That this Divine, in a Latin Sermon before the London Clergy, had thrown out ſeveral inſolent Paſſages againſt the Biſhops and Government of the Church, and refus'd to give his Dioceſan a Copy of the Diſcourſe." That one Mr. Wharton, a Miniſter in Eſſex, had made an indiſcreet and ſcurrilous Diſcourſe in the Pulpit at Chelmsford: But that, upon receiving a Canonical Admonition, he had been brought to a Submiſſion.

The third Miſdemeanour, which the Biſhop of London complain'd of, was the late diſperſing of ſome factious and malicious Pamphlets againſt the Government of the Biſhops, and Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitution. And that his Lordſhip further certifies, he has good Ground to believe theſe virulent Libels are written, or at leaſt countenanc'd and diſpers'd by ſome of the Clergy of his own Dioceſs.

The Biſhop of Norwich certifies he found a general Defect of Catechiſing quite through the Dioceſs; but has now ſettled that Matter. That in Norwich, where there are Thirty four Churches, there was no preaching on Sunday Morning, excepting in four; the Sermons being put off 'till the Afternoon, and Catechiſing omitted; but that he had broke this ill Cuſtom.

Jan. Anno Dom. 1635.

That Lectures were very frequent in Suffolk, and many of them ſet up by private Gentlemen, without either conſulting the Ordinary, or obſerving the Canons and Diſcipline of the Church. That the Biſhop had brought ſeveral of theſe to a due Regulation, and particularly in St. Edmond's-bury. That Mr. Ward Lecturer at Ipſwich, ſtanding cenſur'd in the High-Commiſſion, and refuſing to ſubmit, the Biſhop was willing to allow them another, upon Application: But they reſolv'd to have Mr. Ward or none, in Contempt, as 'twas thought, of the Cenſure.

The Lecture at Yarmouth occaſion'd a great Deal of Miſunderſtanding in that Town: But now that Exerciſe being ſilenc'd, the Place was quieted, and the Orders of the Church obſerved. As for the Lectures in the Country, they generally run Riot, and live wide of Diſcipline. However, the Biſhop treats them with Temper, upon Promiſe of Conformity. His Lordſhip (Wrenn) craves Direction, what is to be done with ſuch Scholars, ſome in Orders, ſome not, which Gentlemen of Figure entertain in their Houſes, under Pretence of teaching their Children. He likewiſe complains that ſome Benefic'd Divines live in the Houſes of the rich Laity, and not upon their Cures. As to this, the Archbiſhop is of Opinion the Benefic'd Men ſhould be enjoin'd Reſidence: And for the reſt, his Majeſty's Inſtructions ought to be purſued, and none allowed to keep Chaplains, but ſuch as are qualified by Law. However, he humbly refers the Whole to his Majeſty's Pleaſure. To this the King anſwers in theſe Words; I approve your Judgment in this. I only add that Care muſt be taken, that even thoſe qualified by Law, keep none but conformable Men.

This Annual Account reports the reſt of the Dioceſſes in good Order; with this Exception, that in the Welch Dioceſſes, the Diſcipline of the Church was over-born by the Court of Marches. And that from the Sees of Rocheſter, Glouceſter, Briſtol, Coventry and Litchfield, no Certificates were returned (p).

This Year Biſhop Williams publiſhed his Tract entituled, The Holy Table, Name and Thing, in Anſwer to the Coal from the Altar. In this Book the Author has ſome glancing Strokes againſt Bowing at the Name of Jeſus, Worſhipping towards the Eaſt, and Praying conformably to the Canon; and makes removing the Communion-Table to the Place where the Altar ſtood, a Step introductive to Popery: And that theſe New Reformers (as he calls thoſe of Laud's Sentiment), when they had carried the Outworks of Religion, intended to attack the the main Fort. The Learned Heylin, by the King's Order, anſwered this Book in a Tract entitled, Antidotum Lincolnienſe. And ſome few Months after publiſh'd a Reply to Burton's Libel: 'Tis called, A brief and moderate Anſwer to the ſeditious and ſcandalous Challenges of H. B. &c. About the ſame Time two others Books appeared in Defence of the Biſhops Proceedings. One was a further Anſwer to the Biſhop of Lincoln's Holy Table, &c. 'Twas entitled, Altare Chriſtianum, and written by one Pocklington, Benefic'd in Bedfordſhire. The other, publiſh'd againſt Burton, by Dow of Baſel in Suſſex, had the Title, Of Innovations unjuſtly charg'd, &c.

Anno Dom. 1637.

Adam's Sermon at Cambridge touching Confeſſion.

This Year one Adams, preaching in St. Mary's Church, before the Univerſity of Cambridge on theſe Words, Whoſeſoever Sins ye remit, they are remitted, &c. * aſſerted the Neceſſity of Confeſſion to a Prieſt, in Expreſſions ſomewhat unuſual ſince the Reformation. For the Purpoſe: “ That particular Confeſſion to a Prieſt, of all Sins committed after Baptiſm, ſo far as our Memory reaches, is neceſſary to Salvation. That this is the Doctrine not only of the Schoolmen, but of the Fathers, and almoſt all Antiquity. That ſuch Confeſſion is neceſſary, not only Neceſſitate Precepti, but alſo Neceſſitate Medii: So that by the ordinary reveal'd Means appointed by Chriſt, there can be no Salvation without it. And that where the Juncture makes it impracticable, we are obliged to a Reſolution of doing it at the next Opportunity. That God, having an Averſion to all Sin, will not pardon any Breach of Duty, in Caſe we willingly conceal it from the Prieſt's Knowledge. That Confeſſion is no leſs neceſſary to Salvation than the Sacrament of Baptiſm. That ſince our Saviour erected a Court, where Sins ſhould be diſcharged, or cenſur'd at the Diſcretion of his Miniſters, (as 'tis evident by the Text he has done): The Inference is, that 'twas plainly our Saviour's Intention the Faithful ſhould be obliged to confeſs all their Sins to the Prieſt, as far as their Recollectien could ſerve them; and that their Pardon was ſuſpended upon this Condition.” This he conceiv'd was the Doctrine of the Church of England, contain'd in her Liturgy. He maintain'd farther, “ That Confeſſion was a Duty of far more Antiquity and Extent than Popery. That 'twas inſtituted by our Saviour, practis'd by the Apoſtles, by the Holy Fathers, and all the ſucceeding Ages of the Church: And therefore, though the Papiſts uſe it, it can't be call'd a Point of Popery, as ſome wou'd have it. What! (ſays he) ſhall the Errors in ſome Tenets prejudice the Truth in this? What! ſhall we refuſe the Grape, becauſe the Stalk is withered? This were a Puritanical Novation-Nicety. I never heard of any Thing but a fooliſh Cock that ever refuſ'd a Gem, though in a Dunghill.

There being more Paſſages to this Effect, Dr. Ward. Dr. Love, Dr. Brownrig, and Dr. Holdſworth, were diſguſted with the Diſcourſe, and convented Adams before the Heads, who perus'd a Copy of the Sermon. After this, the Vice-Chancellor, Dr. Brownrig, drew up a Recantation enjoyning the Preacher to ſpeak it publickly, to take off the Scandal he had given: The Form is as follows.

“ Whereas, &c. on Sunday the 25th of June laſt in my Publick Sermon on theſe Words, (St. John 20. 23. Whoſe Sins ye remit, they are remitted, and whoſe Sins ye retain, they are retained), I delivered this Doctrine, That a ſpecial Confeſſion unto a Prieſt (actually, where Time or Opportunity preſents it ſelf, or otherwiſe in explicit Intention, and Reſolution) of all our Sins committed after Baptiſm, ſo far forth as we do remember, is neceſſary unto Salvation; not only Neceſſitate Præcepti, but Neceſſitate Medii: So that according to the Ordinance, or reveal'd Means appointed by Chriſt, there can be no Salvation without the aforeſaid Confeſſion, upon more mature Thoughts, and better Information, I do find that this Doctrine then delivered, was both erroneous and dangerous, having not warrant from the Word of God, and croſſing the Doctrine of our Church; as may appear by her Liturgy in the ſecond Exhortation of the Communion; and in the Viſitation of the Sick; and in the ſecond Part in the Homily of Repentance. As therefore in general, I do acknowledge in the Words of the aforeſaid Homily, that it is moſt evident and plain, that this Auricular Confeſſion hath not its Warrant in God's Word; and that therefore, being not led with Conſcience thereof, if we with Fear and Trembling, and with a contrite Heart, uſe that kind of Confeſſion, which God doth command in his Word (namely an unfeigned Confeſſion unto Almighty God himſelf) then, doubtleſs, as he is faithful and true, he will forgive us our Sins, and make us clean from all our Wickedneſs: So in the Caſe of a troubled or doubtful Conſcience, I do conform my Opinion unto the Direction of our Church, which in her Liturgy doth exhort, and require thoſe whoſe Conſciences are troubled with any weighty Matter, to a ſpecial Confeſſion; ſo that they who cannot quiet their own Conſciences, are to repair to their own,

* John 23.

“or ſome other diſcreet and learned Miniſter of God's Word, to open to them their Grief, that ſo they may receive ſuch ghoſtly Counſel, Advice and Comfort, as their Conſciences may be reliev'd, and by the Miniſtry of God's Word, the Benefit of Abſolution to the quieting their Conſcience, and the avoiding of all Scruple and Doubtfulneſs; ſince it is againſt true Chriſtian Liberty, that any Man ſhould be bound to the numbering of his Sins, as it hath been heretofore in Times of Ignorance and Blindneſs. This I do acknowledge to be the Doctrine of the Church of England, concerning Confeſſion; and to it, I do, ex Animo, ſubſcribe, and am heartily ſorry for whatever I have delivered to the contrary.

Adams refuſing to retract, and ſaying he was not conſcious of advancing any Thing contrary to the Doctrine of the Church of England, 'twas put to the Vote by the Heads of the Univerſity, whether this Recantation ſhould be put upon him or not: Dr. Ward, Dr. Bainbridge, Dr. Love, Dr. Holdſworth, and the Vice-Chancellor voted on the Affirmative Side of the Queſtion: But Dr. Collins, Dr. Smith, Dr. Cumber, Dr. Coſin, Dr. Lany, Dr. Martin, Dr. Stern, and Dr. Eden, voting for the Negative, Adams was diſmiſs'd, without farther Trouble. The whole Proceedings of this Affair were ſent up to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and found in his Cloſet at the Tower, indors'd with his own Hand, ſignifying the Date and Subject Matter; and that the Account was tranſmitted to him by Dr. Coſins *.

The Archbiſhop's Diary takes no Notice of this remarkable Narrative: This ſilence makes the Story, or at leaſt the Expreſſion of Part of it, ſomewhat ſuſpicious. However, I thought fit to mention it, and leave it with the Reader upon Ruſhworth's Authority.

An Information againſt Baſtwick, Burton, Pryn in the Star-Chamber.

Ruſhworth, Vol. II. pag. 380.

In Trinity Term this Year, Attorney-General Banks preferr'd an Information in the Star-Chamber againſt John Baſtwick, Doctor in Phyſick, Henry Burton, Batchellor in Divinity, and William Pryn, Barriſter at Law. Theſe three Defendants were proſecuted for publiſhing ſeditious, ſchiſmatical, and libellous Books, againſt the Hierarchy and Government (q). The Defendants drew an Anſwer, which it ſeems was ſo ruggedly worded, that their Council refus'd ſigning it. Upon this they petition'd the Court their Anſwers might be receiv'd, ſign'd by themſelves, pretending ancient Precedents to juſtifie their Requeſt. But this Motion being over-rul'd as unreaſonable, they exhibited a Croſs-Bill againſt Canterbury, and his Confederates, as they call them; charging them with the greateſt Part of thoſe Calumnies, with which their Printed Libels were ſtuff'd. But this Bill being likewiſe ſign'd by none but themſelves, was rejected by the Court.

But here it muſt not be forgotten, that Burton's Anſwer was ſign'd by Holt a Bencher of Gray's-Inn: 'Twas referred to the Conſideration of the two Chief Juſtices, who were to expunge what they thought ſcandalous and improper for the hearing of the Court. Theſe Judges finding the Anſwer a rough and intemperate Invective, ſtruck it all out, excepting ſix Lines in the Beginning, and three or four in the latter End. Burton demanded Juſtice againſt this large Deletion, alledging, that neither himſelf, or his Council were heard before the two Chief Juſtices, in Defence of their Anſwer. However, 'twas ordered by the Court that in Caſe he refus'd to ſwear the expung'd Anſwer, and anſwer to Interrogatories, he muſt be in the ſame Condition with Baſtwick and Pryn, and be proceeded againſt pro Confeſſo.

Burton's Anſwer ſet forth the Subſtance of his Sermon: He charges the Biſhops with the following Innovations. 1ſt. That in the Epiſtle for the Sunday before Eaſter, inſtead of In, they have made it At the Name of Jeſus every Knee ſhall bow. This Alteration he pretends is directly againſt an Act of Parliament. 2dly. That two Places are chang'd in the Prayers appointed for the fifth of November. That the laſt Years Faſt was enjoin'd to be without Sermons in London, the Suburbs, and other infected Places, contrary to the Order for Publick Humiliations in former Times. That Wedneſday was appointed for the Faſt-Day: And that this was done to make this Faſt without preaching, a Preſident to ſuppreſs all Wedneſday Lectures in London. That the Prayer for ſeaſonable Weather was expung'd in this laſt Book for the Faſt. And that the deleting this Prayer was one Cauſe of Wrecks and Tempeſts. That a Paſſage was left out in this Book, touching a dangerous Reliance on Faſting, with Relation to Merit. That theſe Words, Who art the Father of thine Elect, and their Seed, are chang'd in the Collect for the Prince, and the King's Children. And that this Alteration was made by the Prelates to exclude the King's Children from the Number of God's Elect.

Baſtwick's Anſwer was ſcandalouſly coarſe and downright Railing without Reaſon. He charges the Prelates with invading the Prerogative Royal. That they deſpis'd the Holy Scriptures, countenanc'd Prophaneſs, and made it their Buſineſs to promote the Growth of Popery, and bring Superſtition and Idolatry upon the Nation. That they abus'd the King's Authority to Injuſtice and Tyranny. That they manag'd without either Wit, Honeſty or Temper. That they ſerv'd under the Devil, were Enemies to God, and the King; and that every Body of Probity was their Averſion. And all this he had the Confidence to ſay, he was ready to maintain.

Idem.

Pryn's Anſwer had more Manners and Moderation, and whatever his Diſaffection might be, Regard to himſelf kept him at preſent from ſuch Flights of Diſtraction. However, he moved his Anſwer might be read, and offer'd to abide the Cenſure of the Court, provided he fail'd in the Proof. But the Anſwers not paſſing through the Forms of Law, nor coming legally before the Lords of the Star-Chamber, the Court proceeded to Sentence, and fined each of the Defendants, Baſtwick, Burton and Pryn, Five thouſand Pound each to the King, and adjudg'd the two firſt to ſtand in the Pillory at Weſtminſter, and loſe their Ears: As for Pryn, he had loſt his Ears four Years ſince by a Star-Chamber Judgment: However, he had no Abatement in his Puniſhment for that Miſfortune, but was ſentenc'd to loſe the Remainder, and be mark'd on both Cheeks with great S. and L. ſignifying a Seditious Libeller. By the Way, the Libel for which he was proſecuted, was entitled, The News from Ipſwich. In this Pamphlet he calls the Archbiſhop Arch-agent for the Devil: That Beelzebub himſelf had been Archbiſhop. And that the Biſhops in General were Luciferian Lord Biſhops, Execrable Traitors, and Devouring Wolves. But enough of this.

Their Sentence.

* Ruſhworth's Hiſt. Collect. Part II. pag. 1378, &c.

On the Thirtieth of June the Sentence was executed, Burton being firſt degraded. The puniſhing Men of the Three moſt eminent Profeſſions in this ignominious Manner, was ſomewhat ſhocking to many People of no ill Meaning. When they had ſuffered the Sentence they were committed, one to the Caſtle of Lanceſtone in Cornwall; another to the Caſtle of Lancaſter; and the third to the Caſtle of Carmarthen. But theſe Places being crowded with Viſitants, who came to condole with them, the Government to prevent the Miſchief of ſuch a Correſpondence, removed them to a more retir'd Confinement. Pryn was ſent to the Caſtle of Mont-Orgueil in the Iſle of Jerſey; Burton to Caſtle Cornet in the Road to Guernſey, and Baſtwick to St. Mary's Caſtle in the Iſle of Silly.

Somewhat farther of Baſtwick, and Burton's Character.

The Character of theſe Three Perſons, eſpecially of Pryn, may be collected from the foregoing Hiſtory. However, to throw in a Word concerning the other two. “Baſtwick, as the Lord Clarendon deſcribes him, was a half-witted, crack-brain'd Fellow; unknown to either Univerſity, or the College of Phyſicians.” He had ſpent his Time abroad between the Schools and the Camp *, and had gotten a Doctorſhip, and Latin. And being thus furniſh'd with Language and Malice, he publiſhed a ſcandalous Invective againſt the Biſhops, as has been already obſerved.

* Lord Clarendon's Hiſtory of the Rebellion.

Burton, before he took Orders, waited as Cloſet-Keeper upon the King, when Prince of Wales. He was ordain'd Prieſt in the latter End of the laſt Reign, and thought himſelf neglected in not being ſent Chaplain to the Prince, then at Madrid. Upon the Death of King James he expected to have been Clerk of the Cloſet: But this Preferment being beſtowed upon, or rather continued in Neile, Biſhop of Durham, Burton had not Temper enough to conceal this Diſguſt, but committed two or three ſuch weak and rude Indiſcretions, that he was forbidden the Preſumption of appearing any longer at Court. His Ambition being thus baulk'd, he turn'd Lecturer and Mal-Content: And to revenge himſelf on the Biſhop of Durham, plaid his Spleen upon the whole Order.

I ſhall now give the Reader an Abſtract of Archbiſhop Laud's Defence of himſelf, and the reſt of the Biſhops againſt the Charge of Innovation, contain'd in the Libels and Anſwers of Baſtwick, Burton and Pryn. This Vindication the Archbiſhop delivered in a Speech, when the Court was ready to give Sentence.

The Archbiſhop's Vindication of himſelf, and the Biſhops againſt the Charge of Innovation.

“He opens his Diſcourſe with remarking how odious a Method it was to make uſe of Libells, even for the Support of Truth; and bring Religion under the Protection of Railing. And that the Primitive Chriſtians forbore this Expedient, when Perſecution was moſt rigorous and raging. As for the Order of Biſhops, he maintain'd it to be Jure Divino, though not in all the Adjuncts or Circumſtances of that Function. And that from the Time of the Apoſtles, the Church of Chriſt, through all Ages and Countries, had been governed by Biſhops. And that Lay-Elders were never heard of, 'till Calvin's new fangled Device at Geneva.

“And whereas 'twas objected by the Defendants, that the Biſhop's claiming by Divine Right, implied a Commiſſion independent upon the State; and was by Conſequence an Encroachment upon the Prerogative. The Archbiſhop anſwers, this was a mere ignorant Evaſion: For, to uſe his own Words, Our being Biſhops, ſays he, by Divine Right takes nothing from the King's Right or Power over us. For though our Office be from God and Chriſt immediately, yet may we not exerciſe that Power, either of Order or Juriſdiction, but as God hath appointed us, that is, not in his Majeſties, or any Chriſtian King's Kingdoms, but by, and under the Power of the King, given us ſo to do (r).

(r) Archbiſhop Laud's Speech in the Star-Chamber, June 16.1637.

Whether this Reaſoning of the Archbiſhop will hold or not, I ſhall refer the Reader to what has been obſerved in both the Parts of my Hiſtory upon this Subject.

As to the Innovations charg'd in the Libels, he anſwers them as they lie. “Firſt, touching the ſuppreſſing Sermons in Places viſited with the Plague, during the Faſt; and that this was contrary to the Order of former Times:” To this he returns, that the preſent Age is not unalterably bound up to the Precedents of the former: That it is no Fault to avoid an Inconvenience, and grow wiſer upon Experience: That the ſuppreſſing thoſe Sermons was no Act of the Biſhops, but an Order of the Privy Council, to prevent the ſpreading of the Infection: And, laſtly, that as Faſt-Sermons had been managed of late, the People were much the worſe for them: That the Government was arraign'd, and the People heated towards Sedition at ſuch Opportunities. And for this he mentioned Burton's Sermon as a clear Inſtance. As to the Wedneſday-Faſt without Sermons; he anſwer'd, that Wedneſday was the uſual Day for ſuch Publick Faſts: That 'twas fixed by the Lord-Keeper Coventry, who was apparently no Friend to Popery. And notwithſtanding 'twas pretended the Day was changed for putting down the Wedneſday Lectures, the preſent Continuance of theſe Exerciſes on that Day was a ſufficient Diſproof of that Surmiſe. Their Objection of leaving out the Prayer for ſeaſonable Weather being a trifling Allegation, the Archbiſhop's Anſwer ſhall be omitted.

To the Omiſſion of a Clauſe in a Thankſgiving Collect, for God's delivering us from Popiſh Superſtition, his Anſwer is, “That though our Fore-fathers had been delivered from ſuch Superſtitions, yet, bleſſed be God, we were never in them; and therefore could not properly be ſaid to have been deliver'd. And whereas a Paſſage, relating to a Reliance on the Merit of Faſting, was left out in the late Orders. To this he replies, That in this Age and Kingdom there was no Danger of over-rating the Significancy of Faſting. That on the contrary, the Diſcipline of Lent, and other ſtated Times for Auſterity and Mortification, were diſuſed, and treated with Contempt; excepting ſuch voluntary Humiliations as ſome humourſome and deſigning People called for, to carry on their own Buſineſs. The next pretended Innovation I ſhall mention is, the expunging Father of thine Elect, and of their Seed, in the Collect for the Royal Family. To this 'twas anſwered, That this Collect was not in the Common-Prayer Book confirmed by Law, in the Reigns of King Edward the Sixth, and Queen Elizabeth; neither of thoſe Princes having any Iſſue: And that 'twas left out for ſome Years after his preſent Majeſty came to the Crown.

And laſtly, that the Clauſe of Father of thine Elect, &c. was left out by Abbot his Predeceſſor: Altering the Words in the Epiſtle on the Sunday next before Eaſter, and putting At the Name of Jeſus for In the Name of Jeſus; and bowing when the Name of Jeſus was pronounc'd, was another Head of Complaint againſt the Biſhops. To this 'twas anſwered, that bowing at the Name of Jeſus was no Innovation introduced by the Prelates now living, but enjoined by Queen Elizabeth's Injunctions at the beginning of the Reformation. And (2d) though it is In the Name of Jeſus in the old Editions of the Liturgies, 'tis At the Name of Jeſus in the Tranſlation of Geneva, printed in the Year 1567, and in the new Tranſlation made in the late Reign. The Biſhops are further charged with the Alteration of two Paſſages in the Form of Prayer ſet forth by Act of Parliament for the 5th of November. The Form ſtands thus, Root out the Babyloniſh Sect, which ſay of Jeruſalem, down with it, &c. The other Paſſage is this, Cut of thoſe Workers of Iniquity whoſe Religion is Rebellion, &c. Both which are thus altered in the Books laſt printed. Root out the Babyloniſh and Antichriſtian Sect (of them) which ſay, &c. And cut off thoſe Workers of Iniquity who turn Religion into Rebellion, &c. To this the Defence was, that the Prayers for the 5th of November, were neither made, publiſhed, or enjoined by Act of Parliament, but only by the King's Authority: (2d) That being drawn up and ordered to be read by the King's ſole Authority, his Majeſty might alter the Form as far as he thought proper: And that the Archbiſhop had the King's Hand for thoſe Alterations.

The pretended Innovation in placing the Communion Table, where the Altar ſtood reading the ſecond Service at it, and bowing towards, or before it, was thus diſproved: Firſt, the Archbiſhop had Practice and Cuſtom on his Side; for the Table had been placed in this Situation in his Majeſty's Chappel, and ſeveral Cathedrals, ſince the Reformation. That if this way of ſtanding was lawful in thoſe Places of Devotion, how could the ſame Uſage be exceptionable in other Churches? His Defence from Authority and Law has been mentioned upon another Occaſion, and therefore I ſhall paſs it over. Then as for reading the Communion Service at the Altar, 'twas the cuſtomary Practice as far as his Memory could reach: That this Uſage was firſt changed in the Churches where the Puritans preach'd, and therefore the Charge of Innovation muſt lie at their Door. (2dly) That the reading Divine Service at the Communion Table is required by the Rubrick. For Inſtance: In the firſt Rubrical Paragraph after the Communion, 'tis appointed, that on Holy-Days (if there is no Communion) all ſhall be ſaid that is appointed at the Communion: And in the laſt Rubrick before the Communion, the Prieſt is ordered to ſtand at the North Side of the Holy Table, and officiate: And laſtly, bowing towards the Table at their approaching towards it, or entring into the Church, was defenſible by the Practice of Moſes, David, and Hezekiah; and implyed in the Pſalm, O come let us worſhip and fall down, &c. That this Sentence ſtood conſtantly in the Front of the Ancient Liturgies, and thus it ſtands in ours: And that therefore the People might as well refuſe coming to Church, as worſhipping when they came thither. To this the Archbiſhop ſubjoined, that by the Statutes of the Noble Order of the Garter, the Knights were obliged to make their Reverence towards the Altar. That this Religious Ceremony had continued ever ſince the Time of King Henry the Fifth: That if there were any Idolatry in it, neither Queen Elizabeth who expelled, nor King James, who kept out Popery, would have ſuffered this Practice. After this he argues in a Dilemma, that if it was a Part of Divine Worſhip, and no Idolatry, he ought to perform it no leſs than the Garter-Knights. But if 'twas a prohibited Inſtance of Adoration, and claſhed with the Decalogue, they ought to forbear it, as well as himſelf: Their heavieſt Charge, that the Biſhops had interpolated the Church Records, forged a Popiſh Clauſe, and tacked it to the beginning of the twentieth Article, has been ſufficiently diſproved already, under the Year 1562; and thither I refer the Reader.

The Archbiſhop having gone through theſe Heads of Innovation, acquainted the Court there were ſome other remaining Exceptions in Points of Doctrine: But that theſe ſhould quickly be ſatisfied in a Tract for that Purpoſe, meaning the Anſwer to Burton's Book already mentiond. In the cloſe, he declines giving Sentence againſt the Perſons proſecuted, in Regard he was ſomewhat of a Party in the Information: And thus he leaves them to God's Mercy, and the King's Juſtice.

There was one conſiderable Article, of which the Archbiſhop took no Notice in his Speech: 'Tis this, That the Prelates had never applied for the King's Letters Patents under the Great Seal of England. to authorize the keeping their Courts, Viſitations, &c. but that they acted in their own Names, and under their own Seals, contrary to Law. (s) The Force of this Objection having been diſabled by a ſolemn Reſolution already related, I ſhall wave Repetition; only to what has been ſaid, it may not be improper to add upon this Occaſion, that upon the 14th of May, this Year, the Judges unanimouſly declared, that the Act of Repeal of 1 Ed. 6. cap. 2. made in the firſt of Queen Mary, was ſtill in Force.

(s) Burton's Sermon, pag. 69.

But to ſtrengthen this Security for the Church, and make it ſerviceable to After-ages, He humbly deſired the King the Caſe might be put more at length, and that the Reſolution of all the Reverend Judges might be taken fuller in Form, and publiſhed by his Majeſty. That by this Means the Governours of the Church may proceed more chearfully in their Functions; and the Laity be delivered from the Prejudices they had received of the Biſhops Encroachment. His Majeſty condeſcending to this Motion, publiſhed the following Declaration.

By the King.

A Vindication of the Biſhop's exerciſing Juriſdiction in their own Names.

Whereas in ſome of the Libellous Books and Pamphlets lately publiſhed the moſt Reverend Fathers in God, the Lord Archbiſhops, and Biſhops of the Realm, are ſaid to have uſurped upon his Majeſties Prerogative Royal, and to have proceeded in the High Commiſſion, and other Eccleſiaſtical Courts, contrary to the Laws and Statutes of the Realm: It was ordered by his Majeſties High Court of Star-Chamber, the twelfth of June laſt, That the Opinion of the two Lords Chief Juſtices, the Lord Chief Baron, and the reſt of the Judges and Barons, ſhould be had and certified in theſe Particulars, viz. Whether Proceſſes may not iſſue out of the Eccleſiaſtical Courts in the Names of the Biſhops? Whether a Patent under the Great Seal be neceſſary for the keeping of the Eccleſiaſtical

Courts, and enabling Citations, Suſpenſions, Ex communications, and other Cenſures of the Church? And whether the Citations ought to be in the King's Name, and under his Seal of Arms; and the like for Inſtitutions and Inductions to Benefices, and Correction of Eccleſiaſtical Offences? And whether Biſhops, Archdeacons, and other Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, may or ought to keep any Viſitation at any Time, unleſs they have expreſs Commiſſion, or Patent under the Great Seal of England, to do it; and that as his Majeſties Viſitors only, and in his Name, and Right alone?

A Reſolution of all the Judges touching this Matter entred upon Record.

" Whereupon the ſaid Judges having taken " the ſame into their ſerious Conſideration, did " unanimouſly agree and concur in Opinion; and " on the firſt Day of July laſt certified under " their Hands as followeth: That Proceſſes may iſſue out of Eccleſiaſtical Courts in the Name of the Biſhops, and that a Patent under the Great Seal is not neceſſary for the keeping the ſaid Eccleſiaſtical Courts, or for the enabling of Citations, Suſpenſions, Excommunications, and other Cenſures of the Church. And that it is not neceſſary that Summons, Citations, or other Proceſſes Eccleſiaſtical in the ſaid Courts, or Inſtitutions, and Inductions to Benefices, or Correction of Eccleſiaſtical Offences by Cenſure in thoſe Courts, be in the King's Name, or with the Style of the King, or with the King's Seal, or the Seals of the Office have in them the King's Arms; and that the Statute 1 Edw. 6. c. 2. which enacted the contrary, is not now in Force; and that the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Archdeacons, and other Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, may keep their Viſitations, as uſually they have done, without Commiſſion under the Great Seal ſo to do. " Which Opinions and Reſolutions being de- " clared under the Hands of all his Majeſties " ſaid Judges, and ſo certified into his Court of " Star-Chamber, were there recorded: And it " was by that Court further ordered, the fourth " of the ſaid July, That the ſaid Certificate ſhould be inrolled in all other his Majeſties Courts at Weſtminſter, and in the High Commiſſion, and other Eccleſiaſtical Courts for the Satisfaction of all Men: That the Proceedings in the High Commiſſion, and other Eccleſiaſtical Courts, are agreeable to the Laws and Statutes of this Realm.

And his Royal Majeſty hath thought fit, with the Advice of his Council, that a publick Declaration, of theſe the Opinions of his Reverend and Learned Judges, being agreeable to the Judgment and Reſolution of former Times, ſhould be made known to all his Subjects, as well to vindicate the Legal Proceedings of his Eccleſiaſtical Courts and Miniſters, from the unjuſt and ſcandalous Imputation of invading or intrenching on his Royal Prerogative, as to ſettle the Minds, and ſtop the Mouths, of all unquiet Spirits, that for the Future they preſume not to cenſure his Eccleſiaſtical Courts, or Miniſters in theſe their juſt and warranted Proceedings. And hereof his Majeſty admoniſheth all his Subjects to take Warning, as they will anſwer the contrary at their Peril.

Given at the Court at Lindhurſt the 13th Day of Auguſt, in the 13th
Year of his Reign, 1637.

Biſhop Williams proſecuted in the Star-Chamber for Subornation, and fined, &c.

In Trinity-Term, this Summer, Williams, Lord Biſhop of Lincoln, was proſecuted a freſh in the Star-Chamber: A Bill had ſome time been preferred againſt him in this Court for revealing the King's Secrets, Sir John Lamb and Dr. Sibthorp being the Informers. But here the Biſhop defended himſelf ſo well, that Attorney General Noy grew weary of the Cauſe, and ſlackned the Proſecution. But after his Death the Buſineſs was revived by one Kilvart, Proctor in the Arches. This Kilvart perceiving the Biſhop's Defence, reſted moſt upon the Teſtimony of Prigeon, Regiſtrary of the Court at Lincoln, endeavoured to diſable the Credit of this Evidence: To this Purpoſe he lays a Baſtard to his Charge, and proved the Accuſation ſo plauſibly, if not with Truth, that the Juſtices of the Peace, at the Quarter-Seſſions at Lincoln, made an Order for obliging Prigeon to keep the Child. The Biſhop, to clear Prigeon's Reputation, procured two of his Country-men, Owen and Powell, to give in Counter-Evidence, and ſwear the Baſtard upon one Boone; upon this Kilvart taking his Advantage, drops the Proſecution againſt Prigeon, and exhibits a new Bill againſt the Biſhop for Subornation of Witneſſes. Williams being either conſcious of ſome wrong Step, or ſuſpecting his Judges unfriendly, endeavoured to compound with his Majeſty, and offered to purchaſe his Quiet with a conſiderable Sum. This Overture was afterwards urged againſt him as an Argument of Guilt. In ſhort, he was fined Eight thouſand Pounds to the King, ſuſpended a Beneficiis & Officiis, and impriſoned during the King's Pleaſure. The Sentence was accordingly executed in every Part; the Money was all exacted, he was ſent to the Tower, and his Juriſdiction fell to the Archbiſhop; Laud concurred in the Cenſure with the reſt of the Star-Chamber, and harangued with great Vehemence and Length upon Williams's Offence. Amongſt other Things, he ſet forth, that the World was above Three thouſand Years old before it was depraved to the Commiſſion of ſo great a Wickedneſs: That Jeſabel was the firſt in Scripture who ſtands marked for Subornation; and that her Witneſſes are deſcribed in the ſtrongeſt Terms of Infamy, and called the Sons of Belial: That notwithſtanding he had been five Times on his Knees to the King on the Biſhop's Behalf, yet now, upon further Recollection, he could ſollicit no longer for a gentle Sentence. (t)

The Biſhop's Secretary, Walker, and Powell his Steward, were fined Three hundred Pounds each; and Lund, another of his Servants, a Thouſand Marks, all Defendants in the ſame Cauſe; yet none of them were impriſoned except Lund for a few Weeks, neither was their Fine ever demanded. This Favour was interpreted by the Biſhop to bribe them to Kilvart's Pleaſure, and liſt them in his Service.

Biſhop Williams complains of illegal Proſecution.

To make the Hiſtory of this Matter more entire, the Reader may obſerve, that in the Year One thouſand ſix hundred and forty, when Williams was diſcharged out of the Tower, and reſtored to his Place in Parliament, he complained of the Illegality of the Proſecution. To make his Complaint good, he alledged,

(1.) That his Adverſaries deſpairing of Succeſs, drop'd their firſt Information about revealing the King's Secrets, changed their Battery, and proſecuted him for Subornation; whereas he conceived all Acceſſaries and Incidentals ought to ſink with the principal Charge.

(2.) That he was barr'd the Advantage of excepting againſt the Teſtimonies of Sir John Lamb, and Dr. Sibthorp, and proving a Conſpiracy upon them; and that they lay covered upon the Score of their being King's Evidence. And thus thoſe Witneſſes which were moſt ſerviceable for the Defendant, were ſet aſide by the Court.

(3.) That

(t) Leſtrange's Hiſt. King Charles I. MS. penes me. Ruſhworth.

(3.) That Kilvart menac'd thoſe who were to appear in Behalf of the Biſhop; committed ſome of them, and over-aw'd the reſt into Silence (n). The Biſhop urging ſeveral other Inſtances of hard Uſage, the Lords were ſo far ſatisfied with his Plea, that they ordered the Records in the Star-Chamber, relating to that Proceſs, to be all raz'd.

(u) Fuller's Church Hiſt. Book II.

To return to the Time before us; Biſhop Williams fell under a ſecond Cenſure in the Star Chamber upon the following Occaſion. Mr. Osbaldſton, School-Maſter, and Prebendary of Weſtminſter, ſent a Letter to Williams two Years ſince, in which there was this Paſſage: The little Vermin, the Urchin, and the Hocus Pocus, this ſtormy Chriſtmas., is at true and real Variance with the Leviathan. The Biſhop communicating the Contents of this Letter, was proſecuted for divulging Libels upon Privy Councellors; the Bill ſetting forth that the Archbiſhop of Canterbury was meant by the Urchin, and the Lord Treaſurer Weſton by the Leviathan: And that the Biſhop ought to have put this ſcandalous Letter into the Hands of ſome Juſtice of Peace, and not diſperſed it.

The Biſhop's Defence was, that he did not remember the receiving of any ſuch Letter: And farther, that he was not ſenſible the Law obliged any Perſon to trouble a Juſtice of Peace, with Riddles, and unintelligible Deſcription. And to ſecond the Biſhop's Plea, Osbaldſton declared his Letter was clear miſconſtrued; and that Hocus Pocus ſtood for one Dr. Spicer a Civilian, and Leviathan for the Chief Juſtice Richardſon. It ſeems there was ſome Reſemblance in the Stature of theſe Gentlemen, which might make this Conſtruction paſs. But theſe Allegations were found evaſive; for Kilvart produced a Letter written by Williams to his Secretary Walker, at the Time when the Miſunderſtandings happened between Laud and Weſton: The Letter is this.

> " Here is a ſtrange Thing, Mr. Oſdbaldſton
> " importunes me to contribute to my Lord Trea-
> " ſurer's Uſe, ſome Charges upon the Little > " Great Man, and aſſures me they are mortally
> " out. I have utterly refuſed to meddle in this
> " Buſineſs; and I pray you learn from Mr. S.
> " and Mr. H. if any ſuch falling out be, or > " whether ſome Body hath not gulled the School-
> " Maſter in theſe three laſt Letters; and keep
> " it unto your ſelf, what I write unto you. If > " my Lord Treaſurer would be ſerved by me,
> " he muſt uſe a more near, ſolid, and truſty
> " Meſſenger, and free me from the Bonds of the > " Star-Chamber, elſe let them fight it out for > " me.

He falls under a ſecond Cenſure in the Star-Chamber.

The Myſtery thus diſcovered, they both fell under the Statute of Scandalum Magnatum, which drew another Fine of Eight thouſand Pounds upon the Biſhop: Osbaldſton's Sentence was a Fine of Five thouſand Pounds, the Loſs of all his Church Preferments, to have his Ears faſtned to the Pillory in the Palace-Yard; and both of them were adjudged to pay Coſts to Archbiſhop Laud. Theſe were look'd on as harſh Proceedings; but the Archbiſhop, as 'tis affirmed, had a Favour in Reſerve for Osbaldſton, and reſolved to throw himſelf at the King's Feet, that the Corporal Puniſhment might not be executed: That this was his Intention, ſeems probable by Osbaldſton's not being immediately confined, but ſuffered to make his Eſcape.

The Scotch Common-Prayer read at Edinburgh, and inſulted.

Theſe Rigours, as they were conſtrued, of the Star-Chamber, proſecuting the Clergy for not reading the Declaration for Sports, and falling ſhort of Complyance in Ceremonies, gave an Umbrage to the Scots, filled them with Jealouſies, made them more implicit to Presbyterian Suggeſtions, and an eaſier Property to the Politicians of that Kingdom: This gave the Mal-Contents a Handle for Practice, and a ſtronger Averſion againſt the Common-Prayer. Their Diſaffection to the Hierarchy was puſhed farther by the Faction in England, who were not without a Correſpondence with the Scots. Theſe Men being highly diſguſted with the publiſhing the Book for Sports, removing the Communion-Table to an Altar-Situation, ſuppreſſing Lectures, and Afternoon Sermons, and forbidding preaching, or printing, in Defence of Calviniſm, carried their Complaints to the remoteſt Parts of the Iſland, and alarm'd the Scots with Apprehenſions of being reduced to the ſame Condition. They believed their own Prelates acted by concert with Laud and his Party, were raiſing their Juriſdiction upon the Ruins of Presbytery, and bringing the Church to the Engliſh Model. This, beſide their particular Exceptions to the New Service, made them ſtrongly prepoſſeſs'd againſt this Affair.

The Biſhops, purſuant to his Majeſties Command, ordered Intimation to be given in the Pulpits at Edinburgh, that the next Sunday, July the 23d, the Service Book would be read in all the Churches: The Miniſters dilated upon the Benefits of the Common-Prayer, and exhorted the People to Compliance.

Accordingly, on the 23d of July, the Dean of Edinburgh began to read the Book at the Cathedral of St. Giles's; but the Devotion was quickly diſturb'd by a Mob of Women, who outraged the Dean with Clamour, and other Inſtances of Rudeneſs: Upon this the Biſhop of Edinburgh ſtepping into the Pulpit, put them in Mind of the Place, and the Buſineſs, and endeavoured to recover them to Decency and Temper: But Admonition ſerving only to enrage the more, they threw Stools at the Dean and Biſhop, and attempted to pull them out of the Pulpit and Desk: The Miniſters who read the Common-Prayer in the other Churches, met with the ſame Treatment, and made their Eſcape with great Difficulty. The Lord Chancellour, and the Secret Council, to prevent the Repetition of this Inſolence, appearing well attended in the Afternoon, the Book was read without Diſturbance. (w) However, the Biſhop going to his Houſe was in Danger of being murder'd in the Streets: But by good Providence the Earl of Roxborough coming by, took him into his Coach, and out-drove the Rabble. This bold Salley, tho' it carried the Face of a raſh unpremediated Riot, was in Reality, the Reſult of a Conſultation held at Edinburgh in April laſt. Here the Lord Balmaranoch. Sir Thomas Hope, Advocate, and Mr. Alexander Henderſon, with ſome others of Conduct and Figure, being in the Concert, engaged the Women to begin the Attack upon the Book, giving them an Aſſurance the Men would ſupport 'em, and go on with the Quarrel.

August the 23*d.*

Notwithſtanding this Inauſpicious Beginning, the Archbiſhop of St. Andrew's charged this Henderſon, and Mr. James Bruce, benefic'd in Fiſe, to read the Book under the Penalty of Horning. * Theſe two Miniſters addreſſing the Lords of the Council for a Suſpenſion of this Order, were ſo far conſider'd, as to have a Month's Reſpite; during which Time theſe Lords wrote to the King for further Inſtructions.

The Biſhops expected the Council would have diſcountenanc'd theſe Miniſters in their Petition, and puniſhed the Rioters at Edinburgh in an Exemplary Manner: But when they ſound themſelves diſappointed in both, they began to diſtruſt the Lord Treaſurer, when 'twas too late.

The Countenance Henderſon and Bruce met with at the Council encouraged the reſt, and made ſeveral of the Nobility, with no ſmall Number of the Miniſters and Burgeſſes, declare openly for the Cauſe, and addreſs the Board in Form againſt the Common Prayer.

Guthry.

Some Reaſons of the Miſcarriage of this Affair.

If we enquire into the Reaſons of this unhappy Miſcarriage, the Earl of Traquair's being too much confided in by the Engliſh and Scotch Prelates, and their reſting the whole Affair upon the Conduct of this Noble Man, had no ſmall Weight upon the Diſappointment. I have already obſerved, that this Earl being apprehenſive of a Rivalſhip in Intereſt from the Biſhop of Roſs, grew diſaffected to the reſt of that Order: That he was no Friend to the Biſhops, appears further by his Letter to the Marquiſs of Hamilton, upon the Subject before us. "He "deſires the Marquiſs to ſuggeſt to his Majeſty, "that if he is pleaſed to ſend for any of the "Scotch Clergy to report the Condition of Affairs, or employ them in the preſent Juncture; "he would chuſe ſome of the beſt qualified "with Temper and Diſcretion: For, as for "ſome Leading Men amongſt them, they were "defective in Judgment, and extravagantly Violent and Forward: That their want of Underſtanding to manage Things of this Niceneſs and "Weight, embarraſs'd the Council with a great "many Difficulties: And that their Raſhneſs "and Folly, both in Diſcourſe and Buſineſs, "were the Occaſion of Fears and Jealouſies "among the People, and made the Government miſconſtrued. That the Biſhops complained their Revenues and Juriſdiction was "ſeiz'd by the Reformation; and that the Worſhip of God was not in all Circumſtances exactly ſettled. From hence it appears, the Earl was not pleaſed the Biſhop ſhould remember Encroachments upon Religion, move for Redreſs, and endeavour reſtoring the Church to a Primitive Condition.*

The Earl of Traquair repreſents the Scottiſh Biſhops to Diſadvantage.

To return the poſtponing the reading the Liturgy from Eaſter to July was another wrong Step: By this Delay the Presbyterians had Time to form Counter-Schemes, and make Parties againſt it: They had Leiſure to alarm the People with Jealouſies, that the Purity of Religion muſt ſuffer, and that Superſtition and Popery would be forced upon them. And thus when they had ſurpriz'd their Underſtandings, miſreported the Church and State, and work'd themſelves to a Confidence with their Party, 'twas then in their Power to govern almoſt at Pleaſure; 'twas thought the Scotch Biſhops made ſome other Miſtakes: For not to repeat their declining getting the Book paſs'd in a General Aſſembly, they fell into another Error, by making their firſt Tryal in a Town where they might reaſonably expect moſt Oppoſition: Inſtead therefore of executing the Liturgy at Edinburgh, they ſhould have made their firſt Eſſay in remoter Dioceſſes, where the People were leſs indiſpoſed.

Some of the Scotch Biſhops are likewiſe blam'd for not preacquainting the Lords of the Council, and others of the Nobility, with the Deſign: Had theſe Great Men been at firſt applied to for their Concurrence, and courted into the Intereſt, 'tis believed no ſmall Numbers of them might have been gained: This was the Archbiſhop of Canterbury's Advice, when the Common-Prayer Book was under the firſt Digeſtion. Some of the Scotch Biſhops likewiſe complained of their not being taken into the Conſult, this was cenſured as an Exceſs of Secrecy: For which Way could theſe Prelates, who knew little or nothing, exert themſelves, and work their Clergy to Compliance? Beſides, there was no Care taken to make the Miniſters; nothing promiſed to take off the Leading Men, and bribe them to their Duty: And laſtly, the publick Intimation of reading the Book a Week before might probably diſſerve the Undertaking: For what was this Notice, but a kind of Summons to the Mal-Contents, to rendezvous the Mob, and prepare them for Mutiny and Inſult; and thus much for the Miſtakes Prior to the Experiment. To proceed to ſome other following Inſtances. (1.) When the Scotch Biſhops found the Book ill received, and the Rabble riſe upon it, they conſulted apart, ſent the King Word of what had paſs'd without preacquainting the Temporal Lords, or reinforcing the Cauſe with that Intereſt. Next, their leaving Edinburgh, and retiring all to their Dioceſſes, excepting the Biſhops of Galloway and Dunblaine, was remark'd as another Error: For, as Canterbury, in one of his Letters to Traquair, expoſtulates, they muſt needs imagine the Adverſe Party would make an Advantage of their Abſence, and clog the Undertaking with new Difficulties.

But to this it may be anſwered, the Biſhops might reaſonably conclude themſelves unſafe in this Town: For neither the Lords of the Council, or the Magiſtracy, had given any Orders to ſeize the Chief Incendiaries, and bring them to Juſtice: This Impunity look'd either like Fear or Favour, and encouraged to further Inſolence: Had the Sword of Juſtice been ſeaſonably drawn on ſome few, 'tis probable it might have prevented a great Effuſion of Blood, and ſecured the Repoſe of that Kingdom: But thoſe who manag'd the Adminiſtration ſeem'd to have other Views, or at leaſt different Thoughts, of the Iſſue; for inſtead of puniſhing the Rioters, they ſuſpended the Liturgy.

August the 19th.

'Tis true, the Edinburghers being apprehenſive the Engliſh Fleet might diſtreſs them, by blocking up their Haven, endeavoured to bring his Majeſty to a better Opinion of their Conduct. To this Purpoſe, in their Letter to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, they declared their Abhorrence of the late Tumult, proteſted their Innocency, and appealed to the Lords of the Council for their Vindication: To this they ſubjoin'd their Readineſs to aſſiſt the Biſhops and Miniſters for ſettling the Service-Book; and that they would do their utmoſt to promote this Affair, and protect thoſe that engaged in it. And to give their Application a ſtronger Appearance of Reality, they ſeiz'd ſome of the Mutineers, and made Enquiry after others: And whereas the City Miniſters deſired to be excus'd reading the Book, till Security was given them againſt the Rabble; the Magiſtrates and Common-Council of Edinburgh ſigned them a Safeguard in Form, and over and above ſettled a Maintenance.

And now Harveſt coming on, the Phrenzy of the Populace ſeem'd to cool, and Buſineſs was ſome Intermiſſion to Sedition: But after this Seaſon was over, the Presbyterian Faction drew together again, and appeared at Edinburgh in formidable Numbers, And now the Burghers began to lay aſide the Maſk, and diſcover their Inclination. Inſtead of exerting their former Zeal for the Common-Prayer, they preſented an Addreſs to the Lords of the Council, that the Book might not be preſs'd upon them, 'till the King's Pleaſure was further known. The Secret Council perceiving the City diſaffected, and apprehenſive of ſome dangerous Conſequence, iſſued out three Proclamations. The firſt to diſcharge their Meeting with Reference to Church Affairs, commanding them all to repair to their reſpective Homes, excepting thoſe who could ſhow the Board ſufficient Reaſons for their ſtaying. The ſecond, was for removing the Seſſion or Term from Edinburgh to Lithgoe. The third, publiſhed about three Days after, ordered the calling in, and burning a ſeditious Pamphlet, entitled, A Diſpute againſt the English Popiſh Ceremonies obtruded upon the Kirk of Scotland. Theſe Proclamations enraged the People, and brought great Bodies of Women upon the former Enterprize. And the next Day the Biſhop of Galloway going to the Council Houſe, was purſued all along with Reproaches; and had in all Likelihood been torn in Pieces, had he not been reſcued with great Difficulty. The Earl of Traquair receiving Advice of this Outrage, forced his Paſſage through the Rabble, and gained the Council Houſe. But being got in he found his Condition no better than the Biſhop's: For the Place was immediately beſet, and the Lords within terribly menaced. Upon this the Aſſiſtance of the Provoſt, and Common Council was deſired to diſengage the Lord Treaſurer, and the Biſhop: But anſwer was returned, they were under the ſame Circumſtances, and no leſs formidably inveſted than themſelves. That under this Extremity of Dureſs, they had been forced to ſign a Paper to adhere to the Mutineers, in Oppoſition to the Service Book: And to reſtore Ramſey and Rollock, two ſilenc'd Miniſters, and one Henderſon a ſilenced Reader.

Octob. 17.

L'Eſtrange Guthry.

The Noiſe of the Edinburghers having join'd the Addreſſors againſt the Common-Prayer, made ſuch an Impreſſion upon the Burroughs, that notwithſtanding the former Neutrality of moſt of them, they came now all into the Cauſe, Aberdeen excepted. And, to ſhew their Heartineſs puſhed forwards with the greateſt Fury imaginable; ſo that neither the Clergy, or any others of a different Sentiment, could live amongſt them.

December 19.

When the Council ſat at Dalkeith, the Noblemen and Commiſſioners of the Faction preſented a Declinatur againſt the Biſhops: For the Miniſters had lately ſigned a Remonſtrance againſt their Prelates; complained of them as Betrayers of Religion, and deſired they might be brought to Juſtice. The Biſhops being thus, as it were impeached, and lying under a Criminal Character, theſe Petitioners did not think it reaſonable they ſhould be allowed the Privilege of Judges, and vote at the Council Table. And here the Lord Treaſurer Traquair, Sir James Carmichael, Treaſurer Depute, or Chancellour of the Exchequer, Sir Thomas Hope Advocate, and Sir John Hamilton Juſtice-Clerk, opened themſelves more than formerly, and diſcovered their Inclination to the Petitioners. And, in ſhort, none of the Board ſpoke heartily for the Biſhops, excepting Sir John Hay Clerk-Regiſter, or Maſter of the Rolls*.

To proceed: The Lords of the Council having procur'd a Protection for themſelves from ſome of the Mal-content Nobility, publiſhed a Proclamation for preventing ſuch Diſorders as had lately happened: But the Government had loſt the Aſcendant. For the Burghers ſent ſome of their Body to the Council Table, to demand the reſtoring the Miniſters to their Places, and the Performance of other extorted Articles. Not long after the Council was ſollicited with another Petition againſt the Liturgy and Canons. This Addreſs came ſtrongly ſupported, countenanced by all Degrees, and ſign'd by Noble-Men, Barons, Miniſters, Burgeſſes, and Commons.

"This Petition being ſent up to the King, he replied to the Subſtance in a Proclamation, in which his Majeſty acquaints them with the Piety of his Intentions in ſending them the Liturgy: That he meant nothing leſs than the Maintenance of the true Religion profeſs'd amongſt them: That there was nothing in the Service-Book, but what had been peruſ'd and approv'd by himſelf before it was printed: That the Book would be a Guard to their Religion; and for this he did not queſtion to give them Satisfaction in due Time: That he ſhould overlook what was paſt, upon Condition of better Behaviour. His Majeſty proceeded to forbid the like tumultuous Meetings, upon Pain of Treaſon. And the Term being now removed to Sterling, he commanded that no Strangers ſhould repair thither: And that all Perſons, unleſs particularly licenc'd, of what Degree ſoever, being neither Lords of the Council or Seſſion, nor Inhabitants of the Town, ſhould within ſix Hours after this Publication, quit the Place, under the Forfeitures of Treaſon. The Proclamation concludes with this gentle Sentence, That his Majeſty would not reject their Petition upon this, or any other Subject, provided neither the Matter, or Form, was Derogatory to his Regal Authority (x).

February the 19*th* Anno Dom. 163⅞.

Immediately after the Reading this Proclamation, the Earl of Hume, the Lord Lindſey, and others, purſuant to what had been preconcerted, proteſted againſt it in Form. And now the Party broke out into open Defiance: And being reſolved to go through with the Enterprize, in Deſpight of the Government, they poſted to Edinburgh; where, after having conſulted Hope, the Advocate, and ſome others of that Profeſſion, they ſet up a Counter-Authority, conſiſting of four Tables. The Nobility made one; the Barons another; the Burgeſſes a third, and the Miniſters a fourth. Theſe four were to prepare and digeſt Matter for the General Table, form'd of ſeveral Members delegated from the Reſt. And here the laſt and binding Reſolutions were taken.

L'Eſtrange Guthry.

The firſt Buſineſs of theſe Tables was renewing the Ancient Confeſſion of the Kirk already related. To this there was a Band annexed, ſuited to the Deſign in Hand. By this Band they ſolemnly engaged for the Maintenance of their Religion then profeſs'd, and the Preſervation of his Majeſty's Perſon. But both by the Tenour of the Inſtrument, and their own Explanation, 'tis evident their Meaning was otherwiſe. For by the Band they obliged themſelves to defend each other, againſt all Perſons whatſoever, the King himſelf not being excepted. Whereas the Engagements of this Kind in the late Reign, had an expreſs Clauſe for the Defence of the King's Perſon and Authority. Beſides, there was another great Diſparity between this Confeſſion or Covenant, and thoſe ſubſcrib'd in the late Reign: The former being either ſigned by the King, or by the Lords of the Council, at the Requeſt of the General Aſſembly. Whereas this Covenant was ſubſcribed, and the Subject enjoined to ſwear it without any Face of Authority either in Church, or State (y). And further, under the general Names of Popery, Hereſie and Superſtition, then ſolemnly renounced, not only the Common-Prayer Book and Canons, but Epiſcopal Government; and the five Articles of Perth, though confirmed by Parliament, were comprehended. While the Covenanters were thus enterprizing at Edinburgh, the Lords of the Council continued at Sterling, and were little regarded.

Spotſwood, Lord Chancellor, and Archbiſhop of St. Andrews, finding the Country too troubleſome, withdrew to London, where he died the next Year. The reſt of the Biſhops, who knew themſelves moſt malign'd, made for the ſame Shelter; only four of them continued in their Country. Three of theſe, Alexander Ramſey Biſhop of Dunkeld, George Graham Biſhop of Orkney, and James Fairly Biſhop of Argyle, reſcued themſelves from Perſecution, by deſerting their Station, and publickly renouncing their Order: But the fourth, John Guthry Biſhop of Murray, endured the Storm with great Reſolution; and notwithſtanding he fell under the Diſcipline of the Presbyterians, loſt his Liberty, and ſuffered in his Fortune, he maintained the Lawfulneſs of Epiſcopacy to his dying Day.

Panzani and Con Agents for the Pope in England.

To return to England: The Roman Catholicks were not negligent in ſolliciting the Queen, and improving their Intereſt at Court. About three Years ſince, Panzani, the Popes's Agent, came to London, and made his Application to the Lord Cottington, and Secretary Windebank. Part of his Buſineſs was to diſcover, whether the King would permit thoſe of his Communion a Catholick Biſhop of the Engliſh Nation: And to make the Motion paſs the better, they were contented this Biſhop ſhould be nominated by his Majeſty, and not exerciſe his Function, but under ſuch Limitations as ſhould be ſet him by the Prince. Upon this Requeſt a Query was put to Panzani, Whether the Pope would allow the nominating ſuch a Biſhop, as held the Oath of Allegiance, a lawful Engagement: And whether his Holineſs would give the Engliſh of his Communion leave to take the Oath? Panzani, finding himſelf ſomewhat embaraſs'd with the Queſtion, declared he had no Commiſſion to ſpeak to that Matter. Upon this Diſappointment, he went lower in his Requeſt; and, by ſome Correſpondence at Court, moved the King, that the Queen might be permitted an Agent from the Pope, for directing her Affairs in Religion. The King, by the Advice of his Council, condeſcended to the Motion, upon Condition that the Perſon ſent ſhould be no Prieſt (z).

(z) Hammond L'Eſtrange's Hiſt. K. Charles I.

This Panzani, after having purſued his Inſtructions in England about two Years, tempted ſome of the Court-Clergy to no Purpoſe, and brought the Seculars and Regulars to a tolerable Accommodation, returned to Rome, and left Seignior Con, a Scotchman, in his Poſt.

This Agent of the Pope's arriving in England laſt Summer, brought a great many Reliques, Medals, with the Popes Effigies, and other recommending Curioſities, to be diſtributed among the Ladies of that Perſuaſion. And being a Perſon of Dexterity and Addreſs, he worked himſelf into a Converſation with ſome of the Miniſtry. The King was not diſpleaſed with this Correſpondence: His Majeſty being not without Hopes, this Con might prove a ſerviceable Inſtrument at the Court of Rome, and make the Reſtoring the Elector Palatine more practicable. Con, perceiving the Archbiſhop of Canterbury had no ſmall Direction of the Publick Affairs, endeavoured to make an Acquaintance with him: But Laud having no good Opinion of the Man, or his Buſineſs, kept himſelf aloof, and would not ſo much as admit of a Viſit of Ceremony. However, by the King's Connivance, and the Queen's Favour, the Papiſts came ſomewhat forward; appeared in greater Numbers at Court, and frequented their Devotions at Somerſet-Houſe, with more Freedom than formerly. This being obſerved, and probably magnified beyond Matter of Fact, the Blame was chiefly laid upon Laud. Several Libels were ſcattered in London, in which the Archbiſhop was aſperſed as an Encourager of Maſs, and little better than the Pope's Penſioner. It muſt be confeſs'd, Walter Mountague, a younger Son of the Earl of Mancheſter, and Sir Toby Matthews, Son to the late Archbiſhop of York, had been very active in their Miſſion; and amongſt other Succeſſes, had lately proſelyted the Counteſs of Newport, related to the Duke of Buckingham. Now the Archbiſhop finding himſelf attack'd with Calumny, took this Opportunity to diſprove the Imputations. And being at the Council Table, he addreſs'd himſelf to the King; and in a full Diſcourſe acquainted his Majeſty, with the Growth of the Roman Catholick Intereſt; That the Papiſts met frequently at Somerſet-Houſe; that Mountague and Matthews had taken unſufferable Liberties, practiſed upon his Majeſty's Subjects, and particularly upon thoſe within the Verge of the Court; humbly beſeeching him they might be put under ſome Reſtraint; and either quite barred coming to Court, or elſe obliged to be inoffenſive in their Behaviour. This Speech being well received by the King, Mountague and Matthews were ordered to retire. The Queen at firſt was much diſpleaſed with this Remonſtrance, and diſcovered it in her Face, whenever the Archbiſhop happened to ſee her. But within a few Months, after ſome Expoſtulation, ſhe ſeemed to drop her Reſentment.

The Archbiſhop remonſtrates at the Council Table againſt the Liberties taken by the Roman Ca*tholicks*.

Part of the Archbiſhop's Annual Account.

And now, to touch a little upon the Archbiſhop's Annual Account of his Province to the King: He acquaints his Majeſty, “That at Biddenden in Kent he ſuſpended one Warren, a Schoolmaſter, for refuſing to ſubſcribe the Articles, and take the Oaths of Allegiance, and Canonical Obedience. This Preciſian had a ſtrange Humerſome Conſcience: He would read nothing but Divinity to his Scholars: He could not ſo much as reconcile himſelf to Lillie's Grammar, except Mars, Bachus, Apollo, Pol and Ædepol were expung'd.

“In the Dioceſs of Lincoln, now under the Archbiſhop's Care, he complains of a great many Non-Conformiſts, in Buckinghamſhire and Bedfordſhire. And that there were a great Number of very poor and miſerable

"Vicaridges, and Curatſhips in this large Dioceſs.

"The Biſhop of Norwich certifieth, that in his Dioceſs ſeveral Towns are depopulated, no Houſes left ſtanding but the Manor-Houſe, and the Church, and that turned to the Lord's Barn, or a worſe uſe. In other Towns the Churches lie in Rubbiſh, the Inhabitants are thruſt upon neighbouring Pariſhes, where they pay few or no Duties.

"From the Dioceſs of Exeter, 'twas certified, that ſeveral Captives in Morocco being ranſomed and returned Home, the Biſhop was ſomewhat at a Loſs, with what Penance and Form, theſe People who had renounced Chriſtianity, might be re-admitted into the Church: And having acquainted the Archbiſhop with this deplorable Caſe, they agreed upon a Form, which was approved by the Biſhops of London, Ely and Norwich, and afterwards confirmed by his Majeſty *.

"The reſt of the Dioceſſes, from whence Certificates where returned, came forward in Conformity, and were in tolerable good Order †.

The Tranſlation of Sales his Introduction, &c. called in.

Laud, to ſilence the Clamour of his being popiſhly affected, procured a Proclamation for calling in a Popiſh Book, written in French by Francis Sales Biſhop of Geneva, tranſlated into Engliſh, and entituled, An Introduction to a devout Life. This Book brought for a Licence to Haywood the Archbiſhop's Chaplain, was returned expung'd in ſeveral Unorthodox Paſſages. Notwithſtanding this Precaution, the Deletions were printed. For this foul Practice the Printer was apprehended, the Tranſlator ſearched for, the Book was called in, and the Copies ſeized, and publickly burnt. But that which did the Archbiſhop moſt Service in his Reputation, was his reprinting the Conference between him and Fiſher, with Enlargements. This was ſo conſiderable a Performance, that Sir Edward Deering, one of his greateſt Enemies, had the Juſtice to confeſs, that in this Book Laud had muzled the Jeſuit, and would ſtrike the Papiſts under the fifth Rib, when he was dead and gone. And being dead, that whereſoever his Grave ſhould be, Paul's would be his perpetual Monument, and his own Book his Epitaph (a).

Anno Dom. 1638.

Deering's Commendation of Laud.

A Decree of the Star-Chamber for regulating the Preſs.

The Archbiſhop was no leſs ſollicitous to ſuppreſs the Growth of Heterodoxy of a different Complexion; and to prevent the Socinians and Puritans from gaining upon the Church, and diſturbing her Repoſe. To this purpoſe he procured a Star-Chamber Decree, for regulating the Preſs. By this Order, "none but Maſter Printers were allowed to print, under the Penalty of being ſet in the Pillory, and ſuffering ſuch other Puniſhment as the Court ſhall appoint: That none of the Maſter Printers ſhould print any Book in Divinity, Law, Phyſick, Philoſophy, or Poetry without a Licence: And that no Perſon ſhould reprint any Book without a new Licence. That no Merchant, Bookſeller, or other Perſon, ſhould import any printed Books, without giving in a Catalogue of them to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, or Biſhop of London for the Time being: And that they ſhould not deliver or expoſe to Sale, any imported Books, 'till the Chaplains of the ſaid Archbiſhop or Biſhop, or ſome other Learned Perſon appointed by them, together with the Maſter and Wardens of the Company of Stationers, or one of them, ſhall take a View of the ſame, with Power to ſeize all ſchiſmatical and offenſive Books. And, laſtly, that no Merchant, Bookſeller, &c. ſhould print any Engliſh Books beyond Sea, nor import any ſuch into this Kingdom.

By the Advantage of this Order, he prevented the ſpreading of Socinian and Puritanical Books. It had been the Cuſtom of People diſaffected to the Doctrine and Diſcipline of the Church, to print their Heterodoxies beyond Sea in our Language, and import them into England. To ſtop this Miſchief there was a particular Proviſion in the Star-Chamber Decree. A Book entitled Diſquiſitio Brevis, was publiſhed about this Time. Some Socinian Tenets were covertly couched in this Tract. They were pretended Expedients for drawing the Controverſy between the Churches of Rome, and England, into a leſs Compaſs. Hales of Eaton, a Man of conſiderable Learning and Parts, was ſuppoſed the Author: There was likewiſe a Diſcourſe in Manuſcript concerning Schiſm, handed about at the ſame Time: The Deſign of it was to indulge private Reaſon, to the Prejudice of the Churches Authority. Hales being reputed the Author of both theſe unſerviceable Books, the Archbiſhop ſent for him to Lambeth, and after ſome Hours Conference, brought him off his Singularities, and gained him to the Church.

Lectures retrenched and brought under due Regulation.

By the Archbiſhop's Care, ſeconded by his Suffragans, the Lecturers were either retrenched or recovered, and brought under a due Regulation. Thoſe who refuſed reading Common-Prayer in their Hoods and Surplices, were diſabled from preaching by the King's Inſtructions. And thus many of the Single-Lecturers drop'd off: As for thoſe Lectures which were furniſhed from a Combination of the Clergy, theſe Men were generally nominated by the Biſhops, tied to the Canonical Prayer in the Pulpit, and reading the Second-Service at the Communion-Table, in Hood and Surplice. And thus the rigid Calviniſts were forced to quit the Pulpits in Market Towns.

Some Non-Conformiſt Miniſters and Families tranſport themſelves into Holland.

However, the People having been connived at, and gone looſe as to Ceremony ſome Time, took Check at the preſſing of Conformity. When they found their Lectures ſtruck off, and the Parochial Clergy of their Perſuaſion not well able to ſtand the Teſt of a Viſitation, they began to grow weary of the Country. Under this Diſcontent ſeveral Families, in Maritime Towns eſpecially, tranſported themſelves. The Dutchmen led them the Way, who choſe rather to quit the Kingdom, and return Home, than comply with the Archbiſhop's Injunctions. Goodwin, Nye, Burroughs, Bridges, and Sympſon, were ſome of the firſt Non-Conformiſt Miniſters that left the Kingdom. Theſe Men, with ſome of their Party, ſettled in Holland. Soon after their Arrival, their Congregations ſwelled to ſo conſiderable a Number, that it was thought proper for them to part, and ſettle at wider Diſtance. Thus Goodwin and Nye went off to Arnheim in Guelderland, leaving Rotterdam in Holland to Sympſon and Bridges. Theſe Men, neither liking the ſtrict Diſcipline of the Presbyterians, nor the Latitude and Licence of the Browniſts, projected a Temper, and ſettled upon Robinſon's Model. They ſtruck out a co-ordinate Scheme of Church Government. And thus they formed a Sort of Spiritual Aſſociation, for Countenance and Correſpondence, without any Thing of Superiority and Command. This ſeems to have been the Riſe of the Independants: But this looſe, precarious Polity made them break into farther Subdiviſions. Bridges was forced to quit Rotterdam, and Ward, who ſucceeded him, found no good Quarter. At Arnheim they had a better Underſtanding amongſt themſelves: Here they ſeemed to ſtrain for Apoſtolick Uſage, and higher Perfection than the reſt. To this purpoſe they had Hymns and Propheſyings, not received in their Sitter Churches. They likewiſe revived the Office of Widows, the Holy Kiſs, and Extreme Unction (b).

The Biſhops complain againſt the Covenanters.

To go back to the Beginning of the Year, and take a ſhort Survey of the Condition of the Church of Scotland. The Hierarchy being outraged, the Common-Prayer Book ſuppreſſed, and the Faction engaged in a Covenant in the Manner above-mentioned, the Prelates who ſtayed in Scotland, ſent up a Liſt of their Grievances to the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews, and the reſt of the Scotch Prelates in London. They complain "the Covenanters had changed the Moderator of the Presbytery at Edinburgh, and were carrying on that pretended Reformation through the whole Kingdom.

"That the Council of Edinburgh had made Choice of Mr. Alexander Henderſon, to be an Aſſiſtant to Mr. Andrew Ramſey, and intended to admit him without the Biſhop's Conſent. That the Miniſters of Edinburgh, who refuſed ſubſcribing the Covenant, were curſed and reviled to their Faces, and their Stipends detained: That all Non-ſubſcribing Miniſters were treated with the ſame ill Uſage: And that the Rakiſh Part of the Mob, are raiſed for this Service, and let looſe upon honeſt Men (c).

The Marqueſs of Hamilton ſent down High Commiſſioner for Scotland.

The King being willing to compoſe Matters, and prevent the Uſe of extream Remedies, ſent the Marqueſs of Hamilton down High-Commiſſioner, to ſettle that Kingdom. At his Coming to Dalkeith, four Miles from Edinburgh, his Commiſſion was opened: But the Covenanters paid him no Attendance, or took any Notice of his Character. But not long after, upon his Coming to Edinburgh, ſome of the Heads of the Faction waited on him. And being demanded firſt, what they deſired of the King for Redreſs of Grievances: And in the next Place, what Security they would give for returning to their Duty, and renouncing the Covenant. To the firſt, they replied, that nothing ſhort of a General Aſſembly, and a Parliament, could give them Satisfaction. To the ſecond, their Anſwer was, that hitherto they had not failed in any Part of Loyalty; therefore there was no Occaſion to inſiſt upon a Return to it. And as for the Covenant they were ſo hardy as to declare, That they would ſooner renounce their Baptiſm than this Engagement: That this Propoſal was ſo harſh, that they would never endure to hear the mention of it repeated (d).

(d) L'Eſtrange's Hiſt. K. Charles I.

By the Way, there was a Proclamation penned in ſtrong Terms for recanting the Covenant; in which all thoſe are declared Traitors that ſhall refuſe diſclaiming the ſaid Bond or Bonds, within ſo many Days mentioned in the Proclamation. This Inſtrument was drawn by the Earl of Traquair: But the Marqueſs of Hamilton, finding the Faction reſolved againſt going this Length of Submiſſion, ſtopped the publiſhing this Paper, and drew up another in a ſofter Form, in which the renouncing Clauſe was omitted (e).

Bold Notions of the Covenanters.

Id. pag. 55.

In the mean Time the Covenanters went boldly on in their Revolt, and blocked up the Caſtles of Edinburgh and Sterlin. Of theſe Diſorders the Marqueſs ſent the King an Account, acquainting him with the deſperate Obſtinacy of the Faction; and that in all Likelihood nothing but Force could bring them to a Senſe of their Duty. But here the Marqueſs ſuggeſted ſome Motives to Clemency, and put the King in Mind, that theſe Diſorders were the Madneſs of his own poor People. To this the King anſwers in his Letter to Hamilton, that he was of the Commiſſioner's Opinion, that the Obſtinacy of the Scots, was paſt curing by gentle Applications. However, he thought the gaining of Time, a prudential Expedient. And that 'twas moſt adviſable to forbear the publiſhing the latter, and more diſguſting Part of the Declaration, 'till his Fleet had ſet Sail for Scotland. He gives his Commiſſioner Leave to ſtroak the Faction, and keep them from flying out into further Exceſſes. But all this Careſſing was to be within a Rule: For he was not to humour the Revolters ſo far, as to conſent to the calling a Parliament, or a General Aſſembly, 'till the Covenant was openly diſclaimed. His Majeſty owns his Regret, for being forced to come to theſe Extremities with his own People: But adds, the laſt Neceſſity compels him to theſe Meaſures: That his Crown lies at Stake; that his Honour muſt be loſt, and his Character diſabled for ever, if this inſulting his Authority ſhould go unpuniſhed: And that, to uſe his Majeſty's Words, He will rather die, than yield to thoſe Impertinent, and damnable Demands; for it is all one, as to yield to be no King in a ſhort Time.

The King's Reſentment of the Covenant.

June the 11th, 1638.

Id. pag. 55.

June 25.

In another Letter to the Marqueſs, he calls the Confederacy a damnable Covenant: That as long as this Covenant was in Force (either with or without an Explanation) he ſhould have no more Power in Scotland, than as a Duke of Venice, which he would rather dye than ſuffer. This Reſentment of his Majeſty was neceſſary and juſt: There was Courage and Policy in it. Had the King held firm to this Reſolution, and not complied with the rebellious Covenanters, Himſelf, and his Kingdoms had been happy. Whether the Marqueſs of Hamilton did not afterwards prevail with the King, to go too far in his Condeſcenſions, is ſomewhat of a Queſtion. Some conſiderable Hiſtorians do not ſtick to affirm, this Noble Man forgot his Repreſentation, and gave the Covenanters private Encouragement to puſh the Enterprize (f).

Lord Clarendon's Hiſt. of the Rebellion.

The Covenanters inſiſting peremptorily upon a Parliament and General Aſſembly, the Commiſſioner deſired Time to go to Court, for enlarging his Inſtructions. Upon his Return he acquainted the Faction, he was empowered to convene a Parliament, and a General Aſſembly, provided they would acquieſce in theſe ten Preliminary Articles.

The Commiſſioner's Propoſals to the Faction.

1. That all Miniſters depoſed or ſuſpended by Presbyteries, ſince the firſt of February laſt, without Warrant of the Ordinary, ſhould be reſtored 'till they were legally convicted.

2. That all Moderators of Presbyteries depoſed ſince that Time without ſuch Warrant, be reſtored, red, and all others choſen in their ſtead, to deſiſt from acting as Moderators.

3. That no Miniſter admitted ſince that Time without ſuch Warrant, ſhall exerciſe the Function of the Miniſtry.

4. That all Pariſhioners repair to their own Church, and that Elders aſſiſt the Miniſters in the Diſcipline of the Church.

5. That all Biſhops and Miniſters have their Rents and Stipends duly paid them.

6. That all Miniſters attend their own Churches, and none come to the Aſſembly but ſuch as ſhall be choſen Commiſſioners from the Presbyteries.

7. That every Moderator be appointed to be a Commiſſioner from that Presbytery whereof he is a Moderator, according to the Act of the Aſſembly, 1606.

8. That Biſhops, and others who ſhall attend the Aſſembly, be ſecured in their Perſons from all Trouble.

9. That no Lay-Perſon meddle in the Choice of Commiſſioners from Presbyteries.

10. That all Convocations and Meetings be diſſolved, and that the Country be reduced to a Peaceable Poſture.

Theſe Articles being accepted no otherwiſe by the Covenanters, than that they ſhould be referred to a General Aſſembly. The Commiſſioner contracted his Ten Propoſitions into theſe Two.

I. If the Lords and others will undertake for themſelves and the reſt, that no Laicks ſhall have Votes in chuſing the Miniſters to be ſent from the ſeveral Presbyteries to the General Aſſembly, nor none elſe but the Miniſters of the ſame Presbytery.

II. If they will undertake that the Aſſembly ſhall not go about to determine of Things eſtabliſhed by Act of Parliament, otherwiſe than by a Remonſtrance to the Parliament, leaving the determining of Things Eccleſiaſtical to the General Aſſembly; and Things ſettled by Acts of Parliament to the Parliament.

Upon theſe two Conditions, he promiſed to convene a General Aſſembly forthwith, and ſoon after a Parliament.

The Covenanters growing angry at theſe Propoſals, gave immediate Order for a General Aſſembly: But upon Recollection they cool'd in their Raſhneſs, and were contented to wait till the Commiſſioner could return from the King with further Anſwer: They gave him to the Twenty-firſt of September, and promiſed not to proceed to the Election till after that Time.

September the 17th.

The Commiſſioner finding the King at Oatland's, returned within the limited Term with new Powers: And having ſummoned the Council, he delivered them a Letter from the King, in which his Majeſty had ſet down the Meaſures he intended to purſue for compoſing the Differences in Church and State. After this the King's Declaration was read at the Croſs of Edinburgh, for nulling the Service-Book, the Book of Canons, and the High Commiſſion; the five Articles of Perth were declar'd void. 'Twas farther granted, that all Perſons, Eccleſiaſtical or Civil, ſhould be liable to the Juriſdiction and Cenſure of Parliament and General Aſſembly; that no Oath ſhould be put to Miniſters at their Admiſſion but what was required by Act of Parliament. That the Ancient Confeſſion of Faith, with the Band annexed, ſhould be renewed and ſigned, purſuant to the Practice in the late Reign. That a General Aſſembly ſhould be held at Glaſcow in November following, and a Parliament at Edinbourgh on the Fifteenth of May next Year. And laſtly, all Inſtances of Diſloyalty and Misbehaviour were pardoned.

The King's Conceſſions to the Faction.

Immediately after the publiſhing of this Declaration, the Confeſſion of Faith was read, and ſigned by the Marquiſs and the Lords of the Council. An Act of the Council was likewiſe proclaimed, requiring a General Subſcription of the Confeſſion of Faith, and appointing Commiſſioners for receiving that Security.

September 22d, Ann. Dom. 1638.

This Declaration was received with great Satisfaction by the Moderate Party; and now it was thought the Covenanters would acquieſce: But the Leading Men, who governed the reſt, having a further Deſign, went boldly to the Market Croſs, and proteſted againſt the King's Conceſſions, as not coming up to reaſonable Expectation. They conceived the ſubſcribing the Confeſſion with the old Band, tyed them too cloſe to the Government, and therefore would not endure the coming under ſuch a Reſtraint. And here James, Earl of Montroſs, who prov'd ſo brave a Royaliſt afterwards, proteſted in Form in Behalf of the Nobility, and was at preſent miſled, or diſobliged out of his Duty.

Guthry.

The Commiſſioner having given Orders for the Meeting of a General Aſſembly, the Covenanters were buſy in getting ſuch Members return'd as they could confide in. And here the Tables at Edinburgh took Care to over-rule the Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitution, and form the Aſſembly in an unprecedented Manner: To this Purpoſe the Brethren of each Presbytery took an Oath of Secrecy, not to diſcover the Directions of the Tables. Notwithſtanding this Precaution, theſe private Inſtructions were produced by the Commiſſioner, and publickly read: I ſhall give the Reader ſome of them.

3. “ That they be careful no Chapel-Men, Chapter-Men, or Miniſter, Juſtice of Peace, be choſen, unleſs they have publickly renounc'd or declar'd the Unlawfulneſs of their Places.

Judges of Hereſy, and had an Authority to condemn Arminianiſm. (b) This pack'd Conventicle, fearing ſome Diſturbance from the Character and Learning of the Biſhops, endeavoured to exclude them from voting. To this Purpoſe they addreſs'd the Commiſſioner, to award a Citation of the Archbiſhops and Biſhops, to appear at the Aſſembly as Criminals. This Motion being refuſed as unprecedented, the Covenanters apply'd to the Presbytery of Edinburgh: Theſe Miniſters anſwer'd their Requeſt, and gave them a Warrant for the moſt ſcandalous Summons that was ever heard of in Chriſtendom. In this libelling Citation all the Biſhops are charg'd with Hereſy, Simony, Perjury, Inceſt, Adultery, Fornication, and Breach of the Sabbath. To this they added the Term Reſpective, done, as was ſuppoſed, to amuſe the Vulgar, and make them believe the Prelates were guilty through the whole Imputation.

The Biſhops made what Effort the Juncture would allow, to aſſert their Authority, and keep their Standing: Thus, when the Aſſembly met, they put a Declinatur into the Commiſſioners Hands; that is, they proteſted againſt the Legality of this pretended Aſſembly, and pleaded in Bar to their Juriſdiction. The Title of the Remonſtrance is call'd, The Declinatur and Proteſtation of the Archbiſhops and Biſhops of the Church of Scotland, and others their Adherents, within that Kingdom, againſt the pretended General Aſſembly holden at Glaſcow, November the 21ſt, 1638. (i)

A General Aſſembly at Glaſcow.

(i) The King's large Declaration, pag. 248.

Their Reaſons for Proteſting are as follows.

The Biſhop's Proteſtation againſt it.

(1.) Becauſe the uſurp'd Authority of the Tables ſent Inſtructions to all the Presbyters to elect Members for the Aſſembly, about a Week before his Majeſty had iſſued out his Warrant for ſummoning that Meeting.

(2.) Their ſecond Exception is, becauſe the Aſſembly conſiſts of great Numbers of the Laity, who are allowed a deciſive Vote no leſs than the Clergy; whereas ſuch Perſons are legally diſabled from acting under ſuch a Character.

(3.) Even thoſe who pretend themſelves Miniſters of God's Word and Sacraments, are unqualify'd for being Members of the Aſſembly, in regard they have neither ſubſcrib'd the Articles of Religion, nor taken the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, before the Archbiſhop, or Biſhop, &c. as the Law requires. And further, they have lately proteſted againſt his Majeſties Gracious Declaration, kept up their Tables diſcharg'd by Authority, refuſed to ſubſcribe the Band enjoyned by his Majeſty, and the Lords of the Council, and adhere to their own Engagement of Mutual Defence againſt all Perſons whatſoever. That by behaving themſelves thus diſorderly, they have relaps'd into the Condition they were before the King's Pardon, and forfeited their Claim to his Majeſties Promiſe of an Aſſembly, which was only given on Condition of dutiful Behaviour.

4. Suppoſing, but not granting the Members of the Aſſembly were capable of the Authority they pretend to; and that the Presbyteries were impowered to elect Commiſſioners for that Purpoſe, yet now, by depoſing the Moderators appointed by the Biſhops to preſide in their Synods, and ſubſtituting others in their Place, they have forfeited that Privilege. In Proof of this Exception, the Biſhops cite an Act of the Aſſembly at Glaſcow, 1610, and an Act of Parliament 1612. By theſe Acts the Biſhops are conſtituted Moderators at theſe Meetings; and in their Abſence the Miniſter nominated by the Biſhop.

5. To prove the Nullity of the Elections, 'tis alledg'd in the Proteſtation, that the Covenanting-Presbyteries have taken in a Lay-Ruling Elder, as they call him, out of every Seſſion and Pariſh: Now theſe Lay-Elders being commonly Lords of the Mannor, or Perſons of the biggeſt Intereſt within the Precinct, the Elections are over-ruled both by the Bulk and Number of theſe Men; by their Number, which frequently amounts to a Majority: For the Miniſters being ſome of them abſent, and others put in a Black Liſt, and diſclaim'd; the remaining Part fall ſhort of the Proportion of the Ruling-Elders: And thus the Repreſentatives of the Clergy are in Effect choſen by the Laity, contrary to all Order, Decency, and Cuſtomary Practice: And for this, beſides the Uſage of the Univerſal Church, they cite the Acts of Aſſemblies in Scotland; in one of which the famous Presbyterian Andrew Melvil was Moderator. (k)

6. 'Tis urg'd in the Declinator, that the Members of this Meeting have thrown themſelves out of all Pretentions to an Eccleſiaſtical Aſſembly, by their Notorious Misbehaviour, of which they give ſeveral Inſtances.

(k) Act of Aſſembly at St. Andrews, April 24*th*, 1582. Act of Aſſembly at Dundee, Ann. Dom. 1597.

Firſt, theſe Miniſters by Seditious Sermons and Pamphlets have reproached the King, arraigned the Government, and harangued the People towards Rebellion; and to debauch the Subject from their Allegiance, have affirmed, that all Sovereign Authority is originally in the Collective Body, and from thence derived upon the Prince: And that in caſe of Mal-Adminiſtration, the King forfeits his Authority, and the Power eſcheats to the People. The Biſhops alledge farther, that the Members of this pretended Aſſembly, are Schiſmatical and Perjur'd Perſons: That they have ſworn Obedience to their Ordinary, and yet made no Conſcience of ſo ſolemn an Engagement. That they are either actually under the Cenſures of the Church of Ireland, or Scotland, or at leaſt deſerve to be convented before their Ordinaries, for the ſcandalous Liberties they have taken. For the Purpoſe, for declaiming in their Pulpits againſt the Adminiſtration and Laws of the Kingdom. For reproaching People by Name in their Sermons, without any Notoriety of Fault. For holding Meetings without his Majeſties Knowledge or Conſent: For invading other Mens Pulpits without Call or Authority. For preſuming to convent their Brethren, and proceed againſt them to the Cenſures of Suſpenſion and Deprivation. For preſſing the People to ſubſcribe a Covenant, not allow'd by Authority, and oppoſing the ſigning another Covenant enjoin'd by his Majeſty, and the Lords of the Council. That moſt of theſe Irregularities ſtood condemn'd by General Aſſemblies of their own Nation. (l) Beſides this Misbehaviour of the Aſſembly-Miniſters againſt the Church and State, it was in the Biſhops Power to charge them with a great many Perſonal Blemiſhes, which in Charity they forbore to mention.

(l) Acts of Aſſembly at Edinburgh, May 22d, 1590. Acts of Aſſembly at Perth, May 1ſt, 1596.

7. The Declinator reſumes the Biſhop's Exception againſt Lay-Mens having a deciſive Vote in a General Aſſembly: But then they throw in a Reſerve of Privilege for the King, or his Commiſſioner. But in other Caſes they declare it an Invaſion upon the Paſtoral Office, and contrary to the Practice of Antiquity: And here they cite ſeveral Authorities in Proof of their Aſſertion: But theſe Teſtimonies, and ſeveral others, having been already mentioned in the Courſe of this Hiſtory, need not be repeated.

8. The Commiſſioners of this pretended Aſſembly, or at leaſt the greateſt Part of them, have already declared themſelves againſt Epiſcopacy, and by Conſequence, by being profeſs'd Enemies, are by no Means qualify'd for Judges. That it was upon this Score of being precondemn'd, that the Reformers proteſted againſt the Council of Trent. That Prejudice and Diſaffection was reckoned a ſufficient Excuſe for Athanaſius his not appearing at the Councils of Tyre and Sardica.

9. The Biſhops complain loudly, as they had Reaſon of the ſcandalous Summons abovementioned, iſſued by the Presbytery of Edinburgh. By the way, this Infamous Libel was read in the College Church of Edinburgh after the Communion, and ordered to be read in all the Churches of Scotland, which was done accordingly. (m) Beſides the Calumnies in this Charge, they ſet forth the Rudeneſs and Illegality of proceeding in this Manner, (eſpecially againſt their Superiors) from ſeveral Topicks.

(m) Memoirs of Duke Hamilton, pag. 88. Large Declaration, p. 255.

10. The Declinator dilates upon the Injury done to the Epiſcopal Character, by excluding the Prelates from voting in the Aſſembly: And that their not allowing an Archbiſhop or Biſhop this Privilege, unleſs elected by their Presbyteries, is contrary to general Practice, and without Precedent in the earlieſt and beſt Ages of the Church. And further, barring the Biſhops a Preſidency in Eccleſiaſtical Aſſemblies, is a Breach of the Acts of Parliament of their own Kingdom: And here they cite two Statutes enacted in the Years 1606 and 1609.

Laſtly, The Declinator ſets forth what a Contradiction it is to Reaſon and Primitive Practice, that Archbiſhops and Biſhops ſhould be judg'd by Presbyteries; and which carries the Abſurdity further, by a mixt Company of Presbyters and Laicks: That by the Canons of the Ancient Church, Biſhops are to be try'd by none beneath their own Order. (n) After this the Biſhops wave this Primitive Privilege, and ſink themſelves to Modern Conſtitution; declaring, that for any Charge relating to Life or Doctrine, they are willing to abide the Tryal of a General Aſſembly lawfully conſtituted, or of his Majeſties High Commiſſioner. They conclude with a ſolemn Proteſtation, that this Declinator is not made uſe of out of any Conſciouſneſs of Immorality, or Miſconduct in their Function: And therefore they humbly intreat his Grace the Commiſſioner for a free and lawful General Aſſembly. This Inſtrument is ſign'd by the following Prelates, tho' at different Places, and diſpers'd by the Perſecution. (o)

Notwithſtanding this Proteſtation, the Covenanting Synod went on; Alexander Henderſon was their Moderator, and Archibald Johnſton their Clerk or Regiſter. * The Lord Commiſſioner ſat about a Week with theſe Men, in Hopes to bring them off their Extravagant Demands: But finding the reducing them to Order and Cuſtomary Form, wholly impracticable; and that they were unalterably reſolved to exclude the Biſhops, he diſſolv'd the Aſſembly by Proclamation, and commanded the Members to retire under Pain of Treaſon: This Diſſolution was publickly proteſted againſt by ſeveral Hundreds, and Inſtruments taken in their Names by the Earl of Rothes. November 28. 1638.

Notwithſtanding this Diſcharge, the Aſſembly ſat every Day for ſeveral Weeks, neither did they break up till they had gone through their Affairs, and were pleas'd to diſſolve themſelves: The main Things tranſacted were theſe, "All "General Aſſemblies, ſince the Year One thou-"ſand ſix hundred and five, were declared void. "The Common Prayer Book, the Book of Canons "and Ordination, the High Commiſſion, and the "Articles of Perth, were all null'd and con-"demn'd: And the Covenant allow'd by King James in the Year 1580, was declar'd the ſame in Subſtance with that they had now taken; and that Epiſcopacy was abjur'd in the former. After this they proceeded to depoſe the Biſhops, * and excommunicated all of that Order who refus'd to ſubmit to their Authority; a great many of the Presbyters were likewiſe depriv'd; they appointed Commiſſioners alſo to ſit in ſeveral Places after the Receſs, for ejecting and depoſing all thoſe they found untractable. Their laſt Buſineſs was a Reſolve, that a Letter ſhould be ſent to the King to intreat his Royal Aſſent to every Thing that had been done in this Pretended Aſſembly. And thus theſe Covenanters having ſucceeded in their Mutiny, and outrag'd the Conſtitution in Church and State, broke up their Meeting on the Twentieth of December. When their Commiſſioners or Tryers came to Edinburgh, they found little Buſineſs with the Miniſters; for all the Clergy had retir'd from that Town for Fear of Perſecution: All of them, I ſay, excepting Ramſey and Rollock, who being both zealous Covenanters, had no Reaſon to be apprehenſive of Hardſhip.

* See Records, Num. CXIII. The Buſineſs done by this pretended Aſſembly.

Theſe Covenanters, to ſtrengthen their Party, and draw the Engliſh Mal-Contents into the Confederacy, kept an Agent at London to tranſact with the Non-conformiſts. * To proceed;

Guthry. The Covenanters keep an Agent at London.

* This Agent was Eleazar Borhwick, a Miniſter.

Upon this Defiance of the Government the Commiſſioner left Scotland, and came to Court: The King being apprehenſive of theſe Conſequences from the Nature of the Engagement, we need not wonder his Majeſty expreſs'd his Averſion in ſuch ſtrong Language. Indeed he could expect nothing but Diſobedience of the moſt provoking Kind; for there was ſcarce any Inſtance of Rebellion which might not be juſtified by their Principles. To mention ſome of their Treaſonable Tenents, as they lie in the King's large Declaration, penn'd by Dr. Balcanquel. *

* Pag. 408. & deinc.

The Covenanters Diſloyal Tenents.

"To begin: The Covenanters hold, that if a "Law is interpreted by the Government, in a "Senſe diſlik'd by the Majority of the People, "the Body of the Kingdom, for whoſe Benefit "the Law was made, may fairly over-rule ſuch "a Conſtruction, and redreſs the Grievances "ſuffer'd by it.

(2.) They maintain, 'tis lawful for Subjects to form an Aſſociation without the King, and to enter into a Covenant for mutual Defence againſt all Perſons whatſoever: The Univerſality of which Propoſition implies Hoſtility and Treaſon againſt the King; and therefore, to prevent the Effect of this dangerous Implication, all thoſe who enter into ſuch Criminal Engagements, are capitally puniſhable by the Laws. (q)

(q) Jac. VI. Parl. 10. Act. 12. Queen Mary. Parl. 9. Act. 75.

(3.) If any Subjects are ſummon'd before the King and Council for any Miſdemeanor, if thoſe who are thus to make their Appearance conceive the Buſineſs for which they are queſtion'd, concerns the Glory of God, or the Good of the Church, 'tis then lawful for them to appeal from his Majeſty and the Board, to the next General Aſſembly and Parliament: And that hanging the Appeal they may diſobey the Government: Tho', as his Majeſty obſerves, thoſe Miniſters who appealed from his Royal Father and his Council, were indicted, and found guilty of Treaſon.

4. That applying to the King for calling a General Aſſembly, is rather Matter of Ceremony and Intereſt, than Duty; and that in caſe they are refus'd by the Crown, they may convene themſelves.

5. If either the King, or his Commiſſioner, preſent at an Aſſembly, ſhall refuſe to give his Aſſent, upon a Perſwaſion that the Thing is unjuſt, and claſhes with the Laws of the Realm: In this Caſe, if the Matter happens to be carried by a Majority of the Members, the King is then oblig'd by the Law of God to execute ſuch an Act of the Aſſembly: And provided the Miniſters of State, or the Magiſtracy, ſhall refuſe to do their Part, they muſt then be liable to the higheſt Cenſures of the Church, and by Conſequence incur the Forfeiture of their Places and Eſtates.

6. The Covenanters aſſert, That an Aſſembly may repeal Acts of Parliament, and ſuperſede the Obligation of the Laws, provided they any ways intrench upon the Buſineſs of the Church.

7. The Subjects proteſting againſt the Laws, whether the Proteſtation is made coram Judice, or non Judice, diſcharges the Proteſters from their Obedience to ſuch Laws: And by the Covenanters Doctrine, the People are thus diſengag'd, before the Legality of their Proteſtations are try'd by competent Judges; nay, tho' they are diſclaim'd by the Council, and the Miniſters of Juſtice, when they are made.

The large Declaration.

Their laſt Poſition which I ſhall mention, by which they ſupport their Practice, and juſtify their Revolt, is very extraordinary: "The Majority of the Kingdom, ſay they, being upon the Score of their Numbers, the moſt conſiderable Diviſion, have the Liberty of making uſe of any Expedient, which they conceive ſerviceable to the Glory of God, and the Good of the Church, any Laws or Statutes to the contrary notwithſtanding: And that this Majority, eſpecially when repreſented by an Aſſembly, may without the Authority Royal, and which is more, againſt the expreſs Command of the King and Council, againſt the deelar'd Opinion of the Judges, elect ſome few Noblemen, Barons, Miniſters and Burgeſſes; who, under the Diſtinction of a Committee from the General Aſſembly, may lawfully ſit, tranſact, and ſettle Buſineſs touching Church and State, as if there was neither Prince, Council, nor Judge in the Realm.

Some ſcandalous Paſſages in the Covenanters Sermons.

The Biſhop's Declinator having charg'd the Covenanting-Miniſters with their ſcandalous Licence in their Sermons and Prayers; I ſhall give ſome Inſtances of this Miſbehaviour: One of theſe Men refuſed to pray in the Church for Sir William Nesbet, Provoſt of Edinburgh, when lying upon his Death-bed, only becauſe he had not ſubſcrib'd the Covenant. Another pray'd God to ſcatter them all in Iſrael, and divide them in Jacob, who had counſell'd us to require the Confeſſion of Faith to be ſubſcrib'd by the King's Authority. Many of theſe Miniſters refus'd to admit thoſe to the Lord's Supper who had not ſigned the Covenant: And which is more remarkable, in their Exhortation before the Holy Sacrament, they expreſly range theſe Non-compliers in the ſame Claſs with Adulterers, Slanderers, Blaſphemers, &c. One of them preach'd, That all Non ſubſcribers of the Covenant were Atheiſts: And thus all the Lords of the Council, and all the Lords of the Seſſion, were brought under this vile Denomination. Another preach'd, That as the Wrath of God was never diverted from his People, until the Seven Sons of Saul were hanged up before the Lord in Gibeon; ſo the Wrath of God would never depart from that Kingdom, till the twice ſeven Prelates (the Number of the Scotch Sees) were hang'd up before the Lord there. Another deliver'd in the Pulpit, That though there were never ſo many Acts of Parliament againſt the Covenant, yet it ought to be maintain'd againſt them all. Another held forth with this Sentence, Let us never give over till we have the King in our Power, and then he ſhall ſee how good Subjects we are. Another Declaration of one of theſe zealous Covenanters was, That the bloodieſt and ſharpeſt War was rather to be endur'd, than the leaſt Error in Doctrine and Diſcipline. And to conclude: Another in his Sermon wiſh'd, That he, and all the Biſhops in that Kingdom, were in a Bottomleſs Boat at Sea together; for he could be well content to loſe his Life ſo they might loſe theirs. (r)

The King's Declaration, and his Expedition againſt the Scots.

The Covenanters being furniſh'd with ſuch Principles, and ſuch Preachers, we need not be ſurpriz'd at their breaking out into the laſt Diſorder: And now the King finding it neceſſary to apply to Force, publiſh'd a Declaration to juſtify his Expedition againſt them. To this Purpoſe his Majeſty ſets forth, "That he had endeavoured to recover the Scots to their Duty by gentle Methods; but that his Clemency had been thrown away upon them; that notwithſtanding the Pretences of Religion, Rebellion was at the bottom. That 'tis plain, their Deſign was to inſult the Prerogative, and diſſolve the Monarchy into a Commonwealth: That ſome of the Scotch had made it their Buſineſs to pervert his Loyal Subjects of this Realm: That to carry on this Treaſonable Deſign, they had diſpers'd mutinous Pamphlets, talk'd ſeditiouſly at publick Meetings, reproach'd the King and his Government: That now they had broke out into Overt Acts of Rebellion, drawn his Subjects together, run to Arms, beſieg'd his Caſtles, levied Taxes upon the People, and menac'd his Loyal Subjects with Violence and Military Execution. That now the Queſtion is not, whether a Service-Book is to be received? Whether the Government of the Church ſhall be Epiſcopal or Preſbyterian? But whether his Majeſty is their King, or not? That notwithſtanding his Patience has held out thus long, he would not have them, or any of his Subjects, think he can, or will, admit the Abolition of Epiſcopal Government: A Government of the Church, beſt recommended in it ſelf, and eſtabliſhed by many Acts of Parliament in that Kingdom.

"His Majeſty further declares, that by ſending the Service-Book amongſt them, he never deſign'd to make any Change in their Religion, but only to bring both Kingdoms to an Uniformity in Divine Worſhip. And whereas they have ſpread a Report, that ſome

And as for ſuggeſting the Expedient of War, 'twas notoriouſly known to all his Majeſty's Council then preſent; that the Engliſh Biſhops ſollicited for Peace and Accommodation: And uſed all their Intereſt to prevail with his Majeſty, for that undeſerved Lenity, with which the Scots had been hitherto treated.

And to prevent his Subjects being poiſoned with theſe rebellious Libells, he commands thoſe who have any of them to deliver them to the next Juſtice of Peace; to be tranſmitted from the Juſtices to the Secretaries Office. And, laſtly, 'tis ordered, that this Proclamation ſhould be read in Time of Divine Service, in every Church of the Kingdom; that all the People may be convinced of the notorious Miſbehaviour of theſe Men, and ſee the Juſtice and Clemency of his Majeſty's Proceedings (s).

By the Archbiſhop's Report of the State of his Province this Year, it appears Things continued much in the ſame Condition as formerly; the Church rather gaining Ground upon the Diſſenters than otherwiſe.

April 29. Anno Dom. 1639. The King marches againſt the Scots.

In the Beginning of the Spring, the King marched his Army againſt the Scots. His Forces had a very promiſing Appearance, and were much Superiour to thoſe of the Covenanters. The Earl of Arundel was General, the Earl of Holland General of the Horſe, and the Earl of Eſſex Lieutenant-General of the Foot. Theſe Troops were furniſhed with experienced Commanders, and well provided with Ammunition and Artillery. There was likewiſe ſeveral Regiments aboard the Fleet, commanded by the Marqueſs of Hamilton. This Admiral's Buſineſs was to cruize upon the Coaſt of Scotland, to block up their Havens, to diſtreſs them in their Trade, and debarque his Land-Forces for further Service, as Occaſion required. But it ſeems he had made an ill Choice of his Ships for this Expedition; the Bulk of them being too great to give Chace, to come cloſe to the Shore, and do Execution upon the Enemy (t). However, this Misfortune would not have broken the King's Meaſures. He was well prepared to have given the Scots Battel, and in all Probability might have reduced them to an entire Obedience. But the Covenanters, as they had Reaſon, fearing the Event of a Conteſt, petitioned for a Treaty. And thus, after the two Armies had encamped within View of each other, and done little, a Pacification was ſign'd at Berwick: By the Way, before the Treaty came on, Eſſex ſecured the Town of Berwick, and did his Part with Advantage enough; but Holland and Hamilton performed beneath Expectation.

And makes an unſerviceable Pacification at Berwick.

The Articles of the Pacification, relating to the Church were, “That his Majeſty ſhould confirm what his Commiſſioner had already promiſed in his Name: That a General Aſſembly ſhould be held at Edinburgh on the ſixth of Auguſt next enſuing, and a Parliament on the twentieth of Auguſt at the ſame Place. And the Covenanters on their Part were to diſband their Forces, break up the Tables, and hold no Meetings or Conſultations, but ſuch as are warranted by Act of Parliament. And not to mention the reſt of the Articles, the King's good Nature ſeems to have made an Omiſſion in one Point: “For the Scots were not obliged to diſclaim the Proceedings of the pretended Aſſembly at Glaſcow.” And yet by the Boldneſs and Diſorder of that Meeting, the Government of the Church had been renvers'd, the People heated to Sedition, and the King's Honour ſuffered extreamly. And over and above, by capitulating with a Rebellion in Form, he brought the Revolters too much upon a Level with himſelf, fleſhed them in their Inſolence, and encouraged to a new Inſurrection. And beſides the over Indulgence of theſe Conceſſions, his Majeſty is thought to have relied too much upon the good Faith of the Covenanters. Had the King done no more than withdrawn his Army to a farther Diſtance from the Borders: Had he held his Hand 'till he had ſeen the Iſſue of the next Aſſembly and Parliament, he might probably have ſecured the Repoſe of both Kingdoms. But by diſbanding his Forces before the Scotch had done their Part in executing the Treaty, he diſheartned his Loyal Subjects in that Kingdom; and left them in a Manner, at the Mercy of the Covenant. To which we may add, the Engliſh Gentry, who made no ſmall Part of his Army, were baulk'd in their Expectation; ſhock'd with a Treaty ſo diſhonourable to the Crown, and ſenſibly diſobliged by being thus ſuddenly diſcharged: And that without any Thanks returned for their Forwardneſs in his Majeſty's Service.

The Scots make a publick Declaration of their Adherence to their late Aſſembly and Covenant.

The Scots finding the King had parted with his Forces, and diſabled himſelf for revenging an Infraction upon the Treaty: Perceiving the King, I ſay, in this unguarded Condition, they reſume the “Old Spirit of Mutiny, and declare their Reſolution of adhering to their late Proceedings; and particularly they declare themſelves reſolved to ſtand to the Covenant, and General Aſſembly at Glaſcow: That they are obliged by their former Oath and Proteſtations to maintain it a moſt Lawful, Free, and General Aſſembly of that Kingdom: And that all Acts and Cenſures, and eſpecially the Cenſures of Deprivation and Excommunication of the pretended Archbiſhops and Biſhops, are agreeable to the Diſcipline and Conſtitution of the Kirk of Scotland. Further, they proteſt themſelves unalterably reſolved to adhere to their Solemn Covenant with God, as declared in the Aſſembly, in which the Office of Archbiſhops and Biſhops is abjured: That the pretended Archbiſhops, and Biſhops, who uſurp the Office and Title abjured, and contemn the Cenſures of the Church, have been malicious Incendiaries, and miſ-reported this Kingdom to his Majeſty. And in Caſe they return hither they ſhall be looked on as excommunicate Perſons, delivered up to the Devil, and treated as Heathens and Publicans. And, laſtly, that all thoſe who entertain and ſupport the excommunicated Prelates, ſhall be proſecuted to Excommunication, purſuant to the Acts and Conſtitution of the Kirk (u).

in Favour of Themſelves; and ſo much to the King's Diſadvantage, that 'twas ordered to be called in, and burnt by the Hangman. And now being conſcious how deeply his Majeſty muſt reſent theſe Indignities, they continued their Meetings as formerly, maintained their Garriſon at Leith, the Port to Edinburgh, kept their Officers in full Pay, for the next Occaſion, and haraſs'd all thoſe of a different Sentiment. This Miſbehaviour being ſeconded with a riotous Aſſault upon ſome of the Lords of the Council and Seſſion, the King altered his Reſolution of going into Scotland, to their Parliament and Aſſembly. And thus, having conſtituted the Earl of Traquaire High-Commiſſioner, he returned to London: What the Purport of the Earl's Commiſſion was, the Reader may ſee in the Records *.

Guthry's Memoirs.

The General Aſſembly at Edinburgh confirms the Proceedings at Glaſcow.

On the twelfth of Auguſt the General Aſſembly met at Edinburgh: The Commiſſioner, and the Lords of the Council being every Day preſent. And here the late Proceedings at Glaſcow, were all confirmed: Epiſcopacy was declared unlawful, and contrary to the Word of God; and the Covenant was approved, and ordered to be ſworn and ſubſcribed by the whole Kingdom: And, which is ſomewhat extraordinary, the Commiſſioner Traquaire lent them the Force of his Character, and gave his Aſſent to all this.

The Motives for Diſaffection to the Scottiſh Biſhops.

If we enquire into the Reaſon why the Biſhops had ſo many Enemies, of all Degrees in Scotland; it may be obſerved, that one Prejudice againſt them, was their abbetting the Arminian Side in the late Controverſy in Holland. But this cannot reaſonably be interpreted to any Approach towards Popery: For the Proteſtants of the Auguſtan Confeſſion hold the Queſtions the ſame Way. Further, the Scotch Miniſters and People, had a very ſcrupulous Regard for the Obſervation of the Lord's-Day; inſomuch, that the Morality of this Feſtival was generally reckoned an Article of Faith. Now the Biſhops, not going along with them to all the Lengths of this Opinion, loſt their Eſteem: Beſides, their declaring themſelves ſo forward for the Liturgy and Ceremonies of England, drew Miſ-conſtructions upon them. For the Ignorance of many of the Scotch Zealots was ſuch, as to account this Form of Worſhip no better than Popery. The Miniſters thought themſelves ill uſed by their Biſhops, for putting a new Oath upon them at their Admiſſion to a Cure: By Vertue of which they were obliged to own the Articles of Perth, and conform to the Liturgy and Canons. They pretended likewiſe the Prelates carried their Authority too far, and encroached upon the Preſbyters Juriſdiction. As for the Nobility, they ſeemed to grudge them their Intereſt with the King: That Favours were beſtowed on their Recommendation: That they were preferred to Places of the greateſt Dignity and Truſt in the Civil Government. For Spotſwood, Archbiſhop of St. Andrews was Lord Chancellor †, and nine of the Biſhops were Privy Counſellors. But that which galled moſt, was an Apprehenſion the Biſhops might recover ſomething of the Patrimony of the Church, which was ſeized in the Diſorders of the Reformation. They had lately gotten one Learnmonth a Miniſter, preſented Abbot of Lindoris; and ſeemed not without Hope, that the reſt of the Abbacies, with the Eſtates and Juriſdiction annexed, might be recovered into the Hands of Churchmen. They are likewiſe ſaid to have projected an Attempt, that the College of Juſtice, purſuant to its firſt Inſtitution, ſhould be half Eccleſiaſticks. The Nobility and Barons, who had enriched themſelves with the Spoils of the Church, were probably very uneaſy at the Thoughts of Reſtitution; and that the Government ſhould return in ſome Meaſure to its ancient Conſtitution †*. Thus People that are wronged are commonly hated by thoſe who gain by the Injury: And 'tis oftentimes an unpardonable Provocation, to move for Equity and Juſtice. To proceed:

The next Buſineſs of the Aſſembly was to furniſh the Univerſities with Profeſſors of their own Complexion. The Anti-Covenanters, it ſeems, finding theſe Places too hot for them, had retired, and left the Chairs empty. Now, ſince the Generality of the Scots are not a little governed by the Pulpits, the Aſſembly found it neceſſary to provide a Set of proper Directors: That by this Precaution the young Divines might be ſerviceably ſeaſoned, and bred true to the Cauſe. Neither was this Re-inforcement more than neceſſary, for many of the old Miniſters began to ſee through their Deſigns, and deſert the Covenant. But theſe young Divines were very ſeaſonable Recruits: Nothing could be more blind and bold, more furious and enterprizing, than theſe Men!

Guthry.

However, the diſloyal Part of the Covenant was ſomewhat diſabled by an Explication of the Band of Defence, paſs'd in theſe Words by the Aſſembly.

> We do ſwear, not only our mutual Concurrence and Aſſiſtance for the Cauſe of Religion; and to the utmoſt of our Power, with our Means and Lives, to ſtand to the Defence of our dread Sovereign and his Authority, in the Preſervation and Defence of the ſaid true Religion, Liberties and Laws of this Kirk and Kingdom; but alſo in every Cauſe which may concern his Majeſty's Honour, We ſhall (according to the Laws of this Kingdom, and Duty of good Subjects) concur with our Friends and Followers in quiet Manner, or in Arms, as we ſhall be required by his Majeſty's Council, or any having his Authority *.

But then they refuſed to ſubſcribe the Declaration propoſed by the High-Commiſſioner, which barr'd Reſiſtance, and tied them cloſe to their Duty. The remarkable Clauſe is this: All the Subjects of this Kingdom for vindicating themſelves from all Suſpicions of Diſloyalty, or derogating from the Greatneſs and Authority of our dread Sovereign, have declared this Covenant to be one in Subſtance, with that which was ſubſcribed by his Father (of bleſſed Memory) in the Years 1580, 1581, 1590, and often ſince renewed †.

And the Parliament confirms the Acts of the Edinburgh Aſſembly.

Upon the thirty firſt of Auguſt the Parliament met, and confirmed all the Acts of the Aſſembly; changed the old Form of chuſing the Lords of the Articles, erected a Third Eſtate of Lairds or Barons, in the Room of the Biſhops: And to all theſe Bills, and ſeveral others derogatory to the Crown, the Commiſſioner aſſented.

To come back to England. Much about this Time, by the Encouragement of Archbiſhop Laud, the Engliſh Liturgy was tranſlated into Greek by one Petly, as it had been into French by King James his Order, for the Uſe of the Iſle of Jerſey. And to ſecure the Hierarchy rarchy from being over-run by the Covenanting Scotch, and Engliſh Puritans, who acted in Concert with them, he thought it neceſſary to raiſe ſome further Defences.

Biſhop Hall's firſt Draught of his Book, entitled, The Divine Right of Epiſcopacy.

To this Purpoſe he prevailed with Hall Biſhop of Exeter, to compoſe a Treatiſe of the Divine Right of Epiſcopacy: This was to ſerve as a Counter-Battery upon the late Presbyterian Aſſemblies at Glaſcow and Edinburgh. Exeter, having ſtruck out the Lines of this Scheme, ſent them up to the Archbiſhop, to be altered, as he thought fit. The two main Propoſitions he deſigned to make good, was, Firſt, "That Epiſcopacy is a lawful, moſt ancient, and Divine Inſtitution, (as 'tis joined with Imparity and Superiority of Juriſdiction;) and therefore, where Providence has ſettled it, it cannot be thrown off by any Humane Power, without manifeſt Violation of God's Ordinance. 2dly. That the Presbyterian Government, though challenging the Glorious Diſtinctions of Chriſt's Kingdom and Ordinance, has no Foundation either in Scripture, or the Practice of the Church, for the firſt Fifteen hundred Years. And though (to ſpeak in Biſhop Hall's own Words) it may be of Uſe in ſome Cities and Territories, wherein Epiſcopal Government, through Iniquity of Times, cannot be had, yet to obtrude it upon a Church, otherwiſe ſettled under an acknowledged Monarchy, is altogether incongruous and unjuſtifiable. To make good theſe two Propoſitions, he laid down ſome Poſtulata, as he calls them, to ſuperſtruct his Reaſoning upon. Theſe Principles, which he concludes cannot be conteſted, are as follows.

"(1). That Government, which was of Apoſtolical Inſtitution, cannot be denied, to ſtand upon Divine Right.

"(2). Not only a Government, which was expreſly commanded, but that which was practiſed and recommended by the Apoſtles to the Church, ought in Reaſon to paſs for an Apoſtolical Inſtitution.

"(3.) A Government ſet up by the Apoſtles, by Divine Inſpiration, was deſigned for Perpetuity, and not only for the Benefit of the Age in which they lived.

"(4.) The Univerſal Practice of the Church immediately ſucceeding the Apoſtles, is the beſt Comment both upon the Practice, and Writings of the Apoſtles.

"(5.) We ought not to entertain ſo ill an Opinion of the Holy Fathers, and Primitive Martyrs of the Church, as to ſuppoſe that they who immediately ſucceeded the Apoſtles, had either Inclination, or Hardineſs enough, to ſet up an exceptionable Government, or ſo much as to change the Kind that they had received.

"(6.) Suppoſing their Preſumption had been of this Size, yet it would not have been in their Power to have carried their Novelty ſo univerſally through all Parts of Chriſtendom, in ſo ſhort a Time.

"(7.) That ancient Records of the Hiſtory of the Church, and the Writings of the firſt Fathers, are of better Authority for the Primitive Form of Church-Government, than that of this laſt Age.

"(8). That thoſe condemned for Hereticks by the Ancients, are no good Vouchers for Church-Government.

"(9.) That the Acceſſion of Privilege and Honourable Titles, does not affect the Subſtance of the Epiſcopal Function.

"(10.) Thoſe Places of Scripture, upon which a new Form of Government is founded, had need be very clear and unqueſtionable, and carry a more demonſtrative and indiſputable Evidence, than thoſe Texts from which the old rejected Hierarchy is inferr'd.

"(11.) If that Order, which they (the Presbyterians) ſay Chriſt eſtabliſhed for the Government of the Church, and which they call the Kingdom of Chriſt: If this Order is ſingle and clearly diſtinguiſhed, then they would have been agreed long before this Time, about the Form and Conditions of this Inſtitution.

"(12.) If this, which they (the Puritans and Diſſenters) pretend, is the Kingdom and Ordinance of God; then in Caſe it happens to be defective in any Eſſentials, 'twill follow, that Chriſt's Kingdom is not ſet up in the Church.

"(13.) Chriſtian Polity requires nothing impoſſible or abſurd.

"(14.) Thoſe Tenents, which in many Eſſential Points are new and unheard of, ought to be ſuſpected.

"(15.) To revolt from the Practice of the Univerſal Church from the Apoſtles to Calvin, and run into a modern Scheme, can be no leſs than a ſcandalous Singularity.

The Archbiſhop's Animadverſions upon this Tract.

This Sketch ſent up to Lambeth, was in the main approved by the Archbiſhop: Some Part of the Draught notwithſtanding, he thought capable of being mended. And ſince Biſhop Hall had ſubmitted the Cenſure entirely to his Metropolitan, Laud made ſome Alterations in his main Propoſitions, and aſſigned the Reaſons for taking this Freedom. The Archbiſhop in his Letter to Hall, takes Notice, that this Prelate, in his firſt Head had affirmed Epiſcopacy an Ancient, Holy and Divine Inſtitution. Now Laud conceived theſe Words, Ancient and Holy, were Expreſſions of Abatement, and diluted the Strength of the Aſſertion: And therefore, "thought it more adviſable to give the Paſſage fewer Epithets, and affirm it more Categorically of Divine Inſtitution. In the next Place, Hall defined Epiſcopacy by joining it with Imparity and Superiority of Juriſdiction: But this, ſays Laud, ſeems ſhort; for every Archdeacon's Poſt has this Advantage: And that Henderſon's Chair at Glaſcow was higher than the reſt. And therefore, to do Right to Epiſcopacy, we muſt define it by a Diſtinction of Order. I draw the Superiority, continues the Archbiſhop, not from any Juriſdiction veſted in Biſhops, Jure Poſitivo; not from any Right granted them by Princes, or Canon Law; but from the intrinſick Powers reſulting from their Character, and conſequent upon their Conſecration. The Archbiſhop ſhall ſpeak the reſt of his Remarks in his own Perſon. "You ſay where Epiſcopacy has been ſettled it cannot be diſcharged without a Violation of God's Ordinance. This Propoſition, I conceive, is inter minus habentes, and wants Compaſs: For there was never yet any Church, where this Form was not originally ſettled. And therefore, whereever Epiſcopacy is not ſettled at preſent, 'tis certain it has been thrown off. For in the Beginning 'twas evidently there,

“ In a ſecond Head you grant Presbyterian Government may be of uſe where Epiſcopacy cannot be had. Firſt, I deſire you would conſider, whether this is not an unneceſſary and dangerous Conceſſion? Next, I am of Opinion there is no Place where Epiſcopacy is impracticable: Thirdly, ſince, as you obſerve, they are ſo bold in their Claim, and carry their Pretenſions ſo high; ſince they obtrude their Presbyterian Fiction for Chriſt's Kingdom and Ordinance, and throw off Epiſcopacy as an oppoſite and unwarrantable Government, we muſt not uſe any mincing Terms, but unmask them plainly, and expoſe the Deluſion; we muſt not embaraſs our ſelves, and compliment away Truth, for fear of diſpleaſing Amſterdam or Geneva with this plain Dealing.

“ As to your Poſtulata, continues the Archbiſhop, I deſire you would allow me the ſame Freedom: Your firſt two are true, but too narrowly expreſs'd. For Epiſcopacy is not to be ſo confined to Apoſtolical Inſtitution, as to bar it from a further Aſcent, and from deriving it originally from our Saviour himſelf; tho' perhaps the Apoſtles might ſuperſtruct ſomething with Reſpect to Form and Circumſtances. And here give me Leave to enlarge a little: The Adverſaries of Epiſcopacy are not only the furious Aerian Hereticks, amongſt which we may reckon the Scottiſh Novelliſts: Beſides theſe, there are others of a more ſpecious Alloy, both in the Genevian and Roman Faction. The latter Diviſion will be contented Epiſcopacy, ſhould be Juris Divini mediati, by, from, and under the Pope, leaving him the Privilege of a Spiritual Monarch over the whole Church. But theſe Controverſy-Writers of the Court of Rome, won't allow Epiſcopacy to be Juris Divini immediati, which makes the Church (as Laud goes on) Ariſtocratical in the Biſhops: Tho', with due Submiſſion to his Authority, I humbly conceive, the immediate Divine Right of Epiſcopacy ſuppoſes an Original Independency amongſt thoſe of that Order; and that all Privilege and Preference of one See above another, was the Reſult of ſubſequent Compacts, and Conceſſions of the Epiſcopal College, To return: “ This Diſtinction of Juris Divini Mediati, continues the Archbiſhop, is the Italian Rock; of which the Genevians, to give them their Due, ſtand clear. Some of theſe Men will not deny Epiſcopacy to be Juris Divini, without the above-mentioned Diſtinction: But then they throw in qualifying Terms of another Kind, 'tis ut Suadentis vel Approbantis, ſed non Imperantis: They will needs have this Kind of Government ſtand upon Courteſie, and leave it to the Diſcretion of the People. And thus, by the Help of this Reſerve, they may either admit, or renounce it, as Intereſt or Fancy happens to ſuggeſt: Nay, unleſs my Memory very much fails me, (I ſpeak in the Archbiſhop's Name) Beza himſelf is ſaid to have owned Epiſcopacy to be Juris Divini Imperantis: But then he comes in with this Salvo of Non univerſaliter Imperantis; and that 'twas inſtituted citrà Conſiderationem Durationis. And thus by fencing with theſe Diſtinctions, and going a little at large, Geneva and Scotland may eſcape Cenſure, give themſelves a Diſpenſation from Catholick Practice, live under Biſhops in one Age, and without them in another. This is the great Rock in the Lake of Geneva, which hitherto you ſeem not to have ſufficiently marked. In your 9th Poſtulatum you affirm, the annexing Honourable Titles, or Privileges, makes no Difference in the Subſtance of the Calling: I ſuppoſe you mean Titles of Archbiſhops, Primates, Patriarchs, &c. But then I intreat you would take Care to guard your Meaning from Miſconſtruction: For otherwiſe 'tis probable the Faction may make an Advantage of the Aſſertion: They may pretend 'tis poſſible, that a Biſhop implies no more than an honourable Diſtinction, and that their Order and Powers are the ſame with that of a Prieſt. As to the eleventh Poſtulatum, it muſt be managed with great Caution, for fear of a ſaucy Anſwer, which is a great deal more ready with them, than a Learned one.

Ruſhworth, Part II.

After this the Archbiſhop deſires Hall would ſend him up each Head, or Poſtulatum, as they were finiſhed, for further Conſideration; and concludes with a Ceremonious Excuſe for the Frankneſs of his Remarks. By theſe Reflections the Reader may perceive the Archbiſhop was a Perſon of a Primitive Spirit, and of great Judgment and Penetration: That the Learned Biſhop Hall had this Honourable Opinion of him, appears by his governing his Performance upon Laud's Animadverſions. When this Book entitled Epiſcopacy by Divine Right, &c. was finiſhed, the Author laid the Manuſcript before Laud for his laſt Review. And here amongſt other Things, the Archbiſhop took Notice, that the Sabbatarian Rigours were too gently touched. He remarked further, that Hall had wav'd the Diſcuſſion of this Queſtion, Whether Epiſcopacy be an Order or Degree, as not much material: Whereas thoſe Learned Men the Archbiſhop conſulted thought the main Controverſy turned upon this Point. He therefore deſired the Biſhop to recollect himſelf for ſome Alterations in this Part of the Argument. But the moſt ſhocking Paſſages were, Hall's calling the Pope Anti-Chriſt in ſuch undiſguiſed deciſive Expreſſions. This rugged Uſage of a Chriſtian Biſhop, was not defenſible in Laud's Opinion: And in this a great many Learned Proteſtants concurred with him. However, before he came to any Reſolution he acquainted his Majeſty with the Buſineſs. How the Matter was ſettled by the King and the Archbiſhop, will appear by his Letter to the Biſhop of Exeter; which I ſhall tranſcribe as it lies before me.

Hall alters his Book upon the Archbiſhop's Corrections.

The laſt (with which I durſt not but acquaint his Majeſty) is about Anti-Chriſt, which Title, in three or four Places, you beſtow upon the Pope poſitively and determinately; whereas King James (of Bleſſed Memory) having brought ſtrong Proof in a Work of his, as you well know, to prove the Pope to be Anti-Chriſt; yet being afterwards challenged about it, he made this Anſwer, when the King that now is, went into Spain, and acquainted him with it; That he writ that not concludingly, but by Way of Argument only: That the Pope, and his Adherents, might ſee there, was as good and better Arguments to prove him Anti-Chriſt, than for the Pope to challenge Temporal Juriſdiction over Kings. The whole Paſſage being known to me, I could not but ſpeak with the King about it, who commanded me to write unto you, that you might qualify your Expreſſions in theſe Particulars, and ſo not differ from the known Judgment of his pious and learned Father. This is eaſily done with your own Pen; and the rather, becauſe all Proteſtants join not in this Opinion of Anti-Chriſt (w).

The Biſhop of Exeter, ſway'd by the Reaſoning and Authority of this Letter, ſoftned ſome of his Expreſſions, and expung'd others, to the King's, and Archbiſhop's Satiſfaction.

The Archbiſhop's Account of his Province.

"In the Archbiſhop's Account of his Province this Year, he acquaints the King, that in his Dioceſs near Aſhford, ſeveral Anabaptiſts, and other Separatiſts, ſtood out ſo obſtinately againſt the Cenſures of the Church, that there was no other way of dealing with them, but by having Recourſe to the Statute for Abjuration, or applying ſome other way to the Aſſiſtance of the Temporal Courts. But whether this Remedy was proper, or not, at this diſturb'd Juncture, is refer'd to his Majeſty.

From the Dioceſs of London 'tis certify'd, That the laſt Year there was a warm Conteſt in the Pulpit between Mr. Goodwyn, Vicar of St. Stephen's Coleman ſtreet, and ſome other City Miniſters: The Subject of their Diſpute was touching the Act of Believing, and the Imputation of Chriſt's Righteouſneſs in the Juſtification of a Sinner: The People it ſeems were very much entangled, and uneaſy with this Controverſy. The Matter had been taken up by the Biſhop and Chancellor, and the Parties had promiſed to be quiet: But this Year Goodwyn broke his Engagement, reviv'd the Conteſt, and preach'd the People into their former Scruples and Ferment: However, the Lord Biſhop did not deſpair of a good Iſſue. (x) (x) Hiſt. of the Troubles, &c. of Archbiſhop of Laud.

The Dioceſs of Norwich was quiet, and conformable, as any Part of the Kingdom. This, by the way, was a great Reformation, brought on by Wrenn and Mountague, in a few Years.

The Biſhop of Ely certify'd, That Sir John Cutts, of Childerly near Cambridge, kept a Chaplain, tho' unqualified by Law. The Caſe, as the Archbiſhop acquaints the King, was this: There were anciently two Pariſhes in Childerly; the one had been long ſince loſt, the other remains Preſentative. But now, excepting the Knight's Houſe, the whole Town is depopulated; the Church is tumbled into Rubbiſh, and upon the remaining Part of the Walls a Stable, a Brew-Houſe, and other Offices are built. Upon this Rectory the Knight always provides a Titular Incumbent, who receives none of the Tythes. But then he has a Chappel, which, as he ſays, was conſecrated by Biſhop Heton. He entertained a Stipendiary Chaplain under the Colour of being the Parſon's Curate: But that in Fact he was neither appointed, nor paid by the Incumbent. In ſhort, by this Means a good Rectory was ſwallow'd, and that almoſt within View of the Univerſity.

The Biſhop of Ely certifyeth further, That in Emanuel, Sidney, and Corpus Chriſti, Colleges in Cambridge, the Rooms they us'd for Chappels were never conſecrated.

'Twas likewiſe preſented to this Biſhop, (Wrenn) that about Forty Years ſince, one Sir Francis Hind pull'd down the Church of St. Ethelred in Hiſton, being a Vicaridge Preſentative, and forc'd the Pariſhioners to go to another ſmall Church in that Town, to their great Inconvenience: And that the Lead, Timber, Stones, Bells, and all other Materials, were ſold by the ſaid Sir Francis; or made uſe of for the building his Houſe in Madingley.

The Biſhop of Peterborough certifies, that ſome Knights, and other Secular Gentlemen, entertain'd Scholars in their Houſes for Converſation; or gave the Vicar his Board, where the Endowment was ſmall: And this they alledg'd was not keeping a Chaplain, forbidden by the King's Inſtructions. However, moſt of theſe Scholars perform'd the Office of a Chaplain, that is, they ſaid Prayers, but not the Common-Prayer appointed by the Rubrick. This Biſhop acquaints his Metropolitan, that few of the Laity are Factious, but where the Clergy miſled them. And this Obſervation Laud is afraid will hold in moſt Parts of the Kingdom.

In the Dioceſs of Exeter, one Coxe preach'd a Sermon upon Hoſea 4. and 4. to prove the Church of England did not maintain the calling of Biſhops to be Jure Divino: This Sermon made an ill Impreſſion upon a great many People in thoſe Parts. But the Biſhop of Exeter having diſcours'd this Coxe, ſent him up to the Archbiſhop; where, receiving full Satiſfaction upon the Queſtion, he went Home, and of his own voluntary Motion, made a handſome Recantation, and recover'd the People he had formerly miſled.

January the 2d, 1639-40.

The Biſhops of Bath and Wells, Sarum, Worceſter, Glouceſter, Rocheſter, St. David's, Landaff and Bangor, certify, That his Majeſties Inſtructions were punctually obſerv'd in their Dioceſſes; and that in other Reſpects they were likewiſe in a regular Condition: The Biſhop of Chicheſter's Certificate is much to the ſame Purpoſe: Only he adds, that that Dioceſs is not ſo much troubled with Puritan Miniſters, as with Puritan Juſtices of Peace; of which it ſeems there was a great many: The reſt of the Dioceſſes returning nothing remarkably amiſs, I ſhall paſs them over.

Id.

This was the laſt annual Information the Archbiſhop ſent the King. Now, if we conſider the Condition of the Church at Laud's coming to Canterbury, we ſhall find him very ſucceſsful in his Adminiſtration: And had not the Rebellion come on, and thrown him out of his Seat, he would, in all likelyhood, either have converted, or cruſh'd, the Puritan Sect, and recover'd his Province to an entire Conformity.

But now the Engliſh Faction being animated by the King's late Indulgence to the Scots, the Times grew diſturb'd, and the Government was much embarraſs'd. To relieve his Majeſty under theſe Difficulties, the Earl of Strafford Lord Deputy of Ireland, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Marquiſs of Hamilton, adviſ'd the calling a Parliament; 'twas likewiſe reſolved at the Board to give the King an extraordinary Aſſiſtance, in caſe the Houſes ſhould prove incomplyant, and refuſe the paſſing of Subſidies. The Parliament meets at Weſtminſter, and not giving Satiſfaction is quickly diſſolv'd. An. Dom. 1640.

Upon the Thirteenth of April the Parliament met at Weſtminſter: Soon after the opening of the Seſſion the King ſent a Meſſage to the Lower Houſe, to put them in Mind of Supplies; reporting the intolerable Uſage he had received from the Scots; and declaring, that provided they granted him an Aid ſuitable to the Occaſion, he would give up his Claim of Ship Money, and ſatiſfy all other reaſonable Demands: But the Commons, as Things were manag'd, were in no Diſpoſition for Complyance; they inſiſted upon farther Securities for Property, for better Settlement of Religion, and for Privilege of Parliament. Now the Queſtion was, Whether the King's Meſſage, or the Commons Requeſt, was firſt to be conſider'd? After ſeveral Conferences between the Two Houſes, the Lords voted a Preference for the King's Buſineſs, and the Commons for that of the Subject: But this Diſpute was quickly ended, no leſs unfortunately than it began: For Secretary Vane being order'd to acquaint the Commons in what Proportion the King deſir'd to be aſſiſted, propos'd Twelve Subſidies;

May 5. Ann. Dom 1640.

Subſidies; whereas, 'twas ſaid, he had expreſs Orders to mention no more than Six: This being look'd on as an exceſſive Demand, ſhock'd the Commons, and threw them off their Temper: And thus proceeding to ſome unacceptable Debates, the King deſpairing of any good Iſſue, by the Advice of his Council, diſſolv'd the Parliament.

A Convocation at St. Paul's. Hamond. L'Eſtrange's Hiſt. of King Charles. Lord Clarendon's Hiſt. of the Rebellion, &c. Ruſhworth's Hiſt. Collect. Part 2d. pag. 1163. Synodus Anglicana Append.

To give ſome Account of the Convocation: This Provincial Synod met April the Fourteenth at the Chapter-Houſe of St. Paul's. The Sermon was preach'd by Dr. Turner, Reſidentiary of that Church: His Text was Matthew 16. 16. Behold, I ſend you forth as Sheep in the midſt of Wolves. In the Cloſe of the Sermon he took Notice, that all the Biſhops did not hold the Reins of Diſcipline equally ſtrait; that ſome of them were too remiſs and indulging: That tho' by this popular Byaſs they might gain the Reputation of gentle Governours, they diſſerv'd the reſt of their Order, and made them paſs for Men of Rigour: He therefore exhorted them to act up to the Rubrick and Canons, and inſiſt upon a ſtrict Conformity. After Sermon Dr. Richard Stuart, Clerk of the Cloſet, and Dean of Chicheſter, was preſented Prolocutor. When this Matter was ſettled, and the Cuſtomary Ceremonies over, the Archbiſhop produced a Commiſſion under the Broad Seal, enabling the Two Houſes to conſult and agree upon the Explanation, or altering any Canons then in Force, or for the making ſuch new ones as ſhould be thought convenient for the Government of the Church: The Commiſſion was to remain in Force during the preſent Seſſion of Parliament, and no longer: By a remarkable Clauſe in this Inſtrument, nothing could be done without the Archbiſhop's being a Party at the Conſultation. (z)

They receive a Commiſſion under the Broad Seal for altering the Canons, or making new ones.

(z) Cyprian Anglic. pag. 423. Synod. Anglican.

The Latitude of this Commiſſion was very acceptable to the Majority; and by way of Acknowledgment for the Truſt his Majeſty had lodg'd with them, they granted him Six Subſidies, at the Rate of Four Shillings in the Pound, to be paid within ſix Years. After this the Archbiſhop brought in a Canon for ſuppreſſing the farther Growth of Popery: This was put into the Hands of the Prolocutor with Directions that the Lower Houſe might enlarge and alter it as they thought proper. But afterwards Laud, conſidering this Canon proceeding wholly from himſelf, might wipe off ſome Aſperſions, and prove ſerviceable to his Reputation, recall'd the Paper into his own Hands: And after a Review, return'd it to the Lower Houſe in the ſame Form it ſtands at preſent: While this Matter was ſettling, a Canon was drawn for the better keeping the Day of his Majeſties Inauguration. Another Canon was levelled againſt the ſpreading the Socinian Hereſy. The next Proviſion was a Reſtraint of Sectaries. By this Canon 'twas decreed, that all thoſe Proceedings and Penalties mentioned in the Canon againſt Popiſh Recuſants, ſhould, as far as they are applicable, ſtand in full Force and Vigour againſt all Anabaptiſts, Browniſts, Separatiſts, Familiſts, or other Sects whatſoever, who refuſe repairing to their Pariſh Churches for hearing Divine Service, and receiving the Holy Communion.

Some new ones made.

Thus far the Convocation had gone when the Parliament was unfortunately diſſolv'd: And poſſibly this Eccleſiaſtical Meeting had broken up the next Day, according to Cuſtomary Practice, if one of the Lower Houſe had not acquainted the Archbiſhop with a Precedent of Queen Elizabeth's Time, to encourage them to continue their Seſſion. This Precedent, enter'd upon the Convocation-Records, was an Authority that the Clergy might grant a Subſidy, and levy it by the Force of Synodical Acts, without a Parliamentary Confirmation. From this Inſtance, the Majority inferring an Independency of the Convocation upon the Parliament, adjourn'd themſelves ſeveral Times with a Deſign to enter upon Buſineſs, and enlarge the Number of their Canons. However, not a few of the Members were ſurpriz'd at this Reſolve, becauſe their continuing the Meeting was plainly croſſing upon common Uſage: And beſides, the Powers granted in the Commiſſion abovementioned were to expire at the Receſs of the Parliament. To remove theſe Scruples, 'twas alledg'd on the other Side, that the Writs for calling a Parliament and Convocation were couch'd in different Forms, and no way depending upon each other: And, which reinforc'd the Argument, the preſent Convocation-Writ, and the Commiſſion enabling them to make Canons, were diſtinct Inſtruments: From whence the Inference is, that tho' the Commiſſion determined with the Diſſolution of the Parliament, yet, by Vertue of the Writ, they were to remain a Convocation, till diſſolv'd by another Writ. This Reaſoning had its Effect upon ſeveral of the Members: * However, to give farther Satisfaction, the King put the Queſtion to the moſt Eminent Lawyers then at Court, who deliver'd their Reſolution in theſe Words: That the Convocation, call'd by the King's Writ, is to continue till it be diſſolv'd by the King's Writ, notwithſtanding the Diſſolution of the Parliament. This Opinion was ſign'd by Finch, Lord Keeper, Mancheſter, Lord Privy Seal, Littleton, Chief Juſtice of the Common-Pleas, Banks, Attorney-General, and Whitfeild and Heath, two of his Majeſties Council learned in the Law. To fortify this Reſolution, a new Commiſſion was ſent the two Houſes, to remain in Force during the King's Pleaſure: Notwithſtanding this Encouragement, Dr. Brownrig, Dr. Hacket, Dr. Holdiſworth, Mr. Warmiſtry, with others, to the Number of Thirty-ſix, proteſted againſt the Continuance of the Convocation. (a) But in Regard the Seſſion was warranted by ſo many conſiderable Perſons of the Long Robe, theſe Diſſenting Members neither withdrew from the Houſe, nor enter'd their Proteſt in Scriptis, or Form of Law.

And now the Convocation ſomewhat reaſſur'd, went on with their Buſineſs: Tho' it muſt be ſaid the Proſpect was dark, and the Juncture very diſcouraging; for Five hundred of the Mob had lately made a Midnight March to Lambeth, and attack'd the Archbiſhop's Palace two Hours: But being diſappointed in their Malice, and forc'd to retire, they reſolv'd to aſſault the Convocation: The King being inform'd of the Danger order'd them a Guard, conſiſting of ſome Companies of the Train'd-Bands of Middleſex, commanded by Endymion Porter, Groom of the Bed-Chamber, a Loyal and well-affected Gentleman.

The Canons paſs'd in this Convocation, being in Sparrow's Collection, and eaſily met with; I ſhall neither tranſcribe, nor abſtract them. It may be ſufficient to add the Titles of thoſe already unmention'd; the 2d, 3d, 4th, and 5th, have been already related: The firſt is entituled, Concerning the Regal Power. This Canon carries the Regale to a remarkable Heighth, and declares ſtrongly for Paſſive Obedience. The Title of the 6th ſtands thus: An Oath enjoyn'd for the preventing of all Innovations in Doctrine and Government. And becauſe this Oath was ſo loudly declaim'd againſt, and ſo much battered in the next Parliament, * I ſhall inſert it at length: It ſtands thus.

*Ruſhworth's Hiſt. Collect. Part 2d. p. 1337.

Laud, (William) Archbiſhop of Cant.

The Oath ſo much excepted againſt.

I A. B. do ſwear, That I do approve the Doctrine and Diſcipline, or Government eſtabiſhed in the Church of England, as containing all Things neceſſary to Salvation: And that I will not endeavour by my ſelf, or any other, directly or indirectly, to bring in any Popiſh Doctrine contrary to that which is ſo eſtabliſhed: Nor will I ever give my Conſent to alter the Government of this Church, by Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Deans, and Archdeacons, &c. as it ſtands now eſtabliſhed, and as by Right it ought to ſtand; nor yet ever to ſubject it to the Uſurpations and Superſtitions of the See of Rome. And all theſe Things I do plainly and ſincerely acknowledge and ſwear, according to the plain and common Senſe and Underſtanding of the ſame Words, without any Equivocation, or mental Evaſion, or ſecret Reſervation whatſoever. And this I do heartily, willingly, and truly, upon the Faith of a Chriſtian. So help me God in Jeſus Chriſt.

To go on with the Titles of the Canons. The 7th is entituled, A Declaration concerning ſome Rights and Ceremonies. 8. Of preaching for Conformity. 9. One Book of Articles of Enquiry, to be us'd at all Parochial Viſitations. 10. Concerning the Converſation of the Clergy. 11. Chancellors Patents. 12. Chancellors alone not to cenſure the Clergy in ſundry Caſes. 13. Excommunication and Abſolution not to be pronounc'd but by a Prieſt. 14. Concerning Commutations, and the diſpoſing of them. 15. Touching concurrent Juriſdiction. 16. Concerning Licenſes to Marry. 17. Againſt vexatious Citations.

Beſides theſe Canons, which were all unanimouſly ſubſcrib'd by the Convocation, (the Biſhop of Glouceſter excepted) there were ſome other Things propos'd, which either fell in the Debate, or miſcarry'd by the Diſtraction of the Times. For Inſtance, one Griffith, a Member for one of the Welch Dioceſſes, mov'd for a new Edition of the Welch Church Bible; the Bible had been about Sixty Years ſince tranſlated into that Language by the Aſſiſtance of Biſhop Morgan; but this Performance ſuffer'd conſiderably in the Preſs. For the Purpoſe, Verſe 23d, of the 12th of Exodus, where the Angel is ſaid to paſs over the Door ſprinkled with Blood, is omitted, which maims the Senſe of the Chapter. And Habbakuk the 2d and the 5th, the Words he is a Proud Man are left out. Further, there was a Deſign to draw an Engliſh Pontifical, * and get it paſs'd by the Convocation: This Pontifical was to take in the Form of King Charles's Coronation, and ſerve as a Precedent for future Solemnities of this Kind. A Form for conſecrating Churches, Church-yards and Chappels, was likewiſe to be inſerted: To theſe an Office was to be added, for reconciling ſuch as had either done open Penance, or apoſtatiz'd to Mahometaniſm. Theſe three Forms, together with the Office of Confirmation, and the Ordinal now in Force, were to make the whole Book: But the publick Diſcontents growing higher, 'twas thought adviſable to poſtpone this Matter till the Times were better ſettled: Many of the Members excepted againſt tying up Preachers to uſe the Prayer before the Sermon preſcrib'd by the 55th Canon. To relieve them under this Grievance, as ſome counted it, a ſhort Prayer, comprehending the Matter of the Canon, was drawn up: This Form, 'twas ſaid, would have been well receiv'd by thoſe who ſcrupl'd the Direction of the Canon. But the Archbiſhop thought it better to keep cloſe to the old Rule, than run the Riſque of a new Experiment: And thus the Motion was dropt without going further.

* Synod. Anglican.

Charles I. K.

Before the Canons were offer'd to the Houſes for their Subſcription, they were read before the King and Privy-Council; the Judges, and other Eminent Perſons of the Long Robe, being preſent: And here they were approv'd by the whole Audience, the King giving the Archbiſhop Thanks for bringing Things to ſo good an Iſſue. After this ſolemn Approbation, they were ſubſcrib'd in the Upper Houſe by the Biſhops and the reſt of the Clergy; none refuſing to put their Hand but the Biſhop of Glouceſter: This Prelate's Firmneſs to the Reformation had been formerly queſtion'd, which Suſpicion was increas'd by this Refuſal; for 'twas thought the Strictneſs of the Third Canon, for ſuppreſſing the Growth of Popery, was the only Reaſon which made him ſtand off: He was firſt argued with, and then required to acquieſce, by his Metropolitan. And theſe Methods proving ineffectual, he was ſuſpended ab Officio & Beneficio by both Houſes. This Sentence being put into Form, ſign'd by the Archbiſhop, and publickly pronounced; the King ordered his Commitment: But this Durance was but ſhort; for on the Tenth of July he acknowledged his Misbehaviour before the Lords of the Council, and took the Oath enjoyn'd by the Sixth Canon: Upon this Compliance he recover'd his Liberty; but whether this Submiſſion was not made with ſome reſerv'd Latitude, is not altogether ſo clear: For in his laſt Sickneſs, he declared himſelf in the Communion of the Church of Rome, and ordered his Will to be drawn accordingly.

May 29th.

The Canons approv'd by the Privy-Council and Judges.

The Canons of this Convocation were tranſmitted to York, and ſigned unanimouſly by that Synod, without debating upon Matter or Form. And after the National Church had thus given them their Authority, they were confirm'd by the King's Letters Patents under the Broad Seal.

But all this Countenance, and regular Proceeding, was not ſufficient to ſkreen them from Cenſure. Some were unpleas'd with the Seventh Canon, entituled, A Declaration concerning ſome Rites and Ceremonies: This Canon recommends bowing towards the Communion-Table, or Altar: However, 'tis couch'd in very inoffenſive Terms, and lays no Penalty upon the Omiſſion of this Ceremony; and, which is more, all Perſons are deſired to manage by the Rule of Charity, and neither blame the Practice or Omiſſion: However, notwithſtanding the Indifferency the Matter ſeem'd to reſt in, ſome thought thoſe who forbore the Ceremony would be look'd on as ſhort in their Conformity, and ſtand with Diſadvantage in the Opinion of the Prelates.

Exceptions againſt them anſwer'd.

But nothing occaſion'd more Clamour than the Oath enjoyn'd by the Sixth Canon, which was pelted both from Pulpit and Preſs: The &c. in this Engagement was reckon'd a dark Abbreviation, and that the meaning of it was not to be reach'd. But to this 'twas anſwer'd, That in the Five preceding Canons, made ſome Time before, there was a particular Recital of all the Perſons veſted with Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction; that is to ſay, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Deans, Archdeacons, Deans and Chapters, and other Perſons having peculiar and exempt Juriſdiction: All theſe Diſtinctions having been particularly ſet forth, in the firſt Five Canons, were in the firſt Draught of this Oath cut off with this &c. to avoid Repetition: However, 'twas intended to engroſs the Canons in the whole Length of the Enumeration, and then the exceptionable &c. would have been thrown out of Courſe: But the King being tir'd with the Charge of keeping a Guard for the Convocation, and the Clamour occaſion'd by this extraordinary Security, ſent ſeveral Meſſages to the Clergy to preſs them upon Diſpatch. The Houſes being thus ſomewhat hurry'd, ſent the Canons to the Preſs, and forgot to expunge this &c. 'Twas anſwer'd, 2dly, That the &c. in the Oath is ſo limited and explained by the following Words, viz. As it ſtands now eſtabliſhed, that there can be no reaſonable Fear of a dangerous Meaning. 'Twas farther objected, That the requiring an Oath, not to conſent to the Alteration of the preſent Church Government, by Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Deans, Archdeacons, Deans and Chapters, &c. was a Confinement of the Civil and Eccleſiaſtical Legiſlature; and tying the Church and State down to the Decrees of a Convocation: To be ſworn out of Liberty in this Manner was reckon'd the more unreaſonable, becauſe ſome of the Orders ſpecify'd in the Oath, particularly Deans and Archdeacons, have no Pretence to a Divine Right. and conſequently cannot preſcribe againſt Alteration. To this 'twas reply'd, That the Convocation never intended this Oath for a Reſtraint of their own Authority, or to bar the Clergy complying with ſuch Alterations, as might be afterwards lawfully made: Therefore, theſe Words, I will never give my Conſent to alter the Government of the Church, &c. imply no more, than that the Clergy bind themſelves not to be in a Practice againſt the preſent Eccleſiaſtical Eſtabliſhment, nor attempt an Alteration in the Church, without the Conſent of thoſe who govern. Laſtly, 'tis objected, the Perſon is to declare he takes the Oath willingly; tho', after all, there is no refuſing it, without incuring the Penalties of Suſpenſion and Deprivation: But this pretended Rigour is defended by a Parallel Inſtance in the Oath of Allegiance: For here the Party is oblig'd to ſwear he makes this Recognition Heartily, Truly, and Willingly; and yet, notwithſtanding the Compaſs of this Acknowledgment, the taking the Oath is requir'd under very ſevere Forfeitures.

Thirdly, The Canons were charged with encroaching upon the Property of the Subject; but this Objection ſhall be poſtpon'd to the next Parliament.

But after all, 'twas thought the main Exception againſt the Convocation was their drawing the Firſt Canon ſo much to the Service of the Crown, and flatly condemning Reſiſtance of the Government upon any Pretence whatſoever. 'Tis true in this, they advanc'd no other Doctrine but what was warranted by the Laws, and aſſerted at Length in the Homilies. But notwithſtanding they went plainly upon the Authority of Church and State; ſome People were much unpleas'd to have their Memory refreſh'd with this Doctrine: This Reſentment, tho' ſmother'd at firſt by the Engliſh Mal-Contents, was ſpoken out by the Scotch Commiſſioners. Theſe Covenanters, amongſt the reſt of their Articles of Impeachment, "charg'd the Archbiſhop with making Canons "againſt their juſt and neceſſary Defence; and "that he had obliged the Clergy to preach ſuch Do"ctrine four Times a Year, as was not only con"trary to their Proceedings, but to the Doctrine and "Proceedings of other Reform'd Kirks, to the "Judgment of all ſound Divines and Lawyers, "as tending to the utter Ruin and enſlaving of all "Eſtates and Kingdoms. (b) From hence it appears, that the guarding the Government, the pinning the Subjects ſo cloſe to their Duty, and declaring ſo ſtrongly againſt Rebellion, was the great Grievance in theſe Canons. To go back a little, and touch upon the Affairs in Ireland. In this Kingdom a Parliament met on the Twentieth of March, and ſat till the Seventeenth of June. At this Seſſion two Acts paſs'd for the Benefit of the Clergy: The firſt Statute, entituled, An Act for endowing Churches with Glebe Lands, is as follows.

Irish Acts in Favour of the Church.

Whereas all Beneficiaries with Cure, eſpecially Vicars, are bound to perpetual Reſidence; and yet, through the War and Confuſion of former Times in this Kingdom, the Ancient Gleabes in many Places are ſo obſcur'd that they cannot be found out, by which Means the Incumbents are neceſſitated to perpetual Non-reſidence; Be it therefore enacted by the King's moſt Excellent Majeſty, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in this Parliament aſſembled, and by the Authority of the ſame, that it ſhall be lawful for any devout Perſon, without Licence of Mortmain, to endow Churches having no Gleabes, or not above Ten Acres of Gleabe, with new Gleabe, provided the Gleabe of any one Church ſo endowed do not exceed forty Acres at the moſt, and that the ſaid Lands be not holden in Capite, or by Knight's Service. (c)

By the next Statute, the Penalty of Deprivation incurr'd by the Incumbent, for not paying the twentieth Part of his Living to the Crown, is leſſen'd to a Forfeiture of only the treble Value of the ſaid twentieth Part: (d) This was the laſt Parliament of that Kingdom during the Earl of Strafford's Lieutenancy.

The Scots invade England.

This Summer the Covenanting Scots levied another Army againſt the King, invaded England, overrun the Country to the Tine, forc'd the Lord Conway to retreat, and ſeiz'd Durham and Newcaſtle. The King march'd againſt them as far as York, and was not unprovided to give them Battle: But having Reaſon to ſuſpect ſome of the Officers and Centinels were tainted in their Loyalty, and diſinclin'd to fight the Scots, he conſented to a Treaty at Rippon: Where, after ſome Debate, the Engliſh and Scotch Commiſſioners agreed to a Ceſſation of Arms. 2dly, That the Scotch Army ſhould be allow'd Eight hundred and fifty Pounds a Day during their quartering in England: Which Contribution was to be rais'd in the Counties of Northumberland, Weſtmorland, Durham, and the Town of Newcaſtle. 3dly, The River Tees was to be the Barrier to both Armies: And as to the main Articles, they were to be refer'd to a farther Treaty at London. (e)

The Treaty at Rippon.

When the King was upon his Expedition againſt the Scots, Archbiſhop Laud receiv'd Information out of Holland of a Plot againſt his Majeſty: That this Treaſon was carry'd on in England by Seignior Con and his Confidents: That theſe Conſpirators finding the Archbiſhop reſty as to any Alterations in Religion, reſolv'd to diſpatch him firſt: And that when this Obſtacle was remov'd, they did not deſpair of working the King's Humour. (f) The firſt Diſcoverer of this Plot was one Andreas Ab-Habernsfeild, a Bohemian Gentleman, Phyſician to the Lady Eliſabeth, who married the Paltzgrave: This Gentleman ſent a Friend of his with a Narrative to Sir William Boſwell (g) his Majeſty's Agent in Holland: Habernsfeild's Friend having ſworn Sir William to Secrecy, 'twas agreed between them, that the Papers ſhould be ſeal'd, and ſent by an Expreſs to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury; Laud took Care to have them put in the King's Hands;

To proceed: The King being lately marched againſt the Scots, a Paper was drop'd in Covent-Garden to encourage the Apprentices and Soldiers to attack the Archbiſhop: But one of the Mob having been executed for a late Attempt at Lambeth, they had not Courage enough to renew the Enterprize. But not long after, when the High-Commiſſion ſate at St. Paul's, about Two thouſand Browniſts inſulted the Court, pulled down all the Benches in the Conſiſtory, and cried out they would have no Biſhops, nor High-Commiſſion. Thus the King, by this Tumult was put to the Expence of ordering a Guard for St. Paul's, as he had done before at Weſtminſter for the Protection of the Convocation.

The long Parliament meets.

On the Third of November the Long Parliament, which proved ſo fatal to the King, met at Weſtminſter. At the Opening this Seſſion the Commons made Speeches againſt the Crown and the Church in a very remarkable Manner, and gave early Indications of what followed. What they delivered againſt the Biſhops diſcovers a great Deal of Heat and Diſaffection, gives a ſtrong Countenance to Schiſm, and charges Popery at Random: In ſhort, there is much more Satyr and Declamation, than ſolid Proof in theſe Remonſtrances. Theſe Gentlemen that harangued with ſo much Vigour, ſeemed to be angry with the Biſhops for their Revenues and Authority, and grudged them the Benefit of the Conſtitution. I ſhall paſs over the Exceptions ſome of the Members made againſt inſiſting upon Conformity, againſt the High-Commiſſion, againſt a Power in the Biſhops to licence Books, and the Clergy being put into Poſts of Civil Juriſdiction. I ſhall wave the Recital, I ſay, of what was delivered upon theſe Heads, becauſe they are moſtly made up of Invective without Argument (h). But from Bagſhaw, one of the Long Robe, ſomething more of Law and Logick might have been expected.

Some of the Members declaim againſt the Hierarchy.

To give the Reader the Subſtance of this learned Members Speech upon Epiſcopacy. In the Beginning of his Diſcourſe he ſuppoſes an Epiſcopacy of two Sorts: The firſt, in ſtatu Puro, as it ſtood in the Primitive Times: The ſecond, in ſtatu Corrupto, or in its modern Declenſion. This latter Condition he applies to the Engliſh Hierarchy, and endeavours to prove, that Epiſcopacy in this State of Degeneracy encroaches upon the Crown in the four following Particulars.

His firſt Inſtance is in Biſhop Hall's late Book, wherein 'tis aſſerted, that Epiſcopacy both in the Office and Juriſdiction, is Jure Divino: And that in Matters purely Spiritual, this is no more than Truth, I have fully proved in the firſt Volume of this Work. But to go on with Mr. Bagſhaw, who pretends, this Aſſertion is directly contrary to the Laws of England. His firſt Proof is brought from the Statute of Carliſle, 35 Ed. 1. (i). Where 'tis ſaid, as Sir Edw. Cook reports, that the Church of England is founded in the State of Prelacy, by the King of England and his Progenitors. But that theſe Words relate to Revenues and Endowment, may partly be collected from what follows; where 'tis ſaid the Deſign of this Foundation was to enable the Biſhops to keep hoſpitable Houſes, and relieve the Poor. Further, that the firſt Saxon Kings, to mention no other, did not pretend to convey the Powers in the Epiſcopal Character, nor ſo much as to fill the vacant Sees, is ſufficiently ſhewn in the firſt Part of this Hiſtory. His next Proof is taken from Magna Charta, cap. 1. where the King declares Conceſſimus Deo & Eccleſiæ Anglicanæ Omnes Libertates, &c. To this it may be anſwered in the firſt Place, that Magna Charta was commonly ſuppoſed to be nothing more than a Confirmation of the Subjects Right: 2*dly*. 'Ts ſaid, Conceſſimus Deo. We have granted to God: Now, could Bagſhaw ſuppoſe the King would pretend to grant God any new Power or Juriſdiction? 'Tis plain therefore the Charter muſt be underſtood of Secular Privilege and Juriſdiction. And when theſe Things are ſettled upon the Church, they are ſaid to be given to God; becauſe they are deſigned for the Support of his Worſhip, and the Encouragement of thoſe who repreſent him. His third Argument from 37 H. 8. cap. 17. has been conſidered already in the Reign of that Prince, and thither I refer the Reader.

Bagſhaw's Speech examined.

For his ſecond Encroachment of the Hierarchy upon the Crown, he only produces a Common Saying, No Biſhop, no King; no Mitre, no Scepter. But this is only fighting a Phantome, and purſuing his own Shadow, and requires no further Conſideration.

His third Inſtance of the Hierarchy trenching upon the Crown, as he calls it, was the maintaining the Biſhops a third Eſtate in Parliament, and therefore the King and Parliament could not be without them: This he utterly denies, and makes the King one of three Eſtates. But notwithſtanding this Categorical Language, the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and Clergy, are expreſly declared to be one of the Greateſt States of this Realm (k). And that the Biſhops are eſſential to the Legiſlature no leſs than the Temporal Lords and Commons, is granted by Sir Edward Coke *.

(k) 8 Eliz. cap. 1.

* Cook Inſt. Part IV. fol.

The fourth pretended Encroachment is the Biſhops holding Eccleſiaſtical Courts in their own Names, and not in the Name of the King, nor by Commiſſion from him, contrary to the Statute 1 Ed. 6. cap. 2. But this Objection having been already anſwered, ſhall be paſs'd over. Bagſhaw, in the Concluſion of his Speech, makes a further Diſcovery of his Affection to Epiſcopacy, and declares, that had he lived in Scotland, France, Geneva, or the Low-Countries, he ſhould have been for Presbyterian Church Government. Lord Digby's Speech.

The Lord Digby thought the late Convocation misbehaved themſelves, and harangued ſtrongly againſt their Proceedings. He conceives their taxing the Clergy an Invaſion of the Subjects Right, and calls their Benevolence, a Malevolence. And the levying this Benevolence by Synodical Acts, and under the Penalties of Excommunication and Deprivation, is complained of as intolerable Oppreſſion, and an Encroachment upon the Civil Legiſlature. But, notwithſtanding theſe Tragical Expreſſions, the Clergy had always the Privilege of taxing their own Body. Neither from Magna Charta, 'till the 37th of Hen. 8. is there any Parliamentary Confirmation of Subſidies given by the Clergy*. For what Reaſon this Cuſtom was afterwards altered, is not eaſy to account for. 'Tis poſſible it might be for the Benefit of the Crown, and for the better ſecuring the Payment of the Money granted: For, ſince the Reformation, the Juriſdiction of the Church was much ſunk, and her Cenſures leſs regarded. Now the Convocation could proceed no further than Spiritual Penalties. They had no Authority over the Secular Magiſtrate, neither could they command the Juſtices of Peace to levy their Subſidies by Diſtreſs: And therefore, that the Crown might not be diſappointed of the Money granted by the Convocation, their Subſidies from the 37th of Henry VIII. downwards, were generally confirmed by Act of Parliament. But that the Clergy's granting the King a Benevolence without ſuch Confirmation, exceeded their Power, is more than is proved. Had the Convocation pretended to tax the Laity, the Objection had been good. But to conteſt their Authority for raiſing Money upon their own Body, is to croſs upon Cuſtom, and known Privilege: Neither could the Clergy without Doors reckon this a Grievance: For they had already given their Conſent for this Purpoſe in their Procuratorial Letters: For in this Inſtrument, ſigned and ſealed by the Electors for Convocation, they engage themſelves to allow and abide by the Proceedings of their Clerks and Proctors *. Beſides, there was a Precedent in Queen Elizabeth's Reign in Defence of this Practice. For in the Year 1585, the Convocation granted a Subſidy or Benevolence, and levied the Money by Synodical Authority, without any Confirmation from the Parliament; neither was this at all complained of. This Inſtance was ſuggeſted to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury in May laſt, and the Convocation-Record appealed to for the Truth of the Fact.

* Se Ratum gratum & acceptum habere quicquid dicti procuratores ſui dixerint fecerint vel conſtituerint. See the Appendix to Dr. Atterbury's Rights, Powers, &c. of a Convocation.

The Convocation ſits, but does nothing.

On the fourth of November the Convocation met at St. Paul's, the Sermon was preached by Bargrave, Dean of Canterbury. The Lower Houſe choſe their old Prolocutor, and adjourning to King Henry the VIIth's Chapel, the Archbiſhop made a Speech: He lamented the Unhappineſs of the Times; put them in Mind of the Storm riſing upon the Churrh; exhorted them to perform the Duty of their reſpective Places, and ſtand their Ground with Reſolution. There was nothing of Moment tranſacted in this Convocation. But Warmiſtre, one of the Clerks for the Dioceſs of Worceſter, made a Motion which muſt not be forgotten; 'twas, that according to the Direction of the Levitical Law, they ſhould endeavour to cover the Pit which they had opened; that is, they ſhould prevent their Enemies, and null the offenſive Canons, which had paſs'd in the laſt Convocation. But the Houſe ſeemed to have a better Opinion of the Canons, and rejected the Motion. However, Warmiſtre being diſappointed, publiſhed a long Speech upon this Subject, and run a Satyr upon ſome of the Canons. But all this Remonſtrance was not reckoned Merit enough to protect him afterwards from Sequeſtration.

Biſhop Williams enlarg'd.

About a Week forward, Williams Lord Biſhop of Lincoln, was diſcharged from his Impriſonment in the Tower; the Houſe of Lords having applied to the King for this Purpoſe. The next Day, being a Publick Faſt, this Prelate was brought into the Abbey-Church at Weſtminſter by ſix Biſhops, and officiated as Dean there. The Commons, according to Cuſtom, went to St. Margaret's Church: And here, while the Second Service was reading at the Communion Table, the Audience began to ſing ſome of Hopkin's Metre, and diſturbed the Office. This breaking in upon the Prayers was ſomewhat ſurprizing: But the Commons, it ſeems, had a Mind to acquaint the People with Part of their Deſign †.

The Earl of Strafford impeached.

The Earl of Strafford, who commanded the Engliſh Army, came up to London at the King's Inſtance, and ventured himſelf with the Parliament. This, both by himſelf, and his Friends, was thought a Step ſomewhat too hardy. But the Caution was over-ruled by his Majeſty, who promiſed his Protection, and refuſed to diſpenſe with his Abſence at the Council Board (m). However, this Nobleman's Apprehenſions of Danger were too well founded: For upon his appearing in the Houſe, he was impeached for High-Treaſon by the Commons, committed to the Black Rod, and ſent to the Tower ſoon after.

(m) Whitlock's Memoirs.

The Government being now in a viſible Declenſion, Burton and Pryn got looſe from their Confinement, and made a pompous Entry into London, being attended from Brentford with ſeveral Thouſands of Horſe and Foot, with Roſemary in their Hats. Thus the King's Courts of Juſtice, which had cenſured theſe Men, were openly inſulted: And the Criminals were admitted to the Houſe of Commons, to prefer Petitions aginſt the Proſecutors.*

* L'Eſtrange his Hiſt. of K. Charles I.

By this Countenance the Puritan Faction was further animated to attack the Church. And Alderman Pennington, with a Retinue of ſome Hundreds came to the Houſe of Commons, and preſented a Petition, ſubſcribed by Fifteen thouſand Londoners, tho' not in the Name of the Corporation. This Paper exhibited a ſtrong Complaint againſt the Ceremonies and Diſcipline of the Church of England: But containing too much Matter for ſudden Diſpatch, 'twas poſtponed to a Time of more Leiſure.

Anabaptiſtical Heterodoxies.

January 18. 164$^{0}_{1}$.

And now the Diſcipline of the Church ſinking with the Archbiſhop, about Fourſcore Anabaptiſts meeting at a Houſe in St. Saviour's Southwark, preached, that the 35th of Eliz. enjoining the Uſe of the Common-Prayer was no legal Statute, becauſe the Biſhops concurred to the making it. From hence they advanced upon the Crown, aſſerting, that the King cannot make a good Law, becauſe not Perfectly Regenerate: And that he is only to be obeyed in Matters relating to the State. Upon their being brought before the Lords, they confeſſed the Articles, but were diſmiſs'd without Puniſhment (p).

The Speeches of ſeveral Members in the Houſe of Commons againſt the Biſhops, was followed with Petitions from ſeveral Counties; one of which was ſigned by Seven hundred Presbyters. This Remonſtrance againſt the Hierarchy being well entertained by the Parliament, the King made a Speech to both Houſes to this Effect.

The King's Speech in Defence of the Biſhops.

He told them “ he could not but take Notice of ſome very ſurprizing Petitions, ſent up in the Name of ſeveral Counties againſt the preſent Eſtabliſhment of the Church: That the Biſhops were menaced with being reduced to an utter Inſignificancy, if not wholly ſet aſide. Now (continues the King) I muſt acquaint you, I make a Difference between Reformation and Alteration of Goverment: And tho' I am for the firſt, I cannot give Way to the latter. I won't ſay but that the Biſhops may have over-ſtrained their Authority, and encroached upon the Temporal Juriſdiction. If you are diſpoſed to check ſuch irregular Motions, and reform the Abuſe, I am ready to concur with you. Nay further, if you can demonſtrate the Biſhops have an over-weight of Temporal Authority; if you can ſhew me they have ſome Branches of Juriſdiction inconvenient to the State, and not neceſſary for the Support of their Order, I ſhall not be unwilling to perſuade them to reſign. But by this Conceſſion you muſt not underſtand, I can conſent to the taking away their Votes in Parliament. Of this Privilege they have been poſſeſſed under many of my Anceſtors, before the Conqueſt to the preſent Time: And a Right they have enjoyed without Interruption for ſo many Hundred Years, I conceive my ſelf bound to maintain, and look upon it as Fundamental to the Conſtitution (a).” The reſt of his Majeſty's Speech, being foreign to the Church, ſhall be omitted.

(a) L'Eſtrange his Hiſt. p. 210.

And now the Commons ſent a Meſſage to the Lords by Glyn, to deſire they would join with them in an Addreſs, to be informed who ſollicited the King to reprieve Goodman, a Seminary Prieſt, in the Face of the Parliament. The King ſent 'em Word by the Lord Privy Seal, that Goodman being found guilty of no Crime, but his Character, the Reprieving him was no more Favour, than had formerly been ſhewn to Roman Catholick Prieſts by his Father and Queen Elizabeth: The Commons not being ſatisfied with this Anſwer, had another Conference with the Lords: And here they agreed upon the following Remonſtrance.

Charles I. K.

The Commons Remonſtrance. January 27.

“ That conſidering the preſent Juncture, they conceived the ſtrict Execution of the Laws againſt Recuſancy more neceſſary than formerly.

“ (1.) Becauſe by divers Petitions from ſeveral Parts of the Kingdom, Complaints are made of the great Increaſe of Popery and Superſtition.

“ (2.) They complain of the great Number of Prieſts and Jeſuits; and that they appear publickly with ſuch Aſſurance, as if there were no Laws enacted againſt them.

“ (3.) It appears to the Houſe that of late Years, about the City of London, Prieſts and Jeſuits have been diſcharged out of Priſon, many of them being condemned for High-Treaſon.

“ (4.) The Parliament is credibly informed, that at this preſent the Pope has a Nuncio, or Agent, Reſident in the City, and they have good Reaſon to believe the Information.

“ (5.) The Papiſts go as publickly to Maſs at Denmark-Houſe, at St. James's, and the Ambaſdors Chapels, as other People go to their Pariſh Churches.

“ (6.) 'Tis found this Goodman has been twice before committed and diſcharged, and was formerly a Miniſter of the Church of England: Therefore they humbly deſire the ſaid John Goodman may be left to the Juſtice of the Law.

Idem.

To this Remonſtrance the King replied.

The King's Anſwer.

“ That the Increaſe of Popery and Superſtition (if any ſuch Thing had happened) was contrary to his Inclination. And that, to take off all Occaſion of Complaint, he ſhall order the Laws may be put in Execution.

“ That he is reſolved to ſet forth a Proclamation, to command Jeſuits and Prieſts to depart the Kingdom within a Month: And, in Caſe they either fail, or return, they ſhall be proceeded againſt according to Law.

“ As touching the Pope's Nuncio (Roſetti), his Commiſſion reaches only to keep up a Correſpondence between the Queen and the Pope, in Things relating to the Exerciſe of Religion: That this Correſpondence comes within the Compaſs of full Liberty of Conſcience, ſecured her by the Articles of Marriage. However, ſince Roſetti's Character happens to be miſunderſtood, and gives Offence, he has perſuaded the Queen to conſent to his being recalled.

“ Further, his Majeſty will take ſpecial Care to reſtrain his Subjects from going to Maſs at Denmark Houſe, St. James's, and the Chapels of the Ambaſſadors.

“ Laſtly, touching Goodman, he is contented to remit him to the Pleaſure of both Houſes. But then in Caſe they reſolve to preſs the Law cloſe upon this Prieſt, he deſires they would conſider the Inconveniences which may be drawn upon his Subjects, and other Proteſtants in foreign Countries: For that which looks like neceſſary Juſtice at Home, may probably be interpreted Severity Abroad.

Idem

This Goodman is ſaid to be ſo generous and reſign'd, that he petitioned the King he might be treated, like Jonah the Prophet, thrown over-board to lay the Tempeſt, and ſacrificed to the publick Repoſe (r).

Ruſhworth, Part III.
(r) Fuller's Church Hiſt. Book XI. pag. 174.

I have already mentioned the Treaty at Rippon was to be drawn out to further Articles, and perfected at London. To this Purpoſe the King iſſued a Commiſſion to the Sixteen Lords, formerly employed in this Affair, or any Ten of them, to treat with the Scotch Commiſſioners, to receive their Demands, and ſettle the Differences on Foot.

Amongſt the Articles granted, I ſhall mention only ſome few relating to the Church.

Articles granted to the Scots.

To begin therefore with the third Demand of the Scots, which was, "That Scotchmen within "his Majeſty's Dominions of England and Ireland, "may be free from Cenſure for ſubſcribing the "Covenant, and no more preſs'd with Oaths and "Subſcriptions, unwarranted by their Laws, and "contrary to their National Oath and Covenant, "approved by his Majeſty.

The Subſtance of this Demand was granted 'em.

In their ſixth Demand "they deſire the Reparation for the Loſſes which the Kingdom of "Scotland hath ſuſtained, and the vaſt Charges "they have been put to, by Occaſion of the late "Troubles." That is, they deſired to be well paid for their Rebellion: And ſo they were; for the Houſes granted them Three hundred thouſand Pounds for their Brotherly Aſſiſtance; beſides the Eight hundred and fifty Pounds a Day, which they had been allowed for ſubſiſting their Troops.

Their ſeventh Article was, that all Proclamations and Books, which cenſured their Invaſion, and called them Rebels, might be revoked and ſuppreſs'd. This Demand was likewiſe granted. And thus they were not only pardoned for inſulting the Government, and drawing the King's Sword againſt him, but applauded and careſſed. For Part of this Article was, That the Loyalty, Integrity and Faithfulneſs of his Majeſty's Subjects of Scotland, towards his Majeſty's Royal Perſon and Government, was to be publiſhed in all Pariſh Churches, thro' his Majeſty's Dominions (s).

Pocklington and Bray cenſured by the Houſe of Lords.

About this Time, Pocklington and Bray, Doctors in Divinity, were brought under Cenſure by the Parliament: The firſt was Chaplain in Ordinary to the King; the other to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury. Pocklington's Crime was preaching a Viſitation Sermon before the Biſhop of Lincoln, and publiſhing it under the Title of Sunday no Sabbath: His other obnoxious Book was called, The Chriſtian Altar; in which he had maintained ſeveral Things contrary to his Dioceſan's Opinion upon that Subject. Theſe Books were both licenced by Bray. Williams, upon the Death of Neile, made Archbiſhop of York, and ſtanding fair with the Parliament, moved, that theſe two Divines might be brought to a Recantation. The Houſe of Lords believing the Biſhop a proper Judge in the Controverſy, (though by the Way he had been a Party) remitted the collecting the Exceptionable Propoſiions to him. This Prelate having examined the Tracts, moved that Bray might recant ſeven erroneous Propoſitions in the firſt, and Twenty four in the ſecond. As for Pocklington, a Recantation would not ſerve his Turn; he was to be deprived of his Preferments. Fuller will have it that both theſe Doctors died ſoon after the Execution of the Sentence; and that either Shame for being miſtaken in Print, or want of Fortitude to maintain their Opinion, proved mortal to them (t). But Heylin reports from his own Knowledge, that Pocklington lived more than two, and Bray above four Years after this Cenſure; and that the Misfortune had not the leaſt viſible Effect upon their Health, or Temper (u).

Smart*'s Complaint againſt* Dr. Coſins.

Soon after one Smart, a Prebendary of Durham, complained to the Parliament againſt Dr. Coſins, Prebendary of the ſame Church, and Dean of Peterborough. Coſins was charged with Superſtition, and illegal Proceedings againſt the Complainant. The Articles of Superſtition ſuggeſted, that Coſins ſet up a Marble Altar, with Cherubins, in the Cathedral of Durham: That this, with the Appurtenances, coſt Two thouſand Pounds: That this Ornamental Furniture, which he calls Appurtenances, was a Cope, the Repreſentation of the Trinity, and God the Father in the Figure of an Old Man. There was likewiſe ſaid to be a Crucifix, with a Red Beard, and Blue Cap. The Dean was further accuſed for lighting Two hundred Wax-Candles about the Altar on Candlemas-Day: For forbidding the Singing any Pſalms before or after Sermons: For making an Anthem to be ſung of the Three Kings of Cologn, Gaſpar, Balthazar and Melchior; and for procuring a Conſecrated Knife, only to cut the Bread at the Communion. That Smart above-mentioned declaimed with ſome Vehemence in the Pulpit, againſt theſe Innovations: His Text was, I hate all thoſe that hold of Superſtitious Vanities, but thy Law do I love. That for this Freedom he was impriſoned by the High Commiſſion at York, and kept under Durance four Months before any Articles were exhibited againſt him: That from hence he was removed to the High Commiſſion at Lambeth: And that after having been haraſs'd a long Time, he was remanded to York, fined Five hundred Pounds, committed, and ordered to recant: And that, refuſing to make this Submiſſion, he was further fined, excommunicated, degraded and deprived. This Complaint formed into a Bill, was laid before the Houſe of Commons, and afterwards carried up to the Houſe of Lords: That Smart was called the Proto-Martyr of England in theſe later Days of Perſecution, by Rouſe, who carried up the Bill to the Lords, and that a large Reparation was made to the Complainant. Thus far Fuller (w). But that this Hiſtorian was miſ-informed, appears by his own Letter to Dr. Coſins, in which he owns his Miſtake, and promiſed to make the Dean Satisfaction in his next Print.

A Vindication of Coſins from Fuller's Miſrepreſentation.

I ſhall give the Reader Matter of Fact from Dr. Coſins his Letter upon this Subject (x). To be brief. When Smart's Bill of Complaint was carried up by Rouſe, a Member of the Commons, to the Houſe of Lords, Coſins put in a full Anſwer upon Oath: That his Anſwer was entered upon the Rolls of Parliament, made good before the Lords both by himſelf, and by the very Witneſs that Smart, and his Son-in-Law produced againſt him: That upon this, Glover, Smart's Lawyer, told him at the Bar of the Houſe of Lords, he was aſhamed of his Complaint, and could in Conſcience plead no longer for him: That after this, the Cauſe came on no more: That many of the Lords declared publickly, that Smart had abuſed the Houſe of Commons with a groundleſs Complaint againſt Coſins: And that, by an Order from the Lords delivered to him by the Earl of Warwick, he had the Liberty to go where he pleaſed, and never heard any more from them. The Anſwer Coſins gave in upon Oath, and made good before the Lords, was to this Effect.

(1*ſt.*) That the Communion-Table in the Church of Durham, which the Bill of Complaint calls the Marble Altar, with Cherubins, was not ſet up by Coſins, but by the Dean and Chapter many Years before he was Prebendary of that Church: And that Smart was then one of that Chapter. (2*dly.*) That by the publick Accounts, ſtanding upon the Regiſter, the Charge did not amount to above the Tenth Part of what was pretended. (3*dly.*) That the Copes uſed in that Church, were furniſhed long before Coſins his Time: And that Smart, the Complainant, was Prebendary when they were bought, and allowed his Share of the Charge. (4*thly.*) That Coſins never approved the Picture of the Trinity, or the Image of God the Father, in any Figure: And that, to his Knowledge, there was no ſuch Repreſentation in the Church of Durham. (5*thly*.) That the Crucifix, with a Blue Cap, and a Golden Beard, mentioned in the Bill of Complaint, was nothing but the Top of Biſhop Hatfield's Tomb, which had ſtood in the Church above Two hundred and fifty Years: And that there was no ſuch Figure upon any of the Copes, as is reported in Fuller's Hiſtory. (6*thly*.) That by the Statutes of that Church, to which Smart was ſworn no leſs than Coſins: by theſe Local Statutes, the Treaſurer was to provide a ſufficient Number of Wax-Lights for the Service of the Quire, during the Winter-Seaſon: That there was never above two fair Candles ſet upon the Communion-Table: That there was no more Candles uſed upon a Candlemas-Night, than in the Chriſtmas Holydays: And that the Number of them was leſſen'd or increas'd in Proportion to the Congregation. 7*thly*, That Coſins never forbad ſinging the Metre-Pſalms in the Church, but us'd to ſing them himſelf with the People at Morning Prayer. 8*thly*, That he was ſo far from directing the ſinging an Athem to the Three Kings of Cologn, that at his firſt coming to Durham Cathedral he ordered this ſuperſtitious Hymn to be cut out of the old Song Books belonging to the Choriſters School: That no ſuch Anthem had been ſung in the Choir during his being there, nor as far as his Enquiry could reach, for Threeſcore Years before, and upwards. 9*thly*, That the Knife us'd for cutting the Bread at the Communion was never Conſecrated. 10*thly*, That in Smart's Sermon there were ſeveral Propoſitions, not to be reconcil'd either to the Laws of God, or his Church, or the Statutes of the Realm: That Coſins reported ſome of theſe Paſſages, and appeal'd to the Lords for the Juſtice of the Cenſure paſs'd upon him. And laſtly, that the Complainant had ſwell'd the Account of what he ſuffer'd; that he never paid his Fine, that the Value of his Church Preferments, loſt by his Obſtinacy, was over and above made good to him, by the Contributions he receiv'd upon the Score of his lying under Cenſure: But that the Parliament gave him no Damages, nor ordered Coſins, or any other Perſon Smart complain'd of, to pay him a Farthing by way of Reparation.

A Bill paſs'd in the Houſe of Commons for taking away the Biſhops Votes in Parliament, &c.

On the Tenth of March a Bill was brought into the Houſe of Commons, and paſs'd, "That "no Biſhop ſhould have any Vote in Parliament, "any Judicial Power in the Star-Chamber, or "any Authority in Temporal Affairs; and that "no Clergy-man ſhould be in Commiſſion of the "Peace. This Bill had many Abettors in the "Houſe of Lords, where it was afterwards "thrown out. The Earl of Eſſex, and other "Mal-Contents, obſerv'd, that they ſeldom could "carry any Thing which croſs'd directly upon "the King's Intereſt, by Reaſon of the Over-"balance of the Biſhops, who generally voted "unanimouſly for the Crown: Notwithſtanding the bringing in of this Bill the Biſhops were not without Friends in the Lower Houſe. "To take "off theſe, the other Party ſuggeſted the Impoſſi-"bility of ſupporting the Hierarchy in its preſent "Condition: That there was a great Combina-"tion throughout the Kingdom againſt the Go-"vernment of the Church. That the Scotch were "in a Concert with the Engliſh for this Purpoſe, "That they publickly declared a firm Peace be-"tween the two Nations was impracticable, un-"leſs the Biſhops were taken away: And that "their Army would never march out of England "till this was effected. That notwithſtanding "theſe Menaces of the Scots, if this Bill were "once paſt, the Majority of both Houſes would "be ſo well ſatisfied, that the Violent Par-"ty would never be able to carry their Point: Theſe Reaſons, it ſeems, made an Impreſſion upon a great many Members well-affected to the Church, and brought their Vote for the Bill: But of this more afterwards. *

* Lord Clarendon's Hiſtory of the Rebellion.

A Committee for Religion.

Five Days forward, a Committee for Religion was ſetled in the Upper Houſe: 'Twas form'd of Ten Earls, Ten Biſhops, and Ten Barons. And thus, as Archbiſhop Laud remarks in his Diary, the Lay Votes ſhall be double to the Clergy. "This Committee, continues the Archbiſhop, will "meddle with Doctrine as well as Ceremonies, "and call ſome Divines to them to conſider and "countenance the Buſineſs: That this was their "Intention might be collected from a Letter ſent by the Biſhop of Lincoln to ſome Clergy-men, to attend this Service. Upon the whole, the Archbiſhop was of Opinion this Committee would put on a more ſolemn Face, and paſs for a National Synod, to the great Diſhonour of the Church. *

* Hiſt. of the Troubles, &c. of Archbiſhop Laud, pag. 61.

At the ſame Time the Lords appointed a Sub-Committee to prepare Matters. They had likewiſe an Authority to call ſeveral Biſhops and Divines to their Aſſiſtance to conſult upon a Reformation of what was amiſs, and bring Things to a better Settlement, Williams, Biſhop of Lincoln, was Chair-man in both theſe Committees. Thoſe who aſſiſted were Uſher, Biſhop of Armagh, Morton, Biſhop of Durham, Hall, Biſhop of Exeter, Dr. Samuel Ward, Dr. John Prideaux, Dr. William Twiſſe, Dr. Robert Sanderſon, Dr. Daniel Featlye, Dr. Ralph Brownrig, Dr. Richard Holdiſworth, Dr. John Hacket, Dr. Cornelius Burges, John White, Stephen Marſhal, Edmund Calamy, and Thomas Hill. Theſe Prelates and Divines met in the Jeruſalem Chamber at the Dean of Weſtminſter's, and ſpent ſix Days in Debate. The greateſt Part of the Company being Calviniſts, either in Doctrine or Diſcipline, 'tis no wonder to find them remonſtrate againſt the Management of Church Matters.

Fuller's Church Hiſt. Book II.

Some complain'd that all the Tenets of the Council of Trent had been preach'd and printed, excepting ſome Points of State-Popery, where the King's Supremacy was touch'd, and the Statutes made the Doctrine Treaſon. Amongſt theſe pretended Heterodoxies, (for certainly all of them were not ſo) they inſtanc'd in the affirming the Significancy of good Works towards Juſtification; private Confeſſion, by a particular Recital of the Penitent's Sins; and that this was a neceſſary Condition: That the Oblation of the Conſecrated Elements is a true Sacrifice. That Prayers for the Dead and Monaſtick Vows are defenſible: And to ſwell the Charge, they added the holding the five Points, the Arminian Way, with ſome Advances towards Socinianiſm.

(2*dly*), They enquir'd into ſome Exceſſes, as they call them, and Innovations in Diſcipline. Amongſt theſe Grievances, they reckon'd ſetting Candleſticks in Pariſh Churches upon the Altar in the Day-time; making Canopies over the Communion-Table, with Traverſes of Curtains before it. This ſome of theſe ſcrupulous Divines blam'd as an Imitation of the Veil of the Temple: They likewiſe objected againſt the Credenda, or Side-Table, where the Bread was plac'd before it was brought for Conſecration to the Communion-Table. The enjoining the Canonical Prayer was another Exception; to which they added the carrying newly baptiz'd Children to the Altar, and preſenting them there to God Almighty.

(3.) They conſulted about reforming the Common-Prayer Book: And here the Debate was, whether ſome Legendary, and ſome queſtionable Saints, with ſome ſuperſtitious Remains, were not to be thrown out of the Calendar? Whether it was not proper the Leſſons ſhould not all be taken from Canonical Scripture? Whether the Epiſtles, Goſpels, Pſalms and Hymns, were not to be read in the New Tranſlation? Whether Times prohibited for Marriage were to be continued? Whether it was not adviſeable to make an Order that none for the future ſhould have a Licence, or their Banns publiſhed, unleſs they brought a Certificate from the Miniſter that they underſtood their Catechiſm? And whether the Rubrick was not to be alter'd and explain'd in ſeveral Particulars? And laſtly, they began to enter upon a Regulation of Eccleſiaſtical Government: But this was dropt, becauſe the Biſhop of Lincoln had made ſome Progreſs upon this Head, and promiſed to bring in a Scheme when more at Leiſure. This Conſultation held on to the middle of May, when the Bill againſt Deans and Chapters occaſion'd a Miſunderſtanding amongſt the Divines, and broke the Meeting.

The Earl of Strafford's Tryal.

January 30*th.* Ann. Dom. 1640-41.

The Earl of Strafford's Tryal is the next remarkable Occurent: And notwithſtanding the Main of this Narrative may be the Buſineſs of a State-Hiſtorian; yet ſome Part of it concerns the Church, and therefore muſt not be unmentioned. An Impeachment of High Treaſon branch'd into Twenty-eight Articles, was drawn up by the Houſe of Commons, and carried by Pym to the Upper Houſe: To go on with the Charge more effectually, 'twas voted by the Temporal Lords that no Biſhops ſhould be of the Committee for inſpecting Materials, taking Depoſitions, and forming the Preparation for the Tryal: This being a Cauſe of Blood, 'twas ſuggeſted, the Biſhops were barr'd by the Canons from having any Share in it.

The Entireneſs of the Biſhop's Peerage.

That the Biſhop's Peerage is entire no leſs than that of the Temporal Nobility, I have already prov'd in my former Volume, from the Hiſtory of Becket, Stratford, and Arundel, Archbiſhops of Canterbury. (x) And in Arundel's Caſe the Biſhops were allow'd their Lay-Proxy to ſit with the Temporal Lords, and give Sentence upon the Archbiſhop. There are ſeveral other Inſtances of this kind upon the Parliament Rolls, in the Reigns of Edward the Third, Henry the Fifth, Henry the Sixth, and the preſent Reign; where the Biſhops are join'd with the Temporal Barons, either in Preparatory Committees, or giving Judgment in Caſes of Treaſon. (y)

To proceed to the Earl's Tryal at Weſtminſter-Hall; where I ſhall only mention that Part of the Charge which relates to the Church.

The 9th Article ſets forth, "That aſſuming to "himſelf a Power above and againſt Law, he "gave a General Warrant, impowering the Lord "Biſhop of Down, and Connor's Chancellor, and "under Officers, to attach and arreſt the meaner "Sort, who after Citation ſhould refuſe either "to appear before them, or ſubmit to the Order "and Decrees of their Courts. To this the Earl reply'd, That ſuch Authorities had been uſually granted to the Biſhops in Ireland by former Deputies: That however, being not fully ſatisfied with the Convenience of this Way of proceeding, he ſeldom granted any ſuch Warrants; but receiving Information that ſeveral in the Dioceſs of Down were ſomewhat refractory, he aſſiſted that Biſhop in this Manner: But hearing of ſome Diſorders in the Execution he recall'd his Warrants.

The Earl makes a ſignificant Defence.

In the Nineteenth Article the Earl is charg'd with framing a new and unuſual Oath in Favour of Arbitrary Government: That this Oath was preſs'd upon the Scotch Planters in Ireland; that thoſe who took it were bound not only to acknowledge his Majeſties Supremacy, but to own the Lawfulneſs of the Ceremonies and Government of the Iriſh Church.

To this the Earl reply'd, That the Oath was not compulſively put upon the Iriſh Scots, but drawn up in Complyance with their own expreſs Petition; that this Petition is mentioned in the Proclamation as the leading Motive; that the ſame Oath was enjoin'd not long after by the Engliſh Privy Council; and that he had a Letter under his Majeſties Hand for making it a Teſt of Loyalty. Laſtly, 'twas urg'd againſt the Earl of Strafford, that he had prefer'd Popiſh and Infamous Perſons as the Biſhop of Waterford, and others, to the higheſt Places in the Church of Ireland. To this the Earl's Anſwer was, That he never prefer'd any but thoſe he believ'd Honeſt and Conſcientious Perſons; that he could not inſure Peoples Manners, nor propheſy upon their future Behaviour: And as for the Biſhop of Waterford, he had already ſatisfied the Law. *

The Article which lay hardeſt upon the Earl was his adviſing the King, as 'twas pretended, to bring over the Iriſh Army to reduce this Kingdom to Obedience: Theſe Words were ſaid to be ſpoken at the Council-Board when the Diſſolution of the laſt Parliament was reſolv'd: Sir Henry Vane was the Evidence, who being Secretary of State, had taken ſome imperfect Notes of what paſs'd upon that Occaſion: For diſabling this Teſtimony, I ſhall wave the Earl's Defence, and only report part of the Lord Digby's Speech in the Houſe of Commons. This Lord, when the Bill of Attainder was debating, declared that Secretary Vane was thrice examined upon Oath by the preparatory Committee. That at his firſt and ſecond Examinations, made at ſome diſtance of Time, when the Article concerning the Iriſh Army was put to him, he gave this poſitive Anſwer, I can't charge him with that, I can ſay nothing to that.

The Lord Digby goes on, and obſerves, That the Juncto, that is, the Cabinett, denying they heard the Lord Strafford ſay any ſuch Thing, 'twas thought fit, after ſeveral Weeks Interval, to examine the Secretary once more. And now he recollected himſelf to Purpoſe, and depos'd that Strafford ſuggeſted the King might employ the Iriſh Army to reduce this Kingdom, or Words to that Effect.

But this is but a ſingle Evidence, contradicted by the reſt of the Cabinet; and which is more, by this Secretary himſelf, who had twice depos'd upon Oath he knew nothing of the Matter.

The Lord Digby, tho' one of the Committee for preparing Matter, and managing the Tryal againſt the Earl, was ſo affected with the Diſproof of this grand Article, that he ſolemnly waſh'd his Hands of Strafford's Blood, and refus'd to concur with the Bill. *

As to the whole Charge, the Earl made a very handſome Defence, and behav'd himſelf to all imaginable Advantage. To give this Part of his Character in Whitlock's Words, who was one of the Managers againſt him. Certainly (ſays this Gentleman) never any Man acted ſuch a Part on ſuch a Theatre with more Wiſdom, Conſtancy, and Eloquence, with greater Reaſon, Judgment and Temper, and with a better Grace in all his Words and Geſtures, than this Great and Excellent Perſon did. (y)

In ſhort, The Commons diſtruſting the Force of their Evidence, and being apprehenſive the Earl would be acquitted by his Peers, chang'd their Battery, and proceeded by way of Attainder; 'twas thought none of the Crimes mark'd for Treaſon by the Law could be prov'd upon him. He is proceeded againſt by Bill of Attainder.

The Biſhops move to be excuſed voting at his Tryal.

ſecutions for Treaſon are grounded, has this Clauſe, "That becauſe ſome Species of Treaſon might then be forgotten, the Juſtices, before they proceeded to give Judgment, ſhould bring doubtful and ſuppos'd Treaſons before the King and his Parliament, where the Matter was to be decided, whether the Crime was Treaſon, or not? This Clauſe was thought ſerviceable to the preſent Purpoſe, and might give a Colour to the Bill of Attainder: And now, amongſt other Things, 'twas debated, whether the Biſhops were to vote upon the Bill. This gave Occaſion to a great many bitter Invectives, and perſonal Reflections upon that Order; not without the Intermixture of Threatning, in caſe the Spiritual Lords ſhould inſiſt on their Right of being an Eſſential Part of the Legiſlature. However, the Temporal Peers were ſav'd the Trouble of declaring themſelves further upon the Point; for Biſhop Williams ſtood up, and mov'd in Behalf of himſelf and his Brethren, "That they might be excus'd being preſent at the Tryal; and that ſince they were Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, they might not be concern'd in Matters of Blood. Theſe, and ſuch other reſembling Reaſons, were ſuggeſted by Williams: Which, as the Lord Clarendon judiciouſly obſerves, are of no great Weight. This Prelate finding the Commons very deſirous of being diſincumber'd from the Biſhop's Votes, apply'd ſtrongly to their Fears, endeavoured to terrify them with what they might ſuffer for making the late Canons, and never left ſolliciting till he had prevail'd with them to remove the Diſfavour of the Parliament, by requeſting to be excus'd, before an Order was paſt for their Abſence at the Tryal: The Biſhops waving their Right thus unſeaſonably, and abandoning the Earl, who had deſerv'd ſo well of the Church, was look'd on as an Exceſs of Caution; and probably made ſome of the Temporal Lords leſs ſollicitous in appearing for them, when their own Privileges were further queſtioned, and themſelves ſtood in need of a Defence. The Parliament and Court inſulted by the Rabble.

L'Eſtrange.

In ſhort, the Bill paſs'd with the Commons, but found more Oppoſition in the Upper Houſe: However, the Mob being countenanc'd by the Earl of Strafford's Enemies, came down to the Parliament Houſe in formidable Numbers, inſulted the Lords, by crying Juſtice, Juſtice; and thus either frighted them from the Houſe, or over-aw'd the Majority into a Complyance: The King continuing firm againſt paſſing the Bill; the Rabble came down to White-Hall, repeated their Inſolent Clamour, and menac'd higher than before. The Privy Council and Judges being call'd to ſuggeſt an Expedient for ſuppreſſing this Treaſonable Riot, ſeem'd low in their Spirits, and gave very myſterious Advice; they told the King there was no other Way for preſerving himſelf and his Family, but by paſſing the Attainder: That the Neceſſity of the Caſe ought to over-rule all other Conſiderations: That his Majeſty was oblig'd to be more tender of the Publick Safety, than of any one Perſon, how innocent ſoever. *

* See 13, 14 Car. 2. cap. 29. where this Attainder is repeal'd.

The King reply'd, That the Complyance propos'd was directly contrary to his Conſcience, and therefore, to make his Majeſty eaſy, they deſired him to conſult the Biſhops: The Biſhops of London, Durham, and Carliſle; Williams, Archbiſhop of York, and Uſher, Primate of Ireland, were ſent for upon this Occaſion: In order to reſolve the Caſe, they ſtate the Queſtion to the King in theſe Words; Whether, as his Majeſty refers his own Judgment to his Judges (in whoſe Perſon they act) in Courts of Oyer and Terminer, King's-Bench, Aſſize, and in Cauſes of Life and Death, and it lies on them, if an innocent Man ſuffer; ſo why may not his Majeſty ſatisfy his Conſcience in the preſent Matter, that ſince Competent Judges in Law had awarded, that they found Guilt of Treaſon in the Earl, that he may ſuffer that Judgment to ſtand, tho' in his private Mind he was not ſatisfied the Earl of Strafford was ſo deeply Criminal, and let the Blame lie upon them who were the Earl's Judges.

The King not ſatisfied with the Bill, puts the Caſe to the Biſhops.

Four of theſe Biſhops, Uſher, Williams, Morton and Potter, declared for the Affirmative Side of the Queſtion; as Biſhop Hacket reports from the Mouth of Three of them. (b)

(b) Biſhop Hacket's Life of Archbiſhop Williams, Part 2d. pag. 161.

Another conſiderable Hiſtorian relates, That the Queſtion being put to the Biſhops, whether the King might lawfully paſs the Bill? They anſwer'd, That his Majeſty was to diſtinguiſh between Matter of Fact and Law: As to the firſt, his Majeſty's being preſent at the whole Tryal might qualify him to pronounce, whether the Articles of Impeachment were prov'd home, or not? And in caſe he believ'd the Evidence came ſhort, he would be oblig'd in Conſcience not to ſign the Bill. As to Matter of Law, whether any of the Articles amounted to Treaſon, or not? The Judges, they ſaid, were oblig'd by their Oaths to inform his Majeſty. (c)

(c) L'Eſtrange's Hiſt. King Charles, pag. 265.

There was a Writing indeed, as this Hiſtorian continues, put into the King's Hand by Archbiſhop Williams, but with the Contents of this Paper the other Biſhops were not acquainted: But that this Paper related to a foreign Subject, and was charg'd with no unfriendly Advice againſt the Earl of Strafford, is affirm'd by an Hiſtorian, who had it from Archbiſhop Williams himſelf. (d) To mention the Contents, the Paper Williams put into the King's Hand was a Diſſuaſive againſt paſſing the Bill for continuing the Seſſion during the Pleaſure of both Houſes: This was admirable Advice, and had it been taken, might probably have prevented the Rebellion.

Lord Clarendon's Hiſt. of the Rebellion.

The Lord Clarendon, who, one would think, could not be better inform'd than the Hiſtorian laſt mentioned, makes a lamentable Caſuiſt of Archbiſhop Williams: He reports this Prelate told the King, "There was a Private and a Publick Conſcience; that his publick Conſcience, as a King, might not only diſpenſe with, but oblige him to do that which was againſt his Private Conſcience as a Man; and that the Queſtion was not, whether he ſhould ſave the Earl of Strafford, but whether he ſhould periſh with him? That the Conſcience of a King to preſerve his Kingdom, the Conſcience of a Huſband to preſerve his Wife, the Conſcience of a Father to preſerve his Children, (all which were now in Danger) weigh'd down abundantly all the Conſiderations the Conſcience of a Maſter or a Friend could ſuggeſt to him, for the Preſervation of a Friend or a Servant.

But to leave this Matter with the Reader, the Biſhop's Opinion, as far as it appears, was founded upon the Reſolution of the Judges; who being conſulted by the King, had declared the Earl of Strafford guilty of High Treaſon upon the whole Matter: But being preſs'd to juſtify their Opinion by Statutes, and Authorities of Law, they declin'd producing their Proof. (e)

The Earl of Strafford's Letter to the King.

Notwithſtanding theſe Motives, the King could not prevail with himſelf to paſs this Bill: To ſet his Majeſty's Conſcience at Liberty, the Earl very generouſly wrote him a Letter to perſwade his Complyance; and amongſt other Things, declares himſelf willing to reſign his Life rather than keep up a Miſunderſtanding between the King and his Subjects: Upon this the King gives a Commiſſion to the Lord Privy Seal, the Lord Chamberlain, and ſeveral others, to paſs the Attainder; and at the ſame Time the King ſign'd another deſtructive Act for continuing the Seſſion as long as the Two Houſes ſhould think fit: And thus the Parliament had ſome Colour, tho' not any Law, to puſh Things to an Extremity, and levy Men and Money againſt the Government. Had not this Act been paſs'd, the King might have ſcatter'd ter'd them at Diſcretion; and in caſe they had been ſo hardy as to have ſat after a Diſſolution, they would have wanted a Varniſh to cover their coarſe Complexion, and the Revolt would have been more legible and unconteſted.

The Earl of Strafford being to ſuffer the next Day, deſir'd to ſpeak with the Archbiſhop of Canterbury: The Lieutenant of the Tower told him that Matter was impracticable without an Order from the Parliament. Upon this the Earl told Primate Uſher, then with him, what he intended to have ſaid in caſe the Liberty had been granted: “My Lord, ſays he, pray deſire the Archbiſhop to aſſiſt me with his Prayers to Night, and give me his Bleſſing when I go abroad to Morrow; and deſire him to be in his Window, that I may thank him for this, and all his former Favours. The Primate immediately delivering the Meſſage, the Archbiſhop reply'd, That he ſhould not fail ſerving the Earl in the firſt Part of his Requeſt, but was afraid his Infirmity and Concern would put him out of Condition to take his laſt Leave of his Lordſhip: However, the next Morning, when the Earl came by, the Archbiſhop appear'd at the Window; the Earl making a low Reverence, ſaid my Lord, Your Prayers and your Bleſſing: The Archbiſhop lifting up his Hands gave him both; but being immediately overſet with Grief and Tenderneſs, ſwoon'd, and fell down: The Earl bowing again, took his Leave; and ſaid, my Lord, God protect your Innocency. The Archbiſhop quickly recovering himſelf, and imagining this Behaviour might be interpreted to want of Fortitude, told the Company, that when his own Execution came on, he hop'd God would enable him to manage himſelf with more Firmneſs and Unconcern.

L'Eſtrange's Hiſt. of King Charles I.

His Execution.

The Earl of Strafford went on to the Scaffold, and behav'd himſelf with all imaginable Marks of Reſignation and Courage: The Lieutenant of the Tower deſiring him to take Coach, for fear the Mob ſhould ruſh in, if he walk'd, and pull him in Pieces: He told him no, he was not afraid to look Death in the Face, and the People too. Have you a Care, ſaith the Earl, I don't eſcape; and whether I die by the Hand of the Executioner, or the Fury of the People, is to me perfectly indifferent.

In his Speech upon the Scaffold he declar'd, that through the whole Courſe of his Employments his Intention was always to promote the Joint-Intereſt of the King and his Subjects: That he was ſo far from being an Enemy to Parliaments, as has been charg'd upon him, that he thought the Engliſh Government the happieſt Conſtitution upon this Score; and that Parliaments were the beſt Humane Means for the Proſperity of King and People. That in the Intentions and Purpoſes of his Heart, he was not guilty of what he dy'd for, and pray'd God would forgive thoſe who contriv'd his Death. That he dy'd a True Son of the Church of England, and pray'd for the Peace and Proſperity of it. Then turning to his Brother, Sir George Wentworth, he deſired him to charge his Son to continue in the ſame Communion, and never ſeize any Part of the Churches Patrimony, for that would prove a Cancre to his Eſtate. And Character.

This Nobleman was a Perſon of extraordinary Natural Parts, improv'd by Buſineſs and Education: He had a lively and penetrating Genius; his Thought reach'd a great way, and his Manner of delivering himſelf was clear and moving: He was without Queſtion an accompliſh'd Stateſman; and as he was happy at the deſigning Part, ſo he wanted no Courage to go through, and execute: And as for Loyalty and Affection to the King, no Man poſſeſs'd that Quality in a higher Degree: Neither was he only thus well furniſh'd for the Publick Service; but his private Life was likewiſe regular and unblemiſh'd; but in ſhort he was undone by his Zeal for his Maſter, and the Weight of his Merit ſunk him: Had his Advice been taken, the Scottiſh Invaſion muſt in all likelyhood have miſcarried: This made the Covenanters implacable, and never give over till they had proſecuted to the Scaffold: Had he been falſe or indifferent to the Crown, thoſe few Inequalities of his Government would probably have been over-look'd, and he might have lived to the end of his Conſtitution; but he was too great a Terror to Rebellion to be endured at this Juncture.

About a Week before this Nobleman ſuffer'd, the Houſe of Commons took an Oath, call'd the Proteſtation, part of it runs thus.

> “I A. B. do in the Preſence of Almighty God, promiſe, vow, and proteſt to maintain and defend as far as lawfully I may, with my Life, Power and Eſtate, the True Reformed Proteſtant Religion expreſs'd in the Doctrine of the Church of England, againſt all Popery and Popiſh Innovation within this Realm, contrary to the ſaid Doctrine; and according to the Duty of mine Allegiance, I will maintain and defend his Majeſty's Royal Perſon, Honour and Eſtate.

This Proteſtation had a Meaning in Reſerve, not friendly to the Church of Eugland, as will appear by and by.

Ruſhworth, Part 3*d. pag.* 241.

To proceed; A Deſign was now forming in the Parliament for lopping the Revenues of the Church, and ſuppreſſing the Deanries and Chapters. The Churchmen endeavouring to break this Project, ordered one in each Cathedral to come up, and ſollicit their Friends in either Houſe: They drew a Petition to the Lords and Commons, but 'twas never preſented: They likewiſe retain'd Council, and inſtructed them with Heads to plead on. But being inform'd the Houſe would not allow them the Benefit of the Long Robe; and that if they had any Thing to ſuggeſt, they muſt appear, and plead their own Cauſe; the Matter ſtanding thus, they made Choice of Dr. John Hacket, Prebendary of Paul's, and Archdeacon of Bedford, for their Council: This Gentleman being admitted to the Bar of the Houſe of Commons, made an Argument to the following Effect.

“He began with craving a favourable Conſtruction in regard of the double Diſadvantage he lay under. Firſt, Upon the Score of his being ſtreightned in Time, the Buſineſs being put upon him but the Afternoon before. And Secondly, Becauſe he had no certain Information of what was objected againſt Deans and Chapters: That he had only heard a flying Report of their Inſignificancy; that he ſhould endeavour to diſprove this Charge under Two Heads, that is, with reſpect to Things and Perſons.

To make good the firſt Point, he obſerv'd, that to ſupply the Defects of private Prayer, 'twas fit Devotion ſhould be publickly perform'd in ſome Place of Diſtinction: and that this, in Imitation of Primitive Practice, was conſtantly done in Cathedrals. And whereas ſome complain'd the Exquiſiteneſs of the Muſick made the Service offenſive, and that the Sprightlineſs and Bending of the Notes took too much hold of the Imagination; to this he anſwer'd, That himſelf, and the reſt of his Brethren, wiſh'd the Entertainment might be reform'd, and made leſs affecting. And here he dilated in Commendation of Church Muſick, when well ſuited to the Solemnity of the Occaſion.

Dr. Hacket's Speech before the Houſe of Commons in Behalf of Deans and Chapters.

From hence he went on to ſhew the Benefit of preaching in Cathedrals: That the Statutes of moſt of theſe Mother Churches requir'd Sermons on the Week-days; and that this Practice had been the Cuſtom ever ſince the Reformation.

He urg'd how ſerviceable the Cathedrals appear'd for the Advancement of Learning; that of each of them were a ſort of Univerſity in Little; that here People were train'd up to Controverſy, and furniſh'd with Abilities to defend the Church: And he offered to produce a Liſt of thoſe Dignitaries who had ſignaliz'd themſelves this way. That the taking away theſe Encouragements would diſſerve the Commonwealth of Learning, and diſhearten young Students: That the bare Proſpect of this Misfortune had occaſioned ſlender Admiſſions in the Univerſities already, and ſtruck a Damp into the Bookſellers Buſineſs. And laſtly, he took Notice there was ſomething Remarkable in the Buildings themſelves, and that Cathedrals were the moſt Ancient Monuments of Chriſtianity.

From Things he paſs'd on to Perſons, and obſerv'd, that the Maintenance of many Thouſand Perſons depended upon this Eſtabliſhment; that all theſe, by the Diſſolution of Deanries and Chapters, muſt be reduc'd to ſtarving. His next Inſtance was how much the Tenants to Deans and Chapters would ſuffer by ſuch Alienations: And that theſe Men being ſenſible of the Advantage of their Tenures, had petitioned the Houſe that their old Landlords might be continued. Laſtly, he ſuggeſted, that the Towns where theſe Cathedrals ſtood being many of them but ſlenderly furniſh'd with Trade, were enrich'd by the Hoſpitality of the Clergy, and the frequent Reſort of Strangers.

From hence he proceeded to urge, that the Endowments of Deanries and Chapters were a handſome Proviſion for many younger Brothers, and encouraged to Induſtry and Learning.

And ſince 'twas remark'd by Travellers, that all Degrees of the Engliſh Laity liv'd more to Plenty and Faſhion than in other Countries, he hop'd the Clergy might be allow'd a Share in the common Advantage; and not be diſtinguiſh'd in Poverty and Diſregard, and be made like Jeroboham's Prieſts, the loweſt of the People.

That the bigotted Papiſts would be much pleas'd to ſee the Church of England thus disfurniſh'd; and that Saunders himſelf ſeems to complain, that Queen Elizabeth had left theſe Cathedral-Promotions ſtanding in the Reformation.

De Schiſmat. Anglic.

From hence he advanced to ſhew, that the Lands belonging to theſe Foundations were particularly ſerviceable to the Publick: And that their Firſt Fruits, Tenths and Subſidies, exceeded the Proportion of other Eſtates. And that in Caſe they were called upon, they were ready to contribute to the Neceſſities of the State, and aſſiſt their Country in an extraordinary Manner.

And to conclude; he put them in Mind that the Intereſt of Religion, and the Honour of God, was deeply concerned in the Subject before them: That thoſe Structures, and Eſtates, were a Sort of Homage paid to Heaven, and conſecrated to Divine Worſhip. And that for this Reaſon they were guarded againſt Alienation, with moſt dreadful Imprecations. He obſerved, that the Cenſers of Korah and his Faction, were declared Hallowed, and made Plates for the Altar, becauſe they had been employed in God's Service: Neither was the Wickedneſs of the Men a ſufficient Reaſon for bringing what they had conſecrated, to common Uſe. And that this was no Levitical Particularity might be collected from the Text in the Proverbs; That 'tis a Snare to the Man who devours that which is Holy *. To this he added that remarkable Queſtion put by St. Paul †; Thou that abhorreſt Idols, doſt thou commit Sacrilege? He concluded, that nothing but Ignorance could be expected from withdrawing the Encouragements of Learning, and that Ignorance would carry us to Profaneneſs and Confuſion.

This Speech being thus Significant in the Senſe, and handſomely delivered, made an Impreſſion upon the Houſe; inſomuch, that had the Alienation of thoſe Lands been then put to the Queſtion, 'tis thought it would have gone in the Negative by a Majority of an Hundred and twenty (g).

In the Afternoon, Dr. Cornelius Burges appeared at the Bar of the Houſe of Commons for the Puritan-Party, and made a violent Invective againſt Deans and Chapters, endeavoured to ſet forth the Unprofitableneſs of their Corporations, and dilated upon the Immorality of thoſe who ſung in the Choirs. But notwithſtanding all this Satyr, he declared himſelf ſtrongly againſt alienating theſe Endowments to Secular Uſe, and private Advantage.

A Petition to the ſame Senſe in Favour of Deans and Chapters was preſented to the Parliament by both Univerſities.

Dr. Hacket's Argument being ſupported by Addreſſes from the Univerſities, there was a warm Debate in the Houſe; The Epiſcopal Party, alledging, that by the late Proteſtation, they had engaged themſelves to defend the Church, as by Law eſtabliſhed. This Motion brought the Houſe to a further Explanation of the Proteſtation: And the Point being put to the Queſtion, 'twas carried by a conſiderable Majority, that by theſe Words, the true Reformed Proteſtant Religion expreſſed in the Doctrine of the Church of England againſt Popery, and Popiſh Innovations in this Realm; by theſe Words the Houſe declared, "that they only intended to comprehend "the publick Doctrine profeſſed in the ſaid Church: "And that the ſaid Words are not to be extended "to any Form of Worſhip, Diſcipline or Government, nor of Rites or Ceremonies *.

To proceed: A Bill brought up from the Commons to the Lords againſt Biſhops and Clergymen, which conſiſting of ſeveral Branches, was voted by Parts. The Branches were, (1.) That they ſhould have no Votes in Parliament, (2.) That they ſhou'd not be in Commiſſion of the Peace, nor Judges in Temporal Courts. (3.) That they ſhould neither ſit in the Star-Chamber, or be Privy-Counſellors. Williams, Archbiſhop of York, made a long and learned Speech againſt all the Parts of this Bill; particularly, as to the latter Heads, he endeavoured to prove the Clergy's being concerned in Temporal Affairs, was both lawful and ſerviceable to the Publick, and ſupported his Argument with good Reaſoning and Authority. But having had Occaſion to treat this Subject in both the Volumes of this Hiſtory, I ſhall omit the Archbiſhop's Diſcourſe: The Reader, if he pleaſes, may ſee the Abſtract of it in another Performance (h).

(h) Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary, Article Williams.

However the Viſcount Newark's † two Speeches in the Houſe upon this Occaſion muſt not be altogether unmentioned.

* This Viſcount was afterwards Earl of Kingſton.

May 21. May 24.

In his firſt Speech this Noble Lord argues againſt the Biſhops being deprived of their Votes in Parliament.

The Viſcount Newark's Speech in Defence of the Biſhops and Clergy.

"In the firſt Place he takes Notice of their be-"ing poſſeſſed of this Privilege for many Hundred "Years. He does not think their aſſiſting in Parlia-"ment any Inconſiſtency with their Office; but "that they have Time enough to ſerve their Coun-"try in the Legiſlature, and diſcharge their Spiri-"tual Employments: And for this he appeals to "Experience.

"From hence he proceeds to the ill Conſequences "of the Bill: He conceives Dangers and Inconve-"niences are beſt prevented at a Diſtance: That "this Precedent, though it ſtrikes directly upon the "Biſhops, may reach the Temporal Lords at the "Rebound. For what Right and Dignity is ſecure, "if bare Affirmation paſſes for Proof? And what "Lord can be aſſured of continuing a Member of “ the Houſe, when ſix and twenty are thus unexpectedly ſtruck off together.

“ He deſires their Lordſhips to recollect in what Condition of Diſadvantage the Biſhops muſt be left, if the Bill paſſes? The meaneſt Commoner is repreſented in the Lower Houſe, but the Biſhops will be thrown out of this common Benefit. Now what Juſtice can tie them to the keeping thoſe Laws, to the making of which they never gave any Conſent?

“ He deſires their Lordſhips to conſider, that by proceeding in this Manner the Church muſt ſuffer in her principal Members, and loſe the Honour ſhe has enjoy'd for ſo many Ages through all Chriſtendom: And that even the Heathen, whether poliſh'd or barbarous, have always paid a great Regard to Religion; ſo that this Univerſal Practice ſeems founded upon the Principles of common Reaſon, and Nature it ſelf.

His ſecond Speech refers to that Part of the Bill which ſtrikes out the Clergy from intermeddling with Temporal Affairs. And here his Lordſhip obſerves, “ That the Lawfulneſs of the Clergy's concerning themſelves this way, is plainly aſſerted in the Bill: For the Univerſities, and ſuch Perſons as ſhall have Honour deſcend upon them, are excepted in this Reſtraint. Now Circumſtances and Chance can't alter the Nature of Things, nor weaken the Force of an Univerſal Propoſition. He takes it for granted, that by the Engliſh Conſtitution the Biſhops and Clergy have a Right to engage in Secular Buſineſs. And, ſecondly, that the Law of God at the loweſt, leaves this Matter at Liberty. From hence he goes on to argue briefly from Four Topicks. (1.) He conſiders the Clergy only as Men: (2.) As Parts of the Commonwealth. (3.) He reaſons from the beſt Manner of the Legiſlature: And laſtly, From the Practice of all Times and Religions.

“ Under the firſt Head his Lordſhip conceives, that thoſe who were fartheſt improv'd, are beſt qualify'd for publick Service. For Knowledge and Conſcience often go together; whereas Ignorance has ſeldom any Force of Principle, or any Thing for Precept to take hold of. Now why ſhould we throw People out of that Capacity they are bred and born to, and bar them an Employment they are ſo well prepar'd for?

“ The Body Politick, as he continues, has ſome Reſemblance to the Body Natural; every Part contributes ſomething to the Benefit of the whole. Now to be Part of a Body, and perform no Function, is to ſerve to no Purpoſe. To make this Reaſoning bear, he argues, that the Commonwealth ſubſiſts by the Legiſlative and the executing Part: Thoſe therefore who have neither Head in the Making, nor Hand in the Executing the Laws, can be look'd upon as no better than Perſons inſignificant to the Conſtitution.

This Lord having repeated ſomewhat in his former Speech, proceeds to anſwer Objections.

“ 1ſt. As to the Text, That no man that wars entangleth himſelf with the Affairs of this Life. This makes nothing againſt the Clergy, except it can be prov'd, that Medling and Entangling are Words of the ſame Force and Meaning. Beſides, though the Apoſtle writes to an Eccleſiaſtick, the Advice reaches the Laity no leſs than the Clergy, as is unanimouſly agreed by the beſt Expoſitors.

2 Tim. 2.

2. 'Twas by ſome objected, That Engaging in Temporal Affairs, was inconſiſtent with the Spirtual Office. To this his Lordſhip replies, “ That Grace in many Caſes agrees with Nature, carries it to an higher Improvement, and fits it for thoſe great Functions of Providence, making Laws, and doing Juſtice: 'Tis plain therefore, there is nothing reſulting from a ſolemn Character which can any way diſable a Man from theſe Things.

But notwithſtanding there is no ſtrict Inconſiſtency, 'tis poſſible ſuch Engagements may be a Clog upon a holy Calling. To be better prepar'd for this Objection, “ He declares ſtrongly for Preaching; But thinks there is not the ſame Neceſſity for ſuch Inſtruction as there was in the Primitive Times: For God forbid that Sixteen hundred Years of Chriſtianity ſhould make us no better acquainted with the Goſpel. He obſerves further, that the Buſineſs of a Churchman does not conſiſt wholly in Preaching; that they are not altogether without Leiſure for ſerving the Publick; that the Biſhops are ſeldom call'd to Parliament above once in three Years; and which Way can they be better employ'd than in appearing at ſuch ſolemn Aſſemblies, and promoting the joint Intereſt of Church and State? And here his Lordſhip cites a Teſtimony from Euſebius, That Conſtantine the Great had Biſhops in his Camp, and conſulted them in Military Affairs. (i)

(i) Euſeb. Vit. Conſtant. lib. 4. Cap. 56.

“ And whereas 'tis ſaid, Rewards have a great Streſs in Buſineſs, and that Biſhops may be tempted by ſuch Motives to give their Conſcience a Looſe. Granting all this, does not this Exception come with equal Force againſt the Laity? Are Eccleſiaſticks the only Perſons of flexible Tempers and unguarded Honeſty? Or has the Crown no Honour or Offices for any but the Clergy? To affirm this is wrong in the Fact, and uncharitable in the Suppoſition: If we reaſon this Way, he conceives the Biſhops have the Advantage of the Compariſon: The Knowledge of their Duty, the Solemnity of their Calling, the Gravity of their Age, and their Neighbourhood to the other World, are all Motives to regularity and ſtrict Conduct.

But ſome of them have miſbehav'd themſelves. “ That is no Argument to puniſh the Order. Some of the Judges, ſome of the other Magiſtracy and Officers have fail'd in their Duty, muſt we therefore have no Judges, no inferiour Miniſters of Juſtice, nor any Officers in Camp or Court? The Puniſhment ought not to be ſtretch'd beyond the Crime, nor one Man ſuffer for the Fault of another.

This Speech was not without its Effect in the Houſe, confirm'd the Biſhops Party, and help'd to keep them on their Bench for ſome Time.

The Univerſity perceiving the Cathedrals in Danger, and the Encouragements of Learning ſtruck at, addreſs'd the Parliament upon this Subject. *

A Bill for taking away the High Commiſſion, of which the Puritans had ſo loudly complain'd, was ſent up to the Houſe of Lords, paſs'd there, and was ſoon after ſign'd by the King. By this Statute 'tis enacted, That after the Firſt Day of Auguſt no Archbiſhop, Biſhop, or any Spiritual or Eccleſiaſtical Judge, or any other Perſon exerciſing Spiritual or Eccleſiaſtical Power by any Commiſſion from the King, or by any Power or Authority deriv'd from his Majeſty, his Heirs or Succeſſors, or otherwiſe ſhall award, impoſe, or inflict any Pain, Penalty, Fine, Amerciament, Impriſonment, or other corporal Puniſhment upon any of the King's Subjects, for any Contempt, Miſdemeanour, Crime, Offence, Matter, or Thing whatſoever, belonging to Spiritual or Eccleſiaſtical Cognizance, or Juriſdiction; or ſhall Ex Officio, or at the Inſtance or Promotion of any other Perſon whatſoever urge, inforce, tender, give, or miniſter unto any Churchwarden, Sideman, or other Perſon whatſoever any Corporal Oath, whereby he or ſhe ſhall or may be charged, or obliged to make any Preſentment of any Crime or Offence, or to confeſs or accuſe himſelf or herſelf of any Crime, Offence or Miſdemeanour, or any Neglect, Matter, or Thing whereby, or by Reaſon whereof he or ſhe ſhall or may be liable or expoſed to any Cenſure, Pain, Penalty or Puniſhment whatſoever, upon Pain and Penalty, that whoſoever ſhall offend contrary to this Statute, ſhall forfeit and pay treble Damages to every Perſon thereby grieved, and the Sum of an Hundred Pounds to him or them who ſhall firſt demand or ſue for the ſame.

'Tis likewiſe further enacted, That no new Court ſhall be erected by his Majeſty, his Heirs or Succeſſors, with the like Juriſdiction or Authority as the ſaid High-Commiſſion Court now hath, or pretends to have. (k)

The Court of Star-Chamber was likewiſe put down this Seſſion. (l)

Williams, Archbiſhop of York, brought a Bill into the Upper Houſe for the Regulation of Biſhops and their Juriſdiction. His Scheme takes in Ten Articles.

1. That every Biſhop being in his Dioceſe, and not diſabled by ill Health, ſhould preach once every Sunday, or pay Five Pounds to the Poor, to be levied by the next Juſtice of Peace, and Diſtreſs made by the Conſtable. This had it gone forward, would have been a very humourſom Piece of Reformation, and made the Juſtice, in ſome Meaſure, the Biſhops Metropolitan.

2. That no Biſhop ſhall be Juſtice of Peace, excepting the Dean of Weſtminſter in Weſtminſter and St. Martins. Here the Archbiſhop hedg'd in a little Privilege for himſelf, for he was then Dean of Weſtminſter.

3. That every Biſhop ſhould have twelve Aſſiſtants (beſides the Dean and Chapter) for Juriſdiction and Ordination. Four of theſe twelve were to be choſen by the King, four by the Lords, and four by the Commons. But here the Bill neither tells us whether they ſhould be Clergy or Lay, nor aſſigns them their Buſineſs.

4. That in all Vacancies theſe Aſſiſtants, with the Dean and Chapter, ſhould preſent to the King three of the beſt qualify'd Divines in the Dioceſe, out of which Number his Majeſty was to chuſe one for a Biſhop.

5. That Deans and Prebendaries ſhould be Non-reſident at the Cathedrals but Sixty Days in the Year.

6. That Sermons ſhould be preach'd in theſe Mother-Churches twice every Lord's Day, once every Holy-day, and a Lecture on Wedneſday, with a Salary of an Hundred Marks per Annum.

7. That all Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Collegiate-Churches, &c. ſhall be oblig'd to give a Fourth Part of their Fines and improved Rents, to buy in Impropriations.

8. All double-beneficed Men ſhould pay the Value of half the Living to the Curate.

9. No Appeal ſhould be made to the Court of Arches, or Court of Audience.

Laſtly, 'Twas ſuggeſted in the Bill, That Canons and Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitutions might be drawn up and ſuited to the Laws of the Realm, by Sixteen Learned Perſons; ſix of them to be nominated by the King, five by the Lords, and five by the Commons. By this Article the Clergy in all likelikood wou'd have had none of their own Body to repreſent them in the Spiritual Legiſlature. (m)

(m) Fuller's Church Hiſt. Book XI.

This Bill was drop'd after once Reading. For notwithſtanding the Odneſs of the Scheme, it fell ſhort of Satiſfaction: There was now a deeper Project on Foot; the Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitution was to be diſſolv'd, and the Presbyterian Government ſet in its Place. However, this Deſign was not ſpoken out at preſent, tho' the Commons came pretty near it in their Debates about a new Form of Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, where they agreed, That every Shire ſhould be a ſeveral Dioceſe, a Presbytery of Twelve Divines in each Shire, and a Preſident, as a Biſhop, over them; and he, with Aſſiſtance of ſome of the Presbytery, to ordain, ſuſpend, deprive, degrade and Excommunicate.

Uſher, Primate of Armagh, is ſaid to have offer'd an Expedient for bringing Presbytery and Epiſcopacy towards an Accommodation, and for abating the diſtinguiſhing Character, and Juriſdiction of the latter. The Commons purſuing their Project of Church-Reformation, drew up an Impeachment of Wren Biſhop of Ely, digeſted into Five and twenty Articles: 'Twas carry'd to the Lords by Sir Thomas Widdrinton, who deliver'd it with a Satyrical Speech. The Subſtance of the Articles amounted to no more than that the Biſhop preſs'd Conformity, and exerted the Diſcipline of the Church. But this, at that Time, was enough for the Commons to vote him unworthy and unfit to hold or exerciſe any Office or Dignity in Church or Commonwealth. After this they deſir'd the Lords to concur with them in an Addreſs to the King, that this Prelate might be remov'd from his Place and Service. In ſhort, they carry'd their Point, and Wren was committed to the Tower. The King was now reſolv'd to make a Progreſs into Scotland for quieting the Diſcontents in that Kingdom. Not long after his Majeſty's ſetting forward, the two Houſes adjourn'd to the 20th of October, and ſettled Committees for tranſacting Buſineſs during the Receſs. And here it may not be improper to mention, that notwithſtanding the late Clamours againſt prophaning the Sunday, by the King's Declaration concerning Sports, the two Houſes took the Liberty to ſit, and do Buſineſs upon this Day. (o) About a Week before the King took his Journey, an Impeachment of thirteen Biſhops by Order of the Houſe of Commons was ſent up by Serjeant Wild, and deliver'd at the Bar in the Lords Houſe, with this Introductive Speech.

My Lords,

" The Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes of the Commons Houſe of Parliament being ſenſible of the great Inſelicities and Troubles which the Commonwealth hath ſuſtain'd by the exorbitant Courſes of the Biſhops; and knowing well what the Wiſe Man ſaith, That if Sentence be not ſpeedily executed againſt an evil Work, the Hearts of the Sons of Men are ſet upon further Miſchief; (the timely Redreſs whereof doth better become the Wiſdom of a Parliament, than a too late woful Repentance) have commanded me to repreſent unto your Lordſhips, That Walter Biſhop of Wincheſter, Robert Biſhop of Coventry and Litchfield, Godfrey Biſhop of Glouceſter, Joſeph Biſhop of Exeter, John Biſhop of St. Aſaph, William Biſhop of Bath and Wells, George Biſhop of Hereford, Matthew Biſhop of Ely, William Biſhop of Bangor, Robert Biſhop of Briſtol, John Biſhop of Rocheſter. John Biſhop of Peterborough, Morgan Biſhop of Landaff, together with William Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and others of the Clergy of that Province, at a Convocation or Synod for the ſame Province, begun at London in the Year 1640. did conceive, make, and promulge ſeveral Conſtitutions and Canons Eccleſiaſtical, containing in them divers Matters contrary to the Kings Prerogative, to the Fundamental Laws and Statutes of this Realm, to the Rights of Parliament, to the Property and Liberty of the Subjects, and Matters tending to Sedition, and of dangerous Conſequence.

An Impeachment of thirteen Biſhops of the late Convocation.

" And to add more Weight and Efficacy to this their monſtrous Deſign, they did at the ſame Synod, under a ſpecious and fair Title, grant a Benevolence or Contribution to his Majeſty, to be paid by the Clergy of that Province, contrary to Law. It reſted not there, for tho' this had been enough to have affrighted and terrify'd the King's People with ſtrange Apprehenſions and Fears, yet that theſe might not ſeem to be Contrivances of the Brain, or Fancies only, they were put in Execution, and were executed upon divers with Animoſity and Rigour, to the great Oppreſſion of the Clergy of this Realm, and other his Majeſty's Subjects, and in Contempt of the King, and of the Law.

" Whether thoſe Perſons, my Lords, that are culpable of theſe Offences, ſhall be thought fit to have an Intereſt in the Legiſlative Power, your Lordſhips Wiſdom and Juſtice is able to judge.

" But for theſe Matters and Things, the Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes of the Commons Houſe in Parliament in the Name of themſelves, and of all the Commons of England, do impeach the ſaid Biſhops before-named, of the Crimes and Miſdemeanours before-expreſſed; and do therefore pray that they may be forthwith put to their Anſwers in the Preſence of the Commons, and that ſuch farther Proceedings may be had againſt them, as to Law and Juſtice ſhall appertain. (p) (p) Ruſhworth's Hiſt. Collect. part 3. pag. 359.

The Biſhops impeach'd, deſir'd Time till Michaelmas-Term to put in their Anſwer. This Motion being ſtrongly oppos'd by ſome Temporal Lords, two Queſtions were put: (1.) Whether the Biſhops ſhould ſit in the Houſe, tho' without Voting (to which laſt Reſtraint they conſented themſelves) while the Time for making their Anſwer was debating? (2.) What Time they ſhould be allow'd for making their Defence? The firſt Queſtion was carry'd for them in the Affirmative. And as to the ſecond, they had Time given them to the 10th of November for putting in their Anſwer. The Biſhops made choice of Warner Biſhop of Rocheſter, to ſolicit in the Cauſe. This Prelate retain'd Sergeant Jermin and Mr. Chuite for Council, Jermin refus'd to plead without a Warrant from the Houſe of Commons. The Biſhops thinking the Demand unreaſonable, this Lawyer was laid by; but Chuite was more juſt and generous: For being ask'd by the Temporal Lords, Whether he would plead for the Biſhops? He reply'd, Yes, as long as he had a Tongue to plead with. This Gentleman ſoon after drew up a Demurrer in behalf of the Biſhops, to prove what they had done in the late Convocation, could not amount to a Præmunire. This Defence was ſhew'd to Archbiſhop Williams, and commended for an impregnable Performance. In ſhort, the Strength of the Plea was probably the Reaſon the Proſecution ſlept, and that the Biſhops heard no more of the Impeachment. (a)

The Proſecution of them dropt.

this Hiſtory, ſhall be moſtly unmention'd. However it may not be improper to obſerve, that what was expected would have been pardon'd in an Act of Oblivion, was couch'd in a Form of Juſtification of the Covenanters Misbehaviour: For Inſtance: Their firſt Tumults and erecting their Tables in Oppoſition to the Government; their ſuppreſſing the Juſtice-Court, and the Seſſion, and the Acts and Orders of their Tables, are declar'd to be the Effects of their Duty to his Majeſty, and according to the Law of the Land. And thus all thoſe Loyal Perſons, who had oppos'd theſe Mutineers in Defence of the Government, and ſtood authoriz'd by his Majeſty's Commiſſions, were made Criminals. Theſe Royaliſts were the only Perſons excepted from Pardon, and barr'd the Benefit of the Indemnity.

And as to the Church, the Seditious Acts of that Aſſembly which had expell'd the Biſhops, and the Canonical Clergy, diſown'd their Spiritual Governours being Members of their Body, and affirmed a Power in themſelves to ſtretch the Cenſures of the Church upon the Crown, were declared "to be lawful, and according to the Conſtitution of the Kingdom: That the Government of the Church by Archbiſhops and Biſhops was repugnant to the Word of God: That the Prelates were Enemies to the Propagation of the true Reform'd Proteſtant Religion: And that for this Reaſon their Order was to be ſuppreſs'd, and their Lands given to the King, his Heirs and Succeſſors. (r)

The ſlender Remains of the Churche's Patrimony being veſted in the Crown, the King gave it all away to the Covenanting Party. In ſhort, his Majeſty by abandoning his Friends, and careſſing his Enemies, not only ſunk his Intereſt in that Kingdom, but gave great Encouragement to the Faction in England. The Enemies of the Church now concluded their Buſineſs in a good Condition. And ſince the King had ſign'd an Act in Scotland, that the Church Government by Archbiſhops and Biſhops was againſt the Word of God, they did not queſtion bringing him to the ſame Compliance in his Weſtminſter Parliament.

An Order of the Lords againſt Innovating in Religion.

To mention ſomewhat of their Courage and Expedition in this Affair; And here I am to acquaint the Reader, That about half a Year ſince, the Lords to ſtop the irregular Zeal of ſome over-forward People, publiſh'd "an Order, "That Divine Service ſhould be perform'd as 'tis appointed by the Statutes of this Realm: And that all ſuch as ſhall diſturb that commendable Order, ſhall be ſeverely puniſh'd according to Law: And that the Parſons, Vicars and Curates in their reſpective Pariſhes ſhall forbear introducing any Rites or Ceremonies that may give Offence, otherwiſe than thoſe which are eſtabliſh'd by the Laws of the Land. This Order was made upon the 16th of January laſt; and upon the 9th of September, the Day upon which they adjourn'd, 'twas reſolv'd upon the Queſtion, that the aboveſaid Order ſhould be printed and publiſhed. The Lords deſired the Concurrence of the Commons; but the Lower Houſe thinking the ſtrict Execution of the Laws unſeaſonable, voted their Diſſent to both the Orders; (s) and publiſh'd a ſhort Declaration, in which they gave the Kingdom an Expectation of making a conſiderable Reformation in Matters of Religion.

To be ſomewhat more full upon this Matter: The Commons had lately revived the Debate touching Innovations in the Church, and paſſed ſeveral Votes againſt them. The Lords at the ſame Time repeated their Declaration for the Obſervation of the Common Prayer, without Omiſſion or Alteration. Theſe Votes which look'd like Claſhing, occaſion'd a Conference between both Houſes; at which the Commons deſired their Lordſhips to conſent to the following Declaration. To this the Lords returned no Anſwer; and which further diſguſted the Commons, they reſolved upon the Queſtion, that their Order above-mentioned, on the Sixteenth of January, ſhould be printed and publiſh'd. (t)

1641. The Commons Declaration concerning Innovations in the Ceremonies.

The Commons Declaration to which they deſired the Concurrence of the Upper Houſe, was as follows:

"Whereas divers Innovations in or about the Worſhip of God have been lately practiſed in this Kingdom, by injoyning ſome Things, and prohibiting others without Warrant of Law, to the great Grievance and Diſcontent of his Majeſty's Subjects. For the Suppreſſion of ſuch Innovations, and for Preſervation of publick Peace, it is this Day Order'd by the Commons in Parliament aſſembled, That the Church-Wardens in every Pariſh-Church and Chappel reſpectively do forthwith remove the Communion-Table from the Eaſt End of the Church, Chappel or Chancel into ſome other convenient Place; and that they take away the Rails, and level the Chancels as heretofore they were before the late Innovations.

"That all Crucifixes, Scandalous Pictures of any one or more Perſons, of the Trinity, and all Images of the Virgin Mary, ſhall be taken away and aboliſh'd; and that all Tapers, Candleſticks and Baſons be removed from the Communion-Table.

"That all corporal Bowing at the Name (Jeſus) or towards the Eaſt End of the Church, Chappel, or Chancel, or towards the Communion-Table, be henceforth forborn.

"That the Orders aforeſaid be obſerv'd in all the ſeveral Cathedral Churches of this Kingdom, and all the Collegiate Churches or Chappels in the two Univerſities, or any other Part of the Kingdom; and in the Temple Church, and the Chappels of the other Inns of Court, by the Deans of the ſaid Cathedral Churches, by the Vice-Chancellor of the ſaid Univerſities, and by the Heads and Governors of the ſeveral Colleges and Halls aforeſaid, and by the Benchers and Readers in the ſaid Inns of Court reſpectively.

"That the Lord's Day ſhall be duly obſerv'd and ſanctify'd: All Dancing, or other Sports, either before or after Divine Service, be forborn and reſtrained; and that the Preaching of God's Word be permitted in the Afternoon in the ſeveral Churches and Chappels of this Kingdom, and that Miniſters and Preachers be encouraged thereunto.

"That the Vice-Chancellors of the Univerſities, Heads and Governours of Colleges, all Parſons, Vicars, Churchwardens, do make Certificates of the Performance of theſe Orders: And if the ſame ſhall not be obſerved in any of the Places afore-mentioned, upon Complaint thereof made to the two next Juſtices of Peace, Mayor or Head-Officers of Cities or Towns-Corporate; it is ordered, that the ſaid Juſtices, Mayor, or other Head-Officer reſpectively, ſhall examine the Truth of all ſuch Complaints, and certifie by whoſe Default the ſame are committed: All which Certificates are to be delivered in Parliament, before the thirtieth of October next, 1641.

Thus the Uſages of Antiquity, the Orders of the Biſhops, the Canons of the Church are ſuperſeded, and the Clergy enjoin'd Obedience to this Extraordinary Declaration: One would almoſt have thought ſo peremptory a Deciſion muſt have come from the Apoſtolick Synod at Jeruſalem, or at leaſt, from one of the Four General Councils! But this, after all was no more than an Order of the Lay-Commons, and that without conſulting the Convocation, without the Concurrence of either Lords or Sovereign. In ſhort, theſe Secular Gentlemens interpoſing thus in the Government of the Church, ſerves only to ſapp the Foundation, and ſink the Credit of Religion, gives Libertines a Handle to disbelieve Chriſtianity, and look upon the Creed as a Trick of State-Policy. However, Pym the Chairman of the Committee, ſent down the Declaration into the Country after the Receſs, enjoin'd the Reading it on the Parochial Clergy, and executed the Order with more than Patriarchal Authority.

The Biſhops Extraction miſreported by the Lord Brook.

The Deſign of throwing the Biſhops out of the Houſe of Lords, going on, notwithſtanding the late Diſappointment, 'twas thought fit to batter their Reputation, and try to make them look little in common Eſteem. To this Purpoſe the Lord Brook publiſh'd a Pamphlet againſt the Biſhops, repreſented them as Perſons meanly born, and by their Way of Study altogether unqualified for Barons in Parliament This pretended Diſadvantage of Birth being no better than down-right Calumny, Williams Archbiſhop of York, Morton Biſhop of Durham, Curle Biſhop of Wincheſter, Cook Biſhop of Hereford, and Owen Biſhop of St. Aſaph, proved themſelves Men of Deſcent and wealthy Families. Juxon Biſhop of London had a creditable Education at Oxford and Greys-Inn. And as for the reſt of the Order, they were moſt of them either extracted from Clergymen, or Lay-Gentry: 'Tis plain, therefore Lord Brook's Charge proceeded from unbenevolent Humour; the Diſaffection was remarkable, but altogether wide of Matter of Fact.

Another Argument, the Temporal Lords were contriving to part with the Biſhops, was the treating them with unuſual Neglect in the Parliament Houſe: For Inſtance, they were join'd in Committees with the Temporal Lords in under-proportion'd Numbers: The Clerk of the Parliament, in reading the Bills, turn'd his Back to the Biſhops with uncuſtomary Diſregard; and at their going to Church on a ſolemn Faſt Day, the Temporal Barons gave themſelves Precedency of the Biſhops: This being altogether new, the Lord Spencer, afterwards Earl of Sunderland, made a Remark upon it, Is this, ſays he, a Day of Humiliation wherein we ſhew ſo much Pride in taking Place of thoſe to whom our Anceſtors ever allow'd it? (u)

The Biſhop's Intereſt giving Way in the Upper Houſe, the Commons reſolv'd to puſh the Opportunity: To this Purpoſe Mr. Pym, at a Conference with the Lords, made the following Speech.

October 23d.

Pym's Speech againſt the Biſhops.

My Lords,

" The Parliament, the Fountain of Juſtice, ought to be preſerved pure from Corruption, and be free from Partiality, which will add not only Luſtre, Reputation and Honour, but Authority to what is done in Parliament; all Mens Eſtates and Liberties are preſerv'd under the ſafe Cuſtody of Parliament; this moveth us to be careful of any Thing that may prejudice the Parliament, in Point of Freedom and Integrity.

" Therefore the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes of the Houſe of Commons, have commanded me with my Collegue, to repreſent unto your Lordſhips two Propoſitions, which they hold of very great Importance, and neceſſary to be put in Execution at this Time.

" Firſt, That thoſe thirteen Biſhops which ſtand accuſed before your Lordſhips for making the late Book of Canons, and putting them in Execution, may be excluded from their Votes in Parliament.

" Secondly, That all the Biſhops may be excluded from having any Vote in that Act, come from the Houſe of Commons to your Lordſhips, entituled, An Act to take away the Biſhops Votes in Parliament, &c.

After this Member had gone on ſome Length in declaiming againſt the Biſhops, he was ſeconded by Mr. Sollicitor St. John, who urg'd ſeveral Reaſons and Precedents for excluding the Biſhops voting in the Bill laſt mentioned.

Sollicitor St. John's Argument againſt the Biſhops Peerage, &c.

" Firſt, In regard they have no ſuch inherent Right of aſſiſting in Parliament as the Lords Temporal have, becauſe they don't aſſiſt there as a Repreſentative Body. But this Argument diſables the Temporal Lords no leſs than the Spiritual from ſitting in Parliament; for theſe repreſent no further than their own Perſons.

" Secondly, Mr. Sollicitor argues the Biſhops have not an equal inherent Right of Peerage with the Temporal Lords, becauſe their Power is not of the ſame Extent: For Inſtance, they have no Liberty of voting at the Tryal of a Peer; which Privilege could not be taken away by any Canon, if the Right of it was (as he calls it) inherent.

That the Biſhops Peerage is entire, has been already prov'd, and needs not be repeated. *

" Thirdly, If the Biſhops repreſented the Clergy, and amounted to a Third Eſtate, no Act of Parliament could be good without their Aſſent: To diſprove this he obſerves, the Biſhops, in the Firſt of Queen Elizabeth, diſagreed to the Bill for eſtabliſhing the Common-Prayer; and yet the Statute has always been reckon'd binding.

To this it may be anſwered; Firſt, That by the Cuſtom and Conſtitution of Parliament, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal are reckon'd as one Body in giving their Votes; and therefore the Houſe is always concluded by a Majority, without Regard to any Diſtinction of Character in the Members: As to the reſt of his Argument, I ſhall refer the Reader to what I have already written. (w)

The Biſhops One of the Three Eſtates in Parliament.

Further, That the Biſhops are a Third Eſtate, is evident from the Records of Parliament: To mention ſome of them.

By the Parliament Roll, 1 H. 4. it appears, That King Richard the Second appointed two Proxies to declare his Reſignation of the Crown Coram omnibus Statubus Regni, who theſe Eſtates were appears afterward, when they are call'd, Pares & Proceres Regni Angliæ Spirituales, Et Temporales, Et ejuſdem Regni Communitates omnes Status ejuſdem Regni repreſentantes.

By this Authority, 'tis evident the Biſhops are not only a Third Eſtate, but Peers of the Realm.

Rot. Par. 1. R. 3.

In the Parliament Roll, 1 R. 3. 'tis recorded, that before his Coronation certain Articles were deliver'd to him in the Name of the Three Eſtates of the Realm; that is to ſay, in the Name of the Lords Spiritual, the Lords Temporal, and the Commons. To proceed, 3 H. 6. the Record mentions the Three Eſtates aſſembled in this preſent Parliament: And in explaining the Extent of the Duke of Bedford's Protectoral Power, 'tis ſaid, 'twas adviſ'd and appointed by the Authority of the King, aſſenting the Three Eſtates of this Realm: From whence 'tis plain, the King was not reckon'd one of them. (x)

The 11th H. 6. the Duke of Bedford appear'd in Parliament, and aſſign'd the Reaſon of his coming, Coram Domino Rege. Et tribus Statubus Regni, before the King and the Three Eſtates of the Realm: And in the 23d Year of the ſame Reign, the Parliament Record runs Preſente Domino Rege & tribus Statubus in Preſenti Parliamento Exiſtentibus: And in another Year, Domino Rege & Tribus Regni Statubus in Pleno Parliamento Comparentibus. (y) To go backward to one Inſtance in the firſt Year of this Reign, the Queen Dowager in her Petition mentioning an Order of Parliament, made 9 H. 5. declares it was not only ſworn by the King, but by the Three Eſtates of the Kingdom of England, Ceſt aſſavoir, Les Prelatz, Nobles, & Grands, & par les Communs de meſm le Royalm Dangleterre.

1 H. 6.]

From all theſe Records it appears, that the Three Eſtates are Fundamental to the Conſtitution of Parliaments, and that the Biſhops are one of them. (z)

The Sollicitor St. John argues, That the King may hold his Parliament without calling the Biſhops to it: For this he cites the Opinion of the Judges in 7 Hen. 8. but this Caſe I have conſider'd already under that Year, and therefore ſhall add nothing further.

'Tis inſiſted on, Fifthly, That in the 25th Ed. 1ſt, a Parliament was held at St. Edmund's-Bury, Excluſo Clero: That notwithſtanding this, many good Laws were made there. (a)

To this 'tis anſwered, firſt, that to argue from a ſingle Inſtance againſt Cuſtomary and General Practice, is no good Logick; and over and above, if One of the Three Eſtates may be ſet aſide at Diſcretion, why not another?

Secondly, The Biſhops in this Parliament were not excluded the Seſſion by the King, and the other Two Eſtates, but by their own Choice: The Occaſion of it was a Bull of Boniface the Eight; by which the Clergy were forbidden giving any Archbiſhop Uſher's Diſcourſe in Defence of Epiſcopacy.

To proceed, the Biſhops were not only ſtruck at in their Parliamentary Privilege, but in their Spiritual Character: To do them Juſtice in this Point, and ſupport the Government of the Church, Archbiſhop Uſher publiſhed a ſeaſonable Tract to combat the Root and Branch Bill, * and prove Epiſcopacy of Apoſtolical Inſtitution: A brief Abſtract of the Main of this Performance may not be unacceptable to the Reader.

* The Meaning of the Root and Branch Bill was the aboliſhing Epiſcopacy, and introducing the Presbyterian Government.

"To begin, to make good that thoſe whom our Tranſlation calls Elders were ſubordinate to the Biſhop; he proves, that thoſe whom St. John, in the Revelations, calls the Angels of the Churches, were Biſhops both in Name and Authority: Particularly, that St. Timothy was Biſhop of Epheſus; and that one of thoſe Angels St. John writes to was his Succeſſor: This he proves, firſt, by the Liſt of the Biſhops of the Church of Epheſus; and ſecondly, by the Teſtimony of St. Ignatius, and others.

(b) Concil. Chalced. Act. 1.

For the firſt Point, 'twas publickly declar'd by Leontius, Biſhop of Magneſia, at the fourth General Council. (b) ἀπὸ τοῦ ἁγίου Τιμοθέου μέχρι νῦν εἰκοσιεπτὰ ἐπίσκοποι ἐγένοντο, πάντες ἐν Ἐφέσῳ ἐχειροτονήθησαν. That from Timothy, and therefore by inevitable Conſequence from the Time of the Apoſtles, there had been a continued Succeſſion of Twenty ſeven Biſhops, all ordain'd in Epheſus.

That Beza, in his Commentaries, confeſſes that Timothy had been ſome Time the προεστὼς, or Preſident of the Epheſian Presbytery: That Juſtin Martyr calls him that preſides in the Eccleſiaſtical Aſſembles προεστὼς, who by the other Fathers is call'd a Biſhop. That St. Timothy was ordain'd Biſhop of the Church of Epheſus, is further confirm'd by the Teſtimony of Euſebius, (c) and likewiſe by two Tracts, of conſiderable Antiquity, concerning the Martyrdom of St. Timothy: One of theſe is Anonymus, and mentioned in Photius his Bibliotheca: The other is ſaid to be written by Polycrates, who was himſelf Biſhop of Epheſus, and born within 37 Years after St. John writ the Revelations.

(c) Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. 3. Cap. 4.

That Oneſimus was Biſhop of Epheſus, and conſequently the Angel of that Church, to whom St. John wrote the Epiſtle in the Revelations; Primate Uſher proves from Ignatius: "Now Ignatius, whom Theodorit, Felix the Third, and Johannes Antiochenus reported (d) to have been ordain'd at Antioch by St. Peter, was, without all Queſtion, Biſhop of that See when St. John wrote that Letter to the Angel of the Church of Epheſus: For St. John wrote his Revelation towards the End of Domitian's Reign, as Irenæus affirms; or in the 14th Year of Domitian's Government, as Euſebius and St. Jerom relate: From this Period there are but 12 Years to the 10th of Trajan, when St. Ignatius was carried to Rome to ſuffer Martyrdom; and wrote another Letter to the Church at Epheſus, in which he makes mention of Oneſimus as their Biſhop, and puts them in Mind of their Duty to him.

(d) Theod. Dial. 1. Felix 3. in Epiſt. ad Zenon. Imperat. Recitat. in V. Synod. C. P. Act. 1. Tom. 2. Concil. pag. 222. Edit. Binii Johan. Antiochen. Chronic. lib. 10. M. S.

The Primate advances further, and affirms, That St. Polycarp was Biſhop of Smyrna when St. John wrote to the Angel of the Church of that City: "Now Irenæus, who reports this, was not only acquainted with St. Polycarp's Succeſſors in that See; but was preſent when that Saint himſelf diſcours'd of his Converſation with St. John, and related ſeveral remarkable Things he had heard from thoſe who had ſeen our Bleſſed Saviour, καὶ Πολύκαρπος, ſays Irenæus, ὃς οὐ μόνον ὑπὸ Ἀποστόλων μαθητευθεὶς, καὶ συναναστραφεὶς πολλοῖς τοῖς τὸν Χριστὸν ἑωρακόσιν, &c. i. e. St. Polycarp was not only a Diſciple of the Apoſtles, and convers'd with many Perſons who had ſeen Jeſus Chriſt, but was alſo ordain'd Biſhop of Smyrna by the Apoſtles themſelves. This St. Polycarp I ſaw my ſelf when I was young, for he liv'd to a great Age before his Martyrdom. (e)

(e) Iren. lib. 3. Cap. 3. adverſ. Hæreſ.

The Lord Primate cites another Teſtimony of St. Irenæus, to prove the Apoſtolical Succeſſion of the Biſhops of his Time; and that they taught no other Doctrine than what they receiv'd from thoſe inſpir'd Miſſionaries. His Words are theſe, Habemus annumerare eos qui ab Apoſtolis Instituti ſunt Epiſcopi in Eccleſiis; Et ſucceſſores eorum uſque ad nos; qui nihil tale docuerunt neque Cognoverunt quale ab his deliratur. "We can reckon thoſe who were ordain'd Biſhops by the Apoſtles, and carry down their Succeſſors to our own Time.

Id. ibid.

Tertullian's Authority comes next: This learned Father, in his Preſcription againſt Hereticks, writes thus, (f) Sicut Smyrnæorum Eccleſia Polycarpum ab Johanne conlocatum refert; ſicut Romanorum Clementem à Petro ordinatum edit; Perinde utique & cætera exhibent quos ab Apoſtolis in Epiſcopatum conſtitutos, Apoſtolici ſeminis traduces habent. "As the Records of the Church of Smyrna prove St. Polycarp their firſt Biſhop; as the Regiſter and Tradition of the Church of Rome make it appear that St. Clement was ordain'd Biſhop there by St. Peter: So the reſt of the Churches have Authentick Records, to ſhew what Biſhops were plac'd there by the Apoſtles, to continue the Succeſſion, and propagate the Faith firſt delivered to the Saints.

(f) De Preſcrip. cap. 32.

And this may be ſufficient to give the Reader ſomewhat of an Idea of the Learned Primate's Performance.

To proceed, notwithſtanding the King's paſſing the Bills for putting down the Courts of Star-Chamber and High Commiſſion; ſigning a Reſtraint upon the Council Board, and other large Conceſſions; notwithſtanding, I ſay, he had thus remarkably leſſen'd his Prerogative; the Commons were preparing to entertain him at his Return from Scotland with a large Recital of Grievances and Mal-Adminiſtration: This Remonſtrance was ſtrongly conteſted in the Houſe of Commons: The Debate laſted from three in the Afternoon till three in the Morning: And after all this Struggle, 'twas carried but by a few. In ſhort, the Members ſeem'd tir'd, and overwatch'd into a Complyance, which made them ſay the Remonſtrance look'd like the Verdict of a Starv'd Jury. I ſhall mention ſome Part of this Complaint which relates to the Church.

The Commons in their Remonſtrance charge the Biſhops with Innovations.

The Remonſtrance ſets forth, that the Promoters of all the Miſchiefs recited are, (1.) The Jeſuited Papiſts who hate the Laws, and aim at the Subverſion of Religion.

The Biſhops and corrupt Part of the Clergy, as they call them, are rang'd in the ſecond Place: Theſe Eccleſiaſticks, they pretend, cheriſh Formality and Superſtition as the Natural Effects, and moſt probable Supports of their Tyranny and Uſurpation.

(3.) Some Councellors and Courtiers had, upon Mercenary Views, engag'd themſelves with theſe encroaching Churchmen: That the Buſineſs of this Combination was to ſuppreſs the Purity and Power of Religion, and thoſe beſt affected to it; that they might remove the greateſt Obſtacles to the Change projected by them.

That this Faction of Courtiers and Churchmen, as theſe Remonſtrants will have it, countenanc'd the Arminian Party in thoſe Points wherein they agree with the Papiſts: That they widen the Difference between the common Proteſtants, and thoſe they call Puritans: And introduce ſuch Opinions and Ceremonies, as tend fartheſt to an Accommodation with Popery. And that their Deſign was to increaſe Ignorance, and encourage Liberty and Prophaneneſs in the People (g).

(g) Ruſhworth Hiſt. Collect. Part 3. p. 438.

They proceed to deſire the King the Conſciences of Men may be unburthen'd of needleſs and ſuperſtitious Ceremonies; That Innovations may be ſuppreſs'd, and the Monuments of Idolatry remov'd. And for the more effectual carrying on their intended Reformation, they addreſs for a General Synod of the moſt grave, pious and judicious Divines of this Iſland: That theſe Churchmen may be aſſiſted with ſome Foreigners profeſſing the ſame Religion: That they may conſider all things neceſſary for the Peace and good Government of the Church, and report the Reſult of their Debates to the Parliament. That their Reſolutions being confirm'd by the Legiſlature, may be the better acquieſc'd in, and obey'd.

Id. p. 450.

This expoſtulating Addreſs being preſented to the King at Hampton Court, his Majeſty's Anſwer as to the Church Part, is as follows. He obſerves their Petition concerning Religion, conſiſts of ſeveral Branches; to all which he applies an Anſwer. To give the Reader his Majeſty's Words.

The King's Anſwer.

We ſay, That for preſerving the Peace and Safety of this Kingdom, from the Deſign of the Popiſh Party, We have, and will ſtill concur with all the juſt Deſigns of Our People, in a Parliamentary Way. That for the depriving of the Biſhops of their Votes in Parliament, We would have you conſider, that their Right is grounded upon the Fundamental Law of the Kingdom, and Conſtitution of Parliament. This We would have you conſider; but ſince you deſire our Concurrence herein, in a Parliamentary Way, We will give no farther anſwer at this time.

As for the abridging of the inordinate Power of the Clergy, We conceive the taking away of the High Commiſſion Court hath well moderated That: But if there continue any Vſurpations or Exceſſes in their Juriſdictions, We therein neither have, nor will protect them.

Vnto that Clauſe which concerneth Corruptions (as you ſtile them) in Religion, in Church Government, and in Diſcipline, and the removing of ſuch unneceſſary Ceremonies as weak Conſciences might check at: That for any Illegal Innovations, which may have crept in, We ſhall willingly concur in the Removal of them. That if Our Parliament ſhall adviſe us to call a National Synod, which may duly examine ſuch Ceremonies as give juſt Cauſe of Offence to any, We ſhall take it into Conſideration, and apply Our Self to give due Satisfaction therein; but We are very ſorry to hear in ſuch general Terms, Corruption in Religion objected, ſince We are perſuaded in Our Conſcience, that no Church can be found upon the Earth that profeſſeth the true Religion with more Purity of Doctrine, than the Church of England doth, nor where the Government and Diſcipline are jointly more beautified, and free from Superſtition, than as they are here eſtabliſh'd by Law; which, by the Grace of God, We will with Conſtancy maintain (while We live) in their Purity and Glory, not only againſt all Invaſions of Popery, but alſo from the Irreverence of thoſe many Schiſmaticks and Separatiſts, wherewith of late this Kingdom and this City abounds, to the great Diſhonour and Hazard both of Church and State; for the Suppreſſion of whom, We require your timely Aid, and active Aſſiſtance. (h).

(h) Ruſhworth Hiſt. Collect. Part 3. p. 442. Biblioth. Reg. Sect. 4. cap. 4.

The latter Part of this Anſwer diſguſted the Commons, who notwithſtanding this Diſappointment reſolv'd to follow their Blow, till they had made themſelves Maſter of the Enterprize. The Bill for taking away the Biſhops Votes, was brought in for another Tryal. And here the Earl of Briſtol appear'd nobly in Defence of the Church: He obſerv'd to the Lords, that according to the Rules and Cuſtom of Parliament, a Bill once thrown out, could not be brought in again the ſame Seſſion. That this was the Caſe of the preſent Bill: And therefore that the going upon it this Seſſion, would be plainly breaking in upon the ſettled Orders of Parliament. This Plea, ſince it could not be diſprov'd, was over-ruled, and the Houſe carry'd it for excluding the Biſhops. This rough Expedient was the laſt Remedy, and wou'd have been wav'd, had the Biſhops been more reſign'd and flexible. To decline the Odium of innovating thus remarkably upon the Conſtitution, and diſcharging the firſt of the Three Eſtates from any Share in the Legiſlature, ſome Endeavours had lately been us'd by the Earl of Eſſex and the Lord Kimbolton, to perſuade the Biſhops to gratifie the Importunity of the Commons, and give up their Right of voting in Parliament. To prevail with them for this Ceſſion, they gave them an Aſſurance that the Temporal Lords would be bound in Honour to ſupport them in all the Eſſentials of their Character. But the Biſhops had too much Diſcretion and Courage to betray their Intereſt, and throw up their Peerage. But this Buſineſs, tho' now in Agitation, was not finiſh'd till two Months forward: In the mean time, to ſucceed againſt this Repulſe, and batter the Reſolution of the Lords Spiritual, the Apprentices were drawn down to Weſtminſter, to aſſiſt the Faction, and over-awe the honeſt Party. Theſe Auxiliaries came to the Parliament Doors in great Bodies, and cry'd, No Biſhops. And for a farther Reinforcement, Petitions to the Houſes came up from ſeveral Counties, ſetting forth, that the Biſhops were a common Nuſance; that the Decay of Trade, the clogging and diſappointing of all Buſineſs in Parliament, was occaſion'd by the Biſhops. From hence they advanc'd to downright railing and inſulting their Perſons, and throwing Stones at them; ſo that they could not come to the Lords Houſe, either by Land or Water, without apparent Hazard of their Lives. The Rabble thus fleſh'd and encourag'd, made their next Aſſault on Weſtminſter Abbey; and ſome of them ſpake out, their Deſign was to pull down the Organs, and deface the Monuments. Archbiſhop Williams, to prevent this horrible Ravage, and ſecure the Regalia from being ſeiz'd, made faſt the Doors, and maintain'd the Abbey againſt them. However, the Reforming Mob preſs'd on, and endeavour'd to force their Entrance; but were beaten off with Stones from the Leads by the Scholars, the Choir, and the Officers: And in this Skirmiſh one Sir---- Wiſeman a Kentiſh Knight, who headed the Rabble, was kill'd by a Tile from the Battlements. But the Aſſailants being not yet broken, ſome of the Archbiſhop's Retinue ſally'd out, and with Sword in Hand, forc'd them to retire and diſperſe.

The Biſhops inſulted by the Rabble, in going to the Parliament Houſe.

The Houſes taking no notice of this Outrage, the Tumult continuing in the ſame Phrenzy and Numbers, and the Biſhops going to the Parliament being altogether impracticable, they met at the Dean of Weſtminſter's Lodgings, and ſubſcrib'd a Proteſtation for preſerving their Right of ſitting in Parliament. It was drawn up by Archbiſhop Williams in the Form of a Petition, and was to be preſented to his Majeſty in the Houſe of Peers. Five of the Sees being vacant, and ſome of the Biſhops gone into the Country, it was ſign'd only by Twelve, viz. the Archbiſhop of York, the Biſhops of Durham, Litchfield, Norwich, St. Aſaph, Bath and Wells, Hereford, Oxford, Ely, Glouceſter, Peterborough and Landaff. The Proteſting Petition ſtands thus:

Their Petition and Proteſtation.

Whereas the Petitioners are call'd up by ſeveral and reſpective Writs, and under great Penalties to attend the Parliament, and have a clear and indubitable Right to vote in Bills and other Matters whatſoever debatable in Parliament by the ancient Cuſtoms, Laws and Statutes of this Realm, and ought to be protected by your Majeſty quietly to attend and proſecute that great Service. They humbly remonſtrate and proteſt before God, your Majeſty, and the noble Lords and Peers now aſſembled in Parliament; that as they have an indubitable Right to ſit and vote in the Houſe of Lords: So are they, if they may be protected from Force and Violence, moſt willing and ready to perform their Duties accordingly. And that they do abominate all Actions or Opinions tending to Popery or the Maintenance thereof, as alſo all Propenſion and Inclination to any malignant Party, or any other Side or Party whatſoever; to the which their own Reaſon and Conſcience ſhall not move them to adhere. But whereas they have been at ſeveral times violently menaced, affronted, and aſſaulted by Multitudes of People in their coming to perform their Services in that Honourable Houſe, and lately chaſed away and put in Danger of their Lives, and can find no Redreſs or Protection upon ſundry Complaints, made to both Houſes in theſe Particulars; They humbly proteſt before your Majeſty, and the Noble Houſe of Peers, That ſaving unto themſelves all their Rights, and Intereſts of ſitting and voting in that Houſe at other times, they dare not ſit or vote in the Houſe of Peers, until your Majeſty ſhall farther ſecure them from all Affronts, Indignities, and Dangers in the Premiſſes. Laſtly, Whereas their Fears are not built upon Conceits, but upon ſuch Grounds and Objects as may well terrifie Men of good Reſolutions and much Conſtancy, they do in all Humility and Duty proteſt before your Majeſty, and the Peers of the moſt Honourable Houſe of Parliament, againſt all Laws, Orders, Votes, Reſolutions and Determinations, as in themſelves null and of none Effect, which in their Abſence, ſince the 27th of this Inſtant Month of December, 1641. *have already paſs'd: As likewiſe, againſt all ſuch as ſhall hereafter paſs in that moſt Honourable Houſe, during the time of their forc'd and violent Abſence from the ſaid moſt Honourable Houſe. Not denying but if their abſenting of themſelves were wilful and voluntary, that moſt Honourable Houſe might proceed in all their Premiſes, their Abſence or this Proteſtation notwithſtanding. The Biſhops Proteſtation defended.

This Proteſtation was put into the Lord Keeper Littleton's Hand; but not to be read till the King, at the Biſhop's Inſtance, came into the Houſe of Peers. But the Lord Keeper, contrary to Direction, communicated the Petition to ſome unfriendly Members of both Houſes, before the time. This Lord Keeper, 'tis ſaid, had made himſelf obnoxious to the Cenſure of Parliament, by ſome ſtretches in his Management. And therefore, as 'tis thought, he ſtruck in againſt this Proteſtation to purchaſe an Indemnity, and cover himſelf: For immediately upon the reading the Paper in the Upper Houſe, the Anti-Epiſcopal Lords deſir'd a Conference with the Commons. In ſhort, the Biſhops Petition being put into their Hands, the Lord Keeper declar'd the Proteſtation contain'd Matters of high and dangerous Conſequence, and intrench'd upon the Fundamental Privileges and Being of the Parliament. But which way can this Charge be made out? The Biſhops, as has already been prov'd, are one of the Three Eſtates, and by Conſequence, eſſential to the Legiſlature. Since therefore they had been ſo outrageouſly inſulted, ſince the Violence was not remov'd, nor any Protection afforded upon their Complaint to both Houſes; what could they do leſs, than appear with their Proteſt for ſecuring their Right? If the Temporal Lords or Commons had been under the ſame Menacing and Danger, and had mov'd for Redreſs to no purpoſe; they would, we may reaſonably believe, have made the ſame Remonſtrance. And ſince the Lords Spiritual are equally a Third Eſtate with the other Two, why ſhould they not have the ſame Liberty to guard their Privilege? Beſides, the Biſhops declar'd the Nullity of what paſs'd during their abſence, no longer than the Force was upon them, no longer than their coming to Parliament continu'd impracticable: And therefore their remonſtrating againſt the Legality of what paſs'd in their abſence, was by no means claiming a Negative Vote like the King (k). 'Tis farther objected, that the Biſhops deſiring the King to command the Clerk of the Houſe to enter their Proteſtation upon Record, was derogatory to the Rights of Parliament. But to warrant their proceeding in this manner, the Biſhops have a clear Precedent in the Reign of King Richard II.

(k) Ld. Clarendon's Hiſt. Rebel. Vol. 1. p. 354.

The Caſe was this: Courtney Archbiſhop of Canterbury foreſaw ſome Peers were likely to be try'd for their Lives in Parliament; and knew the Biſhops were barr'd by the Canons from concerning themſelves in Caſes of Blood; upon this Proſpect he preſented a Proteſtation in his own Name, and the reſt of the Lords Spiritual, for aſſerting their Peerage, and ſaving their Rights and Intereſt in Parliament: And at the delivering this Inſtrument, he deſir'd the King it might be entred upon the Parliament Rolls, which was done accordingly *.

Secondly, 'Twas objected farther, that the nulling of all Laws made at that time, when Ireland was in Danger, was a ſort of conſpiring with the Rebels to deſtroy that Kingdom. To this it may be anſwer'd, that if the Biſhops had a Right to proteſt in this manner, the Inconveniences conſequent upon their uſing it, can amount to no Crime: For what Fault can it be for a Man to make uſe of the Privilege the Law allows him? Beſides, when the Paſſage was open and undiſturb'd to the Parliament Houſe, as it was when the Petition was read; for then the Biſhop of Wincheſter and ſome other Prelates appear'd there: When things were thus ſomewhat quieted, the Biſhops recall'd their Proteſtation, and deſir'd both Houſes to accept their Revocation †.

But the Commons reſolv'd to ſeize the Opportunity, and make uſe of the pretended Advantage:

vantage: Thus within half an Hour after, the Inſtrument was put into their Hands, they ſent up to the Lords, and without farther debate Impeach'd the Twelve Biſhops who Sign'd the Proteſtation, of High Treaſon (l). This Charge being carry'd to the Upper-Houſe by Mr. Glyn; the Black-Rod was immediately order'd to go in ſearch of the Biſhops, and bring them forthwith before the Lords in Parliament. They were brought to the Bar that Evening accordingly: Upon which an Order paſs'd in theſe words. "That the "Lord Archbiſhop of York his Grace, the Lord Biſhop "of Durham, the Lord Biſhop of Norwich, the "Lord Biſhop of St. Aſaph, &c. being charg'd of "High-Treaſon by the Houſe of Commons; "ſhall forthwith ſtand committed to the Priſon "of the Tower, until the Pleaſure of this Houſe "be farther known. But by an Order of the ſame Day, the Biſhops of Durham, and Conventry and Litchfield, in regard of their Age and ill Health, had the favour of being remitted to the Cuſtody of the Gentleman Uſher. The Biſhops committed had ſome time given to put in their Anſwer: And at their Requeſt the Lords order'd Mr. Lane the Prince's Attorney, Sir Thomas Gardiner Knight, Recorder of London, John Hearne, Chaloner Chute, John Fountain, Matthew Hales, and Arthur Trevor, to be of Council for them. The Lord Clarendon, notwithſtanding his ſurprize at the Rigour of this Uſage; notwithſtanding he objects nothing againſt the Legality of this Proteſtation: "Notwithſtanding he believes a Violence offer'd to the freedom of "any one Member, is a Violation to all the reſt; "and makes all their Acts as void and null, as "if they were lock'd in, and kept without Meat, "till they alter'd their Judgments; notwithſtanding this fair length of Conceſſion, he cenſures the Proteſtation as proceeding from "a Tranſport of Paſſion in Archbiſhop Williams, "and that the other Eleven were ill adviſ'd "in going into theſe Meaſures, and ſuffering "themſelves to be Precipitated to ſo haſty a Reſolution. But with due Regard to this Noble Hiſtorian; the Biſhops Conduct ſeems fairly defenſible. Had they done leſs, they had fallen ſhort of that Fortitude which might juſtly be expected from them: For ſince their going to the Houſe was utterly impracticable; ſince their Complaint to the Lords and Commons had been diſregarded: Which way could they maintain their Station, and ſecure their Peerage, but by entering their Proteſtation? To hope for either Favour or Juſtice at this Juncture, was too ſanguine an Expectation. They had Reaſon to conclude the Root and Branch work wou'd certainly go forward. And therefore to have been ſilent under ſuch Outrage, wou'd have been unſeaſonable Caution, and look'd like Cowardice. When the Proſpect is thus menacing, and a Man is almoſt certain to be undone, the moſt creditable Expedient is to ſpend himſelf in a Blaze, and Flaſh to the laſt grain of Powder. To go out in Smoak and Smoulder, is but a mean way of coming to nothing: To creep and crawl to a Misfortune, is to ſuffer like an Inſect: A Man ought to fall with Dignity and Honour, and keep his Mind erect, tho' his Fortune happens to be cruſh't. This was the Biſhops Caſe and Meaning; they were willing to ſave their Privilege, and ſupport their Character: And for making ſo handſome a Retreat, they ſeem to have oblig'd their Memory, and ought to ſtand commended upon Record. About a fortnight after their Commitment, they were ſeverally brought to the Bar of the Lords Houſe, and put in their Anſwers to the Impeachment in the following Form.

(l) Ld. Clarendon. Ruſhworth, Hiſt. Collect. pt. 3. p. 467.

Id. p. 497.

After this Anſwer, the Biſhops petition'd the Houſe of Lords for Tryal or Bail: Upon which the Lords aſſign'd them the 25th of January for their Tryal, but remanding them in the mean time to their former Confinement; where they continu'd till the beginning of May the next Year; at which time without making any Application to the Commons, the Lords admitted them to Bail. In ſhort, they liv'd where they pleas'd, without ever being call'd upon for their Tryal; which is another clear evidence they had done nothing unwarrantable by Law. For had they been any ways obnoxious, their Enemies wou'd not have fail'd in the Proſecution. And here Wren Biſhop of Ely had harder fortune than the reſt; for ſome few Months after his Enlargement, he was ſeiz'd by a Party of Souldiers, at his Houſe at Downham near Ely; and carried back to the Tower, where he continued till the end of the Year 1659. without any Charge brought againſt him *.

The Biſhops Bail'd, but never brought to any Tryal.

* Cyprian Anglic. Nalſon, Collect. Id.

And now the Ferment began to boil over, the Mask was laid aſide, and the Faction appear'd more in their Colours. For Inſtance, Petitions from the Counties of Suffolk and Eſſex, of Oxford, Lincoln and Northampton, were deliver'd to the Houſe of Commons; praying that the Popiſh Lords, and Biſhops Votes might be taken away. This Bill, already mention'd, againſt the Biſhops, paſs'd the Houſes in the beginning of February. And here 'tis thought the King wou'd have made a ſtand, and refus'd his Aſſent: His Majeſty's firſt Anſwer was; That the paſſing this Bill was a Matter of great Concernment; and therefore he would take time for Conſideration. His delay, tho' a farther Anſwer was promis'd, was look'd on as a denyal: And the prevailing Members being conſcious their Reformation in Church and State would be clogg'd, unleſs the Biſhops were excluded; ſent the ſame Day to the King then at Windſor, to preſs for his Conſent: Their Reaſons were, "That "the Subjects ſuffer'd by the Biſhops exerciſing "Temporal Juriſdiction, and making a Party in "the Lords Houſe. That general Satisfaction, "and a happy Conjunction of both Houſes, wou'd "be conſequent upon the Biſhops being excluded. "And laſtly, That the ſigning this Bill wou'd "be a comfortable Pledge of his Majeſty's "gracious Aſſent to the future Remedies of "thoſe Evils which were to be preſented to "him (m).

(m) Ld. Clarendon.

This Meſſage from the Parliament was ſeconded by thoſe of greateſt Truſt about the King; who notwithſtanding they wiſh'd well to his Majeſty's Affairs, ſeem to have been unacquainted with the Conſtitution, and not to have look'd through the Deſigns on Foot. Theſe Courtiers ſuggeſted that the paſſing this Bill was the only way to preſerve the Church: That the Combination againſt the Biſhops in this particular was irreſiſtible; that provided the Houſes were ſatisfy'd in this Point, they would acquieſce. But the croſſing this Humour would drive them to Extremities, make them attempt the Extirpation of Epiſcopacy, and demoliſh the whole Fabrick of the Church. They repreſented farther, that the paſſing this Bill, might prevail with the Parliament to lay down their Importunity tunity for another of much worſe Conſequence to the Crown; and that was a Bill for modelling and diſpoſing the Militia at the direction of the Two Houſes. Theſe Arguments, tho' urg'd by thoſe the King thought friends to the Church of England, wou'd never, 'tis probable have prevail'd with his Majeſty; had not the Queen ſollicited to the ſame purpoſe. This Princeſs was made to believe her Preſervation depended upon the King's Conſent to the Bill; that in Caſe his Majeſty refus'd it, her Journey into Holland would be ſtopp'd; and her Perſon poſſibly endanger'd either by the Mutineers at London, or the Inſurrection of the Country in her Paſſage to Dover: Whereas the uſing her Intereſt with the King, would lay a popular Obligation upon the Kingdom; and make her acceptable to the Parliament. Theſe Diſcourſes proving perſuaſive with the Queen, ſhe made uſe of her Aſcendant, and wreſted the King's Reſolution from him. So that in ſhort, he ſign'd the Bill at Canterbury, whither he accompany'd the Queen in her Voyage to Holland. To give the Reader the Act: The Preamble begins thus.

The King at laſt prevail'd with to paſs the Bill.

February 14.

Whereas Biſhops and other Perſons in Holy Orders, ought not to be intangled with Secular juriſdictioon, (the Office of the Miniſtry being of ſuch great Importance, that it will take up the whole Man). And for that it is found by long Experience, that their intermedling with Secular juriſdictions, hath occaſioned great Miſchiefs and Scandal, both to Church and State: His Majeſty, out of his Religious Care of the Church, and Souls of his People, is graciouſly pleaſed that it be enacted, and by Authority of this preſent Parliament, be it enacted, That no Archbiſhop or Biſhop, or other Perſon that now is, or hereafter ſhall be in holy Orders, ſhall at any time after the Fifteenth Day of February, in the Year of our Lord, One Thouſand Six Hundred Forty One; have any Seat or Place, Suffrage or Voice, or uſe or execute any Power or Authority in the Parliaments of this Realm; nor ſhall be of the Privy-Council of his Majeſty, his Heirs or Succeſſors, or Juſtice of the Peace of Oyer and Terminer, or Goal-delivery, or execute any Temporal Authority by virtue of any Commiſſion, but ſhall be wholly diſabled; and be uncapable to have, receive, uſe, or execute any of the ſaid Offices, Places, Powers, Authorities, and things aforeſaid.

And be it farther enacted by the Authority aforeſaid, That all Acts from and after the ſaid Fifteenth of February, which ſhall be done or executed by any Archbiſhop or Biſhop, or other Perſon whatſoever in holy Orders, and all and every Suffrage or Voice, given or deliver'd by them, or any of them; or other thing done by them, or any of them, contrary to the Purport and true meaning of this preſent Act, ſhall be utterly void to all Intents, Conſtructions and Purpoſes (n).

That there is nothing of Cogency in this Preamble, either as to Reaſoning or Fact, is ſufficiently evident from what has been obſerv'd upon this Head in the foregoing Part of this Hiſtory. But the King giving way to unreaſonable Demands, encourag'd the Party to farther Importunities; diſſerv'd his Character, and weakned his Intereſt. His Majeſty was afterwards ſenſible 'twas a wrong Step, and repented his Compliance; as appears by a Paſſage in one of his Prayers. Was it, ſays he, through Ignorance that I ſuffer'd Innocent Blood to be ſpilt, through a falſe pretended Juſtice? Or that I permitted a wrong way of Worſhip to be ſet up in Scotland? Or Injur'd the Biſhops in England (o)? From hence the Inference is, that the Injury done to the Biſhops in England, lay little leſs heavy upon the King's Conſcience, than the other two remarkable Inſtances of human Frailty.

Random Reports of the Biſhops Miſmanagement.

At this time when Libels and Calumny had free Courſe, there was great Clamouring againſt the Biſhops Conduct. They were charg'd with laying aſide the uſe of Confirmation: That they had wholly neglected the Duty of preaching under Pretence of being more at leiſure for the governing Part of their Function: And that even in this they manag'd to Inſignificancy, and transfer'd their Juriſdiction upon their Chancellors, and under-Officers. That none of them us'd to ſit in their Conſiſtories for hearing Complaints, or doing Juſtice either to Clergy or Laity: But turn'd over the People to Regiſters, Proctors, and Apparitors, who drew their Money from them againſt Equity and Law, and us'd them almoſt at Diſcretion. That few or none of them made their Viſitations in Perſon: Thus the greateſt Part of the Clergy and the Biſhops were Strangers to each other: That this was a Diſcouragement to godly and painful Miniſters, and countenanced thoſe who were irregular. That few of them living in their Epiſcopal Cities, the Poor were diſappointed of the Relief, and the better ſort of the Hoſpitality, they had Reaſon to expect: And that by this abſence Divine-Service was hurry'd, and ill perform'd in the Cathedrals, for want of the Biſhops Preſence and Inſpection. That inſtead of giving Orders at the Mother-Church, they made uſe of the Chapels of their Private Houſes, or ſome obſcure Country Churches; not requiring the Aſſiſtance of their Deans and Chapters upon ſuch ſolemn occaſions, as they ought to do: That they exerted the Cenſures of Deprivation and Degradation, in too Monarchical and Arbitrary a Manner; not calling in the Deans and Chapters for any ſhare in the Adminiſtration: And that by this abſolute method of Governing, they had made thoſe Capitular Bodies in a manner uſeleſs. And laſtly, ſince they did nothing upon the matter but receive their Rents, indulge their Eaſe, conſult their Grandeur, and Lord it over the reſt of their Brethren; the beſt way was to diſcharge the Function, and turn their Eſtates to more ſerviceable Uſes. This was the ſubſtance of what was objected by ſome Secular Men of Condition, and induſtriouſly ſpread among the Common People: That a great Part of this Charge was ſwell'd beyond Truth, needs not be queſtion'd: But ſuppoſing the whole had been Matter of Fact, the Inference was quite wrong; for there is no Reaſon an Office ſhou'd ſuffer for perſonal Miſcarriage: That Corporations ſhould be diſſolv'd, and Apoſtolical Inſtitutions ſet aſide for the Faults of particular Men. To turn People out of their Eſtates without proving them guilty of any legal forfeiture, and meerly becauſe they do not ſpend them as Religion directs, would make wild Work: This reaſoning if urg'd home, I ſay, wou'd carry to unintelligible Juſtice, and make a ſtrange Revolution in the fortune of the Laity.

Several Tracts publiſh'd for and againſt Epiſcopacy.

As the Hierarchy had a great many Enemies, ſo there were ſome Friends who ſtood in the Breach, and endeavour'd to repel the Attack. Beſides Archbiſhop Uſher already mention'd, the Biſhop of Exeter appear'd in print for the Cauſe. This Prelate preſented an humble Remonſtrance to the Parliament, in behalf of the Liturgy and Epiſcopacy. His Tract was quickly undertaken by a Book entituled, The Original of Liturgy and Epiſcopacy diſcuſs'd. This Anſwer furniſh'd by a Club of five Presbyterian Miniſters, had Smectymnus ſtanding for the Author: This word taking in the initial Letters of the Chriſtian and Sirnames of the five Miniſters. Their Anſwer receiv'd a Vindication from the Biſhop, to which Smectymnus publiſh'd a Rejoinder. During this Combat, while the Biſhops and the Faction were drawing their Pens upon each other, Sir Thomas Aſhton Knight and Baronet, Printed a Diſcourſe in Two Parts: The firſt was entituled A Survey of the Inconveniences of the Presbyterian Diſcipline, and the inconſiſtencies thereof with the Conſtitution of this State. His ſecond Part is called, The Original Inſtitution, Succeſſion and Juriſdiction of the Ancient and venerable Order of Biſhops. This Performance was quickly ſupported by the Hiſtory of Epiſcopacy; under the Name of Theophilus Churchman: And to mention ſome other Tracts upon the ſame Argument, tho' a little diſtant in time. The next Year Dr. Taylor's Epiſcopacy aſſerted, and the Aerinomaſtix of John Theyer appear'd in Print. To which may be added ſeveral Petitions to the King and Parliament: But of this more afterwards.

The vacant Sees fill'd.

Before we take leave of this Year, it may not be improper to mention the Vacancies which happen'd in ſeveral Sees. For the purpoſe; Neile Archbiſhop of York, died ſome few Days before the meeting of this Parliament: Mountague of Norwich, Bancroft of Oxford, Davenant of Saliſbury, Potter of Carliſle, and Thornborough of Worceſter, surviv'd Neile but a few Months. Theſe Sees were fill'd by preferring Williams, as has been obſerv'd, to the Archbiſhoprick of York; Winnif Dean of St. Paul's, was made Biſhop of Lincoln; Duppa was tranſlated from Chicheſter to Saliſbury; and King Dean of Rocheſter, was promoted to the See of Chicheſter; Hall Biſhop of Exeter to Norwich, and Brounrigg Maſter of Catherine Hall in Cambridge, to Exeter; Skinner of Briſtol was remov'd to Oxon; and Weſtfield Archdeacon of St. Albans, promoted to Briſtol; the Biſhoprick of Carliſle was given in Commendam to the Primate of Ireland, during the Commotions in that Kingdom; and the See of Worceſter was fill'd with Prideaux. Theſe Divines were all of them Perſons of Learning and Diſtinction; and ſtood well in the Opinion of the generality. After this, there were no more Changes 'till the Abolition of Epiſcopacy by an Ordinance of the Two Houſes, in the Year 1646. There were no more Changes, I ſay, excepting that Frewen Dean of Glouceſter, and Preſident of St. Mary Magdalen College in Oxon, was conſecrated Biſhop of Coventry and Litchfield, upon the Death of Wright, in the beginning of the Year 1644. and Howel Prebendary of Windſor, was promoted to the Biſhoprick of Briſtol, upon the Death of Weſtfield, before the end of the ſame Year.

The King retires into Yorkſhire, where he receives the Nineteen Propoſitions.

A. D. 1642.

The King forc'd by Tumults from White-hall, goes into Yorkſhire, and prepares for Defence. During his ſtay in this Country, the remarkable Nineteen Propoſitions, were ſent him by the Two Houſes: The Eight of theſe Propoſitions relating to the Church, deſir'd, That his Majeſty would be pleas'd to conſent to ſuch a Reformation of the Church Government and Liturgy, as both Houſes of Parliament ſhou'd adviſe: And that for this purpoſe they intended to conſult with Divines, as was expreſs'd in their Declaration. 'Twas likewiſe deſir'd, That his Majeſty wou'd contribute his beſt Aſſiſtance for raiſing a ſufficient Maintenance for Preaching Miniſters throughout the Kingdom: And that he wou'd be pleas'd to give his Conſent to Laws for taking away Innovations, and Superſtitions, and Pluralities, and againſt ſcandalous Miniſters (p).

For Satiſfaction to this Demand, the King repeats his Anſwer to their Remonſtrance already mention'd; and after this, puts them in Mind of part of his Meſſage ſent them on the Fourteenth of February, when he paſs'd the Bill for taking away the Biſhops Votes in Parliament. The Paſſage was this, That his Majeſty had obſerv'd, great and different Troubles to ariſe in the Hearts of his People concerning the Liturgy and Government of the Church: And that therefore he was willing to refer the whole Conſideration to the Wiſdom of his Parliament, which he deſir'd them to enter into ſpeedily; that the preſent Diſtractions about the ſame might be compos'd; that he deſir'd not to be preſs'd to any ſingle Act on his Part, till the whole was ſo digeſted and ſetled by both Houſes, that he might clearly ſee what was fit to be left, as well as what was fit to be taken away. Id. p. 329.

His Majeſty's Anſwer to the Eight Propoſitions.

“To this his Majeſty adds, that he had the better Hopes of a good Iſſue, to the general Satiſfaction of his People; becauſe they ſeem'd in their Propoſition to deſire only a Reformation, and not a Deſtruction of the preſent Diſcipline and Liturgy: Tho' for a Year and a half laſt paſt, nothing leſs than a total Suppreſſion of the Eccleſiaſtical Eſtabliſhment, had been preach'd in the Conventicles throughout the Kingdom. His Majeſty continues, he ſhould moſt cheerfully give his Aſſiſtance for ſetling a ſufficient Maintenance on preaching Miniſters, in ſuch a manner as might be moſt for the Encouragement of Piety and Learning: As to the Bills, and Conſultation they mention'd, he knew nothing of the Matter of the one, nor the Manner of the other, excepting by common Fame, to which he gave little Credit; and wiſh'd his Subjects believ'd Reports no faſter than himſelf. Having therefore receiv'd nothing certain on theſe Heads; he could return no Anſwer (q).

Petitions in behalf of Epiſcopacy and the Common-Prayer.

It has been already hinted, that not a few Petitions were preſented from ſeveral Counties, to the King and both Houſes; in behalf of the Church Eſtabliſhment: Some belong to the laſt, and ſome to the preſent Year. To begin with the County of Rutland; where in their Petition to the High and Honourable Court of Parliament; they argue in defence of Epiſcopacy. To mention ſome of their Conſiderations as they call them.

The Petition of the County of Rutland in behalf of the Church.

We conſider, ſay they, whether there can be a Church or not, without Biſhops: This very important Queſtion is maintain'd in the negative, by Apoſtolical Men, by primitive Martyrs, and by the greateſt part of Chriſtendom: And that thoſe few of a different Opinion, are moſt certainly not infallible. Since therefore ſo great a Majority of Chriſtendom, both with reſpect to Time and Place, declare for the Neceſſity of Epiſcopacy, 'tis much ſafeſt to retain that Government, for fear we ſeparate from the Church, the Pillar and Ground of Truth.

The Petition obſerves, 2dly, That no Ordination was ever performed without a Biſhop; and if any Presbyter gave Impoſition of Hands for this Pur- poſe, unleſs in Conjunction with the Biſhop, he was reckon'd an Uſurper by publick and unqueſtionable Authority. From hence their Inference is, that without Biſhops there can be no Presbyters, and by conſequence no Abſolution, no Conſecration of the Sacrament of the Lord's-Supper, and that 'tis impoſſible to give an Equivalent for theſe Defects, by any Compenſation whatſoever.

3dly, Impoſition of Hands has never been the Cuſtom for Presbyters or Prieſts, upon Biſhops. From hence the Diſparity of their Function is evident, and that a Biſhop has a Character which cannot be communicated but by one of the ſame Diſtinction.

4thly, Without Biſhops, Confirmation called in Scripture Impoſition of Hands, muſt be impracticable : And, which ought to be obſerv'd, St. Paul reckons Confirmation a fundamental Point *. The Church has always us'd it, and made it a peculiar Branch of the Epiſcopal Function. And to juſtifie this Practice, we have the Example of the Apoſtles in the Caſe of the Chriſtians of Samaria, converted by the Evangeliſt St. Philip.

* Heb. 6.

Acts 8. 17.

This Petition urges ſeveral other Arguments from the Laws of the Realm, from the Intereſt of Learning, and from the late Proteſtation recommended to the Kingdom by the Houſe of Commons: That by this Engagement, they had ty'd themſelves to maintain the eſtabliſh'd Doctrine of the Church of England. And here they very pertinently urge, that the 36th Article of our Church approves and confirms the Ordinal for Conſecration of Biſhops: And therefore, unleſs they appear'd in behalf of Epiſcopacy, they ſhould fail in adhering to their late ſolemn Proteſtation (q). This Petition was ſign'd by Eight Hundred of the Gentry and Freeholders, not reckoning the Clergy within the Number.

Id. pag. 759.

To this I ſhall ſubjoin the Petition of the Dioceſs of Canterbury; 'tis particularly remarkable, and ſets forth:

That notwithſtanding this Kingdom hath, by the ſingular Providence of Almighty God, for many Years laſt paſt, happily flouriſhed above all other Nations in the Chriſtian World, under the Religion and Government by Law eſtabliſhed; yet hath it been of late moſt miſerably diſtracted, through the ſiniſter Practices of ſome private Perſons ill-affected to them both; by whoſe Means the preſent Government is diſgraced and traduced, the Houſes of God are prophaned, and in part defaced, the Miniſters of Chriſt are contemned and deſpiſed, the Ornaments and many Utenſils of the Church are abuſed, the Liturgy and Book of Common-Prayer depraved and neglected, that abſolute Model of Prayer, the Lord's-Prayer, vilified, the Sacraments of the Goſpel in ſome Places rudely adminiſtered, in other Places omitted, ſolemn Days of Faſting obſerv'd, and appointed by private Perſons, Marriages illegally ſolemniz'd; Burials uncharitably perform'd, and the very Fundamentals of Religion ſubverted by the Publication of a new Creed, and teaching the Abrogation of the moral Law. For which purpoſe, many offenſive Sermons are preached, and many impious Pamphlets printed: And in contemning of Authority, many do what ſeemeth good in their own Eyes only, as if there was no King nor Government in this our Iſrael; whereby God is highly provoked, his ſacred Majeſty diſhonoured, the Peace of the Kingdom endangered, the Conſciences of the People diſquieted, the Miniſters of God's Word diſheartned, and the Enemies of the Church imboldned in their Enterprize.

This Petition was ſign'd by twenty four Knights and Baronets; Eſquires and Gentlemen, not reckoning Divines, above three Hundred: To which may be added, eight Hundred Freeholders and Subſidy Men (r). Beſides theſe, the Counties of Cornwall and Devonſhire, of Nottingham, Stafford, Lancaſter, Oxford and Hereford, and one County in North-Wales, addreſs'd for the Continuance of the Church-Eſtabliſhment. All theſe Petitioners, who were Perſons of Condition and Subſtance, amounting to near fifty Thouſand. And upon this Occaſion, the Lord Faukland obſerv'd to the Houſe, that the Strength of the Church-Party was not barely to be compared by the Liſt of the Subſcribers; there being vaſt Numbers of the ſame Sentiment who choſe to lie by, as being ſecure in the Goodneſs of the Laws, and the Wiſdom of the Law-Makers; and that it was not uſual to petition for what Men have, but for what they have not (s).

The Rebellion breaks out.

And now the Two Houſes having ſeiz'd the Magazines and Places of Strength, the War opened, and the Rebellion flam'd out. And after ſeveral Skirmiſhes, the Parliament Forces fought the King with ſome Diſadvantage at Edgehill. Immediately after this Battle, the King took Banbury-Caſtle, march'd towards London as far as Brentford, and after ſome Succeſſes, countermarch'd to Oxford for Winter Quarters. Before the King took the Field again, ſome Propoſitions for Accommodation were ſent him from the Members at Weſtminſter. One of the Articles was:

That his Majeſty would be pleaſed to give his Royal Aſſent for taking away ſuperſtitious Innovations, and ſign the Bill for the utter aboliſhing and taking away all Archbiſhops and Biſhops, their Chancellors and Commiſſaries, Deans, Sub-Deans, Deans and Chapters, Archdeacons, Canons, and Prebendaries, and all Chantors, Chancellors, Treaſurers, Sub-Treaſurers, Succentors and Sacriſts, and all Vicars Choral and Choriſters, old Vicars or new Vicars of any Cathedral or College-Church; and all other their under Officers out of the Church of England. They likewiſe deſired his Majeſty's Aſſent to the Bill againſt ſcandalous Miniſters, to the Bill againſt Pluralities, and to the Bill for Conſultation with godly, religious, and learned Divines; that his Majeſty would be pleaſed to paſs ſuch other Bills for ſettling of Church Government, as upon Conſultation with the Aſſembly of the ſaid Divines, ſhall be reſolved on by both Houſes of Parliament, and by them to be preſented to his Majeſty.

Propoſition the 4th.

Feb. 2. A. D. $164\frac{2}{3}$.

The ſettling this Article, was referr'd to the following Treaty at Oxford. But here the King found the Parliament-Commiſſioners ſo bound up to their Inſtructions, and ſtreightned in Time, that the coming to any good Underſtanding was utterly impracticable.

An Ordinance for ſequeſtering the Biſhops and other Delinquents Eſtates.

But notwithſtanding, the Two Houſes had no Conceſſion from the King to warrant their Proceedings, they paſs'd an Ordinance to ſequeſter the Biſhops and other Delinquents Eſtates. By Delinquents they meant thoſe who declar'd for the King, and refuſ'd to join the Rebellion (t). Thus the Rents and Profits of the Sees and Capitular Bodies, which lay within the Reach of the Parliament Army, were ſeiz'd, and the reſt of the Loyal Clergy were ſequeſter'd under the Character of ſcandalous Miniſters. And now moſt of the ſilenc'd Lecturers, and other Preachers, who within the laſt ten Years had left the Kingdom either for Non-Conformity, Debt, or intemperate Behaviour, returned at the Invitation of the Juncture. Theſe Men were preferr'd to the ſequeſter'd Benefices; but then, to keep them ſervile and true to the Cauſe, they were but as it were, Tenants at Will, and held their Livings only durante bene placito.

The King acquainted with this Oppreſſion and illegal Proceedings, publiſh'd his Proclamation againſt them.

May 15. 1643. The King's Proclamation againſt it.

“His Majeſty takes notice in the firſt place, that ſeveral of the Clergy eminent for their Piety and Learning, were forced from their Cures and Habitations, or otherwiſe ſilenc'd and prohibited the Exerciſe of their Function, for no other Reaſon, but becauſe they would not break the Laws, and act counter to their Conſciences, becauſe they would not pray againſt him and his Aſſiſtants, becauſe they refuſed the publiſhing illegal Commands and Orders, for fomenting the unnatural War rais'd againſt him. That theſe unexceptionable Clergy, being thus turned out of their Livings, many Factious and ſchiſmatical Perſons intruded upon them: That theſe Men made it their Buſineſs to ſow Sedition, and draw his Majeſty's good Subjects from their Obedience, contrary to the Word of God, and the Laws of the Land: That the Intruders had an Aſſignment of Part of the Profits of the ſaid Benefices, and that the reſt was converted to the ſupporting the War againſt him: That therefore his Majeſty ſtraightly commands all his good Subjects to deſiſt from ſuch illegal Courſes againſt any of the Clergy aforeſaid, and to pay their Tythes to their reſpective Incumbents, or their Aſſigns, without Fraud, notwithſtanding any Sequeſtration, pretended Ordinances, or Orders whatſoever, from one or both Houſes of Parliament. And this they were to do under the Penalty of being apprehended and proceeded againſt according to Law, and of having their Lands and Goods in the mean time, ſeiz'd and ſequeſtered (u).

May 15. 1643.

This Proclamation, tho' it ſhew'd his Majeſty's Care to protect the loyal Clergy, had no effect to ſtop the Perſecution. And that they might ſeem to deſerve what they ſuffer'd, a lewd Pamphlet, licens'd by White Chairman of the Committee for Religion, was publiſh'd under the Title of, The firſt Century of ſcandalous and malignant Prieſts, &c. The Royaliſts offer'd to return the Reproach with much more Force upon the Puritan Party, but the King, who thought common Chriſtianity might ſuffer in the Conteſt, refus'd to give leave for ſuch an Undertaking.

Beſides their attacking the Hierarchy in their Reputation, the two Houſes play'd a more effectual Battery againſt the Church, and executed their Deſign, already mention'd, of conſulting godly, religious, and learned Divines. For this purpoſe they did not think fit to wait his Majeſty's Pleaſure, but upon the return of their Commiſſioners, from Oxford, conven'd an Aſſembly by their own Authority. The Convocation tho' ſummon'd by the King's Writ, was not ſitting: The Times were too much diſturb'd, and the Place too much in the Enemies Power for that Buſineſs. Neither were the two Houſes willing to venture their Cauſe with ſuch a regular Body. They were ſo far from reſting the Matter upon that foot, that they refuſ'd to refer the Choice of their Aſſembly-Men to the benefic'd Clergy, according to the cuſtomary Methods of provincial Synods. This Power of Electing, they reſerv'd to themſelves, and gave the Nomination to the Knights of Shires: For we are to obſerve, theſe Aſſembly-Men were not choſen as formerly, with regard to the Dioceſan Diviſions, but Two or more out of each County, the whole Number amounting to a hundred and twenty. To give this extraordinary Meeting the Face of Authority, an Ordinance was paſs'd in Form by the Lords and Commons: The Preamble ſetting forth the Occaſion, runs thus:

An Ordinance for convening the Aſſembly of Divines.

Whereas among the infinite Bleſsings of Almighty God upon this Nation, none is or can be more dear unto us, than the Purity of our Religion; and for that as yet many Things remain in the Liturgy, Diſcipline, and Government of the Church, which do neceſſarily require a further and more perfect Reformation than as yet hath been attained: And whereas it hath been declared and reſolved by the Lords and Commons aſſembled in Parliament, that the preſent Church-Government by Arch-Biſhops, Biſhops, their Chancellors, Commiſſaries, Deans, and Chapters, Arch-Deacons, and other Eccleſiaſtical Officers depending upon the Hierarchy, is evil, and juſtly offenſive and burthenſome to the Kingdom, a great Impediment to Reformation and Growth of Religion, and very prejudicial to the State and Government of this Kingdom, and that therefore they are reſolved that the ſame ſhall be taken away, and that ſuch a Government ſhall be ſettled in the Church as may be moſt agreeable to God's holy Word, and moſt apt to procure and preſerve the Peace of the Church at home, and nearer Agreement with the Church of Scotland, and other Reformed Churches abroad: And for the better effecting hereof, and for the vindicating and clearing of the Doctrine of the Church of England from all falſe Calumnies and Aſperſions, It is thought fit and neceſſary to call an Aſſembly of Learned, Godly, and Judicious Divines, to conſult and adviſe of ſuch Matters and Things touching the Premiſes as ſhall be propoſed unto them by both or either of the Houſes of Parliament, and to give their Advice and Council therein to both or either of the ſaid Houſes, when, and as often as they ſhall be thereunto required.

The Members of this Meeting.

Thoſe who ſtand foremoſt in the Liſt of theſe learned and godly Divines, are Algernon Earl of Northumberland, William Earl of Bedford, Philip Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, William Earl of Saliſbury, Henry Earl of Holland, Edward Earl of Mancheſter, William Lord Viſcount Say and Seale, Edward Lord Viſcount Conway, Philip Lord Wharton, Edward Lord Howard of Eſcrick; the next are Selden, Rows, Prideaux, both the Sir Henry Vanes, Pym, Sir John Clottworthy, Maynard, Bulſtrode Whitlock, and ſeveral other Members of the Lower-Houſe.

Amongſt this Number we may reckon, Thomas Goodwin, Sidrach Sympſon, Philip Nye, &c.

The Powers and Reſtraints of the Aſſembly.

By Vertue of the Ordinance, theſe Aſſembly-Men were to meet at Weſtminſter, in King Henry the Seventh's Chapel. Any Forty of them, Clergy or Lay, are declared a ſufficient Number, and impower'd to act. They were to conſult and debate Matters relating to the Liturgy, Diſcipline, and Government of the Church of England; and to vindicate the doctrinal Part from all ſuch Miſconſtructions as ſhall be propoſed to them by either, or both Houſes of Parliament: They were to deliver their Opinions concerning theſe Matters, in ſuch manner as ſhall be required by either or both of the ſaid Houſes, and not to divulge their Reſolutions, by Printing, Writing, or otherwiſe, without the Conſent of either, or both Houſes. Dr. Twiſſe is conſtituted their Prolocutor; and in caſe he happen'd to die, or was otherwiſe diſabled, his Succeſſor was to be choſen by both Houſes of Parliament. And provided any Diſagreement fell out amongſt the Members of the Aſſembly, the Parties were to repreſent the Reaſons of their different Opinions to either, or both Houſes of Parliament, that ſuch farther Direction might be given them as the Occaſion requir'd.

And to encourage their Buſineſs, the Ordinance allows them four Shillings a Day, and ſecures them againſt the Forfeitures of Non-reſidence. Farther, the Aſſembly was to be diſſolved at the Direction of both Houſes of Parliament. And in caſe any of the Members died before ſuch Diſſolution, the two Houſes were to nominate the Perſons for ſupplying the Places of thoſe deceas'd. And laſtly, 'tis provided, that this Aſſembly ſhall not exerciſe any Juriſdiction, or Eccleſiaſtical Authority, excepting what is particularly expreſs'd in this Ordinance.

General Rules for the Aſſembly.

Jovis 6. Julii 1643.

There were ſome farther general Rules given theſe Divines, by the Lords and Commons in Parliament.

1. That two Aſſeſſors be joined to the Prolocutor to ſupply his Place in caſe of Abſence or Infirmity.
2. Two Scribes to be appointed to ſet down all Proceedings, and theſe to be Divines, who are not Members of the Aſſembly; viz. Mr. Henry Rowberry, and Mr. Adoniram Byfield.
3. Every Member at his firſt Entrance into the Aſſembly, ſhall make a ſerious and ſolemn Proteſtation not to maintain any thing but what he believes to be Truth, and to embrace Truth in Sincerity, when diſcovered to him.
4. No Reſolution to be given upon any Queſtion, on the ſame Day wherein it is firſt propounded.
5. What any Man undertakes to prove as neceſſary, he ſhall make good out of the Scriptures.
6. No Man to proceed in any Diſpute after the Prolocutor hath enjcyned him Silence, unleſs the Aſſembly deſire he may go on.
7. No Man to be deny'd to enter his Diſſent from the Aſſembly, and his Reaſons for it in any Point after it hath been firſt debated in the Aſſembly; and thence (if the diſſenting Party deſire it) to be ſent to the Houſes of Parliament by the Aſſembly (not by any particular Man or Men in a private Way) when either Houſe ſhall require it.
8. All Things agreed on, and prepared for the Parliament, to be openly read and allowed in the Aſſembly, and then offered as the Judgment of the Aſſembly, if the major Part aſſent; provided that the Opinion of any Perſons diſſenting, and the Reaſons urged for it, be annexed thereunto, (if the Diſſenters require it) together with Solutions (if any were) given in the Aſſembly to thoſe Reaſons. Now follows the Oath.

I A. B. do ſeriouſly and ſolemnly in the Preſence of Almighty God, declare that (in this Aſſembly whereof I am a Member) I will not maintain any Thing, in Matters of Doctrine, but what I think in my Conſcience to be Truth, or in Point of Diſcipline, but what I ſhall conceive to conduce moſt to the Glory of God, and the Good and Peace of his Church.

Dugdale's ſhort View, p. 908.

The King forbids their Meeting.

The ſummoning this Aſſembly by the Two Houſes, was a new Provocation to his Majeſty, and an unprecedented Encroachment upon the Prerogative Royal. And over and above, the Illegality of the Meeting, 'twas moſtly made up of Perſons diſaffected to the Church: And which was a farther Reaſon for juſt Exception, the Divines were intermix'd with Secular Men; and in caſe of any Difference, the two Houſes were the laſt Judges of the Controverſie. Upon theſe Conſiderations the King publiſh'd his Proclamation before the Sitting of this extraordinary Synod, "Prohibiting all Perſons mentioned in that "pretended Ordinance, the aſſembling for that "purpoſe; declares the Aſſembly illegal, that "no Acts done by them, ought to be received "by the Subject: And that the allowing the "Aſſembly-Men Wages, by a Tax upon the Publick, was an unheard of Preſumption (x).

June 22.

Notwithſtanding this Proclamation, Sixty Nine of the Perſons nominated, were ſo hardy as to meet at the Time and Place appointed. But of the Epiſcopal Men, very few appeared, and ſcarcely any of them continued with the Aſſembly, excepting Dr. Featly.

Upon the firſt of July, purſuant to the Ordinance, theſe Divines met in King Henry the Seventh's Chapel. The Aſſembly was open'd with a Sermon preach'd by their Prolocutor, Dr. Twiſſe, both Houſes of Parliament being preſent. The Clerks or Actuaries, were Henry Roborough, borough, and Adoniram Byfield. And now the City Preachers pray'd for a Bleſſing upon their Debates, and Books were dedicated to them, in the Style of the Moſt Sacred Aſſembly.

One of their firſt Publick Acts, was a Petition to both Houſes, for a ſolemn Faſt. The Matter and Expreſſion in this Addreſs being ſomewhat extraordinary, I ſhall lay it before the Reader.

To the Right Honourable the Lords and Commons aſſembled in Parliament.

The humble Petition of divers Miniſters of Chriſt, in the Name of themſelves, and of ſundry others

Humbly ſheweth,

The Aſſembly petition the Two Houſes for a Faſt.

July 19. * Waller beaten in the Weſt by the King; and Ld. Fairfax in the North by the Earl of Newcaſtle.

THAT your Petitioners upon ſerious Conſideration, and deep Senſe of God's heavy Wrath lying on us, and hanging over our Heads and the whole Nation, and manifeſted particularly by the two late, ſad, and unexpected Defeats of our Forces in the North, and in the Weſt *; do apprehend it our Duty, as Watchmen for the Good of the Church, to preſent to your Religious and Prudent Conſideration, theſe enſuing Requeſts, in the Name of Jeſus Chriſt, your Lord and ours.

“ Firſt, That you would be pleaſed to command a publick and extraordinay Day of Humiliation, this Week, throughout the Cities of London, Weſtminſter, the Suburbs of both, and Places adjacent within the Weekly Bills of Mortality, that every one may bitterly bewail his own Sins, and cry mightily unto God, for Chriſt his ſake, to remove his Wrath, and to heal the Land, with profeſs'd and new Reſolutions of more full Performance of the late Covenant for the Amendment of our Ways.

“ Secondly, That you would vouchſafe inſtantly to take it into your more ſerious Conſideration, how you may moſt ſpeedily ſet up Chriſt more gloriouſly in all his Ordinances within this Kingdom, and reform all things amiſs throughout the Land, wherein God is more ſpecially and more immediately diſhonoured: Among which we humbly lay before you theſe Particulars:

“ 1. That the brutiſh Ignorance, and palpable Darkneſs poſſeſſing the greateſt part of the People in all Places of the Kingdom, whereby they are utterly unfit to wait upon God, in any holy Duty (to the great Diſhonour of the Goſpel, and the everlaſting endangering of their poor Souls) may be remedied by a ſpeedy and ſtrict Charge to all Miniſters, conſtantly to catechize all the Youth and ignorant People (they being commanded to be ſubject to it) and all ſorts to be preſent at it; and Information to be given of all Perſons who ſhall withſtand or neglect it.

“ 2. That the grievous and heinous Pollution of the Lord's Supper, by thoſe that are groſly ignorant, and notoriouſly prophane, may be henceforth, with all Chriſtian Care, and due Circumſpection prevented.

“ 3. That the bold venting of corrupt Doctrines, directly contrary to the ſacred Law of God and Religious Humiliation for Sin, which open a wide Door to all Libertiniſm and Diſobedience to God and Man, may be ſpeedily ſuppreſs'd every where; and that in ſuch manner as may give Hope that the Church may be no more infected with them.

“ 4. That the Prophanation of any part of the Lord's Day, and the Days of ſolemn Faſting, by buying, ſelling, working, ſporting, travelling or neglecting of God's Ordinances, may be remedied by appointing ſpecial Officers in every Place, for the due Execution of all good Laws and Ordinances againſt the ſame.

“ 5. That there may be a through and ſpeedy proceeding againſt blind Guides, and ſcandalous Miniſters, by whoſe Wickedneſs People either lack or loath the Ordinances of the Lord, and Thouſands of Souls periſh, and the Removal of the Ark from among us, is (to the trembling of our Hearts) evidently threatned. And that your Wiſdoms would find out ſome way to admit into the Miniſtry ſuch godly and hopeful Men as have prepar'd themſelves, and are willing thereunto, without which there will ſuddenly be ſuch a Scarcity of able and faithful Miniſters, that it will be to little purpoſe to caſt out ſuch as are unable, idle, or ſcandalous.

“ 6. That the Laws may be quickned againſt Swearing and Drunkenneſs, with which the Land is filled and defiled, and under which it mourneth.

“ 7. That ſome ſevere Courſe be taken againſt Fornication, Adultery, and Inceſt, which do greatly abound; eſpecially of late, by reaſon of Impunity.

“ 8. That all Monuments of Idolatry and Superſtition, but more eſpecially the whole Body and Practice of Popery, may be totally aboliſhed.

“ 9. That Juſtice may be executed on all Delinquents, according to your Religious Vow and Proteſtation to that Purpoſe.

“ 10. That all poſſible means may be uſed for the ſpeedy Relief and Releaſe of our miſerable and extremely diſtreſſed Brethren, who are Priſoners in Oxford, York, and elſewhere, whoſe heavy Sufferings cry aloud in the Ears of our God; and it would lie very heavy upon the Kingdom, ſhould they miſcarry, ſuffering as they do for the Cauſe of God.

That ſo God, who is now by the Sword avenging the Quarrel of his Covenant, beholding your Integrity and Zeal, may turn from the Fierceneſs of his Wrath, hear our Prayers, go forth with our Armies, perfect the Work of Reformation, forgive our Sins, and ſettle Truth and Peace throughout the Kingdom (y).

And your Petitioners ſhall ever pray, &c.

This Petition was well approv'd, a publick Faſt was order'd upon Friday following, and both Houſes agreed to take the other Particulars into ſpeedy Conſideration.

To proceed: Amongſt other Calumnies upon the King, the Rebels miſrepreſented his Religion, and reported him inclin'd to Popery: This, they knew, wou'd prove a ſignificant Aſperſion, and diſincline the People to his Service. His Majeſty therefore, to undeceive his Subjects in this Particular, made a ſolemn Declaration of his Belief: For being ready to receive the Holy Euchariſt from the Hands of the Lord Primate Uſher, he roſe from his Knees, and giving the Archbiſhop a Sign for a ſhort Pauſe, ſpoke theſe Words.

(y) Ruſhworth Hiſt. Collect. Part 3. p. 344.

The King's Proteſtation at Chriſt's Church in Oxford.

My Lord,

I eſpy here many reſolved Proteſtants, who may declare to the World the Reſolution I do now make. I have, to the utmoſt of my Power, prepar'd my Soul to become a worthy Receiver: And may I ſo receive Comfort by the bleſſed Sacrament, as I do intend the Eſtabliſhment of the True, Reformed, Proteſtant Religion, as it ſtood in its Beauty, in the happy Days of Queen Elizabeth, without any Connivance at Popery. I bleſs God, that in the midſt of theſe publick Diſtractions, I have ſtill Liberty to communicate: And may this Sacrament be my Damnation, if my Heart do not join with my Lips in this Proteſtation.

Id. p. 346.

Saltmarſh his Advice.

That this Purgation was no more than ſeaſonable may, to mention nothing farther, be collected from a Pamphlet lately publiſh'd by one Saltmarſh a Puritan Miniſter; where, amongſt other Directions, he adviſes to cheriſh the War under the Notion of combating Popery: For that this was the ſureſt Means to engage the People. His other two Suggeſtions mention'd by Whitlock, were, 1. That all Means ſhould be us'd to keep the King and his People from a ſudden Union. 2dly, If the King would not grant their Demands, then to root him out and the Royal Line, and transfer the Crown upon ſomebody elſe (z). This deſperate Advice was read in the Houſe of Commons.

The Succeſſes of the King's Arms ſtruck ſuch a Terror in the Revolters, that the leading Members were preparing to retire beyond Sea. Had the Earl of Newcaſtle, inſtead of ſitting down before Hull, march'd into the Aſſociated Counties; and had the King at the ſame time omitted the Siege of Glouceſter, and made for London, the War in all likelihood had been at an End. But the Two Houſes gaining time by the Miſconduct of the Royaliſts, apply to the Scots. The Presbyterian Part of that Nation promiſe the Engliſh their Aſſiſtance, upon Condition of their taking the Covenant. They had already been trying to paſs this Solemn Iniquity upon the Engliſh: For the laſt Summer, when they found the Revolt broke out with Strength, and likely to do Buſineſs, they ſent a Form of their Kirk-Government to the Parliament at Weſtminſter. This was to be the Plan the Engliſh were to work by *. 'Twas recommended to Eſtabliſhment by the Scotch Aſſembly: And ſoon after follow'd with a Declaration "of their Affections to the Reformation in Church and State; letting them know they expected that England would now exert themſelves, and extirpate the Prelatical Hierarchy; offering their Aſſiſtance at the ſame time, to make the Undertaking more practicable and eaſie (a).

* Auguſt 4. 1642.

The Solemn League and Covenant offer'd by the Scots, and taken by the Engliſh Revolters.

The Articles of Confederacy being agreed between the Engliſh and Scotch Revolters, both Houſes with the Aſſembly of Divines and Scotch Commiſſioners, met in St. Margaret's Weſtminſter. At this Solemnity, one White a Miniſter of the Aſſembly, pray'd an Hour for preparing them to take the Covenant. After this, Nye another famous Preacher mounts the Pulpit, and makes ſome Remarks upon this Engagement; endeavours to juſtify it from Scripture-Precedents, and ſhews the Benefits the Church has receiv'd from ſuch Combinations.

Septemb. 25. A. D. 1643.

This Diſcourſe was ſeconded by Henderſon, one of the Scotch Commiſſioners, who dilated upon the Advantages their Nation had receiv'd from Covenants of this kind; and then proceeded to ſet forth how much the King was govern'd by ill Council, and that the States of Scotland had reſolv'd to aſſiſt the Parliament of England. When Henderſon had done, Nye read the Covenant in the Pulpit, and all the Audience held up their Hands as a Mark of their Aſſent. And the Covenant being ingroſſed in Parchment, the Lords and Commons ſubſcrib'd it in their reſpective Houſes: 'Twas likewiſe ſign'd by the Aſſembly of Divines, and the Scotch Commiſſioners (b). The Tenour of this Covenant ſhall be poſtpon'd to the Year 1647: At which time the Reaſons of the Univerſity of Oxford againſt it, ſhall be annex'd. In the mean time, I ſhall only obſerve, that the King looking on it as a dangerous Confederacy againſt the Church and State, publiſh'd a Proclamation, forbidding all his Subjects, either to tender, or take this Seditious and Treaſonable Covenant, as they will anſwer the contrary at their utmoſt Perils (c). But this Proclamation, dated the 9th of October, came out ſomewhat too late. For not only the Lords and Commons at Weſtminſter, but the City of London and the Army quarter'd there, had already gone through this Rebellious Teſt.

The Scotch over and above paſſing their Covenant upon the Engliſh, had ſeveral other encouraging Conditions: For inſtance, the Scotch Commiſſioners were taken into a Share of the Adminiſtration: Gilleſpy, Henderſon, &c. with an equal Number of their Ruling Elders, ſat at Weſtminſter with the Aſſembly-Divines. Beſides this, an Hundred Thouſand Pound was advanc'd to them to forward their Expedition. Upon this Encouragement, the covenanting Scots enter England with a great Army, and reinforce the Rebellion: But this was not done till the latter End of the Year.

In the mean time the Commons at Weſtminſter paſs'd an Order, that the Aſſembly-Divines ſhou'd be mov'd to write to the Reform'd Churches of Zealand and Holland, and to the Proteſtants in France, Switzerland, &c. to inform them of the great Artifices and Diſguiſes of his Majeſty's Agents in theſe Parts, and of the true State of their Affairs. The Scotch Commiſſioners and the Committee of the Lords, are likewiſe deſir'd to joyn the Commons and the Aſſembly for ſettling this Buſineſs (d).

Purſuant to this Order, they drew up a Letter, the greateſt part of which ſhall be tranſlated.

A Letter of the Aſſembly of Divines ſent to the Proteſtant Churches in Holland, France, &c.

Right Reverend and dearly Beloved in our Lord Jeſus Chriſt,

"We, the Aſſembly of Divines and others, conven'd by the Authority of both Houſes of the Parliament of England, with the Commiſſioners ſent from the General Aſſembly of the Church of Scotland, ſalute you heartily in the Lord.

"We doubt not but the lamentable Reports of the Miſeries, under which the Church and Kingdom of England lies bleeding, and ready to be ſwallow'd up, (the Cup which the Righteous Lord has given us to drink) have reach'd you long ſince. And 'tis probable the ſame Inſtruments of Satan and Antichriſt, have endeavour'd to repreſent us as black as 'tis poſſible, to you: 'Tis their Method to carry on their Intereſt by Calumny and Lying, to diſguiſe their bloody Deſigns with ſpecious Pretences; to reproach our Conteſt for a more thorough Reformation, and beſtow hard Language on the juſt Defence of our Lives and Liberties againſt Violence and Cruelty. And we ſometimes doubt whether we have not been wanting to our own Innocency and your Satiſfaction, tisfaction, in being thus long ſilent. But pardon us, Dear Brethren, if this Cup of Trembling wherewith our Spirits have been fill'd to Amazement, and our ſtruggling with extreme Difficulties, have prevented us from doing this Part of our Duty. And now be pleas'd to give us leave to diſcharge a little of our Grief, by communicating our Condition. For now we ſhall give you a Narrative of the Ravage and Deſolation carry'd on by an Antichriſtian Faction, who have all along made it their Buſineſs to check the Reformation, and cheriſh Popery: And have now prevail'd againſt us to that degree, that if the Lord, whoſe Judgments are unſearchable, and whoſe Mercies are infinite, does not ſpeedily interpoſe for our Reſcue, we muſt be utterly undone.

“How inſtrumental this Treacherous and Bloody Generation has been in haraſſing other Reform'd Churches, in ruining the Palatinate, and in the Loſs of Rochel; and how by counterfeit Embaſſies and Treaties, for their Relief, they have underhand ſupported a contrary Intereſt, and made things worſe than they found them are ſo fully known, and ſo ſenſibly felt, by ſome of your ſelves, that we need not ſay any thing of them. And to make their Averſion to you ſtill more demonſtrable, abundance of theſe Men have refuſ'd to own any of you for a Chriſtian Church: For being not Prelatically conſtituted, they conceive your Miniſters want a lawful Miſſion, which is eſſential to Church Governors. And as for our ſelves, we are ſadly ſenſible, that in all theſe three Kingdoms they have prevail'd ſo far in promoting Popery and diſcouraging Religion, that it would require a Volume, rather than a Letter, to relate all the Particulars. And here they go on to a conſiderable Length of Libelling upon the Church, and State. After this, they proceed to give a Narrative of what was done in Scotland. They acquaint the Reform'd Abroad, that this Antichriſtian Faction, as they call them, impoſ'd “a new Popiſh Book of Service, of Rites and Ceremonies, upon the whole Scottiſh Nation: That when the Piety and Zeal of that Kingdom refuſ'd Submiſſion to this Uſage, they prevail'd with his Majeſty to proclaim them Rebels and Traytors: And had not the Lord by his Bleſſing upon the Scotch Army, by the calling of this Parliament, by their Godly Care to vindicate the Innocence of their Brethren, and by the Treaty of Peace ſoon after concluded, prevented it, the two Nations had long ſince been imbrewing their Hands in each others Blood.

“But tho' through the Goodneſs of God and his Bleſſing upon the publick Councils, the Engliſh and Scotch were brought to a better Underſtanding and more cloſely united: And that God had rais'd up ſuch a Spirit throughout this whole Kingdom, to mourn after the Lord, to lament our Backſlidings, and to deſire a perfect Reformation; and had ſo inclin'd the Hearts of the Honourable Members of Parliament, to repair the Houſe of the Lord among us, that we verily believ'd, as they go on, our Winter was paſt, and the time of our refreſhing at Hand: Yet alas! we find it quite otherwiſe. Our God, who before, was a Moth and Rottenneſs, is now turn'd unto a Lion to us. We know our Sins have deſerv'd all this; and if we all periſh we acknowldge the Lord is righteous, to his Hands we ſubmit, and from him alone we expect Deliverance. However, we muſt ſay, 'tis the ſame Antichriſtian Faction that brings theſe new Miſeries upon us: And the Rage and Diligence of theſe Men riſes, and runs higher, ſince the Beginning of this Parliament. And which is more, their Succeſs has in ſome meaſure anſwer'd up to their Malice. They have rais'd a Bloody Rebellion in Ireland: They have alienated his Majeſty's Affection from his good Subjects; adviſ'd his ſurprizing ſome Members of both Houſes, in a Hoſtile manner; prevail'd with him to withdraw himſelf from the Parliament, and levy an Army: That at firſt it was pretended his Majeſty would muſter none but Proteſtants. But the Papiſts, both here and beyond Sea, knowing the Deſign of theſe Forces, pray'd for their Succeſs. And over and above gave out, they were not to appear till the Proteſtants were engag'd beyond Retreat: And that then they were to own the Cauſe, which has happen'd accordingly. For as ſoon as a great many ſeeming Proteſtants, the moſt part of which were obnoxious for publick Misbehaviour, and had been proſecuted for Treaſon and high Miſdemeanours; as ſoon as theſe Men had declar'd for the King, and drawn out into the Field, upon Pretence of abetting the Prerogative, the Privileges of Parliament, and the Proteſtant Religion; preſently the Papiſts, who had all along been uſed with diſtinguiſhing Favour by the King's Forces, had Arms put into their Hands, and were furniſh'd with Military Commiſſions. And being thus reinforc'd with the whole Body of the Papiſts, and provided with Ammunition and Money from other Parts, they range up and down the Kingdom, plundering and killing all thoſe, who ſtand firm for Religion, and the Parliament.

“And notwithſtanding, when the Parliament perceiving theſe wicked Inſtruments had prevail'd with the King, to levy Forces to protect them from Juſtice, and enable them to carry on their Deſigns; the Parliament appriz'd of this, endeavour'd to ſecure the Navy, and Places of Strength, and provide for the Defence of themſelves, of their Laws, their Liberties, and Religion; notwithſtanding this Precaution, the Arbitrary Faction have diſguiſ'd their Intentions to that degree, and laid ſuch a Varniſh upon their Practice, that now they have encreaſ'd their Party, and carry'd the Sword almoſt through every Part of the Kingdom. And to compleat our Miſery, they have at laſt prevail'd with his Majeſty to own the bloody Rebels in Ireland, ſo far as not only to call them his Roman Catholick Subjects now in Arms; but to grant them a Truce for a Year, with Liberty to ſend Meſſages, or come over to his Majeſty; and under this Encouragement, many of them have tranſported themſelves, and joyn'd our Enemies.

“In this deplorable Condition we remain at preſent, and under this dark Proſpect the Honourable Houſes of Parliament have conven'd this Aſſembly to aſſiſt them with our beſt Advice for the Reformation of the Church, for the purging off Error and Superſtition, and retrieving the Purity of Religion: And here they require us to make God's Word the Standard; to work by the Pattern in the Mount; to endeavour the neareſt Conformity to the beſt Reform'd Churches, and to bring the Three Kingdoms to an Uniformity in Belief and Worſhip. And this is the Buſineſs

“ we are now upon; tho' the Enemy has ſtir'd up the Heart of our Dear and Dread Sovereign againſt us. However, through the good Hand of God upon us, we have made ſome comfortable Beginnings: The Work is his, who commands us not to Deſpiſe the Day of ſmall Things.

“ Thus (Reverend and dear Brethren) we have given you the ſubſtance, or rather a faint ſhadow (for the true Image is beyond Deſcription) of our miſerable Circumſtances in England: Our Civil Liberties are in danger of being loſt; our Eſtates are harraſs'd, our Houſes plunder'd, and our Blood pour'd out in every Corner. If our God will make us as the duſt under their Feet, and lay our Bodies as the Ground, the Will of the Lord be done. Might our Blood be accepted as a Sacrifice, avert the Divine Diſpleaſure, and preſerve the reſt of the Saints from Antichriſtian Fury; we would gladly offer it upon this Service. But the moſt afflicting Conſideration is, the apparent danger which ſurrounds all the Proteſtant Churches. We are very ſenſible the Rage of theſe Men is implacable, and that 'tis not our Blood that will ſatisfy them. 'Tis not our being Sinners which raiſes their Averſion: 'Tis our being engag'd in the defence of the true Religion; 'tis our panting after a thorough Reformation, which makes them ſo unalterably our Enemies. And if the Lord ſhould once deliver us as a Prey unto their Teeth, what Confuſion and Darkneſs muſt overſpread theſe Three Kingdoms? What Bondage and Perſecution muſt all thoſe endure, who refuſe receiving the Mark of the Beaſt? Neither will this Calamity reſt only upon the Kingdoms of Britain and Ireland; but theſe Men will endeavour to tranſport their Barbarity, and carry the Deſolation through all the Reform'd Churches in Europe. Your own Thoughts may eaſily ſuggeſt, with what Rage the Beaſt that came out of the bottomleſs Pit, and the Woman who has thus long drank the Blood of the Saints; you may eaſily imagine with what Rage theſe are ſwell'd, againſt the Virgins that follow the Lamb.

And having repreſented the Church and Kingdom of Scotland's entring into a mutual League and Covenant with the Engliſh; and their Reſolution of aſſiſting their Brethren with an Army, and flouriſhed a little upon the Wiſdom, Piety, and Learning, of their Aſſembly; they proceed to acquaint them with their Requeſt.

And here in the firſt Place, they deſire they would pronounce favourably on their Condition; not arraign their Innocency, nor miſconſtrue their neceſſary Defence. Thus the Reader may ſee they were terribly afraid the Mask ſhould be pull'd off; and that they ſhould be accounted Rebels as they were. They rail plentifully upon the Royaliſts; and pretend they are mightily injur'd, in being charg'd with Revolting from their Allegiance; and endeavouring to wreſt the Government from the Crown, and bring Anarchy and Confuſion upon Church and State. From theſe foul Aſperſions, they make no Queſtion, their Solemn League and Covenant will clear them; a Copy of which they incloſ'd in each of their Letters.

Secondly, They deſire theſe Foreign Proteſtants would ſympathize with their Sufferings: That ſuch returns of Compaſſion would be ſomething of Support, and revive their drooping Spirits.

Laſtly, They ſuggeſt, that as all the Antichriſtian Faction abets their Adverſaries, (meaning the King) and maintains the Quarrel as their own; ſo theſe Aſſembly-Divines deſire the foreign Proteſtants wou'd concern themſelves in their Intereſt, and look upon their Condition as the common Cauſe. For that if theſe Covenanters miſcarry'd in England, the Calamity wou'd ſhortly overtake thoſe in other Countries, of the ſame Perſuaſion. As to the way and manner of their being own'd, they leave it wholly to the Conduct of theſe Foreigners; excepting only in the Aſſiſtance of their Prayers. From hence we may collect, they wou'd have been very glad, the Proteſtants Abroad wou'd have furniſh'd them with Forces or Money to fight the King, and deſtroy the Church.

Theſe Divines acquainted the Foreigners; they wrote to them by the Direction of the Houſe of Commons, and take their leave thus.

Their Superſcription ſtood thus: To the Reverend and Learned Paſtors and Elders of the Claſſes and Churches of the Province of Zealand, our much honoured Brethren. Their Letters to the Paſtors and Elders of Holland, Eaſt-Holland, Guelderland, Overyſſel, Utrecht, Friezland, and Groningen; to thoſe of Geneva, Bern, Zurich, Baſil and Schafhauſen; to thoſe of Heſſe, Anhalt, Hanaw and Paris, are ſuperſcrib'd in the ſame Form (e).

The Covenant preſs'd thro' the Parliament Quarters, and the conſequent Perſecution of the Loyal Clergy.

The taking the Covenant was now preſs'd cloſe through all the Parliament Quarters, which brought a terrible Perſecution upon the Loyal Clergy. Thoſe who refus'd to comply, were turn'd out of their Houſes, and not ſuffer'd to compound either for perſonal or real Eſtate: This Rigour forc'd great Numbers of the Clergy to quit their Benefices, and retire to Places under the King's Protection: Theſe Vacancies were partly ſupply'd by thoſe Presbyterians who had formerly been Lecturers, or Chaplains: Partly by young unqualify'd Students from the Univerſities. To which we may add, ſome Refugees from Scotland and New-England; who came in for their ſhare of Preferment. And ſome of thoſe Puritans, who had formerly declaim'd ſo much againſt Pluralities, were now reconcil'd to the holding two or three Livings. As for the honeſt Clergy, who refus'd to joyn the Rebellion, or revolt from the Church, they were ſequeſter'd and impriſon'd; and almoſt every way harraſs'd and undone. From the Year 1641. to ſix Years forward, there were an Hundred and Fifteen Clergy Men turn'd out of their Livings, within the Bills of Mortality; moſt of theſe were plunder'd, and their Wifes and Children Children ſet in the Streets (f). By theſe Barbarities at London, the Reader may conjecture the Greatneſs of the Calamity in the reſt of the Kingdom. They had another way of reaching the Orthodox Clergy beſide the Covenant: Some of them were ſequeſter'd and ejected upon Pretence of Scandal, and Immorality. But to ſhew the Iniquity of their Proceedings upon this Head, it may be obſerv'd firſt, that ſome of the Crimes charg'd upon them were capital: And therefore ſince the forfeiture of their Lives was not taken, we may reaſonably believe the proof was defective. Secondly, The Depoſitions againſt them were ſeldom taken upon Oath, but bare Affirmation went for Evidence. Thirdly, Many of the Complainants were apparently Factious; Men who had deſerted the Church, and profeſs'd an Averſion to the Hierarchy. Fourthly, Many of theſe pretended Criminals, were ignorantly if not maliciouſly charg'd with delivering falſe Doctrine: For Inſtance, Some were proſecuted for Preaching that Baptiſm waſhes away Original Sin. And Laſtly, Many were outed for Malignancy; that is, for being true to their Allegiance (g). In ſhort, 'tis obſerv'd, there were more turn'd out of their Livings by the Presbyterians in three Years, than were depriv'd by the Papiſts in Queen Mary's Reign; or had been Silenc'd, Suſpended or Depriv'd by all the Biſhops, from the firſt Year of Queen Elizabeth, to the time we are upon. And that this might be done with ſome Colour of Juſtice, they ſet up a Committee for Plunder'd Miniſters, under pretence of providing for ſuch godly Miniſters, as had either ſuffer'd in their Effects by his Majeſty's Forces, or loſt their Benefices for adhering to the two Houſes (h).

His Majeſty's Manifeſto to the Proteſtants beyond-Sea.

To proceed; His Majeſty being ſcandalouſly miſreported in the Aſſemblies Letters, as if he deſign'd the introducing of Popery; thought 'twas neceſſary to wipe off the Aſperſion by a Declaration addreſs'd to the Reform'd beyond Sea. "In this Manifeſto the King avows his ſteady "adherence to the Religion ſettled by Engliſh "Synods, and confirm'd by Acts of Parliament: "That he had educated his Children in this "Belief, and for farther ſtrengthening the Proteſtant Intereſt, marry'd his Daughter to the "Prince of Orange: That the moſt eminent "Proteſtants in Germany, France, Denmark, "Switzerland, Bohemia and Holland, not excepting the Synod, at Dort, have publickly approv'd "the Liturgy and Government of the Church of "England. And laſtly, that he was reſolv'd to "live and die in the Communion of this Church, "and protect it in all Parts of the Conſtitution "to the utmoſt of his Power (i).

To return to the Aſſembly: Theſe Divines, tho' moſtly agreed, fell ſhort of univerſal Harmony. Five of their Members, Goodwin, Nye, Bridge, Sympſon and Burroughs, were of the Congregational Perſuaſion, afterwards call'd Independents. Theſe Men as has been obſerv'd, tranſported themſelves into Holland for liberty of Conſcience. They had Proſelyted ſeveral wealthy Families of Merchants and others, who went along with them: The States of Holland gave them a friendly Reception, aſſign'd them Churches to meet in, and ſubſiſted the Miniſters with a competent Maintenance. Some of theſe Engliſh Refugees, as has been related, ſetled at Rotterdam, and ſome at Arnheim in Guelderland. Being thus encourag'd by the Dutch Government, they advanc'd to the forming their Church-Diſcipline: And here to ſpeak in their own Language, they conſulted the Scriptures without any Prepoſſeſſions: They look'd upon the word of Chriſt as unpartially and unprejudicedly as Men of Fleſh and Blood are like to do, in any juncture of time that may fall out: The Place they went to, the condition they were in, and the Company they went with, affording no Temptation to any Byaſs (k).

The riſe and Principles of the Independents.

The Principles upon which they founded their Church-Government, was Firſt, To confine themſelves to Scripture Precept and Precedent, without any ſupplemental intermixtures of ancient Practice, or novel Invention. Secondly, Not to be confin'd to their preſent Reſolutions, without room for alteration, upon farther Views and Enquiry. They thought it was not impoſſible, time might inform them better in ſeveral Particulars; and that it was by no means prudential, to tye themſelves up from improvement; purſuant to theſe Grounds they held a middle courſe between Presbytery and Browniſm: The firſt they counted too arbitrary and deciſive; and the other too looſe, floating and undetermin'd. Their main diſtinction declar'd againſt the Dependency of Churches: For Inſtance, They diſallow'd Parochial and Provincial Subordinations; and form'd all their Congregations upon a Scheme of Co-ordinacy: Some ſort of Ceremonious Preference was allow'd to the elder Church, but without any addition of Authority.

As to the manner of their Service, they pray'd publickly for King's and all in Authority: They read the Scriptures of the Old and New Teſtament, and expounded the Leſſons upon proper occaſions. They adminiſter'd the Sacraments of Baptiſm, and the Lord's-Supper. They us'd Singing of Pſalms, and made Collections for the Poor every Lord's Day. Their publick Officers were Paſtors, Teachers, and Ruling Elders, (which were Eccleſiaſticks) and Deacons.

Id. p. 8.

As for Church Cenſures, they lay all within the compaſs of Admonition and Excommunication: And notwithſtanding theſe few branches of Diſcipline, the later was never exerted, during their ſtay in Holland. Farther, they reckon'd Synods an uſeful expedient, and neceſſary in ſome Caſes: But would not allow them any binding force. They were to declare the Truth, they ſaid, but had no Authority to enjoyn Obedience, and govern Practice. The Presbyterians charg'd theſe Independents with an Ambulatory, uncertain Religion: To which they anſwer'd, They only kept themſelves upon the reſerve, for farther diſcoveries of Truth. The Miſunderſtandings among themſelves at Rotterdam, have been touch'd already: The Congregation at Arnheim, where Goodwin and Nye were Paſtors, was better united. Here beſides the Church-Ordinances abovemention'd, they propos'd the receiving the Holy Kiſs *, Propheſyings in the Congregation, when any of the Audience thought themſelves qualify'd to ſpeak; Widows and Extreme Unction. All this they thought ſufficiently recommended by Scripture Authority: But before they came to a Reſolution upon theſe Points, they had a Proſpect of better Buſineſs in England. For now the Hierarchy was broken, the incloſures of Diſcipline pull'd up, and the Puritan-Party encourag'd by the two Houſes at Weſtminſter. The Juncture being thus inviting, the Congregationaliſts quit Holland, and come for England. At their arrival, they immediately Practice upon their Scheme, and gather Churches: The Presbyterians look upon this Proſelyting as no better than Encroachment. They complain their Flocks were perverted, and their Settlement diſturb'd: They expect the Independants ſhould reſign their Singularities, and come under the Scotch Regulation, now countenanc'd by the Parliament. On the other Hand, theſe Men except to the Genevian Plan, refuſe to be concluded by a Majority, and move for a Toleration. This Motion being rejected by the Aſſembly, Goodwin and the other four Members already mention'd, addreſs'd the Parliament with an Apologetical Narrative. And here they only Petition for indiſturbance in their own Country; not knowing, as they ſay, to retreat elſewhere to any tolerable Convenience. How the Controverſy was banded between the Preſbyterians and Independents on this Head, ſhall be related afterwards.

What Succeſs the Aſſembly's Letter had among the foreign Proteſtants, is more than I can account for, excepting in the Netherlands. Here the Dutch Divines made no difficulty to cloſe with the Engliſh Rebellion. They ſent an Anſwer to the Addreſs they had received; in which they expreſs their Satiſfaction with the Proceedings of the Parliament touching the Covenant, and deſire their Admiſſion into that Engagement (m).

The Committees for Sequeſtration of Delinquents Eſtates, had an Oath ſent down to them by an Ordinance of the Lords and Commons. They were to tender it to all Perſons of One and Twenty Years of Age: And in caſe they refuſ'd it, two Thirds of their Eſtates Real and Perſonal, was to be forfeited. The Oath was in the Form following.

August 28. An Ordinance againſt Monuments and Superſtition.

The ſame Month another Ordinance paſs'd, that all Monuments of Superſtition or Idolatry, ſhould be remov'd and demoliſhed. But this being much the ſame with the Order ſent down by Pym, and the Parliament Committee about three Years ſince, needs not be repeated. This Ordinance in the Beginning of the next Summer, was reinforc'd with another of a reſembling Purport: By Vertue of this latter Proviſion, all Repreſentations of any Angel or Saint, in any Cathedral, Collegiate, or Pariſh Church, or Chapel, or in any open Place, was to be taken away, defac'd, and utterly demoliſhed. The Chancel-Ground of every Church or Chapel, rais'd for any Altar or Communion Table, was to be levell'd: No Copes, Surplices, ſuperſtitious Veſtments, Roods, or Holy-Water-Fonts, as they call'd them, were to be us'd: No Croſs, Crucifix, or Repreſentation of any Angel, or Saint was to remain upon any Place or other Furniture belonging to the Worſhip of God: And all Organs were taken away, and with the other ſuperſtitious Veſtments abovementioned, utterly defac'd.

Id. fol. 69.

The next Ordinance of the two Houſes, commands a ſtricter Obſervation of the Lord's-Day. In this pretended Act, the King's Declaration concerning lawful Sports to be us'd, And all other Books and Pamphlets that have been, or ſhall be written, printed, or publiſhed, againſt the Morality of the fourth Commandment, or of the Lord's-Day, ſhall be call'd in, ſeiz'd and publickly burnt by the Juſtices of Peace. 'Tis likewiſe ordain'd by the Lords and Commons, that all and ſingular May-Poles ſhall be taken down by the Conſtables, Churchwardens, &c. and none ſuffer'd for the future.

April 6. 1644. An Ordinance againſt May-Pole.

Id. fol. 68.

This Summer, after the Fight at Marſton-Moor, in which the King's Forces were worſted, the Aſſembly of Divines communicated a Letter to the Parliament, which they received from the Kirk of Scotland. 'Twas a ſort of Remonſtrance againſt the dilatory Proceedings in ſettling the Church Government in England. This Expoſtulation was not without effect: For ſoon after, the Aſſembly had leave to draw up a Form for Ordination of Miniſters, and debating the Settlement of the Church: And the Queſtion being put by the Aſſembly, whether Preſbytery is Jure Divino, hoping to carry it in the Affirmative, one of the Lay-Members ſtood up, and objected, that tho' Government in general, was Jure Divino, yet whether Preſbytery, Epiſcopacy, Independency, or any other Form of Church Government, was Jure Divino, was a diſputable Point; therefore he thought it adviſable for the Aſſembly, to forbear declaring their Judgment. For if this Government was not Jure Divino, no Deciſion of any Council, cou'd make it ſo: And if it had the Privilege of being Jure Divino, it would continue ſo ſtill, tho' the Aſſembly declar'd nothing upon the Point. He therefore thought it prudential for them to go lower in their Reſolution, and make their Report to the Parliament, that in their Opinion, Preſbytery was moſt agreeable to the Word of God, and moſt fit to be ſettled in this Kingdom: And that if they put it no higher, he believ'd they might have a Settlement upon this Foot (o).

(o) Whitlock's Memorials p. 94.

Another touching Ordination of Miniſters.

In October following, an Ordinance was paſs'd touching Ordination. By this Proviſion, ſome Aſſembly-Men of Diſtinction, and certain London Miniſters, or any Seven or more of them, were impower'd to lay their Hands on ſuch Perſons as they found qualify'd for the holy Miniſtry. To this a Clauſe of Privilege was added, that all Perſons ſo ordained, ſhould be reputed Miniſters of the Church of England, ſufficiently authoriz'd for any Office or Employment in it, and capable of all Advantages appertaining to the ſame. To ſhew the Invalidity of theſe Ordinations, a learned Tract was publiſhed by Dr. Bohea Chaplain to Houſon Biſhop of Oxford.

Archbiſhop Laud impeached of High-Treaſon.

Archbiſhop Laud having been three Years impriſon'd, his Juriſdiction and Patronage ſeiz'd, and his Eſtate ſequeſter'd, was now impeached of High-Treaſon before the Lords. The Commons who drew the Impeachment, exhibited their Charge in One and Twenty Articles. The Archbiſhop put in his Anſwer; where, to cover himſelf from the thirteenth Article, ſetting forth, That he had maliciouſly and traiterouſly plotted and endeavoured, to ſtir up War and Enmity between his Majeſty's two Kingdoms of England and Scotland, and to that purpoſe has labour'd to introduce into the Kingdom of Scotland, divers Innovations both in Religion and Government, &c. to cover himſelf from this Article, he pleaded the Act of Oblivion paſs'd this Parliament: Not that he was conſcious of any Guilt, but conſidering the Diſadvantage of the Times, and the Strength of the Faction, he did not think it fit to part with any legal Advantage.

His Trial.

When his Trial came on, the Commons order'd Serjeant Wild, Brown, Maynard, Nicholas and Hill, for the Managers, and Pryn was employ'd to provide and prompt the Evidence. The Trial was carry'd on by Intervals, through twenty Days hearing, from the 12th of March to the 29th of July. Some Part of the Charge preſs'd by the Scotch Commiſſioners, has been already mentioned. As for his whole Defence, 'tis partly foreign to my Purpoſe, and much too long to inſert. However, ſomething farther upon this Subject, may not be amiſs. To begin.

The Archbiſhop, after his twenty Days hearing, having mov'd for the Liberty of repeating an Abſtract of the Articles, with his Anſwer to each of them: The Lords ſent him Word to be ready with his Recapitulation againſt the Second of September. And about this Time, 'twas reſolv'd in the Houſe of Commons, that he ſhould enjoy the Benefit of the Act of Oblivion, and not be charg'd with any Thing relating to the Troubles of Scotland (p).

The Archbiſhop brought to the Houſe of Lords, at the Day appointed, deſires their Lordſhips to remember in the firſt place, the Generality, and by conſequence the Uncertainty of almoſt every Article of the Impeachment. That the Charge being thus unbounded, and lying at random, put him to great Difficulties in making his Defence.

2. He deſires their Lordſhips would be pleas'd to conſider, how far he was ſtraightned in Time, inſomuch that the Intervals between each Hearing were ſometimes ſo ſhort, that he had not leiſure to peruſe the Evidence, and much leſs to review his Anſwers, and fortify them if Occaſion requir'd. For theſe Reaſons, amongſt others, he deſires his Councel may be heard as to Matter of Law, before their Lordſhips proceed to Sentence.

Part of his Defence.

3. He deſires the Lords would be pleas'd to remember the Hardſhips put upon him ſince his Confinement. And here he reminds them, that the Key, and Uſe of his Study at Lambeth, both Books and Papers were taken from him. Secondly, That his Appartments in the Tower, were ſearch'd by Pryn, and One and Twenty Bundles of Papers prepar'd for his Defence, ſeiz'd and carry'd off, and not three Bundles reſtored. That this Search was made before the Impeachment was form'd into any particular Articles: That his Pockets were examin'd, his Diary and Prayer-Book taken away, and afterward us'd againſt him. That in ſome Inſtances all this was done, not to prove a Charge, but to make one. Thirdly, That all Books of Council-Table, Star-Chamber, High-Commiſſion, Signet-Office, his own Regiſters; and the Regiſters of Oxford and Cambridge, have not only been thoroughly inſpected for Matter againſt him, but he has likewiſe been deny'd the Peruſal of theſe Records, and that this Reſtraint was a Diſadvantage to his Defence.

In the fourth Place, he intreats their Lordſhips would recollect, that his Benefactions and Services to the Publick, have been objected as Crimes againſt him. And here he inſtances in the repairing St. Pauls, and ſettling the Statutes of the Univerſity of Oxon.

Towards the latter End of this ſummary Defence, the Archbiſhop takes notice, That the Managers confeſs'd, the Particulars urg'd againſt him, were not Treaſon, ſingly conſider'd, but that the Reſult of them all together, amounted to this Crime.

To this the Archbiſhop anſwers, That if no Particular charg'd upon him, is Treaſon, the Reſult from them cannot be Treaſon. This Argument he makes good from the following Reaſons.

" Firſt, The Reſult muſt be of the ſame Na" ture and Species with the Particulars out of " which 'tis form'd. That this Reaſoning holds
" in Nature, in Morality, and in Law. In Na- " ture, and that both for integral and eſſential
" Parts. For neither can the Body of a Bear,
" and the Soul of a Lion, reſult into a Fox; nor
" the Legs of a Bull, the Body of a Horſe,
" and the Head of a Aſs, reſult into a Man.

" In Morality, and this may be prov'd both " in Virtues and Vices: For neither can many " Actions of Liberality, Meekneſs, and Sobriety,
" riſe up into a Reſult of Fortitude; neither " can many Actions of Malice, Drunkenneſs,
" and Covetouſneſs reſult into Treaſon. This
" Reaſoning holds in Law too: For let the " Crimes be never ſo many, there is no Law in
" this Kingdom, nor any where elſe, that I know
" of, continues the Archbiſhop, that makes the " Reſult of different Crimes Treaſon, where
" none of the Particulars are Treaſon by Law.
" In ſhort, this imaginary Reſult is a Monſter in " Nature, in Morality, and in Law; and if once
" allow'd, will deſtroy all the Civil Securities
" of the Subject. And ſince Life, Liberty, and " Intereſt, are ſo deeply concern'd, he hopes
" their Lordſhips will be proportionably cau" tious not to give Precedents againſt them:
And after having anſwer'd ſome Objections upon this Head, he refers himſelf to the Laws of the Realm: " That this pretended Reſult muſt
" be ſomething within 25 Ed. 3. or ſome other
" known Statute; otherwiſe it cannot be Trea-
" ſon. And yet no Proof at all has ſo much
" as been offer'd, that this Reſult is Treaſon
" by any Law.

In Diſproof of his endeavouring to introduce Popery, he mentions a Liſt of above twenty Roman Catholicks he had recover'd to the Church of England; and ſeveral of theſe were Perſons of Condition and Quality *. And as for his whole Defence, Pryn, notwithſtanding his Diſaffection and the Sowreneſs of his Temper, is ſo frank as to confeſs, that he made as full, as gallant, as pithy a Defence, and ſpake as much for himſelf as was poſſible for the Wit of Man to invent: And that with ſo much Art, Vivacity, and Oratory, without the leaſt Acknowledgement of Guilt in any thing *.

Upon the 11th of October following, the Archbiſhop's Council, Hern and Hales, Barriſters of Lincoln's-Inn, and Gerrard of Gray's-Inn, attended with the Archbiſhop, at the Houſe of Lords. The Argument agreed amongſt them, was deliver'd by Hern †. To give the Reader ſome part of it. In the introductive Part of their Plea, they declare, the Archbiſhop had receiv'd no Aſſiſtance from them in the Courſe of his Tryal, and that his Defence was wholly his own.

They reduce the whole Charge to Three general Branches. 1. " A traiterous Endeavour
" to ſubvert the fundamental Laws of the Realm,
" and to introduce arbitrary and tyrannical Go
" vernment. 2. A traiterous Endeavour to ſub
" vert God's true Religion by Law eſtabliſh'd,
" and inſtead thereof, to ſet up Popiſh Superſti-
" tion and Idolatry. 3. That he labour'd to ſubvert

“ ſubvert the Rights of Parliament, and the ancient Courſe of Parliamentary Proceedings, &c.

With reference to theſe Three general Heads, they crave leave to propoſe the debating two Queſtions.

Firſt, Whether the Conſtitution makes any thing Treaſon, excepting what is declar'd ſuch by the Statute 25 Ed. 3. cap. 2. or enacted by ſome ſubſequent Statutes? This Queſtion they hold in the Negative.

Secondly, Whether any Things charg'd in the Articles of Impeachment, contain any of the Treaſons declar'd by that Law, or enacted by any ſubſequent Statute? This they humbly conceive may be reaſonably deny'd. And for the clearing both theſe Points, they affirm, that an Endeavour to ſubvert the Laws, Religion, and the Rights of Parliament, are not Treaſons within the 25 Ed. 3. cap. 2. or any other ſubſequent Statute.

2. That not any of the Particulars inſtanc'd in the reſt of the Articles, are Treaſon within 25 Ed. 3. or any other Statute.

To make good their Opinion upon the firſt Queſtion, they argue, That before the making this Statute of 25 Ed. 3. Treaſon was dangerouſly undefin'd and uncertain: That almoſt any Crime was by way of Inference extended to Treaſon: That killing the King's Meſſenger was Treaſon (q): Accroaching the Royal Power, was likewiſe made Treaſon in the Houſe of Lords (r). The Commons being ſenſible how deſtructive 'twas to the Subject, for the higheſt Crime to lie thus at large, and undetermin'd, petition'd it might be better diſtinguiſh'd and brought to a clearer State. This Requeſt of the Commons, with the Inconveniences abovemention'd, occaſion'd the Statute of 25 Ed 3. And here the Archbiſhop's Council obſerve, That in all ſucceſſive Reigns, this Statute has been the fix'd Rule for Judgments in Caſes of Treaſon (s).

From hence they proceed to make a Recital of the Treaſons declared by the Statute of 25 Ed. 3. which are theſe following.

1*ſt*, Compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King, Queen, Prince, and declaring the ſame by ſome Overt-Act.

2*dly*, Murthering the Chancellor, Treaſurer, &c.

3*dly*, Violating the Queen, the King's eldeſt Daughter, or the Prince's Wife.

4*thly*, Levying War againſt the King.

5*thly*, Adhering to the King's Enemies within the Realm, or without, and declaring the ſame by ſome Overt Act.

6*thly*, Counterfeiting the Seals and Coin.

7*thly*, Bringing in counterfeit Coin.

This Recital was to furniſh the Lords with a Teſt for trying the Articles exhibited againſt the Archbiſhop, whether any of them were mark'd for Treaſon by this Statute.

In the next place, theſe learned Gentlemen of the Long-Robe, laid down for a Ground, that this Act ought not to be conſtrued by Equity or Inference. 1. Becauſe it is a declarative Law, and no Declaration ought to be ſurcharged with another Declaration. 2. This Law was provided for a Security in Life, Liberty, and Eſtate: But to admit Conſtructions and Inferences upon it, muſt by conſequence deſtroy the Intent and Force of the Proviſion. 3. It has been held both in Parliament and judicial Debates, that this Act muſt be literally conſtrued, and not ſtretched to Inferences.

Charles I. K.

From hence the Council go on to their ſecond Queſtion, whether any Part of the Charge againſt the Archbiſhop contains any of the Treaſons declar'd by 25 Ed. 3. or enacted by any ſubſequent Law? To make good the negative ſide of this Queſtion, they argue, that an Endeavour to ſubvert fundamental Laws, is not Treaſon by any Law in this Kingdom. Their Reaſons are, 1. Becauſe 'tis not compriz'd within any Words of 25 Ed. 3. neither, as has been already obſerv'd, may it be brought within it by any Conſtruction or Inference. 2. Becauſe an Endeavour to ſubvert Laws, is of ſo great a Latitude and Uncertainty, that every Action, not warranted by Law, might by this Means be ſtrain'd to Treaſon. To fortify this Reaſoning, they cite an Authority from Sir Edward Coke (t). The Caſe is this: “A Conveyance was made in tail, with a Proviſo, that if the Tenant did go about, or attempt to diſcontinue the Intail, the ſame ſhould be void: Now 'twas reſolv'd by the Judges, that the Proviſo was void: The principal Reaſon was, that theſe Words, attempt, or go about, are uncertain Terms, and void in Law. What follows in the Report, is very obſervable, viz. God defend that Inheritances and Eſtates of Men, ſhould depend upon ſuch Uncertainties: That miſera eſt ſervitus ubi jus eſt vagum, & quod non definitur in Jure quid ſit Conatus: And therefore the Rule of the Law decides this Point, non efficit Conatus niſi ſequitur Effectus; and the Law does reject Conations and Goings about, as Things uncertain, which cannot be put in Iſſue. Thus far the Book. And if Eſtates are thus well guarded, 'tis hop'd the Inſtance will hold ſtronger in Caſes of Life.

Having diſpatch'd theſe Generals, the Council apply themſelves to the other Articles, which they conceiv'd were inſiſted on as Inſtances of the general Charge. And here they ſuggeſt, that if the Generals fall ſhort of Treaſon, the particular Inſtances muſt do ſo too: And on the other ſide, if the Inſtances come lower than Treaſon, the Application to thoſe Generals, cannot mount to any ſuch Malignity. And here they ſingle out two particular Articles of greateſt Force againſt the Archbiſhop.

The firſt ſtands in the tenth Article, viz. That he has traiterouſly endeavoured to reconcile the Church of England with the Church of Rome. To diſable this Article, they reply, That if this is any Treaſon, it muſt be a Treaſon within 5 Jac. cap. 4. where 'tis enacted, That if any Man ſhall put in Practice to reconcile any of his Majeſty's Subjects to the Pope or See of Rome, he ſhall incur the Forfeitures of Treaſon. But the Charge in the Article, is clearly without the Compaſs of this Statute. For,

1. The Article only charges an Endeavour, whereas the Statute mentions a putting in Practice.

2. The Article ſets forth an Endeavour of Reconciling the Church of England with the Church of Rome; but the Statute mentions reconciling ſome of his Majeſty's Subjects with the See of Rome. Now there ſeems a wide Difference between theſe two Expreſſions: For reconciling with, may as well import bringing the Church of Rome to the Church of England, as the Church of England to the Church of Rome.

Their ſecond Inſtance is in the ſeventh additional Article, in which the Archbiſhop is charg'd with wittingly and willingly receiving and harbouring divers Popiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits, namely, Sancta Clara, and Mounſieur St. Giles. To this the Council reply'd,

(r) Rot. Parl. 21 Ed. 3. Numb. 15.

(s) Rot. Parl. 1 Hen. 4. Numb. 144. Rot. Parl. 5 H. 4. Numb. 12.

(t) Coke's Reports, pt. 6. fol. 42. Mildmay's Caſe. See Corbett's Caſe. Moor's Reports, fol. 602.

reply'd, that the harbouring Prieſts and Jeſuits, is made Felony, and not Treaſon (u); and that the Statute extends only to Prieſts born within the Engliſh Dominions, which Sancta Clara and the other, are not charg'd to be.

(u) 27 Eliz. cap. 2.

And now having gone through the heavieſt Articles, and prov'd them clear of any treaſonable Matter, they argue, ſuch Articles cannot be heightned to Treaſon by Inference or Parity of Reaſoning. They grant the Crimes, as they ſtand in the Charge, are great and many. However, ſince they fall ſhort of Treaſon by the Laws of the Realm, their Number cannot make them exceed their Nature. And if they are but Miſdemeanours taken apart, they can't be ſwell'd to Treaſon, by putting them together.

Unleſs this Reaſoning is allow'd, the 25 Ed. 3. ſo much inſiſted on already, muſt be a vain and inſignificant Proviſion. For if after all the Exactneſs and Particularity of that Statute, any number of Miſdemeanours ſhould produce a Treaſon, purely by Mixture and Complication: If this were the Caſe, the Statute could give no Relief to the Subject; becauſe the Law makes no mention of Treaſon by Emergency or Complication of leſſer Crimes: It neither informs us what Number, or what Nature of Crimes below Treaſon, ſhould make a Treaſon, nor that any Number of Offences ſhould operate thus far.

They obſerve farther, there is a Clauſe in the Statute 25 Ed. 3. that when the Judges found the Caſe perplex'd, they were not to give Judgment till the Cauſe was brought before the Parliament. From hence it may ſeem to be inferr'd, there are Treaſons unmention'd in the Statute, which may be declar'd in Parliament, To this Objection they anſwer, that 'tis expreſly provided by the Clauſe, that it was to be declar'd in Parliament, whether the Crime ought to be adjudged Treaſon or Felony. From whence it appears, the Offence ſhould at leaſt be Felony at the Common Law. And that no Crimes, beneath Felony, were ever intended to be ſtretch'd to Treaſon by this Statute. And in the late Caſe of the Earl of Straſford, there is a Treaſon within this Law charg'd and declar'd in the Bill of his Attainder, to have been prov'd upon him.

And to fortify their Argument, it may be obſerv'd, that as to the Clauſe laſt mention'd, a Petition was preferr'd by the Lords in the Reign of King Henry VIII, to have all Treaſons limited by Statute (w). And in the Parliament an Act was made, whereby the Salvo in 25 Ed. 3. was repealed, and nothing to be Treaſon but what was literally comprehended in the Statute 25 Ed. 3. (x). They urge other Things upon this Head, which may be omitted: And through the whole Argument, they confine themſelves to the Nature and Degree of the Crimes exhibited in the Articles, without medling with Matter of Fact, or whether the Particulars of the Charge were prov'd or not (y).

October 28. A Petition handed about in the City for bringing the Archbiſhop to Juſtice.

About a fortnight forward, a Petition was handed through the City and Suburbs, for bringing Delinquents to Juſtice: And ſome of the Preachers animated the People to exert their Zeal upon this Occaſion, letting them know, the Glory of God, and the Good of the Church would be promoted this way. This Petition, in which no Perſons were nam'd, except the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Biſhop of Ely, was ſign'd by great Numbers, and deliver'd to the Houſe of Commons. And here the Archbiſhop obſerves, that neither the Lord-Mayor, or the Sheriffs, gave any Check to this illegal and ſanguinary Method; tho' the Buſineſs was publickly known, and the People exhorted to ſubſcribe in their Pariſh-Churches. The Archbiſhop afterwards deliver'd the Subſtance of his Defence at the Bar of the Houſe of Commons.

Id. pag. 431, 432.

After the Trial was over, the Houſes thought fit to proceed by way of Attainder: The Bill paſs'd with the Commons, November 16, but it was much longer before the Lords were ſatisfied. In the mean time great Care was taken to puſh them to a Concurrence. For inſtance, Stroud was ſent with a Meſſage from the Commons to quicken them in this Buſineſs: He took the Freedom to tell them, That they ſhould do well to agree in the Ordinance, or elſe the Multitude would come down and force them to it. Notwithſtanding this Menacing, when the Articles of Impeachment were put to the Judges, they unanimouſly declar'd, that nothing charg'd upon the Archbiſhop, was Treaſon by the Laws of the Realm, And the Lords at a Conference with the Commons, own'd themſelves of the ſame Opinion. And now to ſmite more ſolemnly with the Fiſt of Wickedneſs, a Faſt was order'd for Chriſtmas-Day. If the two Houſes had been Jews, they could hardly have put a more open Affront upon Chriſtianity. To proceed, the Lords at laſt, with a very thin Appearance, went through the Bill; there being not above Twelve, or as one Hiſtorian reports, only Seven in the Houſe (z). Six of this Number, were the Earls of Kent, Pembroke, Saliſbury and Bullingbrooke, the Lord North, and the Lord Gray of Wark. To ſtop the Conſequence of this Attainder, the Archbiſhop pleaded the King's Pardon under the Great Seal, ſign'd about two Years ſince. But this Protection was over-rul'd by both Houſes. 1. Becauſe it was granted before Conviction. And 2. If it had been ſubſequent, yet in this Caſe of Treaſon againſt the Kingdom, (as they call'd it) it could ſignify nothing (a).

Jan. 10.

And now the Archbiſhop having Notice of his Execution, breaks off his Hiſtory, and prepares for Death *: And the Day being come, mounts the Scaffold with an Air of Reſolution and Chearfulneſs. His Speech begins with a Text: Let us run with Patience the Race that is ſet before us, looking unto Jeſus, &c. †. And here I ſhall only give the Reader the Subſtance of ſome Part of what he deliver'd.

* The Abp. continued the Hiſt. of his Troubles, &c. till the 4*th of* Jan.

† Heb. 12. 2.

The Abp's Speech and Behaviour at his Execution.

“After having made an Alluſion between his Sufferings and the Iſraelites paſſing through the Red-Sea, he put the Company in Mind, that when God's Servants were forc'd, as it were, into this Refuge of the Sea, their Enemies were drown'd in the Purſuit. He was well aſſur'd God was able to deliver him from this Violence, as he did the three Children from the Furnace; and that by our Saviour's Aſſiſtance, his Reſolution was the ſame with theirs: They refuſ'd to worſhip the Image the King had ſet up, neither would he idolize the Imaginations of the People, nor forſake the Temple and Truth of God, to follow the Bleating of Jeroboam's Calves in Dan and Bethel. As for the People, they were miſerably miſled, (God in his Mercy open their Eyes) for now the Blind lead the Blind: And if they go on, they will both certainly fall into the Ditch. He was not only (as he continues) the firſt Archbiſhop, but the firſt Man, that ever dy'd by an Ordinance in Parliament *. Yet ſome of his Predeceſſors had been forc'd into the other World, tho' in a different Manner. For Elphegus loſt his Life by the Danes at the Sacking of Canterbury; and

* By an Ordinance, that is, the Votes of the Lords and Commonsonly, without the Bills being ſign'd by the King.

“Simon Sudbury was diſpatch'd in the Inſurrection headed by Jack Straw and Wat Tyler. Before theſe, St. John Baptiſt, had his Head danc'd off by a ſcandalous Woman. And St. Cyprian Archbiſhop of Carthage, was brought to the Block by Decius the Emperor. That the Uſage theſe great Men met with, was matter of Support to him: And that he hop'd his Cauſe wou'd appear in Heaven with a different Complexion from what was put upon it here. That his Charge, as foul as 'tis pretended, looks like that of the Jews againſt St. Paul. For this Apoſtle was accus'd as a great Criminal againſt the Law and the Temple. St. Stephen was likewiſe arraign'd for breaking the Ordinances which Moſes had deliver'd: That is, for endeavouring the Subverſion of the Laws and Religion of the Country. And here, to prevent Miſconſtruction, the Archbiſhop declar'd he did not pretend to draw a Parallel between theſe Saints and himſelf, nor affirm an Equality in the Caſes: But that theſe holy Men being miſreported, and ſtruck at, there was ſome Reſemblance in the Compariſon.

Acts 25. 3.

Acts 6. 14.

The next Thing I ſhall mention, is his clearing the King of being Popiſhly affected. “A Calumny, ſaith the Archbiſhop, hath paſs'd upon his Majeſty, as if he deſign'd to bring in Popery: But on my Conſcience (of which I ſhall give God a very preſent Account) I know him to be as free from this Charge, as any Man living: And I hold him to be as ſound a Proteſtant (according to the Religion by Law eſtabliſh'd) as any Man in this Kingdom. And that he will venture his Life as far and as freely for it. And I think I do, or ſhould know both his Affection to Religion, and his Grounds for it, as fully as any Man in England.

From hence he proceeds to complain, “Of the riotous Behaviour of the Populace in the City, and of their clamouring for Juſtice at the Parliament Houſe. That this was the way to draw the Guilt of Blood upon their Heads, and it may be a Judgment upon the City. That this mutinous Diſorder was uncheck'd by the Magiſtracy. That engaging the People was the Method taken in the Martyrdoms of St. Stephen and St. James, *and the apprehending St. Peter. And here he endeavours to affect them with the Danger of ſuch ſanguinary Courſes; and cites very awakening Texts to this purpoſe †.

“He laments the calamitous Condition of the Church of England: That ſhe is become like an Oak cleft in pieces with Wedges made out of her own Body. That Iniquity and Prophaneneſs ſtalks under the Pretence of Godlineſs: That the Subſtance of Religion is loſt. And that Church which ſtood firm againſt the Jeſuits Attacks, is terribly batter'd by her own Party.

For his own Belief, “He declares himſelf of the Communion of the Church of England, eſtabliſh'd by Law. And notwithſtanding the unreaſonable Clamours rais'd againſt him, has all along liv'd in that Perſuaſion *.

As to the Charge of High Treaſon, “He proteſts his Innocency, and declares his Abhorrence of the Crime. That tho' this Proteſtation was rejected at the Lords Bar, he hopes it may be admitted upon the Scaffold: And that People will have the Charity not to think him a Diſſembler at the Point of Death. And whereas he had been accus'd as an Enemy to Parliaments, he profeſſes his Regard for this part of the Conſtitution: And that he conceived them a happy Circumſtance in the Government. He does not deny his diſliking the Management of ſome Parliaments, and thinks his Exception well founded: For corruptio Optimi eſt Peſſima: The Beſt things, by Miſapplication and Abuſe, become the worſt. Thus the Parliament being the higheſt Court, from which there is no Appeal, when this laſt Reſort is miſinform'd, or miſgovern'd, 'tis turn'd to the moſt fatal Grievance: For in ſuch Caſes the Subject is left without Remedy.

After this Speech the Archbiſhop made a very pious and affecting Prayer; and then mov'd towards the Block: And finding the Paſſage crowded with People, he deſir'd them to make way, and give him Room to die. While he was preparing himſelf for the Executioner, one Sir John Clotworthy (remarkable for his Share in the Rebellion) gave him a very ill-natur'd Interruption. He ask'd him what Text of Scripture was moſt comfortable to a dying Man? The Archbiſhop anſwer'd, “Cupio diſſolvi & eſſe cum Chriſto. Sir John going on in his Barbarity, told him, there muſt be an Aſſurance to found that Deſire upon. The Archbiſhop return'd, that Aſſurance was to be found within, and that Expreſſion could not reach it. Clotworthy preſſing farther, ſaid, 'tis founded upon a Word though, and that Word wou'd be known. Laud reply'd to this effect, That 'twas the Word of God concerning Chriſt, and his dying for us. And finding this Gentleman might prove farther troubleſome, he turn'd to the Executioner, and kneeling down, had his Head, after a ſhort Prayer, ſever'd at a Blow (b).

Beſides what has already occurr'd touching his Character, it may be obſerv'd, he was of a lively and penetrating Genius, of a ſociable Temper, and inoffenſively pleaſant upon Occaſion. If we conſider his Function, he had paſs'd through almoſt all the Employments of a Churchman. And how much he was a Maſter in his Profeſſion, is ſufficiently evident from his Book againſt Fiſher. He was a Perſon of unblemiſh'd Integrity: Money was no part of his Inclination. For notwithſtanding the Largeneſs of his Revenues, his Fortune was almoſt exhauſted by his Benefactions to Oxon and Reading. His Piety was no leſs exemplary and diſtinguiſh'd; he was conſtant at his Chapel, and private Devotions. His warm Loyalty, and Zeal for Uniformity, brought him to his End. And tho' he was far from warping towards Popery rightly underſtood; 'tis poſſible he might believe a good Settlement capable of Improvement: That ſome part of the Reformation might be burniſh'd, and brought to a more beautiful and primitive State: That this was his Opinion, may be collected from the Preference he ſeems to give the Scottiſh Liturgy: And from his wiſhing the Foreign Reform'd Churches might be like the Church of England, and as much better as God ſhould pleaſe to make them *. To proceed: The Earl of Clarendon deſcribes his Temper ſomewhat ſudden, and that his Paſſion was too ſoon kindled: That he fail'd in a plauſible Application, neglected Addreſs, and believ'd bare Honeſty and vigorous Purſuit was ſufficient to carry him thorough. Notwithſtanding this Abatement, the noble Hiſtorian treats his Memory with great Regard at taking leave. He reports him a Perſon of eminent Learning and Piety: That he behav'd himſelf with great Chriſtian Courage and Magnanimity on the Scaffold: And that his good Qualities ties were obtain'd by a very few, and the greateſt of his Infirmities common even to the beſt of Men (c). The Archbiſhop dy'd in the 72d Year of his Age. Amongſt his publick Benefactions, beſides thoſe already mention'd, may be reckon'd his annexing Commendams to the ſmall Biſhopricks of Briſtol, Peterborough, St. Aſaph, Cheſter, and Oxford. He procur'd a Charter for Oxford to confirm their ancient Privileges, and enlarge them to an equal Extent with thoſe granted to the Univerſity of Cambridge. He ſettled two hundred Pounds per Annum upon an Hoſpital at Reading in Berkſhire. By the way, the Archbiſhop was born in this Town, where his Father was a Clothier of good Subſtance and Eſteem: His Mother was Lucy Web, Siſter to Sir William Web, Lord Mayor of London. To go on with his Benefactions. He founded an Arabick Lecture in Oxford, and ſettled the Impropriation of Cuddeſden on that Biſhoprick. He procur'd a new Charter, and a Body of Statutes for the College of Dublin: The reſt of his Benefactions ſhall be omitted. And beſides what was finiſh'd this way, he had ſeveral other things in Project: Amongſt the reſt, he reſolv'd to find out a way, and provide a Fund for the Augmentation of poor Vicaridges, and for ſettling the Tythes of London between the Clergy and City (d). He was bury'd in Barkin Church near the Tower, with the Office appointed by the Liturgy. This was ſomewhat extraordinary, conſidering the ſame Day the Lords agreed to the Archbiſhop's Attainder, they paſs'd an Ordinance, that the Book of Common Prayer ſhould be laid aſide, and the Directory (e) us'd inſtead of it. This Directory drawn by the Aſſembly of Divines, was tranſmitted in Parts to the Parliament: Where after a Debate in both Houſes, 'twas confirm'd with ſome ſmall Alterations. The Ordinance ſets forth,

An Ordinance for ſetting aſide the Common Prayer, and eſtabliſhing the Directory.

That the Lords and Commons aſſembled in Parliament, taking into ſerious Conſideration the manifold Inconveniences that have ariſen by the Book of Common Prayer in this Kingdom, and reſolving, according to their Covenant, to reform Religion according to the Word of God, and the Example of the beſt reform'd Churches; have conſulted with the Reverend, Pious, and Learned Divines, call'd together for that Purpoſe; and do judge it neceſſary that the ſaid Book of Common Prayer be aboliſh'd, and the Directory for the Publick Worſhip of God, herein after mention'd, be obſerv'd in all the Churches within this Kingdom.

After this they pretend to repeal the Statutes by which the Common Prayer ſtood eſtabliſh'd. In the Preface to their Directory they take notice, "'Tis evident from long and ſad Experience that the Liturgy, notwithſtanding all the Pains and Religious Intentions of the Compilers, has prov'd offenſive both to many of the godly at Home, and the reform'd Abroad: That injoyning the reading all the Prayers, heighten'd the Grievance. That the Number and Quality of the Ceremonies, made them unprofitable and burthenſome: That they have occaſion'd much Miſchief; diſquieted the Conſciences of many godly Miniſters and People; depriv'd them of the Ordinances of God, which they could not enjoy without Conformity; thrown them out of their Function and Subſiſtance, and ruin'd their Families. That the Prelates and their Faction, have put too great a Value upon it, as if God was to be worſhipp'd no other way but in the Service-Book: That in Conſequence of this Opinion, the preaching of the Word was much hinder'd and depretiated.

"That the Papiſts made their Advantage this way, boaſted that the Common Prayer came up to a Compliance with a great part of their Service; and by this means were not a little confirm'd in their Superſtitions.

"That the Liturgy has given great Encouragement to an idle and unedifying Miniſtry; who chuſe rather to acquieſce in Forms made to their hands, than to exert themſelves in exerciſing the Gift of Prayer; a Gift, with which our Saviour Chriſt furniſhes all thoſe call'd by him to that Office.

"For theſe, and many other reſembling Conſiderations, they have agreed to ſet aſide the Common Prayer, not out of any Affectation of Novelty, not with any Intention to diſparage our firſt Reformers, of whom they make honourable Mention, but that they may, in ſome meaſure, anſwer the gracious Providence of God, which now calls upon them for farther Reformation: That they may ſatisfie their own Conſciences, and come up to the Expectation of other Reform'd Churches: That they may make many of the Godly among themſelves eaſy, and give ſome publick Teſtimony of their Endeavours for Uniformity in Divine Worſhip, purſuant to what they had promis'd in their ſolemn League and Covenant (f).

A brief Abſtract of the Directory.

And here the Reader may obſerve, that this Directory of theirs gives only general Rules, preſcribes in Minutes, and points out the Heads for Worſhip and Paſtoral Function: So that, in ſhort, the Miniſters were left to a great deal of diſcretionary Latitude in filling up the Lines, and beating out the Form. To mention ſomewhat briefly of the Particulars. The Directory forbids all Salutations and Civil Ceremony in Churches: This is a commendable Regulation: For the Church is the Preſence: And therefore, according to the Cuſtom in Princes Courts, no Signs of Submiſſion or Regard ſhou'd be paid to any, but the Sovereign. The reading the Scriptures in the Congregation is declar'd part of the Paſtoral Office: However, thoſe who deſign themſelves for this Calling, may read the Word, and exerciſe their Talent in preaching, provided they are allow'd by the Presbytery. All the Canonical Books of the Old and New Teſtament (but none of the Apocrypha) are to be publickly read in the vulgar Tongue: And for this purpoſe the beſt-allow'd Tranſlation is to be us'd: But which that is, they do not tell us. How large a Portion is to be read at once, is left to the Miniſter. When the Miniſter judges expounding neceſſary, he has the Liberty of that Exerciſe: But then it muſt not be done till the Chapter or Pſalm is ended. And over and above, Care muſt be taken, that neither Preaching or any Ordinance may be ſtreightned, or grow tedious.

For the Prayer before Sermon, the Heads are ſtruck out to a conſiderable Length; Part of the Prayer for the King was, to ſave him from evil Council: Likewiſe to pray for the Converſion of the Queen, and for a Bleſſing upon the High-Court of Parliament then in open Rebellion.

For managing the Sermon, theſe Rules are deliver'd. The Introduction to the Text, muſt be ſhort and clear, drawn from the Words, or Context, or ſome parallel Place of Scripture. In dividing the Text, the Miniſter is to regard the Order of the Matter, more than that of the Words. Not to burthen the Memory of the Audience with too many Parts, nor perplex their Underſtandings with logical Language and Terms of Art. If any Difficulty ariſes from Scripture, from the Nature of the Diſcourſe, or the Prejudice of the Hearers, 'twill be requiſite to diſentangle the Knot, to reconcile the ſeeming Contradiction, and remove the Grounds of Miſtake; otherwiſe the ſtarting and anſwering unneceſſary Objections, is rather an Hindrance to Edification. 'Tis ſometimes requiſite to give ſome Notes of Trial for the Congregation to examine themſelves upon, whether they have attain'd thoſe Graces, or perform'd thoſe Duties to which they are exhorted: Whether they are guilty of the Sin reproved, in Danger of the Judgments threatned, or qualify'd for the Privilege and Comfort held forth. The Miniſter is to decline an unprofitable Uſe of learned Languages, uncommon Phraſes, Affectation of Cadences and Words: And ſeldom to make any Citations from any Eccleſiaſtical or other Humane Writers, either ancient or modern.

In the Prayer after Sermon, ſome of the moſt uſeful Heads are to be turn'd into Petitions; that what has been deliver'd, may prove ſerviceable to the Hearer.

The Uſe of the Lord's-Prayer, is likewiſe recommended as a Pattern and moſt comprehenſive Form of Devotion.

As Baptiſm is not unneceſſarily to be delayed, ſo neither is it to adminiſter'd in any Caſe by any private and unordain'd Perſon: Neither is this Sacrament to be adminiſter'd any where but at Church, in the Face of the Congregation: The Child is to be offer'd to Baptiſm by the Father, or ſome Friend, in Caſe of his neceſſary Abſence. And here the Miniſter is to declare, that outward Baptiſm is not ſo neceſſary as to bring the Infant in Danger of Damnation, thro' the Want of it. At the receiving the Lord's-Supper, the Table being decently cover'd, is to be ſo plac'd that the Communicants may ſit about it: But the Poſture of the Miniſter, or the Order when he is to communicate himſelf, is not preſcrib'd. Upon the Lord's-Day, the Intervals between Publick Worſhip, and the Time after Evening Worſhip, are to be ſpent in Reading, Meditation, Repetition of Sermons, Catechiſing their Families, holy Conferences, Prayer for a Bleſſing upon the publick Ordinances, ſinging Pſalms, viſiting the Sick, and relieving the Poor.

The Dead are to be bury'd without any Prayers, or Religious Ceremony. However, They had the Moderation to allow the uſe of Eſcutcheons, and ſuch other diſtinctions ſuitable to the Condition of the deceas'd. Matrimony, Viſitation of the Sick, Faſting and Thankſgivings, have little particular and extraordinary in the Appointment; excepting that the Forms in moſt of them, are left to the Miniſter's Diſcretion.

Jan. 30. 1644-5

The latter end of this Month, Commiſſioners were ſent from Oxford and the two Houſes at Weſtminſter, to endeavour an Accommodation. The Treaty opened at Uxbridge in Middleſex: I ſhall only mention that Part of it, which relates to Religion. The King's Inſtructions to his Commiſſioners upon this Head are theſe “And here (to ſpeak in his Majeſty's Perſon and Words) the Government of the Church will be the chief Queſtion; wherein two things are to be conſider'd, Conſcience and Policy. For the firſt, I muſt declare unto you, ſays the King, that I can't yield to the change of the Government by Biſhops, not only becauſe I fully concur with the moſt general Opinion of Chriſtians in all Ages, in Epiſcopacy's being the beſt Government; but likewiſe I hold my ſelf particularly bound by the Oath I took at my Coronation, not to alter the Government of this Church from what I found it: And as for the Churches Patrimony, I can't ſuffer any Diminution or Alienation of it; it being without Peradventure, Sacrilege, and likewiſe contrary to my Coronation Oath. But whatſoever ſhall be offer'd for rectifying Abuſes, if any have crept in, or for the eaſe of tender Conſciences, (provided the Foundation is not indamag'd). I am contented to hear, and willing to return a gracious Anſwer. Touching the Second, that is, the Point of Policy; as it is the King's duty to protect the Church, ſo the Church is reciprocally bound to aſſiſt the King in the Maintenance of his juſt Authority. Upon this View, my Predeceſſors have been always careful (eſpecially ſince the Reformation) to keep the dependency of the Clergy entirely upon the Crown, without which 'twill ſcarcely ſit faſt on the King's Head; therefore you muſt do nothing to change or leſſen this natural dependency (g).

The King's Inſtructions to his Commiſſioners at Uxbridge.

Love's ſeditious Sermon.

The Day before the Treaty began, one Love, a Parliamentarian Divine, preach'd a ſcandalous and ſeditious Sermon, reflecting upon his Majeſty's Honour, and the Integrity of his Intentions; telling the Audience that thoſe Lords and others, ſent thither by his Majeſty, came with Hearts full of Blood, and that there was as great diſtance between this Treaty and Peace, as between Heaven and Hell; with ſeveral other mutinous Expreſſions for raiſing Diſtruſt and Diſaffection to his Majeſty. The King's Commiſſioners complain'd of this Uſage, but receiv'd no other Satisfaction than that Love's Behaviour ſhould be reported to the Lords and Commons at Weſtminſter (h).

The Propoſitions given in by the Commiſſioners, ſent by the Parliament.

The Demands of the Commiſſioners ſent from Weſtminſter were theſe: “That a Bill might be paſs'd for aboliſhing and taking away all Archbiſhops, Biſhops, &c. purſuant to the Propoſition ſent to the King at Oxford, already mention'd.

“That the Ordinances concerning the calling and ſitting of the Aſſembly Divines, be confirm'd by Act of Parliament. That the Directory for publick Worſhip, and the Propoſitions concerning Church-Government hereunto annex'd, and paſs'd both Houſes, be enacted as a Part of Reformation of Religion, and Uniformity.

“That his Majeſty take the ſolemn League and Covenant, and that an Act of Parliament be paſs'd in both Kingdoms, for injoyning the taking it by all the Subjects of the Three Kingdoms.

Their Paper annex'd, explains the Nature of of their Church-Government, and moves for his Majeſty's Aſſent, that it may be ſettled upon the Plan propos'd. The Contents are as follows.

“That the ordinary way of dividing Chriſtians into diſtinct Congregations, and moſt expedient for Edification, is by the reſpective Bounds of their Dwellings.

“That the Miniſter and other Church Officers in each particular Congregation, ſhall joyn in the Government of the Church, in ſuch manner as ſhall be eſtabliſh'd by Parliament.

“That

“ That many particular Congregations ſhall be under one Presbyterial Government.

“ That the Church be govern'd by Congregational, Claſſical, and Synodical Aſſemblies, in ſuch manner as ſhall be eſtabliſh'd by Parliament.

“ That Synodical Aſſemblies, ſhall conſiſt both of Provincial and National Aſſemblies.

To ſhew how much inclin'd his Majeſty was for quieting the publick Diſtractions, he impower'd his Commiſſioners to make the following Conceſſions.

Conceſſions made by the King's Commiſſioners.

“ We are willing, ſay they, that Freedom be left to all Perſons of what Opinion ſoever in Matters of Ceremony; and that all the Penalties of the Laws and Cuſtoms which enjoyn theſe Ceremonies, be ſuſpended.

“ Secondly, That the Biſhops ſhall exerciſe no Act of Juriſdiction or Ordination, without the Conſent and Council of the Presbyters; who ſhall be choſen by the Clergy of each Dioceſs, out of the learnedeſt and graveſt Miniſters of that Dioceſs.

“ Thirdly, That the Biſhop keep his conſtant Reſidence in his Dioceſs, except when he ſhall be required by his Majeſty, to attend him on any occaſion. And that if he be not hindred by the Infirmities of old Age, or Sickneſs, he ſhall Preach every Sunday in ſome Church within his Dioceſs.

“ Fourthly, That the Ordination of Miniſters ſhall be always in a publick and ſolemn Manner, and very ſtrict Rules obſerv'd concerning the ſufficiency and other Qualifications of thoſe Men who ſhall be receiv'd into Holy Orders; and the Biſhop ſhall not receive any into Holy Orders, without the Approbation and Conſent of the Presbyters, or the Major Part of them.

“ Fifthly, That competent Maintenance and Proviſion be eſtabliſh'd by Act of Parliament, to ſuch Vicaridges as belong to Biſhops, Deans and Chapters, out of the Impropriations, and according to the value of thoſe Impropriations of the ſeveral Pariſhes.

“ Sixthly, That for the time to come, no Man ſhall be capable of two Parſonages or Vicaridges with Cure of Souls.

“ Seventhly, That towards the ſettling of publick Peace, an Hundred Thouſand Pounds ſhall be rais'd by Act of Parliament, out of the Eſtates of Biſhops, Deans and Chapters; in ſuch manner as ſhall be thought fit by the King, and Two Houſes of Parliament; without the Alienation of any of the ſaid Lands.

“ Eightly, That the Juriſdiction in Cauſes Teſtamentary, Decimals and Matrimonial, be ſettled in ſuch Manner as ſhall ſeem moſt convenient, by the King and two Houſes of Parliament; and likewiſe that one or more Acts of Parliament be paſs'd for regulating Viſitations, and againſt immoderate Fees in Eccleſiaſtical Courts, and the abuſes by frivolous Excommunications, and all other abuſes in the exerciſe of Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, in ſuch Manner as ſhall be agreed upon by his Majeſty, and both Houſes of Parliament.

And if your Lordſhips ſhall inſiſt upon any other thing, which your Lordſhips ſhall think neceſſary for Reformation; we ſhall very willingly apply our ſelves to the Conſideration thereof (i).

The Divines who aſſiſted at the Treaty.

The King's Commiſſioners deſir'd they might receive an anſwer in Writing, and that for the better underſtanding each other, this Method might be held through the whole Treaty. This Motion being conteſted for ſome time; 'twas reſolv'd on both ſides to hear the Divines of either Party. Dr. Steward, Clerk of the Cloſet, was one of the King's Commiſſioners in things relating to the Church. Mr. Alexander Henderſon, appear'd with the ſame Character for the Parliament. Dr. Sheldon, afterwards Archbiſhop of Canterbury. Dr. Lany, afterwards Biſhop of Ely. Dr. Fern, afterwards Biſhop of Cheſter. Dr. Potter, Dean of Worceſter; and Dr. Hammond; all of them the King's Chaplains, were ſent by his Majeſty to aſſiſt in the Diſpute, and ſupport Dr. Stuart, as occaſion requir'd. On the Parliament ſide, beſides the Commiſſioner Mr. Alexander Henderſon, Mr. Marſhall, and Mr. Vines, the firſt benefic'd in Eſſex, and the other in Warwickſhire, and Mr. Cheynel, formerly Fellow of Merton College in Oxon, appear'd as Auxiliaries.

Henderſon's Arguments againſt Epiſcopacy.

“ Henderſon, inſtead of cloſe reaſoning, argued in a Declamatory Manner. He endeavour'd to ſhew the Neceſſity of changing the Government of the Church, for the Preſervation of the State. That the publick Repoſe could not be recover'd any other way, and that therefore this expedient ought in Conſcience not to be declin'd. That the ſupporting the Civil and Eccleſiaſtical Government upon the preſent Foot, was impracticable. And therefore that Epiſcopacy ought to be reſign'd to the Intereſt of the State. That now the Queſtion was not whether the Government of the Church by Biſhops was lawful, but whether it was ſo neceſſary that Chriſtianity could not ſubſiſt without it: That this later Queſtion could not be affirmatively maintain'd without condemning all the Reform'd Churches in Europe, in which there were no Biſhops, England only excepted. That the Parliament which beſt underſtood what was ſerviceable for the Nation, had found Epiſcopacy a very inconvenient and corrupt Government: That the Hierarchy had been a publick Greivance from the Reformation downwards: That the Biſhops had always abetted Popery, kept on many ſuperſtitious Rites and Cuſtoms in their Worſhip and Government: And over and above, had lately brought in a great many Novelties into the Church, and made a nearer Approach to the Roman Communion: And all this to the great Scandal of the Proteſtant Churches of Germany, France, Scotland, and Holland: That the Prelates had embroyl'd the Britiſh Iſland, and made the two Nations of Scotland and England fall foul upon each other: That the Rebellion in Ireland, and the preſent Civil War in England, may be charg'd upon them: That for theſe Reaſons the Parliament had reſolv'd to change this inconvenient miſchievous Government, and ſet another in the room of it, more naturally form'd for the Advancement of Piety: That this alteration was the beſt expedient to unite all Proteſtant Churches, and extinguiſh the remains of Popery: And that he hop'd the King would concur in ſo commendable and godly an undertaking: That he conceiv'd his Majeſty's Perſuaſion could not be urg'd againſt ſuch a complyance; for by his conſenting to the Suppreſſion of the Prelacy in Scotland; 'tis evident the King's Conſcience was not bound up to Epiſcopacy, neither could he believe that form of Eccleſi-

(k) Ld. Clarendon's Hiſt. Rebellion, Book 8.

"Dr. Steward addreſſing the Commiſſioners, reply'd; He knew their Lordſhips were too well acquainted with the Conſtitution of the Church of England, and the Baſis upon which it ſtood; to imagine it could be ſhaken by the force of Mr. Henderſon's Rhetorick: That tho' he was firmly of Opinion, that a Government which from the firſt planting of Chriſtianity in England, had continued here without Interruption: That a Government under which Chriſtianity had ſpread and flouriſh'd to a remarkable Degree, could have any thing vitious or Antichriſtian in its Frame: Notwithſtanding this Opinion of his, he could expect no leſs than that thoſe who had ſworn themſelves to an Abolition of this Primitive Conſtitution, and came hither to perſuade their Lordſhips and his Majeſty to a Concurrence, would not have gone lower in their Argument than the Unlawfulneſs of the Government they preſs'd ſo ſtrongly to remove. That tho' in their Sermons and Prints they gave Epiſcopacy an Antichriſtian Addition, Mr. Henderſon had prudently declin'd charging ſo deep, and only argued from the Inconveniences of this Government, and the Advantages which would be conſequent upon Alteration. But of this no Judgment could be made, till they had given in a Scheme of the Government, they intended ſhould ſucceed it. And in regard the Union with the Proteſtant Churches Abroad, ſeem'd to be the main Reaſon for ſo remarkable a Change; he deſir'd it might be declar'd what foreign Church they deſign'd for a Pattern. That he was well aſſur'd the Model in their Directory had no ſtrong Reſemblance to any Foreign Reform'd Churches. And tho' he would not enter upon a Cenſure of thoſe Proteſtant Communions, yet 'twas well known, that the moſt learned Men of thoſe Churches had lamented a defect in their Reformation: And that the want of Epiſcopacy which the State would not ſuffer, was an unhappy Circumſtance. That they had always paid a particular Reverence to the Church of England, look'd on it as the moſt perfect Conſtitution upon the ſcore of its having retain'd all that was venerable in Antiquity. From hence he proceeded to enlarge upon the Apoſtolical Inſtitution of Epiſcopacy, and endeavour'd to prove that without Biſhops the Sacerdotal Character could not be convey'd, nor the Sacraments adminiſter'd to any Significancy.

"As to his Majeſty's having conſented to the putting down Epiſcopacy in Scotland, he would preſume to ſay nothing; tho' he knew his Majeſty's preſent Thoughts upon that Subject: Only this might be obſerv'd, that the King was farther oblig'd in this Kingdom, than in the other; that in England he was ty'd by his Coronation Oath to maintain the Rights of the Church: And that this ſingle Engagement was a reſtraint upon his Majeſty's Conſcience, not to conſent either to the Abolition of Epiſcopacy, or the Alienation of Church Lands.

This Argument was debated by the reſt of the Divines on each ſide for almoſt two Days together. At the cloſe of the Diſpute, the King's Commiſſioners deſir'd thoſe for the Parliament to acquaint them in Writing. whether they believ'd Epiſcopacy plainly unlawful: But to this Queſtion they could never get a clear Anſwer.

Charles I. K.

The Creed and the Ten Commandments not put in the Directory, and why.

Feb. 22. 1644-5.

While the Buſineſs of Religion was under Debate, one of the King's Commiſſioners ask'd an Acquaintance of his deputed by the Parliament, why their Directory makes no mention at all of the Creed, or the Ten Commandments? By the way, this Queſtion was put when the Commiſſioners were not ſitting in their publick Character, but converſing in a Room as Friends. The Earl of Pembroke over-hearing what was ſoftly pronounc'd, anſwer'd aloud with his cuſtomary Paſſion: "That himſelf, and many others were ſorry the Creed and Decalogue were left out in the Directory: That this Point had been debated ſeveral Hours in the Houſe of Commons; that the leaving them out was carry'd by Eight or Nine Votes: And that upon this account the Houſe of Peers did not think fit to inſiſt upon inſerting them. This was an odd diſcovery in Lord Pembroke; and look'd like extraordinary Zeal in the Members at Weſtminſter, that the Creed and the Ten Commandments ſhould be put to the Queſtion, and have it carry'd againſt them. After ſeveral Days Debate, the Commiſſioners coming to no Agreement either in Church or State Matters; the Treaty broke up.

The Weſtminſter Lords and Commons fleſh'd with their late Victory or Naſeby, repeat their Ordinance for putting the Directory in Execution, with Penalties upon thoſe who refus'd to comply, or made uſe of the Common-Prayer. If any Perſon preach'd or printed againſt the Directory, he was to forfeit ſuch a Sum of Money as thoſe who try'd him thought fit to impoſe; provided the Sum was not leſs than Five Pounds, nor more than Fifty. And thoſe who read the Common-Prayer either in Churches, or their Families, were to forfeit Five Pounds for the firſt Offence, as they call'd it; Ten Pounds for the ſecond, and ſuffer a Years Impriſonment without Bail or Mainprize, for the third (l).

The King in November following, Publiſh'd a Proclamation, counter to this pretended Ordinance; in which the uſe of the Common-Prayer is ſtrictly enjoyn'd, and the Directory charg'd with opening a liberty to Ignorance and Faction. That 'tis likely to miſlead People into Wickedneſs and Rebellion: And that, ſuppoſing the Miniſters never ſo well intention'd, it muſt of neceſſity break the Uniformity in God's Service, and occaſion Diviſions in the Church (m).

The Aſſembly-Divines, before they come up to a direct Anſwer, inſiſt upon the following Preliminaries.

Firſt, That whatever Indulgence they ſhall agree to, they take it for granted upon what has been already offer'd by their independent Brethren, that the ſame Directory for Worſhip, and the ſame Confeſſion of Faith, ſhall be equally impos'd upon both Parties: And therefore

Secondly, Whoever falls ſhort of coming thus far towards an Uniformity; whoever refuſes to aſſent to the Subſtance of Divine Worſhip held forth in the Directory; whoever diſallows the Confeſſion of Faith, or diſſents from the Doctrines of the Reform'd Churches, contained in their Confeſſions and Writings, muſt not expect the Beneſit of this Toleration. And Thirdly, If any one ſhall claſh with the Directory, in his Practice, and write or argue againſt the Confeſſion of Faith, he muſt expect to ſuffer the ſame Penalties, the Presbyterians would incur upon ſuch Miſbehaviour. Having premiſ'd this, the Aſſembly-Divines anſwer'd, that the Independents Requeſt was not to be granted for the following Reaſons.

The Presbyterians Reaſons againſt it.

1. “Becauſe it imports a plain and total Separation from the Rule; as if it was not to be comply'd with in any Point, nor the Presbyterian Churches to be communicated with in any thing which infers Church Communion. More than this, ſay they, could not be objected againſt falſe Churches.

2. “This Requeſt ſuppoſes the Lawfulneſs of gathering Churches out of true Churches; and over and above out of ſuch true Churches, which are endeavouring a farther Reformation: And that in countenance of this Liberty, there is not the leaſt Example in all the holy Scriptures.

3. “This would encourage perpetual Schiſm and Diviſion in the Church, always drawing ſome off from the Churches under the Rule: That the Reſult would end in Miſunderſtandings and Animoſities between thoſe who went off, and the reſt that kept their Ground: And the ſame Conſequence would happen between the Church deſerted and the Congregations new form'd.

Dec. 23.

To theſe Reaſons the Diſſenting Brethren returned a Reply. For ſatisfying the firſt Reaſon, they argue,

“That forming Congregations of ſuch Members who can't out of Tenderneſs of Conſcience go through all the Conditions required in theſe Churches; to form ſuch Congregations for the purer Enjoyment (as theſe Independents believe) of all Ordinances, yet ſtill maintaining Communion with the Presbyterians, as Churches; this, they ſay, is far from Separation. 'Tis not ſetting up Churches againſt Churches, but only retiring to a neighbourly Situation, and conſtituting Siſter Churches of a different Judgment.

2*dly*, They can't be charg'd with an open and total Separation from the Rule, unleſs they diſagree in every Thing, and conſtitute their Society upon Regulations wholly different with reſpect to Worſhip and Government. But ſuch a Diſtance is far from their Intention: They deſign to practice towards an Uniformity, and retain the moſt ſubſtantial Things preſcrib'd by the Rule it ſelf.

3*dly*, “They declare themſelves willing to maintain Occaſional Communion with the Presbyterian Churches; not only in Hearing and Preaching, but occaſionally in Baptizing their Children in their Churches, and receiving the Lord's-Supper there.

Theſe were large Advances: They profeſs'd their Agreement with the Presbyterians in the main Things: They own them for true Churches, and offer'd to maintain Occaſional Communion with them. However, all this Conceſſion was not ſufficient to acquit them of the Imputation of Schiſm in the Opinion of the Aſſembly Divines, who make their Rejoinder to this Effect.

1. “They argue, that tho' Tenderneſs of Conſcience may oblige to forbear or ſuſpend the Act of Communion in a Caſe ſcrupled, and ſuppos'd unlawful; yet it does not bind People to a Practice repugnant to the Will of God; of which kind they conceive the gathering ſeparate Churches out of true Churches, to be an Inſtance.

2. “'Tis one thing to remove to a Congregation under the ſame Rule, and another to a Congregation of a different Conſtitution from the Rule: In the firſt Caſe, a Man retains his Memberſhip, but renounces it in the latter. That this is done, appears from the different Judgments he makes touching the very Conſtitution of the reſpective Churches: For 'tis the different Qualities and Regulations which makes him quit one Society and retire to the other.

3. “They reply, that if a Church requires that which is Evil of any Member, he muſt forbear Complyance, but yet without Separation. Thus thoſe both in England and Scotland, who thought Kneeling at the Communion unlawful, did not ſeparate or renounce Memberſhip on this Score. On the contrary, ſome of them defended the Conſtitution of the eſtabliſhed Church, againſt thoſe of the Separation. And whereas the Independents had argued upon a Suppoſition of an Indulgence from the State, for gathering Churches: To this the Presbyterians anſwer.

4. “That the Notion of Separation is not to be determin'd by the Civil Legiſlature; not by Acts of State, but by the Word of God. Now by this Rule, the ſtanding off with Diſlike from any Church, and refuſing all ordinary Communion, is to ſeparate from ſuch a Church.

5. “They inſiſt, that a total Diſagreement from Churches, is not neceſſary to make a total Separation. For the moſt rigid Separatiſts hold the ſame Rule of Worſhip and Government with the Presbyterians. And therefore were this Latitude allow'd, Novatians, Donatiſts, and all thoſe that ſtood off from Catholick Communion, might ſhelter themſelves from the Imputation of Schiſm.

6. “The Presbyterians argue, that if the Independents can occaſionally exerciſe theſe Acts of Communion with them, once or twice, or thrice, without ſinning, they can't ſee any Reaſon why they cannot always communicate with them, without Sin: And if ſo, Separation and Church gathering would be unneceſſary. To ſeparate from theſe Churches ordinarily and openly, with whom we may occaſionally join without Sin, ſeems a moſt unjuſt Separation.

To their ſecond Reaſon, the diſſenting Brethren reply'd, firſt, “That 'twas founded on this Suppoſition, that nothing is to be tolerated which was unlawful in the Judgment of thoſe who are to grant the Toleration. This the Aſſembly-Divines deny'd, and ſaid, they argued upon the Suppoſition of the Unlawfulneſs to tolerate gathering of Churches out of true Churches, which the Independents have not endeavoured ſo much as to prove lawful.

“2. Theſe diſſenting Brethren urge farther, that if after all Endeavours, Mens Conſciences are unſatisfy'd as to Communion with a Church, they are then under no Obligation to continue in that Communion: Neither are ſuch ſcrupled Churches bound to reſtrain them from going off to more unexceptionable Churches, or if there happens to be none “ ſuch, to form a new ſpiritual Society of their own.

To this the Divines of the Aſſembly reply'd, firſt, “ That this Reaſoning opened a Gap for all Sects to challenge the ſame Liberty. And Second, that this Latitude of Practice was deny'd by the Churches of New England.

The Independents rally the Cauſe, and argue (1ſt,) “ That the Abuſe of the Word Schiſm has done the Church a great deal of Harm: That the Signification of it was not yet ſettled by the State, nor debated by the Aſſembly.

To this the Presbyterians return, “ That if the Word Schiſm had been left out, the reaſoning upon the Caſe would have continued in the ſame Force. That the Principle of the Independents gives Countenance to perpetual Diviſions in the Church; ſtill drawing away Churches from under the Rule: And what is countenancing an unneceſſary and unjuſt Separation, but countenancing a Schiſm? Eſpecially when the Grounds of this Separation may be pleaded by any erroneous Conſcience whatever: And thus by the ſame Equity, and Parity of Reaſoning, the Church may be broken into as many Subdiviſions, as there are different Scruples in the Minds of Men.

The Independents come on once more, and inſiſt, “ That this Indulgence will give Countenance only to Godly Peoples joining in other Congregations for their greater Edification; who cannot otherwiſe without Sin, enjoy all the Ordinances of Chriſt: That by ſuch going off, they do not cenſure the Churches they retire from as falſe, but eſteem them as Members of the Body of Chriſt, and join with them in all Dutys of Worſhip as far as they are able: And this Conſcientious Practice they conceive, can neither be call'd Schiſm, or countenancing it: And that ſo deep a cenſure can't be juſtify'd by Scripture, or any good Eccleſiaſtical Authority.

“ To this the Aſſembly-Divines anſwer'd, That this Indulgence deſir'd, is no better than a Licence for perpetual Diviſion in the Church: And a conſtant Revolt from the Rule muſt be the conſequence of it. For upon the ſame pretence, thoſe who ſcruple Infant-Baptiſm, may withdraw from the Independent Churches, and go off into another Congregation: And in this new Shelter ſome danger may be apprehended, and carry the ſcrupuling Perſons to a farther diſtance: And are theſe Subdiviſions and Fractions in Church Government, as lawful, as they may be infinite? Or muſt we give that regard to Erroneous Conſciences as to ſatisfy Mens Scruples by ſo unbounded a Liberty? Does not this plainly import that Error in Conſcience is a Protection againſt Schiſm?

“ 2. The not condemning our Churches as Falſe, continue the Presbyterians, extenuates the charge of Separation but a very little: For ſeveral of the Browniſts who have totally ſeparated in former Times, have not condemn'd the Churches they quitted as Falſe. However, tho' they do not pronounce an open and deciſive Sentence, their Practice amounts to little leſs: For the very ſeparating ſuppoſes Error and Impurity in the Churches from which they depart.

“ 3. Tho' the Presbyterians don't pronounce all Difference in Judgment, or Inconformity in Practice, Schiſm, provided Communion is preſerv'd: Yet they affirm that joining in Congregations of another Communion is a plain Rupture, ſplits a Society; and amounts to Formal Schiſm. And if the Apoſtle calls thoſe Diviſions of the Church Schiſms, where the Chriſtians did not diſagree ſo far as to ſeparate into diſtinct and oppoſite Communions; the Separation deſir'd by the Independents will lie fuller under that Imputation.

“ 4. They affirm in deciſive Language, that Scruple of Conſcience is no good Plea againſt the Charge of Schiſm: To make the Defence unexceptionable, the Motives muſt have more Weight in them; and the Grounds of Separation muſt be juſtify'd from the Nature of the thing.

An Ordinance for Suſpending ſcandalous Perſons from the Sacrament.

Octob. 20. A. D. 1645.

To go ſomewhat backwards: The Lords and Commons at Weſtminſter gave Directions in an Ordinance for ſuſpending ſcandalous Perſons from the Lord's Supper. The Crimes are too long to mention; only it may be obſerv'd Rebellion is none of them. Perſons of ill Fame in any of the particulars were to be examin'd by the Elderſhip of every Congregation: This Ordinance concludes with a Proviſo, that the Members of both Houſes who are now Members of the Aſſembly of Divines, or any Seven of them, ſhall be a ſtanding Committee to pronounce upon the Cauſes of Suſpenſion from the Lords-Supper, not mention'd in this Ordinance (n).

Some few Weeks forward we meet with another Ordinance touching the Ordination of Miniſters.

The Perſon to be Ordain'd was to addreſs himſelf to the Presbytery of his Claſs. By the way, London was divided into Twelve Claſſes of Miniſters. And theſe Diviſions in the Country were proportion'd to the extent of the Shires.

An Ordinance touching Ordination of Miniſters.

To go on, the Candidate for Orders was to bring the Presbytery a Teſtimonial of his having taken the Covenant of the three Kingdoms, of his Diligence and Proficiency in his Studies, what Degrees he has taken in the Univerſity, and how long he has continu'd there. His Age was likewiſe to be enquir'd into, which muſt reach to four and twenty Years at leaſt; and to conclude his Morals and Regularity of Behaviour muſt be particularly regarded: The Rules for examining him are theſe.

Novem. 8. 1645.

1. The Party examin'd muſt be dealt with in a Brotherly way, with Mildneſs of Spirit, and with ſpecial Reſpect to the Gravity, Modeſty, and Quality of every one.

2. He ſhall be examin'd touching his skill in the Original Tongues, and that tryal to be made by reading the Hebrew and Greek Teſtament, and rendring ſome Portions of them into Latin; and enquiry alſo ſhall be made after his other Learning, and whether he hath skill in Logick and Philoſophy.

3. What Authors in Divinity he hath read, and is beſt acquainted with; and tryal ſhall be made of his Knowledge in the chief grounds of Religion, and of his Ability to defend the Orthodox Doctrine contained in them, againſt all unſound and erroneous Opinions, eſpecially thoſe of the preſent Age; of his skill in the ſenſe and meaning of ſuch Places of Scripture as ſhall be propos'd unto him in Caſes of Conſcience, and in the Chronology of Scripture, and of the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory.

4. If he hath not before preach'd in Publick, with Approbation of ſuch as are able to judge, he ſhall at a competent time aſſign'd him, and before the Presbytery, expound ſuch a Place as ſhall be given him.

5. He ſhall in a competent time alſo frame a Diſcourſe in Latin, upon ſuch a Common Place or Controverſy in Divinity, as ſhall be aſſigned him; and exhibit to the Presbytery ſuch Theſes as expreſs the Sum thereof, and maintain a Diſpute upon them.

(n) Ruſhworth's Hiſt. Collect. pt. 4. p. 210.

6. He ſhall preach before the People; the Presbytery, or ſome of the Miniſters of the Word, appointed by them, being preſent.

7. The Proportion of his Gifts in relation to the Place unto which he is call'd, ſhall be conſider'd.

8. Beſides the Tryal of his Gifts in Preaching, he ſhall undergo an Examination in the Premiſſes two ſeveral Days or more, if the Presbytery ſhall judge it neceſſary.

After the Ordination-Sermon, the Miniſter that preach'd was to require the Perſon Ordain'd to make a Profeſſion of his Belief, and the Integrity of his Intention in entring upon the holy Function. After this, the Presbytery or the Miniſters deputed by them, were to lay their Hands upon the Candidate with a ſhort Prayer or Benediction.

An Ordinance for Electing Elders.

'Twas reſolv'd by the Lords and Commons in February following, a Choice ſhould be made of Elders throughout the Kingdom of England and Wales. On the 14*th* of March this reſolution was form'd into an Ordinance. Theſe Elections were to be made by the Congregation, or the major part of ſuch as had taken the National Covenant: Theſe Electors were neither to be Minors, nor Servants. There was likewiſe a ſet of Perſons authoriz'd by this Ordinance call'd Triers, who were impower'd to hear and determine all exceptions againſt the legality of theſe Elections: And here 'twas farther ordain'd,

That all Sentences pronounc'd by the majority of the Triers preſent (provided the number is not under Seven) in each Claſſis, ſhall paſs as the Act of all the Triers of that Claſſis.

That the Committee of the Lords and Commons appointed for the judging of Scandal, ſhall have Power to conſtitute Triers within the Province of London where need ſhall require.

Id. Scobel's Collect. &c. fol. 165.

The majority of theſe Triers are Lay-Men throughout the twelve London Claſſes. If any Perſon under cenſure thought himſelf injur'd, he had the liberty of appealing from the Congregational to the Claſſical, from the Claſſical to the Provincial, and from thence to the National Aſſembly.

And here it may not be improper to obſerve, that this Scheme of Religion is drawn upon Eraſtian Principles: For the Ordinance ſets forth that the Congregational, Claſſical, Provincial and National Aſſemblies, were all of them to be ſubordinate to the Parliament.

The two Houſes having ſpent ſeveral Months in drawing Propoſals to be ſent to his Majeſty, touching a Peace: The Scotch Commiſſioners, excepted againſt part of the Draught. I ſhall mention only their Objections relating to Religion.

The Scotch diſagree with the two Houſes at Weſtminſter, in ſeveral Points of Church Government.

As to the Ordinances of the two Houſes, concerning Church Government, they agree with them in the Main. Only they deſire that no godly Miniſters may be excluded from being a Member of Claſſical, Provincial, and National Aſſemblies. They likewiſe deſire the time for the ordinary meeting of the National Aſſembly may be fix'd: With a reſerve of Power to the Parliament, to convene them when they pleaſe; and with a liberty to the Church to meet oftner upon neceſſary occaſions.

The Scotch Commiſſioners agree with the Lords and Commons upon the Rules concerning Suſpenſion from the Sacrament of the Lord's-Supper; only they deſire the Congregational Elderſhip may have Power to judge in Caſes of Scandal, not expreſs'd. This they conceived can't be conſtru'd lodging an Arbitrary Power in the Church. On the other ſide the appointing ſuch Provincial Commiſſioners as are ſettled in the Ordinance, will occaſion Diſputes, create a Diſconformity between this and other Churches; and is a mixture in Church Government altogether without Precedent. This Buſineſs therefore they conceive may be better manag'd by Aſſemblies of Miniſters and ruling Elders. They likewiſe agree to the Ordinance for Ordination of Miniſters; excepting that whereas this Proviſion is only temporary for a Twelve Month; they deſire it may be made perpetual.

April 1646.

Farther, the manner of ſubjecting Church-Aſſemblies to the Controulment and Deciſion of the Parliament; they conceive very liable to Miſtakes: The ſeeming Exemption likewiſe of ſome Diſtinctions of Perſons from Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures: The adminiſtring the Sacrament to ſome Perſons againſt the Conſcience of the Miniſtry and Elderſhip: Theſe and ſome other particulars, are more than they underſtand, and may be eaſily alter'd to a general Satisfaction. As for the remainder relating to the perpetual Officers of the Church, together with their reſpective Functions; the Order and Power of Church-Aſſemblies, the Directions for publick Repentance; the Rules for Excommunication and Abſolution: All theſe they deſire may be ſettled purſuant to the Covenant, and with the joynt Advice of the Divines of both Kingdoms (o).

Notwithſtanding this Remonſtrance, the two Houſes were unwilling to come under any Reſtraints, or part with their ſpiritual Empire. This Averſion appear'd ſufficiently by a Declaration of the Commons, in which they acquaint the two Kingdoms; they could by no means conſent to the granting an unlimited Juriſdiction, to near ten Thouſand Judicatories: That ſuch arbitrary ſway was inconſiſtent with the fundamental Laws of this Nation: And by neceſſary conſequence excluded the Parliament from having any ſhare in Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction.

June 5.

An Ordinance for ſettling Presbyterial Government.

Thus the two Houſes ſeem to have been afraid of the Scotch Diſcipline, and of being fetter'd too much in their Intereſt; their Pride or their Pleaſures. However, the King now broken in the Field, retiring to the Scotch Army, and caſting himſelf upon the Duty and Honour of that Party; the two Houſes thought it neceſſary to come towards a Complyance. The Scotch having the advantage of the King's Perſon in their Army, were not to be too much provok'd. The Juncture therefore proving ſomewhat unfriendly, they paſs'd an Ordinance for the preſent ſettling of the Presbyterial Government without delay (p). This Settlement notwithſtanding, was to continue but three Years, unleſs the Houſes thought fit to prolong the Term. But tho' this Government look'd but ſomewhat precarious and ſhort-liv'd; the London-Miniſters reſolv'd to exert themſelves, and practiſe upon the Scheme: To this purpoſe they publiſh'd a Paper entituled certain Conſiderations and Cautions agreed upon by the Miniſters of London and Weſtminſter, and within the Lines of Communication, June the nineteenth, 1646. according to which they reſolve to put the Presbyterial Government in execution, upon the Ordinances of Parliament before publiſh'd.

The two Houſes who reſolv'd to go through with Root and Branch Work, and ſettle at the greateſt diſtance from the Church of England, order'd the Aſſembly-Divines to examine the Nine- and Thirty Articles. This Summary it ſeems, was thought to reſemble the Primitive Syſtems too much; or not to come cloſe enough to Calvin's Inſtitutions. Theſe Divines carry'd their Review through Fourteen Articles, and with ſome Alterations brought them to a Conformity with their own Notions (q). But finding the reſt too ſtubborn for their purpoſe, they gave over the Attempt, and pitch'd upon a different Scheme. They thought it more practicable to form a new Confeſſion, than reconcile the old one. In this Performance they decree the Morality of the Sunday Sabbath, pronounce the Pope Antichriſt, the Son of Perdition, and the Man of Sin: The Calvinian Rigours of abſolute Predeſtination, irreſiſtable Grace, and the Impotency of the Will, are likewiſe intermix'd. But as to the Presbyterian Pretenſions to Eccleſiaſtical Authority, they fall much ſhort of the Scotch Claim. They are ſo frank as to yield the Civil Magiſtrate a Power of convening Church-Aſſemblies, of Superintending their Proceedings; that every thing may be done agreeably to the Will of God: And thus the Magiſtracy or Civil Legiſlature ſeems to be made the laſt Judge of Controverſy. But as to the Independency of the Church, the Divine Right of the Presbyteries, and the ſetting Chriſt upon his Throne, they are altogether ſilent. By their dropping theſe Privileges they had, in all likelihood handled the Pulſe of the two Houſes, and found their Veins beat too high to come under ſuch a Regimen.

They make a Confeſſion, and two Catechiſms.

This Confeſſion tho' imperfectly drawn, was offer'd by way of humble Advice to the Lords and Commons for the Sanction of an Ordinance: That being thus fortify'd, it might paſs for the Doctrine of the Church of England. Theſe Aſſembly-Divines publiſh'd another Compoſition of their Belief. 'Tis call'd the Larger Catechiſm: And is upon the Matter little more than giving another dreſs to their Confeſſion; 'tis put in the form of Queſtions and Anſwers to make it paſs, it may be, for ſome thing new under this Diſguiſe. But being ſomewhat too bulky to be taught in Schools, and poſſibly too difficult for Children to deal with; 'twas afterwards contracted to an Epitome, call'd the Leſſer Catechiſm, and recommended to publick Uſe as more inſtructive than that in the Common-Prayer (r).

It has been already obſerv'd, the two Houſes ſpent ſome time in drawing Propoſals, to be ſent to the King at New-Caſtle. When this Buſineſs was finiſh'd, the Earls of Pembroke and Suffolk, with four Members of the Commons were made Commiſſioners. I ſhall only mention two or three of the Articles. The King was deſir'd to ſwear and ſign the ſolemn League and Covenant, and enjoyn the taking of it in all his Dominions: That a Bill might paſs for aboliſhing all Archbiſhops, Biſhops, &c. That the Aſſembly of Divines might be confirm'd, and Reformation ſettled on the foot of the Covenant. The King demurring to theſe Points, Henderſon above-mention'd came to New-Caſtle, and importun'd his Majeſty to ſatisfy the two Houſes (s). The King alledging his Conſcience would not give him leave for ſuch a length of Conceſſion; there paſs'd ſome Papers between them upon the Subject of Church Government. To give the Reader part of the Argument.

The King and Henderſon debate the Controverſy of Church Government in ſeveral Papers.

The King's firſt Papers, May 29. 1646.

“The King in his firſt Paper declares, that no one thing gave him a greater reverence for the Reformation of his Mother the Church of England, than that it was done according to the Apoſtles Practice, neither with Multitude nor Tumult *. That it was manag'd within the Forms of the Conſtitution, and govern'd by thoſe whom his Majeſty conceives ought to have the Conduct of ſuch an Affair: That this advantage amongſt many other Reaſons, made his Majeſty believe the Work was perfect as to Eſſentials: And as to Church Government, his Majeſty obſerves the Engliſh Reformation has kept cloſe to Apoſtolical Appointment, and the Univerſal Cuſtom of the Primitive Church. That therefore the adhering to Epiſcopacy, is of the laſt Importance: That by altering the Form of the Hierarchy, the Prieſthood muſt ſink, and the Sacraments be adminiſter'd without Effect. For theſe Reaſons his Majeſty conceives Epiſcopacy neceſſary to the being of a Church: And over and above, he is bound by his Coronation-Oath, to ſupport the Church in the Condition he found it. And laſtly, He deſires to know of Henderſon what Warrant there is in the word of God, for Subjects to endeavour to force their King's Conſcience? Or to make him alter Laws againſt his Will?

Henderſon's firſt Paper, June 3. 1646.

“Henderſon after ſome Introduction of Reſpect, anſwers what the King offer'd from his Father's Example and his own Education; by putting him in mind of a ſaying of St. Ambroſe, Non eſt Pudor ad meliora tranſire; that it is neither Sin nor Shame to change for the better. That Symmachus in his harangue for the Pagan Religion, argues from the Topicks of Antiquity and the Conſtitution: That reſembling Reaſons were urg'd by the Jews againſt Chriſtianity, and may be made uſe of by the Court of Rome againſt the Reformation. Henderſon being ſenſible the King might take this for begging the Queſtion, endeavours to come a little cloſer. He wiſhes Religion was always when occaſion required, reform'd by the Civil Migiſtrate; and not left either to the Prelates or the People. However, he will have it, that when Princes are negligent, God ſtirs up the Subject to perform this Work. He takes notice that Jacob reform'd his own Family; that Moſes deſtroy'd the Golden Calf; that the good Kings of Judah reform'd the Church in their Time. But that ſuch Reformation was perfect, he will by no means allow. And for this Point he inſtances in the imperfect Eſſays of Aſa, Jehoſaphat and Hezekiah, compar'd with what was carry'd on by their Succeſſor Joſiah. From hence he proceeds to arraign the Reformation of King Henry the VIII. That 'twas extremely defective in the Eſſentials of Doctrine, Worſhip and Government. That the Supremacy was transfer'd from one wrong Head to another: And that all the Limbs of the Antichriſtian Hierarchy were viſible in the Body. He cites a ſaying of Groſted Biſhop of Lincoln: That Reformation was not to be expected, niſi in Ore Gladii Cruentandi; he calls this a hard Saying, but not without ſome reſerve of Approbation. That the Laodicean Lukewarmneſs in the Engliſh Reformation, had been the conſtant Complaint of many of the Godly in this Kingdom: That it had occaſion'd more Schiſm and Separation than ever was heard of elſewhere; and been matter of unſpeakable Grief to other Churches. That 'tis hop'd the Glory of this great Work is reſerv'd for his Majeſty: And his Soul trembles to think what the Conſequence may be, if this Opportunity ſhould be neglected. And here he takes the Freedom to glance a menacing Text in Eſther upon the King *.

"As to the King's Argument, that the force of the Prieſts Character, and by conſequence the Benefit of the Sacraments muſt be loſt in the Abolition of Epiſcopacy; he replyes firſt, that Epiſcopacy can't make out a Claim to Apoſtolical Appointment. That when the Apoſtles were living, there was no modern difference between a Biſhop and a Presbyter, no inequality in Power or Degree, but an exact Parity in every Branch of their Character. That the Apoſtles deſcribing the Functions of Church-Officers, make no mention either expreſly, or by Implication, of a Paſtor or Biſhop ſuperior to other Paſtors. That in the Miniſtry of the New Teſtament, there is a beautiful Subordination; one kind of Miniſters are plac'd in Degree and Dignity before another: As the Apoſtles firſt, the Evangeliſts, Paſtors &c. But in Offices of the ſame Rank and Kind, we don't find, continues this Gentleman, that one has any odds of Power or Preference in Degree before another. For Inſtance: No Apoſtle is conſtituted Superior to other Apoſtles: No Evangeliſt is rais'd above another Evangeliſt: Nor has any Deacon a Priority above others in that Order. Why then muſt we ſuppoſe a Particularity in the Character of a Paſtor; and that one Paſtor ſhould have ſome Eſſential Prerogatives and Juriſdiction above another? That in Matters of Diſcipline or Church Cenſures; our Saviour's Direction tell it to the Church, refers to the Congregation, and not to the Biſhop.

"Farther, he humbly deſires his Majeſty to take notice, that arguing from the Practice of the Primitive Church, and the univerſal Conſent of the Fathers, is not without a Fallacy. That the Papiſts ſupport their Traditions by ſuch Reaſoning. That the Law and the Teſtimony muſt be the Rule. Beſides, the Practice of the Univerſal Church for many Years cannot certainly be known: That Euſebius, as this Divine miſreports him, confeſſes as much. That in the Apoſtles Time, Diotrephes mov'd for the Pre-eminence, and the Myſtery of Iniquity began to work: That afterwards Ambition in ſome, and Weakneſs in others, made way for a Change in Church Government: But that all the learned and godly in thoſe early Ages, gave in to ſuch an Alteration, is more than can be prov'd.

"This Divine takes it for granted, his Majeſty will not deny the Lawfulneſs of the Miniſtry, and the due Adminiſtration of the Sacraments in the Reformed Churches, in Churches where there are no Dioceſan Biſhops. That it is not only evident from Scripture, but confeſſed by many of the ſtrongeſt Champions for Epiſcopacy, that Presbyters may ordain Presbyters; and that Baptiſm adminiſter'd by a Midwife, or a Lay-Perſon, and by a Presbyter not ordain'd by a Biſhop, are by no means one and the ſame thing.

"To diſengage his Majeſty from his Coronation Oath, as far as it relates to the Church, he conceives the formal Reaſon of the Oath ceaſes, and by conſequence the Obligation is diſcharg'd. To make this Reaſoning bear in the Application, he obſerves, 'That when an Oath has a ſpecial regard to the Benefit of thoſe to whom the Engagement is made, if the Parties intereſted relax upon the Point, diſpenſe with the Promiſe, and give up their Advantage, the Obligation is at an End. Thus for inſtance, when the Parliaments of both Kingdoms have agreed to the repealing a Law, the King's Conſcience is not ty'd againſt ſigning the Bill, otherwiſe the Legiſlature would be bound to the preſent Eſtabliſhment, and the altering any Law would be impracticable. But if the King objects the Matter of the Oath is unchangeable, he refers his Majeſty to what has been offer'd upon the former Head.

The King's ſecond Paper, June 6. 1646.

"The King in his ſecond Paper conceives Henderſon's Precedents from the Old Teſtament, are no Evidence that any Reformation is lawful, unleſs under the Conduct of the Regal Authority. And that Henry the Eighth's Reformation being imperfect, is no Proof of any Defects of that carry'd on by King Edward and Queen Elizabeth. That Henderſon can't prove God has ever given the Multitude leave to reform the Negligence of Princes. And that this Divine muſt grant there is a great Difference between Permiſſion and Approbation. That Henderſon has fail'd in his Promiſe, and not aſſigned any Reaſon for refining upon the Reformation ſince Queen Elizabeth's Time. That 'twas well he call'd Grohead's Sentence a hard Saying, for the Doctrine held forth in it, has a very ill Complexion. That his comparing our Reformation to the Laodicean Lukewarmneſs, and citing Remonſtrances in Proof of it, is but an unhandſom way of begging the Queſtion: For his Buſineſs was, firſt to make out, that thoſe Men had Reaſon to complain: And that the Schiſm was to be charg'd upon the Conformiſts. That he ought to have left the Apoſtolical Inſtitution of Epiſcopacy, to have been made good by his Majeſty. However, if he could have prov'd the Presbyterian Government practis'd in the primitive Times, the Performance had been conſiderable. On the other hand, the King denys this Church Government was ever ſet up before Calvin's Time, and leaves the Proof of the Affirmative to Henderſon. That 'twas his Majeſty's Buſineſs to ſhew the Lawfulneſs, the uninterrupted Succeſſion, and by conſequence the Neceſſity of Epiſcopacy. That in Order to this, the Conveniènce of Books, and the Aſſiſtance of ſuch learned Men as his Majeſty could truſt, would be requiſite. And that therefore Henderſon's declining a Conference with Divines nominated by the King, might prove a loſs of Time.

"And whereas Henderſon pretended a Fallacy in reaſoning from the Practice of the Primitive Church, and the univerſal Conſent of the Fathers, his Majeſty conceives his Exception indefenſible: For if the Senſe of a doubtful Place of Scripture is not to be govern'd by ſuch an Authority, 'twill neceſſarily follow, that the Interpretation of the inſpired Writings, muſt be left to the Diſcretion of every private Spirit. That this Liberty contradicts St. Peter's Doctrine (t), is the Source of all Sects, and without Prevention, will bring theſe Kingdoms to Confuſion. That the affirming an Argument faulty becauſe the Papiſts uſe it, or to juſtify a Practice becauſe 'tis the Cuſtom of the Reformed Churches, is no Satisfaction to his Majeſty, unleſs Henderſon can prove the latter infallible, and always in the right, and the former always in the wrong: And that Diotrephes his Ambition (who directly oppos'd the Apoſtle St. John) can be an Argument againſt Epiſcopacy, was altogether unintelligible.

"His Majeſty proceeds and urges, that 'twas Henderſon's Part to make good, that Presbyters without a Biſhop, may lawfully ordain other Presbyters. As to Baptiſm. though his Majeſty conceives no Body will affirm, a Woman can lawfully adminiſter this Sacrament; tho' when 'tis done, he believes the Performance will have its Effect. And as to the Holy Euchariſt, Henderſon cannot deny a lawful Presbyter's being abſolutely neceſſary for that Celebration.

“ As to Henderſon's Diſcourſe concerning the Obligation of Oaths, the King is contented to allow his Principles, and be govern'd by his Rule. But then he proves this Divine is miſtaken in ſtating the Caſe, and applying the general Reaſoning. For if it is enquir'd, for whoſe Benefit the Clauſe touching Religion in the Coronation Oath was made; the Anſwer muſt be, 'twas made only to the Church of England. And for the Truth of the Fact, the King appeals to the Record. That 'tis not in the Power of the two Houſes of Parliament, to diſcharge the Obligation of this Oath. That this Church never made any Submiſſion to the two Houſes, nor own'd herſelf ſubordinate to them: That the Reformation was manag'd by the King and the Clergy: And that the Parliament aſſiſted only in giving a Civil Sanction to the Eccleſiaſtical Eſtabliſhment. Theſe Points being all clear to his Majeſty, it follows by neceſſary Conſequence, that 'tis only the Church of England, in whoſe Favour he took the Oath, that can releaſe him from it. And that therefore when the Church of England lawfully aſſembled, ſhall declare his Majeſty diſcharg'd, he ſhall then, and not till then, reckon himſelf at Liberty.

Henderſon's ſecond Paper, June 17. 1646.

“ Henderſon in his Reply to this ſecond Paper, lays it down for a Principle, with reſpect to Reformation; that the prime Reforming Power is in Kings and Princes: That in caſe they fail, this Authority devolves upon the inferior Magiſtracy: And that upon their Failure in this Duty, the Right deſcends upon the Body of the People. That this Principle ſtands upon the Suppoſition that a Reformation is neceſſary; and that the Peoples Superiors will by no means give leave to the Progreſs of it; that 'tis granted ſuch a Reformation is more imperfect, with reſpect to the Inſtruments and manner of Proceſs; and yet commonly more perfect and refin'd, with reference to the Product and Iſſue. That the Teſtimonies of Jewel and Bilſon, two famous Engliſh Biſhops, might be produc'd to prove, that the Tumults in Scotland, at the Time of the Reformation, were to be charg'd upon the Oppoſition of the Papiſts, and not upon the Nobility or People, who appear'd againſt Error and Superſtition. That whether the Engliſh Reformation was begun in King Henry the Eighth's Time or not, 'twas left unfiniſh'd by Queen Elizabeth. The Father ſtirr'd the Humours of the Diſeaſe, but neither the Son nor the Daughter diſcharg'd them throughly.

“ He attempts to make good the Exceptions in his firſt Letter, That the Government of the Church of England is not built on the Foundation of Chriſt and the Apoſtles: He argues, this cannot be deny'd by thoſe who confeſs Church Government mutable and ambulatory: That the Majority of the Engliſh Biſhops were formerly of this Opinion: That they were contented to act under the Authority of Princes: And that the Jure Divino Privilege was not pleaded till lately by ſome few: That the Engliſh Reformation has not perfectly purg'd out the Roman Leaven: That it has depraved the Diſcipline of the Church, by conforming to the Civil Polity: That it has added many ſupplemental Church-Offices to thoſe inſtituted by the Son of God: That ſuch Additions are no leſs unlawful, than the ſuppreſſing Offices warranted by divine Inſtitutions.

Charles I. K.

“ Henderſon inſiſts, that in his Anſwer to the King's firſt Paper, he brought ſeveral Reaſons to prove, that a Biſhop and Presbyter were Terms equivalent in Scripture; and that by Conſequence, there was no Difference in the Office. And whereas the King averr'd, that Presbyterian Government was never practis'd before Calvin's Time; he endeavours to diſable this Aſſertion, by the Anſwer given by the Reformed, to a Queſtion commonly put by the Papiſts. For when thoſe of the Roman Communion aſk the Proteſtants, where their Church was before Luther? One Part of the Anſwer is, That it is to be found in Scripture. The ſame may be affirm'd of Presbyterian Government. In proof of this Point, the Aſſembly of Divines at Weſtminſter, have made it evident, that the Primitive Church at Jeruſalem was govern'd by a Presbytery. In order to the Proof of this, they made it appear; 1. That the Church of Jeruſalem conſiſted of more Congregations than one: That this is evident from the Multitude of Believers, from the Number of Apoſtles, and other Preachers there, and from the Diverſity of Languages among the Faithful. 2. That all theſe Congregations were combin'd under one Presbyterial Government: That with reference to Government, they made no more than a ſingle Church (u). That this Church was govern'd by Elders of the ſame Body, who met together for Functions of Authority: And that the Apoſtles themſelves in the Church-Aſſemblies, acted not in the Quality of Apoſtles, but only as Elders *: That they ſtated the Queſtion, argu'd upon the Level, and wav'd their Apoſtolical Privilege. That the ſame Presbyterian Government was ſettled in the Churches of Epheſus, Corinth, Theſſalonica, &c. living the Apoſtles. That this Form of Government continued many Years after: And that at laſt, when one of the Presbytery preſided over the reſt with the Stile of Biſhop, even then, as St. Jerom affirms, Churches were governed with the joint Conſent of the Presbytery; and that 'twas Cuſtom rather than Divine Appointment, which rais'd a Biſhop above a Presbyter.

“ To his Majeſty's Argument, that where the Meaning of the Scripture is doubtful, the Practice of the Primitive Church, and the general Conſent of the Fathers ought to determine the Senſe: That unleſs this Rule is admitted, the Interpretation of Scripture muſt be left to private Spirits: To diſentangle this Difficulty, Henderſon replys, that notwithſtanding the Decrees of General Councils, and the Reſolutions of the Fathers, upon any Point, a Liberty muſt be left for a Judgment of Diſcretion: That this Aſſertion is ſufficiently prov'd by Biſhop Davenant, not to name any others, in his Book de Judice Controverſiarum. That notwithſtanding all the Pretenſions from the Fathers, a Biſhops having the ſole Power of Ordination and Juriſdiction, can never be found in the earlieſt Antiquity. To this he ſubjoins, that many of the Fathers, not knowing what they did, brought that Antichriſt to the Birth which was conceiv'd in the Apoſtles Time: That for this Reaſon they are by no means qualified to pronounce upon the Hierarchy. And that on the other ſide, there has been great Diſcoveries of Truth ſince the Reformation: And that many myſterious Things concerning Antichriſt and his Train, have been brought to Light.

(u) Acts 11. 22, 26.

* Acts 15.

“To prove Presbyters may ordain other Presbyters, without a Biſhop, he cites St. Paul's Advice to St. Timothy (w): Neglect not the Gift that is in thee, which was given thee by Prophecy, with the laying on of the Hands of the Presbytery. And here he obſerves, that in the New Teſtament, the Word Presbytery always ſignifies the Perſons, and not the Office. And granting the Functions of Biſhop and Presbyter were diſtinct, it does not follow, that the Authority and Force of the Presbyter's Character was deriv'd from the Biſhop. For were not the Evangeliſts inferior to the Apoſtles? However, notwithſtanding this Diſparity, they received their Commiſſion from Chriſt, and not from the Apoſtles. The ſame may be affirm'd of the ſeventy Diſciples, who were immediately authoriz'd by our Saviour. 'Tis true, St. Jerom puts the Queſtion with ſome Advantage to the Biſhop where he ſays, quid facit excepta ordinatione, Epiſcopus, quod non facit Presbyter (x)? But then this Father proves in the ſame Place from Scripture, that Epiſcopus and Presbyter are equipollent Terms; and therefore when he makes Ordination the Biſhop's Peculiar, he refers to After-cuſtom, and the Innovations of ſucceeding Ages.

(w) 1 Tim. 4. 14.

(x) Epiſt. ad Evag.

“Upon the Head concerning the King's Coronation-Oath, this Divine declines dilating any farther: He is likewiſe unwilling to enter upon the Queſtion concerning the Seat of Eccleſiaſtical Supremacy. But after this Reſervedneſs, makes no Scruple to declare, that ſuch a Headſhip as the Kings of England have claim'd; ſuch a Supremacy as the two Houſes of Parliament inſiſt on; i. e. an Authority to receive Appeals from the ſupreme eccleſiaſtical Judicature, upon the Score of their being paramount to the Church in Things purely ſpiritual *; ſuch a Supremacy as this, he utterly diſclaims. After this, upon Recollection, he returns to the Oath. And here he cannot conceive, how the Clergy of the Church of England are, or ought to be principally intended in the Coronation Oath: For granting they were then reckon'd the Repreſentative Church, yet even under this Notion, they ought to be governed by the Intereſt of the Church collective: For the Maxim of Salus Populi being Suprema Lex, will bring the Point to this Reſolution. And upon this Principle, the Alterations were made in the Church of Scotland. And if nothing of this kind can be warrantably done without the Aſſent of the Clergy, what Reformation can be expected in France, in Spain, or in Rome it ſelf? 'Tis not to be imagin'd the Pope or the Prelates, will conſent to their own Ruine.

* He calls it in the ſame Line of Subordination.

“His Majeſty had taken occaſion to ſay, That if his Father King James had been conſulted upon the Queſtion of Force and Reſiſtance, he would have anſwer'd, That Prayers and Tears are the Churches Weapons: Granting this thing, replies this Divine, 'tis neither acceptable to God, nor ſerviceable for Princes, to force the Church to make uſe of thoſe Arms. And here he takes the Freedom to declare, he could never hear a Reaſon to prove a neceſſary defenſive War, a War againſt unjuſt Violence, unlawful.

To the King's Queſtion, What Warrant there was in the Word of God for Subjects endeavouring to force their King's Conſciences? He anſwers, by flouriſhing with ſeveral Diſtinctions, unneceſſary to mention: And at laſt concludes, “That as long as a Man's Conſcience is miſtaken, he lies under a Neceſſity of doing amiſs. The way therefore to diſintangle himſelf, is to get his Underſtanding better inform'd; not to move till he has ſtruck a Light, and made a farther Diſcovery. For that ſuch an erroneous Conſcience is Part of the Old Man, which we are commanded to put off.

The King's Third Paper, June 22d, 1646.

“The King, in his Anſwer to this Second Paper, diſſents from Henderſon touching the Seat of the Reforming Power. His Majeſty grants, where a General Council cannot be had, Independent Kingdoms may Reform themſelves: And that this Point is fully prov'd by Archbiſhop Laud in his Book againſt Fiſher. But that the Inferiour Magiſtracy and People have any ſuch Authority, is more than Henderſon has prov'd. If this Point can be prov'd by Scripture, his Majeſty is ready to ſubmit. But Henderſon's Inſtances out of the Old Teſtament rather confirm the King in his own Opinion: All thoſe Reformations being made by Princes: That if God had approv'd a Reformation in Subjects, there were Occaſions enough in Paleſtine, from the Immorality of ſeveral Kings, to have brought on ſuch Precedents. But the Hiſtory in Numbers * is a clear Evidence of God's diſapproving ſuch Methods. That this pretended Power of the People muſt either be warranted by direct Commiſſion, or ſubſequent Approbation: That when God Almighty's Pleaſure in Favour of the Peoples Reforming can be prov'd, his Majeſty will acquieſce: But that all other Arguments are wide of the Purpoſe. That private Mens Opinions disjoyn'd from the general Conſent of the Church, ſignify little. That Rebels never want Writers to maintain their Revolt. That tho' his Majeſty has a Regard for Jewel's Memory, he never thought him infallible: As for Bilſon, he very well remembers what Opinion the King his Father had of the Biſhop. And that he ſhew'd him ſome Favour, in hopes he might retract his Singularities.

* Cap. 16.

“As to Epiſcopal Government his Majeſty is ready to prove it an Apoſtolical Inſtitution; and that it has been handed down through all Ages and Countries till Calvin's Time. And offers either to make good this Point, or yield the Argument, as ſoon as he is furniſh'd with Books, or ſuch Divines as he ſhall make Choice of. That Henderſon has fallen ſhort in proving the Church of England not built upon the Foundation of Chriſt and his Apoſtles. For ſuppoſing the Engliſh Biſhops had confeſs'd Church Government Mutable and Ambulatory; Henderſon's Inferences would not follow. And 2dly, the King is confident it can't be prov'd that moſt of theſe Prelates maintain'd this Walking Poſition: For their being contented with the Conſtitution of the Church, and the Authority and Munificence of Princes *, falls much ſhort of Evidence. That the Charge of our retaining the Roman Leven, is nothing but bare Affirmation. That the accommodating the Church Diſcipline to the Civil Conſtitution, ſhould imply a depraving it, his Majeſty denies: And avers on the other hand, that without ſome Degrees of ſuch Conformity, the flouriſhing of the Church would be impracticable. His Majeſty proceeds and tells Henderſon, he would do well to ſhew where our Saviour has prohibited the Addition of more Church-Officers than thoſe nam'd by him. And more than that, he is not appriz'd the Church of England has offer'd at any Supplement of this kind: For an Archbiſhop is only a Diſtinction in the Order of Government, and not a new Officer: And the ſame may be affirm'd of the reſt. And of this Kind there are ſeveral now in Scotland, which Henderſon will not condemn; as the Moderators of Aſſemblies, and others.

The King's Third Paper, June 22d, 1646.

“ The King denies that Biſhop and Presbyter always import the ſame thing in Scripture: And that when they do, it muſt be remember'd it was in the Apoſtles time. Now his Majeſty believes himſelf able to prove the Order of Biſhops ſucceeded that of the Apoſtles: And that the Title was alter'd, and the Name of Apoſtle drop'd, chiefly in Regard to thoſe who were immediately choſen by our Saviour. As for the Antiquity of Presbyterian Government, his Majeſty is ſurpriz'd the Aſſembly-Divines ſhould underſtand the Hiſtory of this Matter better than Euſebius. And here he puts Henderſon in mind that in his firſt Paper 'twas affirm'd, the Records of the Primitive Times were dark, and that it was very difficult to come at Matter of Fact. But 'tis objected there were ſeveral Congregations in Jeruſalem. What follows from thence? continues the King: Are there not a great many Pariſhes in one Dioceſe? But the Apoſtles met thoſe of inferiour Orders for Acts of Government. What then? Do not the Deans and Chapters, nay do not the inferiour Clergy, many times, aſſiſt the Biſhops? The King preſſes farther, and takes it for granted, that Henderſon will not be ſo hardy as to affirm an Equality between the Apoſtles, and other Presbyters: And yet unleſs this Point can be made good, the Arguments for Presbyterian Parity are inconcluſive. And if this Divine can ſay no more for the Churches of Corinth, Epheſus, Theſſalonica, &c. than he has done for that of Jeruſalem, 'twill make no Impreſſion upon his Majeſty. As for St. Jerom, 'tis well known he was no great Friend to Biſhops: However, take him altogether, he makes a plain Diſtinction between the Power of a Biſhop and a Presbyter, by the Confeſſion of Henderſon himſelf. The Truth is, this Father was of a warm Temper, and angry with thoſe who ſeem'd to maintain a Parity between Deacons and Prieſts.

“ The King, for ſettling the Senſe of controverted Places in Scripture, had appeal'd to the Practice of the Primitive Church, and the general Conſent of the Fathers. That Henderſon ought either to ſubmit to the Authority of theſe Judges, or find out better. That he has done neither, nor yet ſhewn how by declining theſe Authorities, the Miſchief of interpreting Scripture by a Private Spirit, can be prevented. The King confeſſes, that in caſe he cannot prove from Antiquity, that Ordination and Juriſdiction is a peculiar Branch of Authority belonging to Biſhops, diſtinct from Presbyters, he ſhall then begin to ſuſpect the Truth of his Principles. As for Biſhop Davenant's Teſtimony, he refuſes to be determin'd by that Prelate. And for Henderſon's Exception to the Fathers, he takes it for begging of the Queſtion. And thoſe great Diſcoveries of Secrets, unknown to former Ages, he looks upon as no better than Fancy, and modern Invention, till they are farther prov'd. As for Church-Ambition, the graſping at the Papacy is not the only Inſtance of it. An Endeavour to be independent of Kings, is in his Majeſty's Opinion, no Argument of Humility. And 'tis poſſible that Papal Privilege and Pretentions in a Multitude, may be as dangerous as when lodg'd in a ſingle Perſon.

Charles I. K.

“ And whereas Henderſon had urg'd the Precedent of Foreign Reform'd Churches in Favour of Presbytery; the King anſwers, That as he is no Judge over theſe Reform'd Societies, ſo neither does he undertake to cenſure them: That Neceſſity may excuſe many things, which would be otherwiſe unlawful. But for a clearer Anſwer to this Matter, he makes no Scruple to declare, that he does not value any thing the more for its being done by a Particular Church: But eſteems that Church moſt, which makes the neareſt approach to the Primitive Doctrine and Diſcipline: That he believes the Church of England ſtands recommended with this Advantage, which is the Reaſon he has ſo great a Regard for her Communion. His Majeſty proceeds to obſerve, that Henderſon has fail'd in proving that Presbyters may lawfully concern themſelves in Ordinations without a Biſhop. That 'tis plain from the New Teſtament, that St. Paul had a Share in St. Timothy's Ordination (y). That notwithſtanding the Seventy had their Power immediately from Chriſt, 'tis evident our Saviour makes a plain Diſtinction between the Twelve Apoſtles and the reſt of the Diſciples (z).

“ As to the Obligation of the Coronation-Oath, the King replies, That tho' the Deſign of this ſolemn Engagement was for the Benefit of the Church Collective: Does it therefore follow he can be diſpens'd, without the Conſent of the Repreſentative Body? This can no more be done, than the Laity without Doors can diſcharge him from any Oaths taken for their Advantage, without the Concurrence of the Two Houſes. As for the pretended Impracticableneſs of Reformation upon the King's Principles, his Majeſty thinks it ſufficient to let him know, that incommodum non ſolvit Argumentum. To the Point of a defenſive War againſt the Supreme Magiſtrate; as his Majeſty owns it a great Sin for any Prince to oppreſs the Church, ſo on the other ſide, he holds it abſolutely unlawful for Subjects to make War (tho' defenſively) againſt their Lawful Sovereign, upon any Pretence whatſoever: And that nothing leſs than plain Proofs from Scripture, can make him depart from this Opinion. And that in Diſcourſes upon this Head, Inſtances, no leſs than Compariſons, are odious.

Henderſon's Third Paper, July 2d, 1646.

“ Mr. Henderſon, in his Third Paper, waves moſt of the Points of Controverſy diſcuſs'd before, deſires to change the Method a little, and ſettle the Rule for determining the Debate touching Church Polity. And here he lays down his Majeſty's Principles, that is, the Practice of the Primitive Church, and the Univerſal Conſent of the Fathers: Theſe Grounds of Antiquity, perpetual Succeſſion, general Conſent of the Fathers, and the Univerſal Practice of the Primitive Church, are his Majeſty's Grounds for maintaining Epiſcopacy, and interpreting doubtful Places of Scripture. And here the King falls in exactly with St. Auſtin, where he very reaſonably infers, quod Univerſa tenet Eccleſia, nec à Concilio inſtitutum ſed ſemper retentum eſt, non niſi Authoritate Apoſtolica traditum, rectiſſimè creditur. Henderſon allows the Colours of Truth lie very ſtrong upon this Argument at the firſt View: And does not wonder at its making an Impreſſion upon a modeſt Temper. But when 'tis throughly examin'd, he conceives 'twill be found of no great Weight. For in the firſt place he affirms, there is no ſuch Primitive Teſtimony, no ſuch Univerſal Conſent, in Proof of the modern Epiſcopacy: There being a great Number of the Fathers who aſſert, That a Biſhop and Presbyter, are of the ſame Order †. After having premis'd this, he offers ſeveral Conſiderations to combat the Principle, and diſable the Authority of the Primitive Church. He pretends the adhering to St. Auſtin's Rule, reſting ſo much upon ancient Practice, Catholick Tradition, and the Writings of the Fathers, has opened a Paſſage to many dangerous Errours and prov'd a mighty Hindrance to Reformations.

† This Aſſertion of Henderſon's is a Miſtake.

“ He proceeds, and obſerves firſt, that ſome lay down two Rules for determining Controverſy, the Word of God and Antiquity: Theſe two Grounds call'd Canonical Authority, and Catholick Tradition, are receiv'd with equal Veneration by the Papiſts: Others make Scripture the only Rule and Antiquity the Authentick Interpreter. Now he thinks this latter Diviſion of Chriſtians moſt miſtaken: For the Papiſts bring Tradition no farther than to an Equality of Regard with the inſpir'd Writings. But the Others ſet up a ground of Belief even above the Scriptures: For the Interpretation of the Fathers muſt be the Διότι the very formal Reaſon why we believe the Scripture interpretable in ſuch a Senſe: And thus contrary to the Apoſtles Doctrine; Men ſhall have Dominion over our Faith (a) : And our Faith muſt ſtand in the Wiſdom of Men, and not in the Power of God. And Scripture muſt be of private Interpretation: Tho' St. Peter aſſures us, Prophecy came not in old Time, by the will of Man. And by this Reaſoning, as Tertullian ſpeaks, niſi Homini Deus placuèrit, Deus non erit: God muſt ſtand to Man's Courteſy for his Deity.

2*dly*. That Scripture cannot be authentically interpreted but by Scripture, is plain from Scripture it ſelf. Thus the Levites (as this Gentleman argues) made the Law it's own Interpreter, and had recourſe only to one Part of Scripture; for expounding another (b).

(b) Neh. 8. 8.

“ Thus our Saviour, for a Precedent againſt Errour, detected the Devil's Abuſe of the inſpir'd Writings, and gave the true Senſe of Scripture by explaining one Text, by another: He compar'd Scripture with Scripture, without alledging the Authority of the Rabbins (c). This was likewiſe the Apoſtles Method: And thus St. Peter exhorts us to compare the clear Light of the Apoſtolical Writings with the more obſcure Diſcoveries of the Prophets (d). And when we apply for Direction to the Fathers, we had need be very cautious not to charge the Scriptures with Obſcurity, or Imperfection.

(d) 2 Pet. 1. 19.

“ 3*dly*, The Fathers themſelves maintain, that Scripture is not to be interpreted but by Scripture. But for this Point, he only cites a ſingle Teſtimony from Tertullian. Surge Veritas, ipſas Scripturas tuas interpretare quam Conſuetudo non novit; nam ſi noſſet, non eſſet.

“ 4*thly*, He pretends ſome Errours have paſs'd under the Shelter of Antiquity and Tradition: And here he offers at ſeveral Inſtances: For the Purpoſe; the Errour of Free-Will began with Juſtin Martyr, and continu'd till the Reformation: Tho' he grants it was rejected by St. Auſtin: And ſo, as he goes on, was the Divine Right of Epiſcopacy contradicted by others. Farther, 'twas univerſally held by the Ancients, that the Saints departed were not admitted to the Beatifick Viſion till the Reſurrection: The ſame may be ſaid of the Millenaries Doctrine. And which he thinks, comes cloſer to the Queſtion in hand, the Ancients were lamentably miſtaken touching Antichriſt: And that the Myſtery of Iniquity, tho' the Fathers ſeem'd not ſenſible of it, began to work in the Apoſtles Days. Many other Inſtances, he thinks, may be brought to prove the Univerſal Practice of the Church no ſafe Ground to rely on. And particularly, that the ancient Ceremonies in Baptiſm, and the Liturgies; the forming of the Symbolum Apoſtolicum, the Obſerving Anniverſary, and Weekly Feſtivals, and Faſts, are all unwarranted by the Apoſtle. To take off the Surprize of ſo ſudden a Defection in the Primitive Church: To give a more intelligible Account of their going off thus early from Apoſtolical Purity, he endeavours,

“ In the 5th Place, to give parallel Inſtances in the Old Teſtament. He obſerves the Iſraelites in the ſhort Interval of Moſes his abſence, debauch'd their Religion, and fell into horrible Idolatry (e). Thus, ſoon after the Death of Joſhua and his Contemporary Elders, the next Generation revolted from their Law, and did Evil in the Sight of the Lord. Soon after the Building of the Temple, and ſettling the Prieſts Courſes by David and Solomon, the Worſhip of God was polluted with Idolatry. When Rehoboam had eſtabliſh'd the Kingdom, and ſtrengthned himſelf, he forſook the Law of the Lord, and all Iſrael with him. And thus in the New Teſtament the Apoſtle expoſtulates with the Galatians, and wonders they are ſo ſoon remov'd unto another Goſpel. From all theſe Inſtances he infers, we have no reaſon to be ſurpriz'd there ſhould be a ſudden Defection in Matters of Diſcipline; eſpecially ſince this Miſchief began to operate in the Apoſtles time. He grants 'tis commonly believ'd the Church was moſt remarkable for Purity and Perfection, in thoſe Centuries which came neareſt the Apoſtolical Age. But thinks this Opinion not well ſupported.

2 Chron. 12. 1.
Gal. 1. 6.

“ 6*thly*, He inſiſts, that the Univerſal Conſent and Practice of the Primitive Church is impoſſible to be known: That many of the Fathers were no Authors; that many of their Tracts are loſt, which might poſſibly have diſagreed with thoſe extant; that many Performances, which go under their Names, are counterfeit; eſpecially upon the Subject of Epiſcopacy: And that the Rule of St. Auſtin abovemention'd, favours Tradition too much, and is not to be admitted without Caution and Reſtraint.

“ His Majeſty in his Anſwer to this laſt Paper of Henderſon, cloſes with his Method, and agrees with him in beginning with the Settling of the Rule. He puts him in mind of his offering a Judge to determine the Controverſie: But that Henderſon had neither agreed to the Reference, nor directed to a better Umpire. As for Scripture, tho' no Man can reverence it more, or reſign farther to it than his Majeſty; yet when Henderſon and himſelf, differ about the Interpretation of a Text, 'tis neceſſary for them to apply to ſome Rule to ſettle the Senſe. And that without compromiſing

The King's Fourth Paper, July, 3. 1646.

“ the Matter thus far, 'tis impoſſible the Diſpute ſhould be determin'd. For inſtance, the King charges Henderſon with miſapplying 2 Cor. 1. 14. His Majeſty can't imagine how his Principles give other Men Dominion over his Faith, when he makes them only ſerviceable to ſupport his Reaſon. And which way 1 Cor. 2. 5. can be turn'd to this Purpoſe, is farther than he underſtands. For here St. Paul's Deſign is only to mark the Difference between human Rhetorick and the Demonſtration of the Spirit: As for interpreting Scripture, this Apoſtle gives no Directions for that through the whole Chapter. 'Tis true, St. Peter does (f). But here the King conceives the Advantage lies on his ſide. For ſince no Prophecy or Scripture is of private Interpretation his Majeſty infers, 1. That Scripture is to be interpreted, otherwiſe the Word private would have been omitted by the Apoſtle. 2. That the Catholick Church being the ſureſt Guide, and the moſt publick Authority, ought to be appeal'd to when the Meaning of the Holy Ghoſt is conteſted. And tho' Scripture is beſt interpreted by it ſelf, when parallel Places occur, and the Caſe will bear it, does it follow from hence, that all other Methods are unlawful? And thus ſince the King and Henderſon differ about the Meaning of the Scripture, his Majeſty concludes there muſt be a Rule or a Judge between them, to give Force to their Proofs to make their Arguments bear, and put an End to the Controverſie.

(f) 2 Pet. 1. 20.

His Majeſty's 5th Paper, July 6. 1646.

“ Thus far his Majeſty's fourth Paper: In his Fifth he engages Henderſon's Six Conſiderations, and diſproves his Reaſoning.

“ To the firſt, his Majeſty anſwers, that overflouriſhing the Authority of Tradition, is no Argument againſt the Serviceableneſs of it: For tho' ſome ignorant Fellows ſhou'd aſſert the Power of Presbyters too far, and over-ſtrain their Character, would this be a good Reaſon for leſſening the Regard due to them? By parity of Inference, continues the King, Why may not I ſafely maintain the Interpretation of the Fathers, a moſt excellent Support of my Opinion? Why mayn't I depend thus far upon the Ancients, tho' ſome extravagant People exceed in their Reliance, and reſolve their Faith into this Principle?

“ Henderſon's ſecond and third Conſiderations, that Scripture ought to be interpreted by Scripture, hath been anſwer'd already.

“ To the 4th his Majeſty replys, that to charge the Practice of the univerſal Church with Error, is a very bold Undertaking: And unleſs the Article can be made good by clear Places of Scripture, Henderſon is much to be blam'd for this Freedom. That this Divine miſtakes Matter of Fact, and that the Controverſie touching Free-will, was never yet decided by any General Council. That to call the Cuſtoms and Diſcipline of the Catholick Church, Errors, is an unpardonable Preſumption, unleſs the Charge can be prov'd from holy Scripture. And that 'tis not ſufficient to ſay, ſuch Rites in Baptiſm, Forms of Prayer, Obſervation of Feſtivals, &c. are not expreſly warranted by the Apoſtles. This is no good Exception: Thoſe who object to theſe ancient Rites and Cuſtoms, muſt prove ſuch Uſages are plainly unlawful by the Apoſtles Doctrine: Otherwiſe, if the Objections come ſhort of this Evidence, the Practice of the Church is enough in all Reaſon to warrant the Cuſtom. And upon this Ground of the Churches Tradition, his Majeſty will believe the Apoſtles Creed was formed by thoſe inſpired Writers, till other unqueſtionable Authors can be aſſign'd.

“ To Henderſon's fifth Conſideration, his Majeſty oppoſes the Axiom of à poſſe ad eſſe, non valet conſequentia; or that there is no good reaſoning from Poſſibility to Matter of Fact: That the Inſtances of Defection, brought both from the Old and New Teſtament, were mark'd at their Riſe, and complain'd of when they appear'd.

“ Farther, his Majeſty denys 'tis impoſſible to diſcover the univerſal Conſent, and underſtand the Practice of the primitive Church: And that all the Reaſons advanced to the contrary, prove no farther than Caution, and are only Motives againſt over-forward Belief. His Majeſty concludes with repeating this remarkable Sentence, that notwithſtanding he never eſteemed any Authority equal to the Scriptures, yet he believes the unanimous Conſent of the Fathers, and the univerſal Practice of the primitive Church, the beſt and moſt authentick Interpreters of God's Word. And by conſequence, the beſt qualify'd Judges between himſelf, and Henderſon (g).

(g) Reliquiæ ſacræ Carolinæ, p. 309. & deinc.

Thus I have reported the Subſtance of the Debate, and on which ſide the Victory lies, ſhall be left to the Reader. By his Majeſty's Manner, one would almoſt have thought he had lain under no Mortification. That the Rebellion had been cruſh'd: And that his Affairs had been in the eaſieſt Poſture imaginable. He diſcovers no Marks of Dejection or Diſturbance. He lays down ſolid Principles, looks through Henderſon's Diſcourſe with great Penetration, attacks him in his main Strength, and argues with Force and Perſpicuity. And all this without being furniſhed with common Convenience, without Books or Divines to aſſiſt him: Beſides his Majeſty engag'd no ordinary Champion: For to give Henderſon his due, he was a Perſon of Learning, Elocution, and Judgment, made the beſt of his way, and ſeems to have been the Top of his Party. 'Twas credibly reported, as the learned Heylin relates *, that Henderſon's being worſted in the Controverſie, threw him into a deep Melancholly which ended in a mortal Diſtemper. Some ſay, he dy'd a Convert to his Majeſty, and that he did him the Juſtice of an extraordinary Character in managing a Debate of this Nature. The Engliſh Commiſſioners being inform'd how well his Majeſty had perform'd againſt Henderſon, declin'd engaging in any Diſpute, and only deſir'd his Anſwer to their Propoſitions: But theſe were ſo unreaſonable, the King could give them no Satisfaction.

An Ordinance for aboliſhing Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and ſelling their Lands.

In October following, the two Houſes at Weſtminſter made an Ordinance for aboliſhing the Name, Dignity, and Function of all Archbiſhops and Biſhops, alienated their Lands, and ſettled them in Truſtees: And not long after, order'd them to be ſold for the Payment of Debts, and diſcharging the publick Faith (h). And thus the Presbyterian Preachers, who had miſreported the King in their Pulpits, given Thanks for ſham Victories, and encouraged the People in their Rebellion, gain'd little at the Foot of the Account. They expected, 'tis likely, to have rais'd their Fortunes, upon the Ruines of Epiſcopacy, and had their Livings augmented with Deans and Chapters Lands. But now they found themſelves diſappointed, the Alienations transferr'd to ſecular Uſes, and the Plunder lodg'd in other Mens Coffers. Beſides, the two Houſes had bought the King of the covenanting Scots, for 200000 l. and wanted to be furniſhed for paying the Purchaſe-Money.

May. 1. 1647.

After the Rendition of Oxford to the Rebels, a Set of Viſitors were impower'd by an Ordinance, to enquire into the Malignancy of the Univerſity. Before theſe Reformers came down, a Convocation was held, and the Occaſion opened by Dr. Fell the Vice-Chancellor. June 1. 1647. At this Meeting 'twas unanimouſly agreed, that the Senſe of the Univerſity, touching the Solemn League and Covenant, the Negative Oath, and the Directory, ſhould be drawn up. I ſhall tranſlate an Account of this Matter from Wood's Hiſtory, revis'd by Biſhop Fell. The Covenant ſworn by all Degrees in the three Kingdoms, is branch'd into Six Articles, and omitting the Preamble, begins thus:

The Senſe of the Univerſity of Oxon touching the Covenant, the negative Oath, and the Directory.

That according to our reſpective Places and Offices, We will ſincerely, ſeriouſly, and conſtantly endeavour to maintain the Reformed Religion eſtabliſhed in the Church of Scotland, with regard to Doctrine, Worſhip, Diſcipline, and Eccleſiaſtical Government, againſt the common Enemies thereof: And to reform Religion in the Kingdoms of England and Ireland, in Doctrine, Worſhip, Diſcipline, and Government, purſuant to the Word of God, and the Example of the beſt Reformed Churches. The Covenant. We will likewiſe endeavour to bring the Churches of God in theſe Three Kingdoms, to the cloſeſt Union, Agreement, and Uniformity poſſible; in the Confeſſion of Faith, in the Form of Eccleſiaſtical Government, in the Directory, Catechiſm, and Worſhip: That our ſelves, and our Poſterity, may live in the ſame Profeſſion of Faith, and maintain a friendly and Chriſtian Correſpondence, and that the Lord may delight to dwell in the midſt of us.

The remaining Articles ſhall be tranſcribed in the Covenanters Words.

We ſhall in like manner, without Reſpect of Perſons, endeavour the Extirpation of Popery, Prelacy, that is, Church Government by Archbiſhops, Biſhops, their Chancellors and Commiſſaries, Deans, Deans and Chapters, Archdeacons, and all other Eccleſiaſtical Officers depending on the Hierarchy, Superſtition, Hereſie, Schiſm, Prophaneneſs, and whatſoever ſhall be found to be contrary to ſound Doctrine and the Power of Godlineſs, leſt we partake in other Mens Sins, and thereby be in Danger to receive of their Plagues; and that the Lord may be one, and his Name one, in theſe three Kingdoms.

We ſhall with the ſame Sincerity, Reality, and Conſtancy in our ſeveral Vocations, endeavour with our Eſtates and Lives, mutually to preſerve the Rights and Privileges of the Parliaments, and the due Liberties of the Kingdoms, and to preſerve, and defend the King's Majeſty, his Perſon and Authority, in the Preſervation and Defence of the true Religion, and Liberties of the Kingdoms, that the World may bear Witneſs with our Conſciences of our Loyalty, and that we have no Thoughts or Intentions to diminiſh his Majeſty's juſt Power and Greatneſs.

We ſhall alſo with all Faithfulneſs endeavour the Diſcovery of all ſuch as have been, or ſhall be Incendiaries, Malignants, or evil Inſtruments, by hindering the Reformation of Religion, dividing the King from his People, or one of the Kingdoms from another, or making any Faction or Parties amongſt the People, contrary to this League and Covenant, that they may be brought to publick Trial, and receive condign Puniſhment as the Degree of their Offences ſhall require, or deſerve, or the Supream Judicatories of both Kingdoms reſpectively, or others having Power from them, for that Effect, ſhall judge convenient.

And whereas the Happineſs of a bleſſed Peace between theſe Kingdoms, deny'd in former Times to our Progenitors, is by the good Providence of God granted unto us, and hath been lately concluded and ſettled by both Parliaments, We ſhall each one of us, according to our Place and Intereſt, endeavour that they remain conjoined in a firm Peace and Union to all Poſterity, and that Juſtice may be done upon the wilful Oppoſers thereof, in manner expreſſed in the precedent Article.

We ſhall alſo according to our Places and Callings in this common Cauſe of Religion, Liberty, and Peace of the Kingdoms, aſſiſt and defend all thoſe that enter into this League and Covenant, in the maintaining and purſuing thereof, and ſhall not ſuffer our ſelves directly or indirectly, by whatſoever Combination, Perſuaſion, or Terror to be divided, and withdrawn from this bleſſed Conjunction and Union, whether to make Defection to the contrary Part, or to give our ſelves to a deteſtable Indifferency or Neutrality in this Cauſe, which ſo much concerneth the Glory of God, the Good of the Kingdoms, and Honour of the King, but ſhall all the Days of our Lives zealouſly and conſtantly endeavour to continue therein, againſt all Oppoſition, and promote the ſame according to our Power, againſt all Lets and Impediments whatſoever; and what we are not able of our ſelves to ſuppreſs or overcome, we ſhall reveal and make known, that it may be timely prevented or removed. All which we ſhall do as in the Sight of God.

And becauſe theſe Kingdoms are guilty of many Sins and Provocations againſt God, and his Son Jeſus Chriſt, as is too manifeſt by our preſent Diſtreſſes and Dangers, the Fruits thereof; We profeſs and declare before God and the World, our unfeigned Deſire to be humbled for our own Sins, and for the Sins of theſe Kingdoms, &c. And this Covenant We make in the Preſence of Almighty God the Searcher of all Hearts, with a true Intention to perform the ſame, as We ſhall anſwer it at the Great Day, when the Secrets of all Hearts ſhall be diſclos'd, moſt humbly beſeeching the Lord to ſtrengthen us by his Holy Spirit to this End, and to bleſs our Deſires and Proceedings with ſuch Succeſs, as may be Deliverance and Safety to his People, and Encouragement to other Chriſtian Churches groaning under, or in Danger of the Yoke of Antichriſtian Tyranny, to join in the ſame, or like Aſſociation and Covenant, to the Glory of God, the Enlargement of the Kingdom of Jeſus Chriſt, and the Peace and Tranquillity of Chriſtian Kingdoms and Commonwealths.

The Univerſity's Objection to the Preamble.

The Univerſity begin their Anſwer, by objecting to the Preamble of the Covenant. Wherein, amongſt other Things, 'tis affirmed, That the Perſon ſwearing, had offered ſeveral Petitions and Remonſtrances for removing the Grievances pretended. But the Univerſity deny they had ever petition'd for that Purpoſe. 'Tis likewiſe ſuggeſted in the Preamble, that this Covenant was formed upon the laudable Cuſtom of theſe Kingdoms in former Ages. And that it was no more than a Copy of a ſolemn Engagement made by the People of God in foreign Countries. The Univerſity can by no means agree to this Aſſertion: They poſitively declare, there was never any Reſemblance of any ſuch Combination amongſt the Engliſh Subjects: Neither do they know of any laudable Precedent (as the Preamble ſpeaks) for ſuch a Practice beyond Sea: On the other ſide, ſome of their own Party declare this Covenant is a perfect Original (i).

After this, they make ſome general Exceptions:

First, They cannot underſtand the annexing Penalties to the Refuſal of this Engagement. They conceive the menacing People to a Compliance, does not ſuit the Nature of what is tender'd. A Covenant is a Contract. It ſuppoſes the voluntary Conſent of the Parties contracting. That Proſelyes are to be gain'd by Perſuaſion; and that the Reaſons are not to be ram'd down with Terror and Compulſion.

Some other Preliminaries.

Secondly, This Oath cannot be taken without betraying thoſe Liberties, which by their ſolemn Exact Collections, p. 859, 860. where 'tis declar'd, the King, unleſs impower'd by Act of Parliament, can't oblige the Subject to take an Oath.

Proteſtation * they have already engag'd to maintain, and are now to repeat the Obligation by the Third Article of the Covenant: Now the putting an Oath upon the Subject without the Authority of an Act of Parliament, they conceive is wholly inconſiſtent with the Liberties above mention'd, with the Petition of Right (k), and the Declaration publiſh'd by the Lords and Commons (l).

Farther, ſuppoſing this Engagement was not forc'd by way of Authority, but only recommended. They can't perceive which way they could be in a condition to Acquieſce: For how can it be reconcileable with the Duty of Subjects to enter into a Covenant, where the Intereſt of their Sovereign is concern'd, without having either his Expreſs or Preſumptive Conſent? By doing this, the Proviſion in the 30*th* of Numbers would by Parity of reaſoning be applicable to their Caſe: And thus in all Equity of Conſtruction, it would be in the Sovereign's Power to make void their Engagement.

 The Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance.*

To this they add, that ſince his Majeſty has by Proclamation declar'd his Pleaſure upon this Point; ſince he was expreſly forbiden the Covenant; which way can the Subject engage without a groſs failure in the duty of natural Allegiance, and that requir'd by Statute *? And that upon both theſe tyes they are bound to obey the King's Commands, when neither contrary to the Holy Scriptures, nor the Laws of the Realm. After theſe Preliminaries, the Univerſity proceeds to argue againſt the firſt Article.

They argue againſt the firſt Article.

Firſt, They are apprehenſive the Contents of this Article obliges to a contradiction of the Condition of an Oath requir'd in Scripture; where we are commanded to Swear in Judgment. Now by this Article we engage, ſay they, to ſupport the Religion of another Kingdom; which as we are not much concern'd to know, ſo we confeſs our ſelves unacquainted with. But as far as the Misfortune of theſe Times has inform'd us, we are of Opinion, that as the Doctrine profeſs'd in that Kingdom is not better; ſo the Worſhip, Diſcipline and Government, is worſe than our own.

And yet if for the time to come, we ſhould diſcover any thing in this Scotch Religion (which is not impoſſible) which ſeems to have a Tincture of Popery, Superſtition, Hereſy or Shiſm, or carries a repugnancy to Orthodoxy and good Morals; we ſhall be oblig'd to endeavour its Extirpation by virtue of the next Article: And thus one Article will bring us under a Counter Oath to another.

(m) That is the Scotch pronouncing Epiſcopacy, an Antichriſtian Government: And that Rites indifferent in their own Nature are unlawful in Practice. To which may be added their making their Diſcipline and the Preſbyterian Government, a Mark of the true Church, &c.

And to ſpeak clearly, we have, as we conceive, diſcover'd ſome Aſſertions bordering cloſely upon Superſtition and Schiſm (m). And therefore think it more reaſonable to remind the Scotch of correcting their own Syſtem, than that we ſhould be preſs'd to maintain it.

As to the other branch of this Article, importing a Reformation of Religion in this Kingdom, with reſpect to Doctrine, Worſhip, Diſcipline, and Eccleſiaſtical Government: Since Reformation neceſſarily implies Alteration; we are not yet ſatisfy'd ſuch an Attempt is in our Power.

Firſt, Becauſe by endeavouring a thing of this kind, we ſhould deſert from the famous Biſhops and other eminent Divines, who from the beginning of the Reformation, to the preſent Time, have by their Martyrdom and Writings Signaliz'd themſelves in Defence of the Church of England.

Secondly, We can't charge the Church of England with Defects and Corruption, without injuring our Conſciences, and expoſing our Fortunes and Reputation. For we conceive we have very good Reaſons to conclude the Church of England, ſettled upon a much better Conſiſtency with the Word of God and the Practice of the Catholick Church, than that Religion we muſt be ſworn to maintain by the former branch of the Article.

And laſtly, We conceive 'tis impracticable for us to engage without apparent danger of Perjury. This Covenant being contrary not only to our Proteſtation and Solemn Vow above-mention'd; but likewiſe to the Oath of Supremacy.

Their Exceptions to the ſecond Article.

In their Exceptions to the Second Article, they remonſtrate and argue thus: We can't but extremely regret, ſay they, to find that ancient Form of Church Government, upon which our Reformation was Eſtabliſh'd, and has ſince flouriſh'd to the Envy and Admiration of Foreigners: To find this Form of Government, mark'd for Deſtruction without the leaſt Reaſon aſſign'd, either for the Neceſſity, or ſo much as the conveniency of ſo prodigious a Change. And over and above, rang'd with very exceptionable Company, with Popery and Superſtition, with Hereſie, Schiſm, and Prophaneneſs. And as if this Cenſure did not go deep enough, an Innuendo is thrown in, as if this Form of Government was ſo plainly oppos'd to ſound Doctrine, ſo deſtructive of the Power of Godlineſs; that a Man is under a Neceſſity either of endeavouring the Demolition of this Eſtabliſhment; or being Partaker of other Mens Sins: Now this is more than at preſent we are able to believe.

Farther, We deſire it may be ſeriouſly conſider'd, that if an Engagement couch'd in a reſembling Form, was put to the City of London, by virtue of which they were all of them oblig'd to ſwear, "that without Reſpect of Perſons they "would do their utmoſt endeavour towards the "ſuppreſſing of Treaſon, the City Govern-"ment by the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, Sheriffs, "and Common-Council; and of all Murther, A-"dultery, Theft, Defrauding the Publick, &c. "for fear of being Partakers of other Mens Sins: Can it be imagin'd that ſuch an Oath could be reliſh'd by any Citizen, who was not altogether loſt to all Senſe of Liberty and Courage?

2*dly*, 'Tis our Opinion we can't with a ſafe Conſcience ſwear to contribute our endeavours for the Extirpation of Epiſcopacy, for theſe four Conſiderations: That is, if we conſider either the thing it ſelf, or our ſelves; the Church of England, or the Obligations we lie under to his Majeſty.

Firſt, With reſpect to the Thing it ſelf; we conceive Epiſcopacy, if not ſtrictly Juris Divini, is at leaſt of Apoſtolical Inſtitution. That this Government has all along ſpread to the extent of Chriſtianity, and continued through all Countries, without Interruption for Fifteen Hundred Years together. That during all this long Period, there was ſcarcely any Perſon excepting Aerius, who had the aſſurance to declare for a Parity between Biſhops and Preſbyters; and that Aerius was pronounc'd a Heretick for this Preſumption. And therefore if we ſhould ſwear the ſuppreſſing an Order ſo firmly eſtabliſh'd, and ſupported by ſo remarkable a Preſcription; the Papiſts would triumph in the firſt Place, and charge us with Contempt of Antiquity; neither ſhould we be in a condition to throw off the Imputation. Beſides, by ſuch a Compliance, the Argument drawn from the Judgment and Practice of the Univerſal Church (which is the beſt Expoſitor of Scripture in Things not clearly expreſs'd) would be much weakned: And yet this muſt be granted a good Topick for proving a great many things, relating both to Faith and Manners: And that without ſuch an Authority, we ſhould often be at a loſs to defend our ſelves againſt Socinians, Anabaptiſts, and other Sectaries. Amongſt theſe Points may be reckon'd ſeveral Orthodox Explications concerning the Attributes and Co-equality of the Three Perſons in the Godhead; the Number, Uſe, and Efficacy of the Sacraments, Baptiſm of Infants, the obſervation of the Lord's-Day; and which is moſt principally valuable, the diſtinguiſhing the Canon of Holy Scripture from Human Compoſitions.

2*dly*, Swearing, this Article muſt be extremely ſhocking with reſpect to our ſelves: For firſt, all of us who have taken any Degrees, have ſubſcrib'd the Thirty Nine Articles; and by conſequence ſign'd the Approbation of Epiſcopal Government: For in the Thirty Sixth Article, 'tis expreſly declar'd, that the Ordinal for Conſecration of Biſhops, contains nothing contrary to the word of God.

2*dly*, All of us in Holy Orders have been ordain'd by Biſhops: Now it would be a ſcandalous return in us, to ſign an Obligation for ſetting aſide the Biſhops, who have lent us their Hands for conveying our own Character.

3*dly*, Not a few of us ſome Years ſince, Petition'd the Parliament for the continuance of Epiſcopacy, and ſubſcrib'd our Addreſs: And ſince we are not conſcious of having done amiſs, we ſhould be glad to repeat the ſame Application, provided there was any hopes of Succeſs.

4*thly*, Some of us are Members of Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, and owe our Subſiſtence to the diſtinction of Deans, Deans and Chapters, &c. condemn'd by this Article. Now unleſs the thing cenſur'd was unlawful in it ſelf: We conceive the obliging People to ſwear, they will ſincerely, ſeriouſly, and heartily endeavour to ruin their Fortune, and deſtroy the beſt part of their Livelyhood, is a ſort of Uſage never put upon People ſince the World began.

3*dly*. With Regard to the Church of England, we are afraid 'tis not in our Power to ſwear the attempting the Abolition of a Government, eſtabliſh'd by Authority, and ſettled upon a long Preſcription; eſpecially ſince we have no cogent Reaſon for ſuch an Endeavour, either ſuggeſted by our ſelves, or offer'd by others.

On the other Hand, we are ſenſible all Alteration in Publick Eſtabliſhments, beſides the diſadvantages already in View, brings a great many unforeſeen Inconveniences; which 'tis impoſſible either to prevent, or ſo much as to diſcover till the Miſchief is paſt Remedy. To apply the Caſe, for ought we know, theſe conſequences may follow, upon ſo great a change in Eccleſiaſtical Government. And theſe Fears work ſtronger upon us when we conſider that this kind of Eccleſiaſtical Government has laſted many Ages in this Kingdom, and is ſo cloſely interwoven with the Civil Adminiſtration, that it may be reaſonably fear'd, the taking it away wou'd diſconcert the State, and in a great meaſure unſettle the Conſtitution.

2*dly*, Since the Houſe of Commons have ſome time ſince declar'd, that 'twas never their Intention to aboliſh the Eccleſiaſtical Government; but rather to ſupport all diſtinctions in the Church of England in the courſe of Order and Diſcipline, in which they are ſetled by Acts of Parliament: And that they ſhould look upon thoſe as Mal-intention'd Perſons, who rais'd any Jealouſy to the contrary (n): Now ſince the Commons, continue the Univerſity, have declar'd themſelves in this Manner, it would be the laſt Imprudence in us, to bring our ſelves under the Imputation of fomenting ſuch a Jealouſy: For thus over and above, by ſwearing the Second Article, we ſhould make our ſelves liable to the Penalties mention'd in the Fourth.

Charles I. K.

3*dly*, Since ſeveral Acts of Parliament declare the Holy Church of England founded in the ſtate of Prelacy (o): We are afraid the extirpating Prelacy ſhou'd overturn the Foundations: And thus as far as in us lies, we ſhould make our ſelves inſtrumental in precipitating the Ruin of a moſt flouriſhing Church; a Church which both the Dictates of our Conſcience, and the particular regards of our Station, oblige us to ſupport and maintain.

Their laſt Reaſon for incomplyance with this Article, is drawn from the Oath of Supremacy, from the inſecurity of the Prerogative, if the Presbyterian Diſcipline ſhould prevail; and from the Sacrilegious Alienation of the Churches Patrimony, which appears to be the conſequence of this Project.

Having gone over theſe two Articles, the remainder of the Covenant is diſpatch'd with more Expedition.

They argue againſt the third Article.

The third Article, as the Convocation goes on, ſits uneaſie upon us. Here our profeſſion of Loyalty is clogg'd with a dangerous Limitation. We ſwear our ſelves ready to maintain and defend the King's Perſon and Authority in the Preſervation and Defence of the true Religion, and the Liberties of the Kingdom.

Our exception to this Clauſe is firſt, Becauſe neither the Oaths of Supremacy or Allegiance, the ſolemn Proteſtation or the Word of God, have any ſuch Limitations.

2*dly*, Our endeavour for preſerving the Rights and Privileges of Parliament are ſworn in the ſame Article without any condition or reſerve.

3*dly*, This qualifying reſtriction leaves the Subject as it were at large in his Allegiance, and makes a looſe Proviſion for the Crown: So that whenever the People have a mind to deſert from their Duty to his Majeſty, this Myſterious Clauſe will furniſh them with a colour for their Miſbehaviour.

4*thly*, After we have ſworn the Article with this Limitation, and broke in ſo remarkably upon the Prerogative Royal, 'twill look like a ſtrange piece of aſſurance to appeal to the World at the ſame Time, that they may bear witneſs with our Conſciences of our Loyalty, that we have no Thoughts or Intentions to diminiſh his Majeſty's juſt Power and Greatneſs: Laſtly, The ſwearing with this Limitation, ſeems a new and incomprehenſible Inſtance of Allegiance: There's room enough in it for the moſt miſtaken and dangerous Conſcience; and the moſt bigotted Papiſts, the rankeſt Hereticks and Sectaries, may eaſily ſwallow it.

The fourth Article Conteſted.

As to the fourth Article, we deſire theſe few things may be throughly conſider'd.

1*ſt*, Whether it does not lay a neceſſity upon the Son, of informing againſt his Father, and proſecuting him to Death, in Caſe he believes him an Incendiary, a Malignant, &c.

But to purſue ſo cloſe and venerable a relation in this Manner, is in our Opinion, flying in the Face of Nature, and a plain Revolt from all Religion and Humanity.

2. We deſire to know whether this Clauſe does not open a Paſſage to Parricide, and other outrageous Villainies of this Nature? For under the Pretex of the Covenant, Children may aſſaſſinate their Parents, Husbands murder their Wives, and one Relation deſtroy another. For if any of theſe happen to lie in the way of Intereſt or Pleaſure, 'tis but charging them with Malignancy, and the Work is done.

3. Since by our ſolemn Proteſtation, we have oblig'd our ſelves to maintain the Liberty of the Subject; ſince the Houſe of Commons have publickly cenſur'd all Inſtances of arbitrary Government; ſhould we not ſcandalouſly betray the Birthright of Engliſhmen and the Privilege of the Subject, if we ſhould ſwear a Reſignation of our Lives, of our Liberties, and Fortunes to ſuch arbitrary Juſtice, to ſuch uncertain, undiſtinguiſh'd Judges, as may call us to an account, upon the higheſt Charge, and condemn us without Form of Law? And after all indemnify themſelves, and retire under the Protection of this Article.

Their Reaſons againſt the 5th Article.

The Subſtance of the 5th Article relates to the ſettling and preſerving the Peace and Union of the Three Kingdoms: This is both our Duty and Inclination to promote by all defenſible Methods. And therefore we ſhould very willingly ſwear this part of the Covenant, were it not for two Obſtructions.

1. We can't yet diſcover the Happineſs conſequent upon the Bleſſed Peace in the Three Kingdoms, mention'd in this Article. For the War not only rages in Ireland, but the other Two Kingdoms continue embroil'd.

2. Since Juſtice is the only ſolid Baſis for Peace; and this Virtue cannot ſubſiſt without giving every one their own; 'tis incredible to us, that theſe Kingdoms ſhould ever enjoy a laſting Peace, unleſs the King, the Parliament, and the Subject, have their due Shares of Authority, Power and Liberty, inviolably maintain'd: And that all this be done, purſuant to the Laws and ancient Uſages of each Kingdom: And which were never conteſted till the late Commotions.

Farther;

Our Conſciences are by no means ſatisfy'd with the Sixth Article.

The Lawfulneſs of the 6th Article diſprov'd.

1. Becauſe the whole Article ſtands upon a Suppoſition, which we could never find ſupported with any ſolid Reaſoning. The thing taken for granted is, that this Covenant of mutual Defence engag'd in for carrying on the late War, is the common Cauſe of Religion, Liberty, and Peace of the Kingdoms; and has a great Tendency to promote the Glory of God, and the Honour of the King.

2. Granting this Suppoſition was clear enough to command our Aſſent, yet we can't ſee which way our Conſciences could get through the Remainder of the Article: Unleſs it could be farther demonſtrated, that the Means us'd in Maintenance of this Cauſe, were unqueſtionably lawful. For ſince Evil is not to be done that Good may come on't *; we are not at preſent ſufficiently convinc'd, that the Intereſt of Religion, the Glory of God, the publick Repoſe, the Good of theſe Kingdoms, and the Honour of the King, can always be promoted by Methods unſuitable to the Ends pretended: And which, as far as we underſtand, have no manner of Countenance, either from the Laws of God, or thoſe of the Realm.

* Rom. 3.

The ſcandalous Prayer in the Concluſion of the Covenant.

Laſtly, We can't read the Concluſion without Aſtoniſhment: For here the Covenanters beg of God Almighty, That all other Chriſtian Churches may be encourag'd by their Example to joyn in the ſame or like Aſſociation and Covenant, for delivering themſelves from the Yoak of Antichriſtian Tyranny.

Now, not to mention our knowing nothing of the Antichriſtian Yoak, theſe Kingdoms lay under; or of our being deliver'd from this Grievance by the Covenant and Civil War; waving our Ignorance of this Matter, we can't at preſent diſcover any ſuch Bleſſings conſequent upon this Covenant, as to make it part either of our Prayers or Wiſhes, that other Churches ſhould follow the Precedent.

To put up our Petitions to God Almighty for this Purpoſe, would in our Opinion, be in effect to pray: Firſt, That God would inſpire the Church with the Spirit of Animoſity and Diſcord; bring War and Confuſion upon Chriſtendom, and baniſh Peace and good Correſpondence from the Face of the Earth. Secondly, That the Reform'd Religion, and the very Name of Proteſtancy, may be hated and hiſs'd through the Univerſe. Thirdly, That all the Princes of Europe may be caution'd to treat the Proteſtants with Rigour, or rather to expel them their Dominions: For that otherwiſe 'tis impracticable for crown'd Heads to ſit ſafe upon the Throne.

And to diſpatch their Concluſion, ſuppoſing the Antichriſtian Yoak ſhould be put upon the Subjects Neck by their lawful Princes; in this caſe we are not to throw it off by applying to Force: This would be reſiſting the Ordinance of God: On the other hand, ſuch an Affliction ought to be undergone with Chriſtian Fortitude. We muſt boldly confeſs the Truth, endure the Croſs, and maintain our Conſcience with Paſſiveneſs and Submiſſion to the Government.

After this Diſproof of the Lawfulneſs of the Covenant, the Univerſity proceeds to charge the Articles with Contradiction, Obſcurity, and farther dangerous Meaning. And in the Cloſe they return an Anſwer to the Arguments uſually made uſe of in Defence of this Engagement: And here they expoſe the Covenanters Fallacies with all imaginable Clearneſs, and ſhew the Inſignificancy of the Subterfuges they retire to.

The Convocation having done with the Covenant, go on to the Negative Oath, which ſtand thus.

The Negative Oath.

I A. B. ſincerely ſwear, That during this War, I will neither directly nor indirectly adhere to, or voluntarily aſſiſt the King againſt the Parliament; or contribute to the Service or Aſſiſtance of any Forces whatſoever, which ſhall be levied without a Warrant from both Houſes of Parliament. I likewiſe ſwear to reſign my ſelf to the Power and Protection of the Parliament, and to a Submiſſion to that Authority, without any Intention or Reſerve which may be prejudicial to the preſent Parliament, or their Intereſt. And all this I ſwear without any Command from the King, without any Communication or Concert with him, or Advice of the King his Council, or other Miniſters whatſoever. So help me God through Jeſus Chriſt, preach'd in this Holy Goſpel.

This Oath, we are afraid, (ſay the Univerſity) can't be taken without throwing up that Liberty, which by prior Obligations we are engag'd to maintain: For forcing an Oath upon the Subject without any Warrant from Law, is, as we think, plainly ſubverſive of this Liberty.

Reaſons againſt it.

2. This Negative Engagement is a direct Breach of that Duty a Subject naturally owes to his Prince; and evidently counter to the Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance, already taken by us. By all which ſolemn Tyes we are bound to defend the King to the utmoſt of our Power. Whereas by this Negative Oath we muſt ſwear, and ſwear heartily we will not defend his Majeſty, nor afford him any Aſſiſtance.

Farther, we cannot come under this New Obligation without falling foul on the Third Article of the Covenant, and diminiſhing his Majeſty's juſt Power and Greatneſs in a very remarkable manner: That is, by owning an Authority in either, or both Houſes of Parliament, in Oppoſition to his Majeſty. Whereas we frankly declare, 'tis farther than we underſtand, that any Lawful Authority unſubordinate to the Crown, can be exercis'd in this Kingdom.

As to the Proviſion for ſettling the Church Diſcipline and the Directory; the Univerſity are not ſatisfy'd, of their being at Liberty to obey an Ordinance of the Two Houſes, not confirm'd with the Royal Aſſent: Eſpecially, conſidering theſe Ordinances command things contrary to the Statutes of the Realm: And which looks ſtill ſomewhat more ſurprizing, declare an Authority in the Two Houſes, for repealing the Laws and Statutes paſs'd by King, Lords and Commons. Now ſince making and unmaking is a Property peculiar to the ſame Authority, the Univerſity can't underſtand, an inferiour Power or Juriſdiction, can null the Acts of a ſuperior.

And againſt the Presbyterian Diſcipline and Directory.

With Reference to Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, they can't ſubmit to the Ordinance touching that Matter, without conſenting to the Abolition of an Eſtabliſhment, ſo much recommended by Antiquity, ſo firmly ſettled by Law, and ſo well accommodated to the Civil Government. And here, after ſome Exceptions, to the Presbyterian Scheme, they proceed to the Ordinance for the Directory. By this Ordinance the Common Prayer is ſuppreſs'd: The Univerſity therefore declare, their Conſciences will by no means allow them to conſent, for the following Reaſons. 1. Becauſe the greateſt part of them have ſubſcrib'd their Approbation of the Common Prayer: Solemnly promiſing, that they would make uſe of no other Form in the Publick Service: That purſuant to their Promiſe and Subſcription, they had all along officiated by this Book to their great Comfort and Benefit. And farther, they don't believe there are any Paſſages really exceptionable in the Liturgy. Nothing but what has been ſufficiently defended: Nothing but what they believe themſelves able to maintain againſt all Cavil, and Oppoſition whatſoever. After this, they inſiſt upon the Obligation they lie under for officiating by the Common Prayer, from ſeveral Statutes provided for this purpoſe: But theſe I have had occaſion to mention already.

This Reſolution upon the Covenant, the Negative Oath, &c. after having been conſider'd in the Colleges, paſs'd ſmoothly in Convocation. 'Twas carry'd by an Univerſality; one Member excepted, who came from Geneva. This, conſidering the Circumſtances they were under, was a bold piece of Honeſty, a noble Defence of the Church and Conſtitution. The Town was now gariſon'd with Parliament Forces. The Viſitors, they knew, muſt take their Apology for an open Defiance. However, they had the Courage to aſſert their Principles and face a Victorious Rebellion. They choſe rather to abandon their Fortunes and riſque their Lives, than ſuffer in their Conſcience, tarniſh their Honour, and ſubmit to a Criminal Compliance *.

Neither the Aſſembly-Divines, nor any others of that Party had the Courage to return an Anſwer to this Apology. To finiſh this Matter, I ſhall break through the Regards of Time and obſerve, that after the Reſtoration of King Charles the Second, when the Parliament ſat at Oxon, the Commons order'd Thanks ſhould be return'd the Univerſity, for having made ſo learned and noble a Stand. The Order runs thus.

Martis 31. Octob. 1665.

Reſolv'd,

That the Thanks of this Houſe be return'd to the Chancellour, Maſter and Scholars of the Univerſity of Oxon, for their remarkable Loyalty to his Majeſty's Father of happy Memory, in the late Rebellion: Eſpecially for that extraordinary Inſtance of their Duty, in making a bold Oppoſition to the Rebellious Viſitors, and refuſing to ſubmit to their League and Covenant: And laſtly for the Illuſtrious Performance they Printed, Entituled The Judgment of the Univerſity; in which they have learnedly maintain'd the Juſtice of the King's Cauſe (p).

The Parliament at Oxon. return the Chancellour and Students Thanks for the Book call'd, The Judgment of the Univerſity.

As to the Viſitors, what they could not deal with in Argument, they anſwer'd by Force; and turn'd out the Heads, and moſt of the Univerſity for refuſing the Covenant, and the other Novel and Rebellious Engagements (x).

And here it may not be amiſs to give a brief account of what the Univerſity of Cambridge ſuffer'd, during the courſe of this unnatural War. To begin: In the Year 1641. the Maſters and Fellows of all the Colleges ſent their Plate to the King then at York. This piece of Loyalty was interpreted encouraging the War, and made a great Crime by the two Houſes at Weſtminſter: And to fright the Univerſity from aſſiſting the King any farther; Dr. Beal, Dr. Martin, and Dr. Stern, Maſters of St. John's, Queen's and Jeſus Colledge; are ſent guarded up to London, and impriſon'd in the Tower, for their Forwardneſs in the Plate Buſineſs. The next Year Dr. Holdiſworth was ſeiz'd, and put in the Tower for executing the King's Command, and printing his Declarations at Cambridge. About the ſame time, the Vice-Chancellor and Heads of Houſes ſummon'd to meet in the Conſiſtory, were requir'd to contribute to the Aſſiſtance of the Parliament: That ſuch a Complyance wou'd ſet them right in the Opinion of the two Houſes, and wipe off the Imputation of Malignancy. But they refus'd to gratifie the Rebels; and frankly told them, that contributing to ſuch Purpoſes, was not to be reconcil'd to true Religion and a good Conſcience. For this handſome Declaration ſome of them were afterwards impriſon'd. About this time the Earl of Mancheſter was ſent down by the Two Houſes to purge the Univerſity of Malignant Members, as they call'd them. To give Light into this Matter, and make their Scrutiny more ſignificant, an Oath of Diſcovery was put (q). This Teſt obliging them to inform againſt their Friends, Tutors, and Maſters, and betray the Intereſt of their Societies, was univerſally refus'd: 'Twas likewiſe contrary to their Statutes, viz. Non revelabis aliquod ſecretum Collegii, nec malum aut damnum inſeres cuilibet Sociorum. Not long afterwards, the Members of the Univerſity were all order'd to appear within twelve Days, and take the Covenant (r). This, not to mention the thing, was thought a great Hardſhip with reſpect to the ſhort Warning. And therefore Aſh, one of the Lord Mancheſter's Chaplains, reports they had longer time afterwards given them. But no Leiſure for Recollection could reconcile them to this Complyance: The Covenant was generally refus'd, the Non-compliers turn'd out of their Preferments, and order'd to quit the Univerſity within three Days (s). In Queens College they made a thorough Reformation: The Maſter,

12. Dr. Samuel Ward, (in effect but a Priſoner) dy'd a natural Death.	12. Sidney College.

To this Liſt may be ſubjoined ſome other Misfortunes ſuffer'd by the Univerſity: The Soldiers were quartered in their Colleges, their Chapels plunder'd and defac'd, the Common-Prayer Books torn in St. Mary's before the coming out of the Suppreſſing-Ordinance. Their Bridges were broken, their Materials for Building ſeiz'd, their Groves fell'd; and which was almoſt an irreparable Damage, a choice Collection of Antiquity in Coins and Medals, weighing twenty two Pounds, was plunder'd from St. John's College. And for a farther Mortification, their Eſtates formerly exempted, were tax'd, and the Aſſeſſment proportion'd by the Townſmen.

To proceed: A general Aſſembly met at Edinborough on the 4th of Auguſt, this Summer. Two of the Scotch Commiſſioners, Bailly and Gilleſpy, who ſate with the Divines at Weſtminſter, produc'd a Copy of the Confeſſion of Faith made by the Aſſembly at Weſtminſter, part of their Catechiſm, the Directory, and Rowſe his Paraphraſe on the Pſalms. Gilleſpy likewiſe laid a Copy before them of the Prolocutor's Speech made to him at his taking leave of the Aſſembly at Weſtminſter.

The Weſtminſter Prolocutor's Speech to Gilleſpy a Scotch Miniſter and Commiſſioner at the Weſtminſter Aſſembly.

“ By the Prolocutor's Speech it appears, Gilleſpy had drop'd ſome Suſpicion of the Engliſh Aſſembly's Defection. The Grounds for this Imputation, the Prolocutor endeavours to diſprove. He excuſes the Directory's not being punctually obſerv'd; complains the Aſſembly have no Power to call Offenders to account; and that the Lord was pleas'd ſtill to exerciſe them with many Wreſtlings. He confeſſes, their Affairs very much embarraſs'd, and that they are, as it were in a Chaos at preſent. He takes notice what Diſtreſs the Parliament was formerly in; that the Common Enemy (meaning the King) was high and ſtrong; and that their extraordinary Succeſs was owing to the Prayers of their Brethren of Scotland, and other Proteſtants abroad. He makes an Apology for their not returning an Anſwer to ſeveral Letters ſent them from the Edinborough Aſſembly. And here he puts Gilleſpy in Mind of the Reſtraints they lie under from the Parliament: And that this was no proper Juncture to apply for leave, it being a Time of general Darkneſs, and ſad Apprehenſions (t). Their Meaning is, they were afraid the Independents would top them, pull their Scheme in Pieces, and ſet up their own Fancies, which happen'd accordingly.

The next Day this Mr. George Gilleſpy gave the Scotch Aſſembly a Letter from the Churches of Zurich, Bern, Baſil, and Schaffhauſen in Switzerland, directed to the Aſſembly at Edinborough.

The Swiſs Proteſtants Letter to the General Aſſembly at Edinborough

“ In the Beginning of their Letter they profeſs a hearty Friendſhip and ſtrong Sympathy with the Scotch Covenanters, and regret the Civil Commotions. A great Part of their Letter is ſpent in lamenting the Misfortune of the Elector Palatine, and that his Intereſt was no farther conſider'd in the Treaty at Munſter. By the way, this Elector Palatine, for whom they ſollicite ſo earneſtly, had deſerted the King his Uncle, at York: Notwithſtanding his Majeſty had interpos'd ſo far in his Nephew's Behalf, and imbroil'd his Affairs for his Reſtitution: Notwithſtanding all the Aſſiſtance given this Elector and his Father, he left the King at York *, tranſported himſelf to Holland, return'd afterwards to England, carreſs'd and joined the two Houſes at Weſtminſter, and ſate in the Aſſembly of Divines †.

And thus, notwithſtanding his Majeſty's Maniſeſto to juſtify the Engliſh Hierarchy, to expoſe the Innovations, and dangerous Practice of the Covenanters *; notwithſtanding this Precaution, theſe foreign Proteſtants cloſe with the Revolters, addreſs them with Reſpect, take them into Intimacy and Union, and make themſelves a Party to the Brittiſh Rebellion.

* See above.

About two Months forward, the general Aſſembly at Edinborough, appointed a Faſt throughout the Kingdom, and aſſigned ſeveral Reaſons for this publick Humiliation.

The Edinborough Aſſembly complain of an Apoſtacy in England.

They begin with a Complaint, “ That notwithſtanding their ſolemn Engagement, a Multitude of heinous Sins abound every where in the Land, and that they fall ſhort of that Sobriety, Righteouſneſs, and Holineſs which becomes the Goſpel. They ſuggeſt the great Danger to Religion and Civil Government, from the Prevalency of the Sectaries in England: And that this Kingdom has made a fearful Defection from the Solemn League and Covenant. They lament the diſtreſs'd Condition of thoſe who are zealous for the Work of God in England: That ſuch good People are now oppreſs'd by thoſe, who, under Pretence of Liberty, aim at no leſs than Tyranny and arbitrary Power. And laſtly, they inſtruct the People to pray, that God would preſerve the King from farther Snares, and bow his Heart to the Obedience of his Will in all thoſe Things that concern Religion and Righteouſneſs (u).

(u) Id. MS. & Ruſhworth Hiſt Collect. pt. 4. p. 644.

The Reaſon of the Scotch complaining thus tragically of the Apoſtacy in England, was occaſioned by a ſurpriſing Turn which happen'd in the Beginning of June laſt. For when the Presbyterian Party had diſabled the King in the Field, and got him into their Cuſtody at Holdenby; when they had batter'd down the Church, ouſted the greateſt Part of the regular Clergy, and procur'd cur'd a Settlement of their Diſcipline from the two Houſes; when they had ſurmounted ſo many Difficulties, and thought their Proſperity eſtabliſhed; when they were thus far advanc'd, they met with unexpected Misfortune. For the two Houſes having brought the War to an End, and diſmiſs'd the Scots, reſolv'd the disbanding a great Part of the Army. But theſe Meaſures were by no means acceptable to ſome of the General Officers. They were altogether unwilling to quit their Commands, and loſe the Advantage of ſo much Hazard and Fatigue. Theſe Men therefore declare againſt disbanding, ſtand on their Guard, and march towards London, contrary to the Order of the two Houſes. After this, they proceed more directly towards a Rupture, and impeach eleven Members of the Commons of High-Treaſon. And being ſenſible how ſerviceable the King's Perſon would be to them, they ſent Cornet Joice with a Party of Horſe to bring his Majeſty to their Head-Quarters at Wooburn in Bedfordſhire. Joice executed his Commiſſion, and ſucceeded in the Attempt, without meeting with any Reſiſtance. And thus the Presbyterians having imbroiled the Kingdoms, kindled and carry'd on a calamitous War, during which, more Seats were plundered and burnt, more Churches robb'd and prophan'd *, more Blood ſpilt within the compaſs of four Years; and in ſhort, more frightful Scenes open'd of Ravage, of Slaughter and Confuſion; than had been acted in the long Conteſt between the Houſes of York and Lancaſter; the Presbyterians, I ſay, after having thrown their Country into all this Miſery and Convulſion, met with nothing but Infamy and Diſappointment. For after having wreſted the Sword out of the King's Hands, and brought the Rebellion to their Wiſhes: When they thought of nothing leſs than dividing the Prey, and raiſing vaſt Fortunes out of Crown and Church Lands, their hopes were ſuddainly ſcatter'd, they were turn'd out of their ſcandalous Acquiſitions, and publickly expos'd to Contempt and Scorn. For now the Independents forc'd them to retire from Weſtminſter, ſeiz'd their Poſts, and made themſelves Maſters, upon the Matter, both in Church and State. But of this more afterwards.

As for Religion, 'twas in no better Condition than Civil Intereſt: The Presbyterians preach'd up the Purity and the Power, till they left neither. I ſhall make a Report of this Matter from an eminent Champion for the Cauſe: 'Tis Edwards who wrote the Gangræna: A Book in which the Errors, Hereſies, Blaſphemies, and lewd Practice, which broke out in the laſt four Years *, are recited. This Divine in his Dedication to both Houſes, ſets forth how firm he had been to their Service, and how forwardly he had engag'd, when their Affairs were moſt unpromiſing. He tells them, he had laid out his Fortune, and expos'd his Perſon in the Pulpit and the Field; and all this when ſome of the Grandees were ready to diſengage and ſhift for themſelves. A Man thus well affected, we may be ſure would not make things worſe than they were, nor paint the new Reformation in the hardeſt Complexion. Let us hear then what Account the Gentleman gives of this Matter.

Abundance of Hereſies, Blaſphemies, &c. maintained ſince the Beginning of the Rebellion.

Things every Day, ſays he, grow worſe and worſe, you can hardly imagine them ſo bad as they are. No kind of Blaſphemy, Hereſie, Diſorder, and Confuſion, but 'tis found among us, or coming in upon us. For we, inſtead of Reformation, are grown from one Extream to another; fallen from Scylla to Charibdis; from Popiſh Innovations, Superſtitions, and Prelatical Tyranny, to damnable Hereſies, horrid Blaſphemies, Libertiniſm, and fearful Anarchy. Our Evils are not remov'd and cur'd, but only chang'd: One Diſeaſe and Devil hath left us, and another as bad is come in the room. Yea, this laſt Extremity into which we are fallen, is far more high, violent and dangerous in many Reſpects, &c.— Have we not a Deformation, and worſe things come in upon us than ever we had before? Were any of thoſe Monſters heard of heretofore, which are now common among us, as denying the Scriptures, &c.— You have broken down the Images of the Trinity, Virgin Mary, Apoſtles; and we have thoſe who overthrow the Doctrine of the Trinity, oppoſe the Divinity of Chriſt, ſpeak Evil of the Virgin Mary, and ſlight the Apoſtles.— You have caſt out the Biſhops and their Officers, and we have many that caſt down to the Ground, all Miniſters in all the Reformed Churches. You have caſt out Ceremonies in the Sacraments, as the Croſs, Kneeling, at the Lord's Supper: And we have many who caſt out the Sacraments of Baptiſm and the Lord's-Supper. You have put down Saint's-days, and we have many who make nothing at all of the Lord's-day, and Faſt-Days. You have taken away the ſuperfluous, exceſſive Maintenance of Biſhops and Deans, and we have many that take away and cry down the neceſſary Maintenance of Miniſters. In the Biſhop's Days we had Singing of Pſalms taken away in ſome Places, conceiv'd Prayer and Preaching; and in their room, Anthems, ſtinted Forms, and Reading brought in. And now we have Singing of Pſalms ſpoken againſt, and caſt out of ſome Churches. Yea, all publick Prayer queſtion'd, and all miniſterial Preaching deny'd. In the Biſhops Time, Popiſh Innovations were introduc'd, as bowing at Altars, &c. And now we have anointing the Sick with Oil. Then we had Biſhoping of Children, now we have Biſhoping of Men and Women, by ſtrange laying on of Hands.— In the Biſhops Days we had many unlearned Miniſters; And have we not now a Company of Jeroboam's Prieſts? In the Biſhops Days we had the fourth Commandment taken away; but now we have all the ten Commandments at once, by the Antinominians, yea, all Faith and the Goſpel deny'd.— The worſt of the Prelates, in the midſt of many Popiſh, Arminian Tenets, and Popiſh Innovations, held many ſound Doctrines, and had many commendable Practices: Yea, the very Papiſts hold and keep to many Articles of Faith, and Truths of God, have ſome Order amongſt them, encourage Learning, have certain fix'd Principles of Truth, with Practices of Devotion and good Works: But many of the Sects and Sectaries in our Days, deny all Principle of Religion, are Enemies to all holy Duties, Order, Learning, overthrowing all; being Vertiginoſi Spiritus, whirlgigg Spirits. And the great Opinion of an univerſal Toleration, tends to the laying all waſt, and Diſſolution of all Religion and good Manners, &c.---- What Swarms are there of all ſorts of illiterate Mechanick Preachers, yea, of Women and Boy-Preachers?— What Liberty of Preaching, Printing of all Errors, or for a Toleration of all, and againſt the Directory, Covenant, Monthly Faſt, Presbyterial Government, and all Ordinances of Parliament in reference to Religion?— Theſe Sectaries have been growing upon us, ever ſince the firſt Year of our Sitting, and have every Year increaſed more and more (x).

And to diſmiſs this Author, he reckons no leſs than an Hundred Seventy Six heretical and blaſphemous Tenets, maintain'd by the Sectaries in the Compaſs of Time abovementioned.

The next remarkable Occurrent, is the Treaty in the Iſle of Wight. In this Iſland his Majeſty was confin'd after his Eſcape from Hampton-Court. The Party of the two Houſes, who were willing to to preſerve the King, tho' under their own Direction, prevail'd ſo far as to ſend Commiſſioners down, and propoſe an Accommodation. The Treaty commenc'd on the 15th of September. I ſhall only relate that Part of it in which Religion is concern'd. And here the two Houſes conſented, that ſeveral Biſhops and other Divines, might wait on his Majeſty, inform him in any Points of Controverſie, and reſolve any Difficulties intervening upon the Courſe of the Argument. The Divines who attended the King, were Juxton Biſhop of London, Duppa Biſhop of Salisbury, Dr. Sanderſon, Dr. Sheldon, and Dr. Fern, Dr. Henchman, Dr. Morley, and ſome others. Notwithſtanding this Liberty, the Commiſſioners acquainted his Majeſty, they could not admit any Perſon ſhould be preſent in the Room where the Treaty was debated. This Preliminary made the Aſſiſtance of the Biſhops and the reſt, in a manner inſignificant. At laſt, the Commiſſioners and his Majeſty agreed, that the Biſhops and Divines might ſtand behind a Curtain, and hear what paſs'd: And when any Difficulty occurr'd, the King might retire to his Chamber, call thoſe he thought proper to adviſe with, and then return to the Commiſſioners, argue farther upon the Point, and declare his Reſolution. The Parliament Divines, were Mr. Stephen Marſhal, Mr. Joſeph Caryll, Mr. Richard Vines, and Mr. Lazarus Seaman. The Queſtion debated was, Whether Epiſcopacy was of Divine Inſtitution? The Method was by exchanging of Papers. The King's Argument was read by Mr. Philip Warwick, and Mr. Vines read what was drawn up by himſelf and his Aſſiſtants. The Buſineſs of the King's firſt Paper, was to prove, that the Apoſtles by Commiſſion from our Saviour, exerciſ'd a diſtinguiſh'd and peculiar Authority in Ordinations, in ſettling Church Regulations, and inflicting Cenſures: That St. Timothy and St. Titus had a Character convey'd to them from the Apoſtles, for exerciſing the ſaid Power in the three Branches laſt mentioned (y): And that the Angels of the ſeven Churches mention'd in the Revelations, were all ſingle Perſons, had an Authority paramount over their reſpective Churches, and ſuperintended both Paſtors and People (z). From theſe Grounds the King inferr'd the Divine Inſtitution of Epiſcopacy, and ſupported his Concluſion from the Records of the primitive Church, from St. Ignatius his Epiſtles, and other Teſtimonies of the Ancients: And laſtly, his Majeſty deſir'd to be ſatisfied concerning the Subſtantials of Church Government ſettled by our Saviour and his Apoſtles; In whoſe Hands the Adminiſtration of theſe Eſſentials are depoſited? Whether they bind to perpetual Uſe, or whether they may be relax'd on Occaſion, and how far?

The next Day the Parliament Divines deliver'd in their Anſwer, and confeſs'd the Places of Scripture cited by his Majeſty, prov'd the Conveyance of a Power for the Purpoſes abovementioned. But then they deny'd the Perſons exerciſing that Authority, were Biſhops in the modern reſtrain'd Senſe, or govern'd the Church under that Diſtinction.

The Parliament Divines Paper againſt Epiſcopacy.

And here omitting their Coincidency with Henderſon, I ſhall only relate what is farther ſuggeſted upon the Queſtion. They affirm Timothy and Titus were Evangeliſts (a), and ſeem willing to infer an Inconſiſtency between this Office and an Epiſcopal Character. 2. They pretend theſe Saints could not be Biſhops, becauſe they were not fix'd to a Dioceſs, but frequently remov'd from Place to Place. To the Text in the Revelations, they anſwer'd, Angels of the Churches was an allegorical Addition, and there was no ſolid arguing from ſuch figurative Expreſſions. And beſides, that thoſe Letters of St. John, tho' ſuperſcrib'd to one, were in the meaning of them, ſent to the whole Body of the Church.

They ſeem to give little Credit to the Writings of the Ancients, and the Teſtimony of the Church poſterior to the Apoſtles, and throw off Ignatius his Epiſtles, as if they were the Forgery of later Ages. As to the Point of Subſtantials in Church Government, inſtituted by our Saviour, they gave only this general and evaſive Anſwer, that ſuch Subſtantials were to be found in the Scripture.

After three Days the King reply'd to their Paper. And here waving his Majeſty's Reaſons urg'd againſt Henderſon upon this Head, I ſhall only report what was return'd to their Objections abovementioned. Their endeavouring to turn off the Force of the Text, touching St. Timothy and St. Titus, by retiring to a Notion of their being Evangeliſts, is clearly confuted by Sculretus, Gerrard, and other Proteſtants of Eminency. And that Timothy and Titus were Biſhops, is confirm'd by the conſentient Teſtimony of Antiquity. And here his Majeſty cites St. Jerom, and a Liſt of twenty ſeven Biſhops of Epheſus ſucceeding each other without Interruption, with St. Timothy at the Head of the Catalogue. For this his Majeſty's Author is Dr. Reynolds againſt Hart.

Octob. 6. The King's Anſwer.

His Majeſty goes on with the reſt of their Argument, and puts the Queſtion, That if the Angels mention'd in the Revelations, were not ſingle Perſons, who preſided Epiſcopally over the Church, he deſires to know, whether they were either the Church diffuſive, or ſuch á Number of Paſtors, or the whole College of the Presbytery, or the reſpective Preſidents of thoſe Colleges? For into all theſe Opinions the Presbyterians are divided in their modern Expoſitions.

As for the Ages poſterior to the Apoſtles, his Majeſty grants their Authority riſes no higher than human Teſtimony; but argues their Report touching Matter of Fact, ought not to be queſtioned upon this ſcore: And tho' the Men were fallible, we may have a moral Certainty of the Things deliver'd by them. And thus for the purpoſe, there's no Reaſon to queſtion the Exiſtence of Ariſtotle, or his being a Grecian Philoſopher. As for Ignatius his Epiſtles, tho' ſome out of Diſſaffection to Biſhops, have deny'd their Genuineneſs, and endeavoured to ſtrike them out of all Regard; yet their Objections are little better than bare Affirmation and Aſſurance: That ſeveral of this Martyr's Epiſtles are ſo ſtrongly atteſted by Antiquity, that the Author cannot be diſputed without great Partiality and Ignorance. And granting the Epiſtles belong'd to Ignatius, there can be no clearer Proof of the conteſted Diſtinction between a Biſhop and a Presbyter.

Laſtly, His Majeſty declar'd himſelf unſatisfied with their dark and general Anſwer touching the perpetual and unalterable Subſtantials of Church Government (b).
